PART III. Contents:—Der geheime Agent. In Five Acts. By HACKLANDER. With Notes and Arguments. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

III. SCHILLER'S NEFFE ALS ONKEL.

With Introduction, Notes, Arguments to the Acts, and a complete Vocabulary. Thirteenth Edition. 1s. 6d.

IV. HUMBOLDT'S NATUR und REISEBILDER.

Abridged from his "Reise in die Equinoctial-Gegenden des neuen Continents" (Personal Narrative of Travel, &c.) and "Ansichten der Natur." With Notes, Scientific Glossary, &c. Crown 8vo. Second Edition. 4s. 6d.

"Ranks far above the ordinary run of educational books... The notes and scientific glossary are written with great care and lucidity."—Public Opinion.

"We cordially recommend the book to schoolmasters in search of an entertaining and improving reading book for the middle or higher forms."—Academy.

London: F. NORGATE, 7, King St., Covent Garden.

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS.

Intimation is hereby Given that the University Court of the University of St. Andrews will, at next Meeting, ELECT a Person to fill the Office of EXAMINER in MENTAL PHILOSOPHY, about to become vacant.

By order of the Court,
ST. ANDREWS, 2nd Sept. 1892. SHARP GRACE, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the Secretary, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of Lectures on Zoology by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., commences on WEDNESDAY, 9th Nov. at 4 p.m. These Lectures are intended to meet the requirements of Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London.

A Special Course of Lectures on ANIMAL VARIATION, addressed to Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology will be given in the Lent Term.

J. M. HOBBS, M.A., Secretary.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E. LONDON.

Principal—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Gibson), Cambridge.
Professors—Sealey, King's Coll.; Dr. Dolken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrers, Clifton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.

Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

OXFORD.—ASCHAM SCHOOL.—

Home for Daughters of Gentlemen. Highest Educational advantages. Arrangement for Anglo-Indian children. Univ. and Foreign teachers. Prep. Roy. Coll. and Acad. Mus. Univ. Lec. exams, &c. Reference—Rev. Canon Christopher, Oxford. Vacancy PUPIL-AGE.

THE NEW FULHAM SCHOOL of ART

OPENS SEPTEMBER 1st.
Practical Tuition in all Branches of Decorative Art.
Life Class, Modelling, Painting, Carving, Engraving, &c.
Full particulars from the Art Manager,
E. MAROLD, 4, Metropole Paying and Art Ltd. Store Company, Ltd., The Arch Studios, Fulham, London, S.W.

Blackwood's Educational Works.

A NEW ARITHMETIC.

PRACTICAL ARITHMETICAL EXERCISES.

FOR SENIOR PUPILS IN SCHOOLS.

Containing upwards of 4,000 Examples, consisting in great part of Problems, and 750 Extracts from Examination Papers. Crown 8vo, 257 pp., 3s. With Answers, 3s. 6d.

The Exercises have been selected from numerous sources, and the Work specially adapted for Pupil Teachers' Examinations, Students in Training, Candidates for Oxford, Cambridge, and Scottish University and Local Examinations, and for Civil and Indian Service Candidates.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Mensuration. 128 pp., 1s.

Also in Two Parts: Part I, PARALLELS, RADII and TRIANGLES, paper, 6d.; cloth, 8d. Part II, CIRCLES and SOLIDS, paper, 6d.; cloth, 8d.

ANSWERS may be had to each Part, price 2d. each.

Stormonth's Dictionary of the English Language, Etymological and Pronunciation. The Pronunciation revised by Rev. P. H. PHELPS, M.A. College Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. Abridged School Edition, 2s.

Professor Minto's Manual of English Prose LITERATURE, 3rd Edition. 7s. 6d.

Professor Minto's Characteristics of English POETS. New Edition. 7s. 6d.

Dr. Currie's English Prose Composition. 53rd Thousand. 1s. 6d.

Dr. Mackay's Manual of Geography. 11th Thousand. 7s. 6d.

Dr. Mackay's Elements of Geography. 55th Thousand, Revised. 3s.

Dr. Mackay's Intermediate Geography. 17th Edition. 2s.

Dr. Mackay's Outlines of Geography. 188th Thousand. 1s.

Dr. Page's Introductory Physical Geography. 12th Edition. Revised and Enlarged by Professor LEFORTH. 2s. 6d.

Dr. Page's Advanced Text-Book of Physical GEOGRAPHY. With Engravings. Revised and Enlarged by the same. Third Edition. 3s.

Dr. Page's Introductory Text-Book of Geology. With Engravings. 12th Edition. Revised by the same. 3s. 6d.

Dr. Page's Advanced Text-Book of Geology. 6th Edition. Revised and Enlarged, with Glossary. 7s. 6d.

Professor Nicholson's Manual of Zoology. 7th Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. Post 8vo, with Engravings, 18s.

Professor Nicholson's Text-Book of Zoology. 4th Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, with Engravings, 7s. 6d.

Professor Nicholson's Introductory Text-Book of Zoology. 6th Edition, with Engravings. Crown 8vo, 7s.

Professor Nicholson's Outlines of Natural HISTORY for BEGINNERS. 3rd Edition. 1s. 6d.

Aditus Faciliores: an Easy Latin Construing Book. By Dr. PROTTS and the Rev. C. DARNELL, M.A. 10th Edition. 3s. 6d.

Aditus Faciliores Græcia: an Easy Greek Construing Book. By the same Authors. 4th Edition. 3s.

Practical Rudiments of the Latin Language. By D. ROSS, 2nd Edition. 1s. 6d.

Greek Testament Lessons. With Notes and Essays. By the Rev. J. HUNTER SMITH, M.A., Birmingham. With Maps. 6s.

Stonhurst Latin Grammar. By the Rev. JOHN GERARD. 2nd Edition. 3s.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION.

Johnston's Catechism of Agricultural Chemistry. From Edition by Sir C. A. CAMERON. Revised and entirely Rewritten by C. M. ATKMAN. With Engravings. 1s.

A NEW ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

Blackwood's Elementary Grammar and Composition. Based on the Analysis of Sentences. With a Chapter on Word-Building and Derivation, and containing numerous Exercises. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

"A very valuable book... A junior text-book that is calculated to yield most satisfactory results."—Schoolmaster.

A Working Handbook of the Analysis of SENTENCES. With Notes on Parsing, Paraphrasing, Figures of Speech, and Prosody. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

"One of the best and soundest productions on the analysis of sentences we have yet met with."—Schoolmaster.

Manual Instruction—Woodwork. Designed to meet the requirements of the Minute of the Science and Art Department on Manual Instruction. By GEORGE ST. JOHN. 1. Independent School, Handwork, Birmingham. With 100 Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

"It is a capital little book, and abundantly illustrated."—Curator, and Educator.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH and LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A Story by Miss RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c., is commenced in the SEPTEMBER Number of THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

READY NEXT WEEK.

By MR. CLIFFORD HARRISON.

STRAY RECORDS;

Or, Personal and Professional Notes.

By CLIFFORD HARRISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

READY NEXT WEEK.

By MR. THORPE.

THE STILL LIFE OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE,

With some of its Table Talk, preceded by Fifty Years' Reminiscences.

By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A.,

A Barrister of the Society.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

NOTICE.—The Third Edition of Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD'S "AUNT ANNE" is expected to be ready early next week.

A NEW NOVEL, NOW READY.

A GIRL WITH A TEMPER.

By H. B. FINLAY KNIGHT.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES."

IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

By LESLIE KEITH,

Author of "Alasnam's Lady," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A delightful story."—Athenaeum

A SELECTION FROM

BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s., of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.

BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.

HERIOT'S CHOICE.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.

ONLY THE GOVERNESS.

QUEENIE'S WHIM.

ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.

UNCLE MAN.

WOODED and MARRIED.

MARY ST. JOHN.

By W. E. NORRIS.

A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.

THIRLBY HALL.

MAJOR and MINOR.

MISS SHAFTO.

THE ROGUE.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."

BORDERLAND.

HEALEY.

ALDYTH.

KITH and KIN.

PROBATION.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE STANFORD DICTIONARY of ANGLICISED WORDS and PHRASES. Edited for the Synthes of the University Press, by C. A. M. FENNELL, D. Litt., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge. Editor of "Parable." Demy 4to, pp. xvi.—825. Half-hickram, 31s. 6d.; half-morocco, 42s. [Immediately.]

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE in MODERN TIMES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, Tooke Professor in King's College, London. Demy 8vo, 12s. [Immediately.]

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE DURING the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By the Same Author. Demy 8vo, 6s.

"Dr. Cunningham's list of authorities occupies eighteen pages, and that this is no empty display of erudition is evident from a mere glance at the footnotes of almost any page. As far as we can judge, no single authority of any weight has been omitted, and yet the authority of the historian who has so conscientiously presented this mass of evidence for our convenient inspection is proclaimed in every line. He himself is a master of his subject, and we are the more grateful for his self-efficient labour as his compilation is in no way lacking in force and originality."—Athenaeum.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ODYSSEY. The Text Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

"We have here a text of the Odyssey, very well printed on good paper, and in a handy form, with an introduction (pp. l.-xxi.) and a short apparatus criticus at the foot of the page, and, one is glad to say, no notes whatever. To lovers of Homer there is no text which we would recommend more heartily."—Journal of Education.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ILLIAD. By the Same Editor. [In preparation.]

ANALYTICAL STATISTICS, A Treatise on, By E. J. ROUTH, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of the University of London, Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. Vol. II. Demy 8vo, 10s. [Immediately.]

PLANE TRIGONOMETRY, An Elementary Treatise on. (Pitt Press Mathematical Series.) By E. W. HOODSON, Sc.D., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics; and C. M. JESSOP, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, and Assistant Master at Reading School. 4s. 6d. [Immediately.]

ILLUMINATED MANUSCRIPTS in CLASSICAL and MEDIEVAL TIMES, their ART and TECHNIQUE. By J. HENRY MIDDLETON, late Professor of Fine Arts, and Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Vol. II.—No. 2. THE TESTAMENT of ABRAHAM. The Greek Text now first Edited with an Introduction and Notes, by M. R. LAMER, M.A., Fellow of King's College, with an Appendix, containing extracts from the Arabic version of the Testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. By W. E. BAINES, B.D., Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION.—AN INAUGURAL ADDRESS DELIVERED at the OPENING of the THIRD SERIES of VACATION COURSES of STUDY at CAMBRIDGE, JULY 26th, 1892. By JAMES STUART, M.A., M.P., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 6d.

GRADUATED PASSAGES from GREEK and LATIN AUTHORS for FIRST SIGHT TRANSLATION. Selected and Supplied with Short Notes for Beginners, by H. BENDALL, M.A., Head of C. E. LAURENCE, B.A., Assistant Master of Blackheath Proprietary School. Crown 8vo.

Part I.—EASY. 1s. 6d. Part III.—MODERATELY DIFFICULT. 2s. [Immediately.]
Part II.—MODERATELY EASY. Part IV.—DIFFICULT. 2s. [Immediately.]

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Books XI. and XII. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s.

BOOKS V. and VI. 2s. [Immediately.]

BOOKS I. and II. [In the press.]

"Mr. Verity is to Milton what Mr. Aldis Wright is to Shakespeare; his work is a monument of scholarly criticism and of patient and omnivorous research, and we shall hope are long to see the 'Paradise Lost' treated in the same exhaustive manner as the shorter poems."—Traveller.

SCHILLER.—GESCHICHTE des DREISSIGJÄHRIGEN KRIEGS. Buch III. With Introduction, Notes, and Map, by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in German. 2s. "Former editions of German authors by this editor have so uniformly been distinguished by thoroughness and scholarly treatment, that it is very high praise indeed to say that in this instance he has only repeated himself. The notes are exhaustive and to the point."—Modern Language Monthly.

CORNEILLE.—POLYEUCTE. With Introduction and Notes, by E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. [In the press.]

HOMER.—ILIAD. Book VI. With Introduction and Notes by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. 2s.

OVID.—METAMORPHOSES. Liber I. With English Notes and Various Readings, by the Rev. LAUNCELOT P. DOWDALL, LL.D., B.D., Church of England, Oxford. 2s. 6d. "As an introduction to the text and critical study of a Latin author, it will not be easy to find a better book than that which Mr. Dowdall here gives us."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE

LOW'S Shilling Library of Fiction.

Uniform demy 8vo volumes, in Illustrated Wrappers.

NEW COPYRIGHT WORKS

BY

RUDYARD KIPLING.

SOLDIERS THREE: Stories of Barrack-Room Life. 61st Thousand.

THE STORY of the GADSBYS: a Tale Without a Plot. 42nd Thousand.

IN BLACK and WHITE: Stories of Native Life. 42nd Thousand.

The above three Volumes bound together, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Also Library Edition, cloth extra, 6s.

WEE WILLIE WINKIE. 47th Thousand.

UNDER the DEODARS: In Social Bye-ways. 42nd Thousand.

THE PHANTOM 'RIKSHAW, and other Eerie Tales. 37th Thousand.

The above three Volumes bound together, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Also Library Edition, cloth extra, 6s.

Shilling Volumes Uniform with

RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE SUBALTERN, The POLICEMAN, and THE LITTLE GIRL With Illustrations. 6th Thousand. By BROWNLOW FFORDE.

THE TROTTER. With Illustrations. 6th Thousand. By BROWNLOW FFORDE.

THE UPPER TEN: a Story of the Very Best Society. By SEBASTIAN and F. EVANS.

THE VISITOR'S BOOK; or, Sketches in a Swiss Hotel. By "IGNOTUS."

MARRIED BY PROXY. By a "New HUMORIST."

HIS GOLF MADNESS, and other "Queer Stories." By GEORGE SOMES LAYARD.

EFFACEMENT of ORIEL PENHALIGON. By E. M. HEWITT.

Crown 8vo volumes, Illustrated Wrappers.

A CREATURE of the NIGHT: an Italian Enigma. By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c.

A DREAM of MILLIONS, and other Stories. By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of "Half-Way," &c.

THE LYNN'S COURT MYSTERY. By DENZIL VANE, Author of "From the Dead," &c.

BOBBY: a Story of the Supernatural. By "VESPER."

EAST COAST YARNS. By Dr. P. H. EMERSON, Author of "Pictures of East Anglian Life," &c.

By T. HOLMAN, R.N.

LIFE in the ROYAL NAVY.

SALT YARNS.

By "RUX."

ROUGHING IT AFTER GOLD. 3rd Edition.

THROUGH the MILL.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1892.

No. 1062, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS."—Thomas Carlyle. By John Nichol. (Macmillans.)

It is a familiar complaint that too many manuals, series, cheap and popular guides to the knowledge of literature, are produced just now; and the complaint has much force. But the biographies of English men of letters, edited by Mr. Morley, are very far the best things of the sort yet published. The series began with Johnson. The present volume deals with the man of letters who more than any other has inherited Johnson's title, "the great moralist." There is little use in discussing that difficult matter, the value of contemporary criticism. Perhaps it may be suggested that, while such criticism has great merits, there is yet some temerity in numbering among great English men of letters writers not forty years dead. Thackeray, Hawthorne, Dickens, Macaulay, Carlyle, are the most recent writers so included in the series. It might have been well to stop at Wordsworth, leaving to the judgment of another century those who died after him. When Mr. Morley writes of Burke, or Mark Pattison of Milton, or Mr. Jebb of Bentley, we have little reason to suspect their books of unconscious partiality, inevitable prejudice, or indiscreet partisanship. It is too late in the day for any violent change of mind about men so famous in letters. But Carlyle, great as we must think him, is a name provocative and inflammatory. Mr. Froude adores and Mr. Swinburne blasphemes. Scores of living men have personal reasons for inability to judge him with indifference. It was hardly to be expected, then, that Mr. Nichol should write as well upon Carlyle as he has written upon Byron.

The book shows signs of haste in matters mainly clerical, and the ultima manus has not been at work correcting mixed metaphors, verbal incongruities, errors of quotation. The ten errata discovered and corrected are by no means all the errata discoverable. Thus "Mrs. Austen," or "peer and botanize," are unfortunate slips, and there is far too much looseness of phraseology. Carlyle did not "abandon" the ministry: he never entered it. A "statute of Limitations" does not mean what the writer's metaphor implies. There was no "Abolition of Purchase Act." Carlyle was not "Scott's junior by four" years. Such things are the clerical errors, or the inaccuracies, of a first version, which do not gravely injure a book's usefulness, but which are at least unnecessary. A week's work would have purged the book of all such errors, and left it more attractive. It is but justice to say that the book's disfigurements are external, and not inherent in the writer's style, nor characteristic of his thought. A second edition would merely entail such corrections, as a revision of the manuscript or of the proofs might have effected in the first.

The most immediately obvious merit of Mr. Nichol's book is its narrative: a more straightforward, fair, and sufficient account of Carlyle's life does not exist. Mr. Nichol shirks nothing, and he exaggerates nothing, though the biographer of such a man has every temptation to commit both crimes. From first to last Carlyle's actual history is put before us, without any more prejudice than is inevitable. There is none of that wearying laudation, or of that shocked deprecation, which is so impertinent and so common. Carlyle's life was worth recording, and Mr. Nichol has recorded it: the scrutiny of domestic dissensions, the small malicious gossip, the love of infinitely little things, which go to the making of so many modern biographies, are absent from this biography. Mr. Froude has written the full biography, from the vantage ground of a friend and devotee: various studies, essays, and examinations of particular scenes or periods correct and supplement that work. Mr. Nichol's book gives us a judicial, brief account, based upon a consideration of all the various pleadings and evidences. A careful comparison of this book with those written by others, champions of Mrs. Carlyle or special pleaders of any sort, does but confirm the first impression left by its evident sincerity. It is a commonplace to say that origin and temperament are matters of singular importance in the consideration of genius, but in the case of Carlyle it would be nothing less than absurd to ignore them: they appear in all his works and ways, to an extent beyond exaggeration. Mr. Nichol does well to insist, upon many occasions, that in Carlyle we have the Scotch peasant of genius, suffering from that pride which in Scotchmen of mere talent is insufferable. That sturdy self-respect and austerity of mind turn into self-conceit and irritability, with great ease. Fitzgerald, speaking of his friend's acrid sneers and jeers, pleads for him, "This is all a little Scotch indelicacy to other people's feelings." Whether we look into Scotch history or into Scotch literature, we find this curious strain of rough pride and nervous unamiability asserting itself; and Scotch writers have been foremost in recognising it. Whether it be an Andrew Fairservice or a David Balfour, in whom the Scotch humourist plays with the characteristics of his countrymen, this note of a good self-conceit is very prominent. In Carlyle the native temperament, self-reliant and democratic, was joined to a special temperament less common. Mr. Hutton has well remarked that Carlyle had a physical delicacy of sense, such as no finely nurtured aristocrat could surpass. His misery over noise, his sensitiveness to unpleasant surroundings of all kinds, gave him the tortures of a Heine, without the dignity of so terrible a prostration; and almost anything can be forgiven him, when we consider his rugged pride of origin and his feminine delicacy of nerve. Enough has been said about "the dyspeptic man of genius." We want to hear no more of these bodily weaknesses, except in palliation of the spiritual weaknesses that followed them. Carlyle might say splanetic and morbid things about all the world, and about his fellow men of genius, and about himself, under the exasperation of suffering; but his ill temper rarely carried him beyond ill words. Against the Carlyle who shrieked and wailed over intolerable trifles, may be set the Carlyle, whose first care, when Mill's carelessness had destroyed the manuscript of the French Revolution, was for Mill himself: and against the Carlyle who said contemptuous things about others, may be set the Carlyle who never grudged time or means to help them. Doubtless, the preacher of silence and of endurance loses some dignity through his outcries, but never through his deeds. Dante condescending to torture his enemies, Milton railing upon Salmasius, are not more pardonable than Carlyle rending friends or foes with irony and bitter words. He did not wholly mean what he said: so far as he did mean it, he was but scourging the general folly of the world, his own included. And he looked at the world in the concrete, with the eyes of a satirist and humourist. His first favourite books were Hudibras and Tristram Shandy. But he looked beyond the world into a vast sphere of Powers, Immensities, Forces, Veracities, Eternities: turning back to this wretched earth, how solemn a prig looked Wordsworth, how sorry a drunkard was Lamb, how egregious a spectacle all the merry farce of human life! The stars, and the winds, and the seas: and then, absurd persons in red gowns, doing justice; absurd persons in black gowns, preaching righteousness! Full of these imaginative contrasts, he shot his rankling epigrams right and left, half in laughter, half in bitterness. Mazzini with his dreamy hopes, Mill with his dusty logic, must have seemed monstrous to him at such times of grim meditation. No doubt they were great and good and the like: but less than nothing beside the Eternities, mere comic actors amusing the Powers of Heaven for a time. Only when he found men in whom he saw force and vehemence, of some sort, could he reverence humanity. It might be a Quaker or a soldier, a poet or a prophet, a modern statesman or an ancient demigod, who thus faced the invisible forces of the universe with something of their own untiring vehemence: Carlyle was equally willing to reverence him. Such a man's tears and agonies, his spiritual conflicts or physical violences, were sacred to him: a Cromwell struggling for speech, a Johnson fighting with madness, were awful and divine: not so the "lovely wail" of a Shelley, the "bleeding heart" of a Byron. While Emerson looked through history for "Representative Men," Carlyle looked for "Heroes": not the fine flower of mankind, but the few demigods who stand above the pitiable crowd, commanding them to obedience. Anything about such heroes was precious in his eyes: each personal detail of their ways and looks and lives.

He contemplated history with the large contemplation of Gibbon, but with a troubled irony and a poignant misery unknown to that calm spectator of the pageant; and he fixed upon points of time, and upon certain figures, with the intensity of Tacitus. To Carlyle, the present could never be admirable: it was too close and too exacting. Cromwell, Knox, Luther, Dante, would not have satisfied him as his contemporaries: he was born with a craving for an ideal perfection, which his sense of humour forbade him to find in real life, or in practical politics, or in the hopes of men. Confronted with living men of "Work and Worth," he refused to see in them the signs of his ideal: a Scotch Faust, he was always dissatisfied, querulous, and proud. He was pleased with the peasant virtues of Derbyshire. Fitzgerald writes to him:

"Have some mercy, now and in future, on the 'Hebrew rags' which are grown offensive to you: considering it was those rags that did really bind together those virtues which have transmitted down to us all the good you noticed in Derbyshire."

That is to say, be consistent: useless advice to a man who cared nothing for a logical consistency. Side by side with the humorous idealist was the literary critic in Carlyle. All Mr. Nichol's observations upon that side of his nature and of his work are excellent; especially as to his labour of love in making German literature known in England. For we are apt to think of Carlyle as of a prophet merely, a satirist, or a dreamer; we forget the amount of actual work done for us by his hard toil. Emerson, so bright and winning, so ardent and eager, gave us volumes of quiet, subtle comments upon life; but he knew nothing of hard work, the dusty drudgery among records and chronicles, from which came Carlyle's best books. If we consider Voltaire or Hugo, or most writers of over thirty volumes, how great a mass of their writing seems to have a precarious dependence upon passing moods of the mind! But Carlyle has left us a mass of writings which are solid and substantial, which are independent of an opinion about his moral teaching and ideals. But his style, say some, will not that prove fatal to his fame? The same thing might have been said of Thucydides, Tacitus, Rabelais and Sterne; of Richter, and of Heine in much of his writing. Without doubt, Plato and Cicero, Addison and Goethe, ran no such risks as must be run by the more audacious writers. Carlyle must lose and gain by his style. Lose, because it was, at times, what he called it, his "own poor affectation," a struggling storm of words, conveying nothing worthy of so great an effort. But the better part of it needs no worthier defence than is contained in Mr. Meredith's description of it. Rosamund Culling disapproved of Beauchamp's devotion to Carlyle.

"His favourite author was one writing of heroes, in (so she esteemed it) a style resembling either early architecture or utter dilapidation, so loose and rough it seemed; a wind-in-the-orchard style, that tumbled down here and there an appreciable fruit with uncouth bluster. Sentences without commencements running to abrupt endings and smoke, like waves against a sea-wall; learned dictionary words giving a hand to street-slang, and accents falling on them haphazard, like slant rays from driving clouds; all the pages in a breeze, the whole book producing a kind of electric agitation in the mind and the joints."

It is a treacherous style in the hands of the imitator: a delicious style, as Dr. Holmes has shown, in those of the parodist; but its power and charm have appealed to the purest and simplest masters of style. Cardinal Newman, though he had "the brain of a medium-sized rabbit," wrote:

"I commend to your notice, if it comes in your way, Carlyle on the French Revolution. A queer, tiresome, obscure, profound, and original work." "A man of first-rate ability, I suppose, and quite fascinating as a writer."

Mr. Nichol's moderation and insight are worthy of all praise. He shows us the man, not as a strong hero, nor as a canting humbug, but just as he was: the Scotch peasant of genius, the laborious man of letters, the friend of practical kindness and a bitter tongue, the victim of tortured nerves, the sad humourist, and the fighter of a dark spirit battling towards some light. The book is not a masterpiece of art, but it does an admirable service for Carlyle.

LEONEL JOHNSON.

Secret Service under Pitt. By W. J. Fitzpatrick. (Longmans.)

SINCE the death of Richard Robert Madden a few years ago there is probably no one better acquainted with the undercurrents of Irish political activity at the close of the last century than is Mr. Fitzpatrick. His present volume is not only a distinct addition to our knowledge of one of the most fascinating if at the same time one of the most gruesome episodes in Irish history, but it is also in my opinion by far the best book that Mr. Fitzpatrick has yet written. Slightly garrulous at times, Mr. Fitzpatrick is never wearisome. He is a capital raconteur; and his stories, if not always fresh, have a delightfully old-fashioned flavour about them that makes them always pleasant to read again. But even in his lightest moods Mr. Fitzpatrick is always serious, and his present volume is one to sadden the hearts of all serious men.

Notwithstanding all that has been printed on the subject, the history of the United Irish movement still remains to be written. The materials for such a history are gradually accumulating, and it is from works like the present that the future historian will derive his greatest assistance. Some of us can remember the appearance of Mr. Froude's English in Ireland and can recall the profound sensation created, and recently renewed by the publication of the last two volumes of Mr. Lecky's great work, by his revelations regarding some of the actors in that movement, and of the circumstances that led to its collapse. Following in the wake of Mr. Froude and Mr. Lecky, and with an unrivalled knowledge of the times and men of which he writes, Mr. Fitzpatrick has endeavoured to lay bare the secret agencies by means of which the government of Pitt succeeded in undermining a movement formidable alike from the number and the character of its adherents. Honourable men have shuddered at the imputations cast on Pitt's Irish government. They have deemed it impossible that any government should have sunk so low in public estimation as to render it necessary to have recourse to a system of espionage and judicial assassination. Reading Mr. Fitzpatrick's careful statement of facts long buried in the innermost recesses of Dublin Castle, they will recall to mind the warnings of Grattan and Curran, and will acknowledge that criminal as was the attempt to wrest a constitution by force, the system of government that had rendered such action the only alternative to political servitude was even more criminal. For this, rather than the somewhat trite maxim that "organisers of illegal societies will see that, in spite of the apparent secrecy and ingenuity of their system, informers sit with them at the same council board and dinner-table, ready at any moment to sell their blood," is the moral of Mr. Fitzpatrick's book. In form, it consists of a critical investigation into the lives of the principal informers in the pay of Pitt's government. The identity of some of these informers has naturally been involved in obscurity. Mr. Froude, and more recently Mr. Lecky, has hinted at some of them, but Mr. Fitzpatrick's book is the first serious attempt to solve the mystery in which they have hitherto been shrouded.

Samuel Turner, the son of a small landed proprietor in the neighbourhood of Newry, the descendant apparently of a Cromwellian settler, had, like many another northern gentleman, thrown in his lot with the United Irish movement, and, being a barrister and a man of ability, had been elected a member of the Ulster Committee. After the dispersion of the leaders of the movement in the spring of 1797, he had fled to Hamburg, the centre of the revolutionary movement, where he had found refuge in the house of Lady Edward Fitzgerald, and for a time filled the office of resident agent of the United Irishmen there. From Hamburg he had gone to Paris, where he made the acquaintance of Hoche and De la Croix. At an earlier date, however, Turner had become involved in pecuniary difficulties; and it was perhaps as much in order to relieve himself in this respect as for any such specious reasons as those he alleged, that he now crossed over to England in order to sell his services to the government. His offer was made through Lord Downshire; and it was stipulated that his name should never be revealed even to the cabinet, and that he should never be called on to appear in a court of justice to prosecute any one who might be arrested in consequence of his discoveries. His conditions were agreed to, and Turner immediately furnished Lord Downshire with a list of the Executive Committee. For the further history of his services, however, I must refer the reader to Mr. Fitzpatrick's pages. Many things hitherto obscure he will there find made clear. He will learn, for example, that it was on evidence supplied by Turner that O'Coigly was hanged, that O'Connor after his trial at Maidstone was rearrested, and that Valentine Lawless, afterwards Lord Cloncurry, was incarcerated in the Tower. He will follow the course of Turner, alias Furnes, alias Richardson, in Paris, London, Hamburg, and Ireland. He will see him intercepting letters addressed to the French Minister of War, and furnishing copies to Pitt, among others the famous memorial of Dr. Mac Nevin, embracing a full report on the state of Ireland, and appealing to France for help. Above all, he will learn for the first time how it came to pass that Humbert's expedition landed at Killala among the starved and unarmed peasantry of Connaught and not in the neighbourhood of Belfast. Turner lived well on into the present century, drawing his pension to the last. He posed as a patriot, and not the least curious incident in his strange career was his offer to take O'Connell's quarrel with D'Esterre upon himself. A few years later he lost his own life in a duel.

Hardly less strange than the career of Turner was that of Francis Magan, the betrayer of Lord Edward Fitzgerald. Magan was a creature of Francis Higgins, "the sham squire"; and it was through him, according to Mr. Fitzpatrick, that Higgins derived most of the information that rendered him so useful to the government. Like Turner, Magan was a United Irishman, and through life posed as the very pink of propriety. On the night that Lord Edward Fitzgerald lay bleeding to death in Newgate he was raised by the votes of United Irishmen to a still higher rank in the organisation. During the Union struggle he sided with the patriots, and his name appears along with that of Daniel O'Connell convening a great aggregate meeting in December, 1812, to protest against the conduct of the government. Still, as Mr. Fitzpatrick remarks, there was something uncanny about him, and men who remembered '98 looked askant at him. He never married, but lived a lonely life in an old tumbled down house near the Four Courts. He died in 1843, leaving all his ill-gotten wealth to his sister. After his death all the rooms in the house were shut up, and Miss Magan ate, drank, and slept on the landing till she too died.

But Turner and Magan were mere dabblers in treachery by the side of Leonard MacNally, the friend of Curran, the accomplished advocate of the United Irishmen, and the betrayer of his clients. MacNally's real character has recently been exposed by Mr. Lecky, but thirty years and more ago Mr. Fitzpatrick was on his track in Notes and Queries. Apropos of MacNally's letters, Mr. Fitzpatrick has an interesting note to which it is worth while to direct attention, to this effect, viz., that Wickham's papers, which are usually supposed to have undergone the fate of many others of this period, notably those of the Duke of Portland and Lord Clare, are safely preserved by his grandson. Sometime, it is to be hoped that they too, like Lord Cornwallis's and Lord Castlereagh's, will see the light.

Everyone who has any acquaintance with Grattan's speeches will readily call to mind the glowing passage in which he describes Father O'Leary, "a man of learning, a philosopher, a Franciscan," &c., and the valuable service he rendered by his "Address to the Common People of Ireland on occasion of an apprehended Invasion by the French and Spaniards in July, 1779." It has long been known that O'Leary enjoyed a pension from government. Mr. Fitzpatrick undertakes to show precisely how that pension was earned, and his narrative goes far to confirm the worst suspicions regarding him. Setting aside all other circumstances, his intimacy with Higgins and Colonel O'Kelly, one of the Prince Regent's black-leg associates, is of itself sufficient to damn him. But perhaps the most striking piece of evidence is that furnished by the late Lord Chancellor O'Hagan.

"This gentleman," says Mr. Fitzpatrick, "could not bring himself to believe Mr. Froude's charge branding O'Leary as a spy, and was unable to rest until he read with his own eyes at the State Paper office the original correspondence. He returned to Dublin, declaring that the imputation was but too well founded."

But despicable as was the work O'Leary undertook, it was not really criminal. He prostituted his great abilities, it is true, and no Irishman will forgive him the part he played with Sir Boyle Roche in wrecking the Convention of 1783. He betrayed his country, but he did not do to death innocent men as did Thomas Reynolds and Captain Armstrong.

Captain Armstrong, it will be remembered, was the chief, indeed the only witness—for, as Mr. Fitzpatrick notes, the Irish treason law was not assimilated to that of England till 1822—at the trial of John and Henry Sheares. Mr. Lecky, while deploring the unseemly haste of the trial, somewhat extenuated the baseness of Captain Armstrong's conduct, and has expressed his conviction that there can be no rational doubt as to the guilt of both brothers. Mr. Fitzpatrick's narrative sets the affair in a rather different light; and the fresh evidence he adduces, if it does not go to prove the innocence of the Sheares, is at least sufficient to prove that their trial was a mere travesty of justice, and that Armstrong, as well as MacNally, was an unmitigated scoundrel.

"Mr. John Warneford Armstrong," wrote Lord Cork on the eve of the trial, "was certainly in my regiment, and quitted it in a most disgraceful manner. From his conduct while there I would not pay much attention to what he did say, nor give much credit even to his oath. I would send a person or persons did I not think it would be too late."

This and another letter, MacNally, counsel for the defendants, judiciously suppressed! Armstrong lived to old age, and even acquired a reputation as a good and generous landlord in one of the most disturbed districts of Ireland. He denied that he had, as Curran asserted, dandled Sheares's baby on his knees while plotting the destruction of its father; but Mr. Fitzpatrick relates an anecdote how, meeting Mrs. Sheares with her children, shortly after the execution of her husband, the latter ran gleefully to meet him.

"His temper," adds Mr. Fitzpatrick, "was of as hair-trigger a character as the pistols which he carried for protection. Robert Maunsell, a leading solicitor, of whom Armstrong was a client, informed me that the captain, on one occasion, when entertained by Mrs. Maunsell in Marston-square, smashed, by an awkward swinging gesture, the leg of the chair on which he sat, whereupon his exclamation was not a gallant apology, but 'D—n your chairs, madam!'"

Mr. Fitzpatrick no longer, I am glad to see, writes "cotemporaries," but his use of "unless," pp. 7, 18, and elsewhere, is curious, and I think one ought to say "documentary," and not "documental evidence" (p. 224). I have noticed one or two misprints, and the Index is not always correct.

R. DUNLOP.

The Ainu of Japan: the Religion, Superstitions, and General History of the Hairy Aborigines of Japan. By the Rev. John Batchelor, C.M.S. With eighty illustrations. (The Religious Tract Society.)

THERE was a time when the greater part, if not the whole, of the Japanese Archipelago and neighbouring islands, as far north as Kamchatka, were peopled by men of the Ainu race, who could look out on their watery domain and exclaim, in the words of their old national song, "Gods of the sea, open your divine eyes. Wherever your eyes turn, there echoes the sound of the Ainu speech." This speech, which shows no clear relationship to any other known language, now survives only among a few scattered communities in Yezo, the southern districts of Sakhalin, and the southern members of the Kurile group, communities numbering probably less than 20,000 souls altogether. Of these, the great majority (about 17,000) are confined to Yezo, where they are in progress of extinction, partly through drink and epidemics, partly by absorption in the growing Japanese colonies on that island. But this moribund race presents so many points of interest to the anthropologist, especially in their remarkable physical features, their social usages and religious views, that students will gladly welcome this addition to the studies of their characteristics that have in recent times been made at first hand by such observers as Dr. Scheube, Herr von Siebold, and Miss Bird (Mrs. Bishop).

During the eight years (1880-89) that Mr. Batchelor devoted to missionary work among the Yezo Ainu he had exceptional opportunities for studying their inner life, and he has here brought together a surprising amount of information on this subject, the value of which is greatly enhanced by the excellent photographs and sketches supplied by Mrs. Batchelor. His intimate knowledge of the language, of which he has compiled a Grammar and Dictionary, and into which he has translated the Four Gospels, has also enabled the author to correct many of the mistakes made by his precursors in describing the social and religious practices of these aborigines. Thus it appears that their real name is not Ainu but Ainu, and the difference is more important than might be supposed. Ainu is their Japanese nickname, meaning "mongrel," formed probably by popular etymology from the native name Ainu, which means "men," "people"; hence was also doubtless suggested the Japanese legend of their canine descent.

It is also shown that Miss Bird was quite wrong in taking the curious inao, whittled willow sticks with the shavings attached, for "household gods," the fact being that they are sacred offerings to the gods, and sometimes apparently mere ornaments. It is strange that Miss Bird should have fallen into this mistake, as she herself elsewhere states that the Ainu have no religion. But here again she is flatly contradicted by Mr. Batchelor, who devotes much space to show that "these people are exceedingly religious, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary." This, in fact, is the main feature of the work, and many of the statements made are so extraordinary that they will certainly tax to the very utmost the credulity of the reader. We are asked, for instance, to believe that these hairy aborigines, confessedly at an extremely low grade of culture, have the most exalted and philosophic conceptions respecting the constitution of the universe, and the relations of the "one supreme God, the Creator of all worlds," both to mortals and to all the lesser gods, above whom He towers, of whom He is the Maker, who are "His servants and deputies." Mr. Batchelor was himself more than once taken severely to task by these rational polytheists for his disparaging remarks on the established order of things, whereby the mysterious ways of an all-wise and beneficent Providence seemed to be questioned. There are doubtless innumerable deities both "good and bad," and of both sexes, some to be loved and honoured, some to be feared and hated, deities presiding over land and water, over mountains, valleys, lakes, and rivers, over the heavenly bodies, clouds, storms, and fire, over fair and foul weather, weal and woe; but all are subordinate to the supreme God, obey His behests, and execute His orders. But being themselves finite and full of imperfections, they are but imperfect instruments of His will, liable to bungle and make mistakes through carelessness and other shortcomings. Hence the manifest defects of the universe are to be attributed not to the Creator, who means all for the best, but to His clumsy ministers; and thus have these simple-minded savages solved the great problem of the existence of physical and moral evils in a world created by a Being of infinite goodness. Thus, when Mr. Batchelor ventured to remark on the rugged and forbidding character of the west coast of Yezo, he was "rebuked," and told that he ought not thus to rail and reflect upon the works of God, and it was explained that "Yezo was made by two gods, a male and a female, who were the deputies of the Creator. The female god had the west coast as her portion of the work, and the male had the south and eastern parts assigned to him. They vied with each other in their tasks. As the goddess was proceeding with her work, she happened to meet the sister of Aioina Kamui [ancestor of the Ainu race], and instead of attending to her duties, stopped in her work to have a chat, as is the general custom of women. Whilst they were talking, the male god worked away and nearly finished his portion of labour.

Upon seeing this, the female god became very much frightened, and in order not to be behind time, did her work hurriedly and in a slovenly manner. Hence it is that the west coast is so rugged and dangerous. If therefore anyone is disposed to grumble, he should remember that it is not the Creator Himself who is at fault in this matter, but his deputy. The chattering propensity of the goddess was the original cause."

After this we ceased to wonder at anything, and learn without further surprise that these favoured children of Nature, whose language supplies no word for the world or universe as a whole, have nevertheless discovered that the earth is round and not flat, as supposed by their less intelligent Chinese and Japanese neighbours.

"According to them the world is a vast round ocean, in the midst of which are very many islands, or worlds, or countries, each governed by its own special order of gods. . . Upon asking the people why they supposed the world, taken as a whole, to be round, they replied that it was because the sun rises in the east, sets in the west, and comes up the next morning in the east again."

Certainly the Irish philosopher, Virgilius, bishop of Salzburg, who is usually credited with the first clear conception of the rotundity of the earth, could scarcely have put the point more neatly than this. But the author's remarks on the word kamui, a god, will tend to shake the reader's confidence in some of his conclusions regarding the sublime religious notions of these untutored aborigines. This term is not only equated with the Japanese kami, but the opinion is expressed that, "however unlikely it may at first sight appear, the Japanese owe their word for 'god' to an Ainu source." Yet it has been clearly shown by Dr. A. Anuchin that kamui has nothing to do with kami, but is an Ainu compound form from kam-trui, "flesh-strong," that is, rich in flesh, the reference being to the bear, which was formerly the great god of the Ainu, as it is still of the Ghiliaks and of several other tribes on the neighbouring mainland. At stated periods this animal is killed and eaten with much ceremony, the scene partaking somewhat of a religious feast, and concluding with the usual drunken orgies, as described by many observers, including Mr. Batchelor himself. When captured, the people "admire and make their salaams to it," obviously a survival of former worship, and before the sacrifice it is told that it is about to be sent to its forefathers; pardon is craved for the offence, and "it is comforted with the consolation that large numbers of inao [sacred offerings] and plenty of wine will be sent along with it." Of course the larger and fatter, the more the god was admired, and thus the quality of abundant flesh came gradually to be regarded as the highest attribute of the divinity. Then the term kamui, when its etymology was forgotten, was naturally generalised as a name applicable to all deities. Its resemblance to the Japanese kami is a mere coincidence, comparable to the resemblance, for instance, between the English sheriff and the Arabic sharif.

It is evident that the statements regarding the religious views of these natives must be received with great caution; but in all other respects Mr. Batchelor's contribution to Ainu ethnology can hardly be overrated. The book will always be consulted, if only for the sake of the numerous photographs, which give an excellent idea of the physical features of this strange Caucasian waif, stranded, as it were, on the remotest confines of the Mongolic world.

A. H. KEANE.

The Works of Heinrich Heine. Translated by C. G. Leland. Vols. V and VI: "Germany." (Heinemann.)

It is hardly likely at this time of day that a serious seeker for information about the religion, philosophy, or belles lettres of Germany will turn to Heine, except for the chance of an occasional side gleam of enlightenment. Mme. de Staël's book, which Heine professed to supplement, would need to be poor indeed not to present, within its own scope, truer views of men and things than some put forward by Heine. The lady, however, is not regarded as one of the world's greatest humorists; and as she dealt with what was after all only a passing phase of German evolution, her work is now one of the sober respectabilities to which professed students must occasionally refer, but hardly a living book. Heine's work, on the contrary, thanks to the salt and spice of wit and humour, is one whose intrinsic merit as a collection and exposition of facts may be great or small, but which is still capable of being read by mere seekers after entertainment. It is therefore still worth translating; defective knowledge and disproportionate treatment of details are things of slight importance here—we know where to look for correctives—and the very spite that turns portrait into caricature, and biography into scandalmonging, gives, or seems to give, a grip of personality not always obtainable otherwise. The drift of the book is anti-religious, or rather anti-Catholic, a circumstance which necessitated now and then a little softening down of expression in the French version in which the book first appeared; but as the purpose kept in view is political, or, to use Heine's own word, social, and not controversial theological, why—let the galled jade wince! and the translator give us our Heine undilute. Wit and humour, however, are essences extremely apt to lose both strength and flavour in the process of transference from one language to another. It was therefore a very natural and, on the face of it, a very happy thought on the part of a publisher desirous of bringing out Heine in English to invite the co-operation of a writer who had long worked on the borderland between German and English, having executed a version of the Reisebilder during the author's own lifetime, and achieved for himself an independent and not insignificant reputation as a humorist. As if still further to raise expectation, Mr. Leland writes in his preface:

"As regards serious effort to translate carefully and clearly, retaining as well as I could the spirit of a writer with whom I have long been familiar, and who himself expressed gratification at the publication of my translation of the Reisebilder, I can only say that I have taken a degree of pains which I never before devoted to any similar work."

In the present volumes, therefore, we have a specimen of Mr. Leland's very best work; and, having conscientiously read nearly the whole of the first volume along with the original, I think I may say that, although mistakes are not quite so thickly strewn as they are in some parts of the previous volumes, they are still far too numerous. Here are some specimens, German and English:

HEINE.

Die Einen, die Manichäer, erhielten diese Lehre [des Dualismus] aus der altpersischen Religion, wo Ormuzd, das Licht, dem Ahriman, der Finsternis, feindlich entgegengesetzt ist. Die Anderen, die eigentlichen Gnostiker, glaubten vielmehr an die Präexistenz des guten Princips, und erklärten die Entstehung des bösen Princips durch Emanation, durch Generationen von Aeonon, die, je mehr sie von ihrem Ursprung entfernt sind, sich desto früher verschlechtert (Werke, Bd. v., p. 39).

Das ganze System von Symbolen, die sich ausgesprochen in der Kunst und im Leben des Mittelalters, wird zu allen Zeiten die Bewunderung der Dichter erregen. In der That, welche kolossale Konsequenz in der christlichen Kunst, namentlich in der Architektur! Diese Gothischen Dome, wie stehen sie im Einklang mit dem Kultus, und wie offenbart sich in ihnen die Idee der Kirche selber! Alles strebt da empor, Alles transsubstantiirt sich: der Stein . . . wird Baum: die Frucht des Weinstocks und der Aehre wird Blut und Fleisch — (p. 44).

Der wahre Christ spazierte mit ängstlich verschlossenen Sinnen, wie ein abstraktes Geistes, in der blühenden Natur umher (p. 47).

Beständig aber halten wir im Auge diejenigen von den Fragen der Philosophie, denen wir eine sociale Bedeutung beimessen, und zu deren Lösung sie [die Philosophie] mit der Religion konkurriert (p. 107).

In einer Zahl ist alles Sinnliche und Endliche abgestreift, und dennoch bezeichnet sie etwas Bestimmtes und dessen Verhältnis zu etwas Bestimmtem (p. 192).

Ich glaube, man erlaubt mich gern die populäre Erörterung dieser Partie, wo "von

MR. LELEND.

The Manichæans derived this idea [of Dualism] from the old Persian religion, in which Ormuzd, or Light, is opposed as an enemy to Ahriman, or Darkness. The true Gnostics placed more reliance on the pre-existence of the good principle, and explained the existence of the evil by emanation, by the generations of æons, who, the more remote they become from their origin, the more degraded (Vol. v., p. 7).

The whole system of symbols which express themselves in the art and life of the Middle Age will through all time awake the amazed admiration of the artist. And, indeed, what a colossal result it had [!] in Christian art, especially in architecture! How these Gothic cathedrals are in harmony with the general culture [!], and how the idea of the Church is revealed in them! Everything in them rises and soars, everything trans-forms itself; the stone sprouts . . . and becomes a tree, the fruit of the vine, and the branches become flesh and blood — (p. 11).

The true Christian walked with agonised reserved feelings, like an abstracted spectre here and there in blooming Nature (p. 15).

And we must constantly bear in mind those questions of philosophy to which we attribute a social significance, and whose solution concurs [!] with that of religion (p. 68).

All that which is sensible and finite is concisely given in a number, and yet it indicates something determined, and its relation to something determined (p. 141).

I believe that the reader will willingly excuse me from giving the popular disquisition den Beweisgründen der speculativen Vernunft, auf das Dasein eines höchsten Wesens zu schliessen," gehandelt wird (p. 198).

HEINE.

Alle Wege, die man in dieser Absicht einschlagen mag, fangen entweder von der bestimmten Erfahrung und der dadurch erkannten besonderen Beschaffenheit unserer Sinnenwelt an . . . ; oder sie legen nur unbestimmte Erfahrung, Das ist, irgend ein Dasein zum Grunde, oder — (p. 199).

Sie [die Kirche] hat durch grosse geniale Institutionen die Bestialität der nordischen Barbaren zu zähmen und die brutale Materie zu bewältigen gewusst (vi. 23).

This last example is one of sticking too close to the absolute words of the original; "genial" does not mean the same thing in German and in English. Too frequently Mr. Leland goes to the other extreme and seems to reject arbitrarily the right words, as when he substitutes "compromise" for "concordat," "council" for "conclave" (at a papal election), "chart" for "charter," and translates Abgeordneten (delegates) as "minor officers" (p. 41). Perhaps his greatest mistake is over the word Kultus, which Heine uses in the right sense of "cult," "ritual," "worship," as complementary or antithetic to "dogma." Mr. Leland (at p. 1) appends to it the following extraordinary note: "The true meaning of this disputed word is here the peculiar form which national spirit or character assumes in action, including its social, literary, and other developments"; and translates it "culture" several times. Whether he improves his own position when he further on in the book translates it rightly may be doubted. Occasionally, in passages whose sense is not wholly lost, the wording is awkward even to grotesqueness, as in "whether the Virgin Mary was one giving birth to God or mau" (p. 5), and "The model of the master makes the man" (p. 296), in which alliteration seems to have run away with Mr. Leland. What Heine says is, "The example of the master guided the disciples." Mr. Leland is unfortunate in his French too; "dont la lumière saut aux yeux" (p. viii.) may be due to the printer, but it is hard to believe that the "lion de Juda démentré" ever appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes. As for "la ruis-seller a pour nous l'eau de Jouvence," the omission of an accent and the separation of a final letter have made fine havoc of the sense. I suppose it must be credited to the printer. But who read the proofs? Then we have the famous distich—

"De par le roi, défense à Dieu De faire miracle en ce lieu," with its measure spoilt by the substitution of dans for en. And was not the place the churchyard of St. Médard? Mr. Leland says the Cour des Miracles.

MR. LELEND.

of that part where the author treats of "principles of the proof of speculative reason deducing the existence of a highest being" (p. 146).

Every road which one can take with this intention must begin either from determined experience and the thereby recognised special adaptability of the world of sense . . . or they have for basis only undetermined experience, that is, an existence, or else — (p. 147).

It [the Church] succeeded by subduing with its great genial institutions the bestiality of Northern barbarians and mastering brutal matter (p. 215).

Altogether, the conclusion is forced upon one that Mr. Leland's knowledge of German is not sufficiently accurate, nor his command of English sufficiently absolute, to constitute him an ideal translator of a German classic. Those who know the original can only regret, for the author's sake, the publication of a version so imperfect; and those who are obliged to use a translation will be very apt to imagine that Heine's clearness and brilliancy have been much over-stated. The latter are certainly to be pitied, for it is hardly probable that any one else will care to go over the ground after Mr. Leland.

R. McLINTOCK.

SCOTCH CLERICALISM OLD AND NEW.

Studies in Scottish History, chiefly Ecclesiastical. By A. Taylor Innes. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Scottish Ministerial Miniatures. By Deas Cromarty. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THESE two books have almost nothing in common; yet for that very reason they may be taken and considered together. Between them they represent a phase—possibly a transitory phase—of Scottish theologico-ecclesiastical life. The one is dry with the dryness of podantry; the other is unctuous with the unctuousness of the female gossip who is never happier than when she is in church, and who, to do her justice, is interested quite as much in the sermon as in the bonnets. For one Scotchman that will read Mr. Taylor Innes's volume, there are twenty Scotchwomen who will care to have a peep at the instantaneous photographs of professors and ministers at present living North of the Tweed, taken by the lady—one may safely bet Mr. Gladstone's ten to one that it is a lady—who styles herself "Deas Cromarty."

It may be doubted, indeed, whether Mr. Innes has done wisely in republishing a number of his papers which have no merit but a controversial one. It is strange that a veteran writer for the press and the magazines should have committed such an error. Nearly half of his book is composed of arguments which may be interesting to Mr. Taylor Innes and folk who, like himself, are Disestablishers and Free Churchmen, but which are a weariness of the flesh to ordinary lay—even to ordinary Scotch—humanity. Mr. Taylor Innes's action in republishing his controversial articles is all the more to be regretted, because it has led to his attempting at least to secure immortality for some very sad nonsense about Burns. In a paper styled "The Question in Scotland Twenty Years Ago," he delivers a number of hard blows—the hard blows of a member of the Evangelical party—at the Moderates, who were, according to their lights and capacities, the Latitudinarians or Broad Churchmen of the eighteenth century in Scotland. He discovers that the Moderates "cast away" the life of Burns, and this mainly on the faith of two uncorroborated stories. One of these, which Mr. Innes describes as "unspeakably touching," but which is in reality unspeakably silly, is to the effect that Burns was "visited by that sudden consciousness of sin and despairing aspirations after a higher life which comes once in a lifetime to many a man," and that he

"went with his convictions to the minister of the parish where he happened to be—a Moderate of excellent character—who heard all he had to say, and gave it as his advice to him not to trouble himself about these things—to 'go to the first penny-wedding he could find, and think no more about it.'"

The second story is that

"one of the leaders of the Moderate party in Ayrshire, having seen a small manuscript collection of Burns's earliest poems, sent for the poet. He treated him kindly and praised his book, but pointing out passages here and there that were tinged with the traditional religion which the writer had imbibed under his father's roof, advised him, for the sake of his own future reputation, to avoid all drivelling pietism, and to keep henceforth such unpoetical stuff out of his poems."

And so, in virtue of these two stories, we are asked to believe that

"the failure of Burns's higher aspirations was ['were' is the actual word in the text] due not merely to that general atmosphere of unbelief which his Moderate friends certainly spread around him, but to their positive contact or interference at the time when that glorious nature was struggling to open itself to heaven."

This is unfair to the Moderates; Mr. Innes condemns them for (in their case at all events) the very worst form of insincerity, on the evidence of second-hand gossip. But it is preposterously unjust to Burns. If it is true of David Hume, as averred by Mr. Innes, that he had "six times the brains" of "the leading Moderates" of his time, it is no less true that Burns had six times the brains of the clergymen of Ayrshire, not to speak of "the drunken writers and boozy lairds who desired to seduce Burns into the Moderatism which they could trust, as a religion that made pleasant provision for the flesh." And yet we are asked to believe that Burns allowed himself to be influenced, even allowed his moral life to be wrecked, by men intellectually his inferiors almost to an incalculable extent!

But Mr. Innes is an industrious investigator and a careful, if also somewhat prosaic, chronicler; and several of his essentially non-controversial papers, such as "Samuel Rutherford," "Sir George Mackenzie," and "Edinburgh and Sir William Hamilton," are fairly readable. His description of Rutherford—Rutherford of the Letters more particularly—as an "unselfish egoist," is happy, and it is as accurate as it is happy. Mr. Innes has further done a distinct service to history and to Scotland by reproducing the brighter side of the life and character of the eminent lawyer and politician so unhappily known as "Bloody Mackenzie." He says of Mackenzie quite truly that his "writings show that steady and discriminating love of justice which every great lawyer possesses, if not as an original passion, at least as a slowly acquired and deep-founded habit." Mackenzie further did a vast deal to improve the administration of criminal justice in Scotland. Before his time an accused person never knew what witnesses the Crown was to bring against him; Mackenzie obtained a law that a list should be furnished to the prisoner fifteen days before trial. Formerly the naming of a jury was in the hands of the King's Advocate; Mackenzie had an Act passed empowering the judges to select forty-five men, of whom the defendant chose fifteen. He also established the practice by which the defendant has the last word in criminal cases. Finally, "the clerk of the court appointed by the Crown used always to be enclosed with the jury for their direction till Charles II.'s law-officer got an Act empowering them to choose their own clerk."

"Deas Cromarty's" volume is of a very different sort from Mr. Taylor Innes's. It deals entirely with men in their more human aspects, whereas Mr. Taylor Innes's deals mainly with historical facts and controversies, and with ecclesiastics as ecclesiastics. It is full of "a living interest in living men." It is, indeed, a sign of the times in Scotland. Men and women there, who are attached members of congregations, talk much, sometimes eulogistically, sometimes in a depreciatory spirit, always in a gossiping way, of clergymen—of their appearance, their dress, their habits, their headaches, their families, their orthodoxy (or the reverse), and the manner in which they attend to their multifarious duties. This is a volume of such gossip, clarified and to some extent spiritualised. Dealing with the personal appearance and the mental specialities of sixteen professors and forty-six "ministers on charges," it will be regarded as "quite a treat" in a large number of Scotch households. How delightful, for example, to learn that Principal Rainy has "a well-filled, well-carried figure," "a clear cut, classic, attentive face," and an "air of composed information and ability for every affair in hand." Is there not, however, a touch of provincialism in such praise as that "as leader of the House of Commons he [Dr. Rainy] would have stood without a rival?" How pleasant it must be to see oneself described as "a small finished man, dark haired, and handsomely smooth atop, with a fine aquiline cast of face," and to learn that one "is at once a scholar and a gentleman," and "would be quite in place in any circle of eminent University men"! Again, "ill-hung but vigorous are the mouth and jaws, and the voice correspond"; but it must console the Rev. Dr. James Stalker, who is so sketched, to learn that he has "a vigorous nature in tilt at the sins of the world, eager to serve a cause, to help a friend." It is of judiciously whipped-up adulation of this kind that Scottish Ministerial Miniatures is mainly composed. "Deas Cromarty" shows herself, besides, tolerably familiar with the theological controversies of the day in Scotland, and surveys them from what she herself would probably term a Wide Church standpoint. She knows her business as a gossip-photographer, and would probably—did she but try—write a tolerably successful novel with a clergyman for hero, though not martyr. But, as has already been said, this book is notable mainly as a sign of the times.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

NEW NOVELS.

Quizote the Weaver. By C. G. Furley Smith. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Come Live With Me and Be My Love. By Robert Buchanan. (Heinemann.)

Where Honour Sits. By W. B. Home-Gall. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Interpreter's House. By B. Paul Newman. (Fisher Unwin.)

A Conquering Heroine. By Mrs. Hungerford. (White.)

An Evil Reputation. By Dora Russell. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

Tib. By George Douglas. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

A Big Mistake. By Grace Ellicott. (John Flack.)

Paid in Full. By Mary H. Tennyson. (W. Stevens.)

MR. HUGH BOSWELL, millowner, of the Scotch town of Queenshope, is the hero of Quizote the Weaver. The author gives him this designation because, although he is the wealthiest man in Queenshope, he has socialistic tendencies which make him more considerate towards his workpeople than factory owners are generally. While the other Queenshope employers of labour "combined the most radical longings to abolish the peerage with the most conservative feelings regarding the proper position of mill hands," Boswell put his workpeople on a higher level, and sought their material, intellectual, and moral well-being. Of course, he suffered for his reforming zeal, and all the most benevolent actions of his life were turned against him. He befriended a poor mill-girl who had been betrayed and abandoned by her lover, and the world called him her seducer. He was even accused of setting his own factories on fire so that he might obtain the insurance money of £50,000, and out of all those who had received of his beneficence there were none to stand by him in his hour of adversity. Two women only knew him to be the soul of honour, and they remained true. One was his wife, a gentle retiring girl, whose depth of feeling had never been suspected until affliction tried her as in a furnace; and the other was Lindsay Lorimer, a young lady of lofty aspirations, his first love. The narrow world of Queenshope was startled when the faith of these two was justified by events, and Boswell's character was cleared of every stain. There was a good deal of tribulation to pass through, however, before this desirable consummation; and a young artist, Basil Warrender, was instrumental in bringing the truth to light. He was rewarded for his action, which it must be confessed sprang largely from his affection for Lindsay Lorimer, by the love of that peerless creature, who had the art possessed by true musicians of making the violin speak. Peter Ranken, the father of the betrayed girl, is a powerfully-drawn character. A half-taught Republican weaver, to him "equality and brotherhood meant only social reversal—servant becoming master and master slave." Geordie Lawson, the Scotch poet, is also excellently drawn. His conceit is colossal.

"'It's the like o' us,' he remarks on one occasion, 'the poets—the Shaksperes, an' the Burns, an' the Lawsons—that could gie ye the best help, for we're aye soundin' the deeps o' man's soul, studyin' the ambections an' the passions that's the same in a' ages an' in a' stations.'"

The name of Mr. Furley Smith is now to us, but he is a writer of distinct promise. He has a grasp of individualities, and there are many parts of this novel which testify also to his command over the springs of humour and pathos.

Mr. Buchanan's story is by no means equal to his best work in fiction, but it is still far beyond the capacity of the average novelist. There is no doubt it would have been better still had it not been founded on the author's pastoral drama, "Squire Kato." Writing a novel from a drama must be destructive of spontaneity, and that is just the impression left by Come Live With Me and Be My Love. The scenes are too much constructed to order. Nevertheless, the character of Catherine Thorpe, the woman-farmer—whose lover is taken away from her by her sister Bridget—is powerfully drawn, and the same may be said of the sister herself. Catherine has given her affections to a somewhat lackadaisical youth—as handsome, full-blooded women sometimes will—while she utterly ignores the masculine affection of Geoffrey Doone, her overseer, who has long worshipped her from afar. Meanwhile, the favoured lover has eyes only for Bridget, and there is much trouble all round when the bent of his affections is discovered. Love philtres and tragic incidents are part of the apparatus employed by the author. Of course there is a general reconciliation at the last. Mr. Buchanan gives us some pretty transcripts of nature and human nature in the South of England, and his volume is appropriately dedicated to Mr. Thomas Hardy.

The Tale of the Desert March, Egypt, 1884-85, by Mr. Home-Gall is all in the line of the new class of sanguinary war stories. Charles Morrelle, the hero, enlists in the army because he believes Rose Gresham has been untrue to him. There was plenty to make him think so, though everything is ultimately shown to have arisen from a mistake. Rose's sister, Leila, has borrowed some of her clothes in order to keep an assignation with her married lover in the gloaming. Morrelle sees the lovers, and mistakes Leila for Rose. Next day he has a stormy interview with Capt. Bassett, the betrayer, whom he charges with an intrigue with Rose. Bassett does not undeceive him, and Rose also, in order to shield her sister, suffers herself to be misunderstood. Bassett plays a more unworthy trick still. In view of Morrelle, he forcibly embraces Rose, thus making believe that they are lovers. Morrelle rushes from the scene distracted, and forthwith takes the Queen's shilling. At Abu Klea he fights like one of Mr. Rider Haggard's heroes, saves the life of his mortal enemy, Bassett, and obtains the Victoria Cross and a commission. When he returns to England the tangled web is all unwoven, and Rose and Morrelle are united in wedlock. Albeit there is something to desiderate in Mr. Home-Gall's style, the war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole Where Honour Sits may certainly be pronounced readable.

The Interpreter's House has just missed being a very striking volume. It is a book of parables dealing with life and death. The mysteries of both are now and again handled with a skill that promises still better things to come. Mr. Neuman's style is effective, though it is by no means immaculate when judged from the severe grammatical standpoint. He must also get rid of that uncouth German phraseology which finds expression in such literary barbarities as "thy never-to-be-forgotten stones," "this by-the-body-hampored spirit," "the soon-to-be-published, world-influencing work," and the like. Still, it is something when a writer strikes out a path for himself, as Mr. Neuman does in such sketches as "The Forest Child," "The Sins of the Fathers," and "The Second Manhood of Amos Dole."

The author of "Molly Bawn" is entertaining as usual in A Conquering Heroine. The young Irish goddess, Bridget O'Neill, is no doubt such a captivating creature that even a cold critic would succumb to her charms; but in the interests of her own sex we are very glad when she marries, and the havoc among the "oligibles" is arrested. She is a vivacious, lovable creature, but she (perhaps unconsciously) plays it very low down upon other girls who have not her natural advantages and charms. All the men who are introduced to her—from proud lords to penniless youths—simply come up to be bowled over like so many ninepins.

Miss Dora Russell's story, An Evil Reputation, is full of startling surprises, and reminds us of the French detective novels. The "evil reputation" does not belong to a human being, but to a lonely house on the sea coast, where more than one ghastly tragedy has been enacted. The most exciting of these is related at length. A beautiful young married woman is the victim, but she survives almost unheard-of cruelties to bring retribution upon her guilty husband and his accomplice. All who are fond of sensationalism will find no lack of it in this volume.

In a wholly different vein is Tib, a story of Scottish farm life, which details the love passages in the history of two sisters—Tib and Clova Shiel. There are no incidents out of the common, yet the sketch is extremely interesting, because it is gracefully written, and the fresh country air blows across its pages.

With one of Shakspeare's characters Miss Ellicott might say of A Big Mistake, "A poor thing, but mine own." Certainly no one would desire to rob her of the honour of its production. The style is thin and trivial to the last degree, and the two leading characters behave foolishly. Lady Armytage, having failed to become united to the man she loves, joins a sisterhood, and soon dies. Whether we look at the conduct of her ladyship, or that of Mr. Fenwick, or whether we regard the book as a whole, we are inclined to echo the words of the title, and say "a big mistake."

For the sake of human nature, we trust there are not many fathers like Herbert Ferrol, who treats his daughter—the heroine of Paid in Full—with fiendish cruelty. Some of the American experiences related here are almost incredible. Happily the daughter escapes from her father's clutches, and after stirring vicissitudes finds at last a happier fate than the one she had been destined for. The story holds the reader's attention.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

A Garden, and Other Poems. By Richard Francis Towndrow. (Fisher Unwin.) There is a certain charm about these verses that is often absent from work which, from the point of view of art, can claim a far higher place. It arises from their obvious sincerity. They are the unforced expression of moods which at times visit most men, but which few have the gift to record with such a delicate and tender touch. One imagines them written in some country home—a parsonage perhaps—in the intervals of a life of quiet labour, little vexed with care. There are the faults of an amateur: an imperfect sense of rhyme, a tendency to echoes—here of "In Memoriam," there of "Caterina to Camoens"; but the thought is always high, if not deep, and the singing pure and full of melody. Like so many minor poets of the century, Mr. Towndrow is at his best in reproducing effects of natural beauty. There is nothing happier in the volume than "A Pool in a Meadow," of which these are the first two stanzas:—

"Pollard willows guard the place,
Pond weeds clothe it nearly over,
Save where, drawing back a space,
They the clear, black, secret face
Of the silent pool uncover.

"Round about it tangled bushes,
Here and there a little parted,
And beneath them tufts of rushes,
Where the moor-hen shyly pushes Into darkness when upstarted."

Nearly half the poems are in sonnet-form, and of these the most successful are a series devoted to the four seasons in some of their infinitely various phases. It is hard to choose a favourite where so many are good, but, on the whole, we think that this autumnal one, with its jubilant note, pleases us best:—

"The elms are clad in triumph-robos of gold,
And orchards glowing in autumnal blaze,
Lifted from earth to heaven through dark'ning days,
Flushed with a flame which they alone behold:
Gathered and stored, while seasons slowly rolled Through that half-cycle, since the first love lays
Of mating birds filled all the wooded ways
With promise, till the gorse lit up the world.
Dear Earth! when Spring's new garments greet the sky
How fair is her awaking—green, beneath
The snow-fringed blue of April's canopy—
Still lovely through all growth, till that first wreath
Is turned to gold by true life's alchemy:
Most glorious in the vestments of her death."

Love in Earnest. By J. G. F. Nicholson. (Elliot Stock.) Mr. Nicholson has a fatal gift of fluency. He has collected here no less than a hundred and nineteen sonnets, besides songs, ballades, and rondeaux. Unfortunately, his sonnets lack that last unanalysable quality of distinction; and sonnets without distinction, especially in a long series, can only be monotonous. Taken by themselves, each is harmless; the sentiments are neatly expressed, the rhythms musical—too musical, indeed: a little ruggedness of expression, if only it came from true thought or intense feeling, would really produce a better effect than this constant languorous beauty. The following is a fair type of the whole fifty which make up the title-poem of the volume:—

"A sad, soft colour in the sunset-skies:
Dark clouds that drift o'er spaces amber clear
Above the tree-tops; through the silence
Drear

The voice of an ebbing sea that sobs and sighs;
And on your face, whence all the gladness dies,
A wistful look that tells of dawning fear,
A new unwonted whisper at your ear,
A vague indefinite shadow in your eyes.

"Oh that my love could chase your care away,
And drive this first faint sorrow from your breast,

But the dim future heeds not Love's behest;
Powerless am I the Unseen to know or stay,
And yet, throughout Life's long, mysterious day,
God grant, my darling, that you may have rest!"

The miscellaneous sonnets at the end of the volume, and some, at least, of the lyrical pieces, where the want of strength and concentration is less felt, seem to us much better. But how could Mr. Nicholson venture even a sonnet-sequence on "The Ancient Marinere" with a light heart and no fear for the inevitable comparison?

Leaves of Memory. By Elizabeth Cowell. (Seeley.) These poems are mostly written in rapid metres, with a curiously incongruous effect, for the subjects of which they treat are nearly always meditative. They are songs of regret; of regret for death, or for the romance of history, or for the ideals and illusions of earlier years. The authoress is not without some measure of poetic feeling, but her command of technique is entirely inadequate to give it form. More knowledge of the great masterpieces would, one hopes, have made the following lines impossible:—

"She's overworked, 'th' old woman said,
And slowly shook her suow-white head;
'Her other grandmother feels it too;
The poor thing has too much to do.'"

Of course Mrs. Cowell can write better than this. Such poems as "Sunrise in Calcutta," "The Queen's Cross," "The Well of Clisson" reach a far higher level.

Poems. By A. G. R. (Chiswick Press.) There is not a thought in this volume which is other than commonplace; hardly a phrase, a rhyme, or an epithet which is not hackneyed. The writer has no feeling for metre, and his lines frequently fail to scan. He is always tedious and often absurd. This would have been rejected by any self-respecting school magazine:—

"The oak may brave the tempest,
And the ash may love the breeze,
But I know an humble flower
That nestled 'neath the trees;
And the bitter east wind smote it,
And each fibre shrank and sighed,
And its little tendrils—blasted—
Shrivelled up—and so it died."

The next stanza is, if possible, feebler.

"CANTERBURY POETS."—Songs of Béranger. Translated into English Verse by William Toynbee. (Walter Scott.) Mr. Toynbee has certainly a happy touch in translation. We think his book might be read through, by a person who had not read Béranger, without being recognized as a translation in more than half a dozen lines; and this is high praise. Further, he has often caught the lilt and swing of the original refrains—here, for instance, in "The Outcast" (p. 93):

"With fellow-countrymen for foes
My fathers' spurs were never won,
They never hailed in France, God knows,
The hated arms of Albion!
Nor when the State to ruin's brink
Was well-nigh brought by Priesthood's guile,
Were their pens steeped in Treason's ink.
Noblesse! Lord love you, I'm Canaille—
Canaille, sirs, rank Canaille!"

Very good too, in a graver and less satiric mood, is his version of "An Epicurean's Prayer":

"Love, tho' from thy full harvest field
Death plucks the golden grain,
Oh, thaw the heart by grief congealed,
And kindle them again.
Against the promptings of despair
Let thy sweet impulse plead,
And if the harvest Death must share,
Cease not to sow the seed!"

All are good—the best, we think, in addition to those we have quoted, are "Off to the Country," "Poniatowski," "My Choice," and, strongest, perhaps, of all, "The Cossack's Song."

NOTES AND NEWS.

DURING the past five years, Mr. G. Barnett Smith has been engaged upon an important work, entitled The History of the English Parliament, together with an account of the Parliaments of Scotland and Ireland. It extends from the earliest times down to the great extension of the suffrage by the Reform Acts of 1884-5. There are no fewer than seventeen appendices, in the shape of "Constitutional Addenda," dealing with a great number of matters affecting Parliament and the Constitution. The work differs entirely from the many existing constitutional histories treating of the government of England at various periods. It is the first complete, consecutive record of the English Parliament as a legislative institution from the earliest times to the present day. In addition to the Parliamentary journals and official documents, all the constitutional writers of authority upon each epoch have been consulted in its preparation—a fact which will sufficiently testify to the magnitude of the undertaking. The History, which will be illustrated with facsimiles of constitutional documents, will be published by Messrs. Ward, Lock, Bowden & Co., early in October, in two large octavo volumes of nearly 600 pages each.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE has undertaken to write for the "Rulers of India" series a Life of Thomason, one of the first lieutenant-governors of the North-Western Provinces. Though his name will be looked for in vain in biographical dictionaries, it is still remembered in Northern India as that of the man who stamped his personal character on the system of administration, as Munro did in Madras, and Mountstuart Elphinstone did in Bombay.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish in the autumn the autobiography of Sir Henry Parkes, four times prime minister of New South Wales. It will be entitled Fifty Years in the Making of Australian History; and will be in two volumes, with portraits.

THE Diplomatic Reminiscences of Lord Augustus Loftus will be issued next week, in two volumes, by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON is putting together another volume of poems, which will be published later on by Messrs. Macmillan.

THE Rev. John Owen, author of "Evenings with the Skeptics," has in the press a continuation of that work, dealing with the skeptics of the Italian and French renaissance. It will form two volumes, and will be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

MR. H. MORSE STEPHENS is well advanced with a third volume of his History of the French Revolution, carrying the work down to the end of the Convention, in 1795.

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish early in the autumn an English translation of the Atys of Catullus, by Mr. Grant Allen, with a somewhat elaborate introduction, discussing the cult of Atys in its relation to primitive mythology.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co. will publish very shortly an English translation of Moltke: His Life and Character, as sketched in his journals, letters, and autobiographical notes. The volume will be illustrated with portraits, facsimiles of documents, and drawings by Moltke in water-colours and in black and white.

UNDER the title of Cairo: Sketches of its History, Monuments, and Social Life, Messrs. J. S. Virtue & Co. will republish in a collected form various articles contributed by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole to Picturesque Palestine, Sinai, and Egypt, to the Art Journal, and to other periodicals. The materials have been thoroughly revised and brought up to date, and considerable additions have been made. The work is profusely illustrated, and a final chapter will treat of the results of the English administration of Egypt.

THE success of the sixpenny edition of the Waverley Novels has been such that Messrs. A. & C. Black are encouraged to continue the series by the publication, uniform in size and price, of Scott's Poems in three volumes, of The Tales of a Grandfather in three volumes, and of Lockhart's Life (unabridged) in five volumes.

MR. JOHN S. FARMER, who has already issued for private circulation two volumes of his Slang Dictionary, will have a third volume ready for his subscribers in October. The name of Mr. W. E. Henley will now appear with his on the title-page.

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER, of Paisley, has in the press two new volumes by Mr. Henry Gough, dealing with the mediaeval history of Scotland. One is The Itinerary of Edward I. in his Scotch expeditions, 1286-1307, with introductions, notes, and maps; the other is The Process against the Templars in Scotland, 1309, from a contemporary MS. in the Bodleian Library, with other documents relating to the Templars in Scotland.

A VOLUME of verse, bearing the title, Willow and Wattle, by Mr. Robert Richardson, will be published in October by Mr. John Grant, of Edinburgh. The contents have been selected from poems contributed to British and Colonial magazines and newspapers.

THE fifteenth conference of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations will be held this year at Genoa, from October 5 to 11. The subjects to be discussed are classified under public international law, private international law, and marine law. In the last mentioned section, a resolution will be proposed, to the effect that the York-Antwerp rules of general average, as amended in 1890, be henceforth formally adopted.

MR. J. WELLS, of Wadham College, has printed as a pamphlet (Methuen) a lecture on "The Teaching of History in Schools," which he delivered at the recent University Extension meeting in Oxford. We will only say that the treatment is inspiring and practical throughout.

Mr. E. W. B. NICHOLSON has reprinted from the ACADEMY his series of letters on the pedigree of the name "Jack"—but so "recast, augmented, and amended," that even the editor can hardly recognise them. Further research and consideration, however, have not led him to modify his original thesis:

"That the received belief as to the origin of the English forename Jack is quite wrong, and that, instead of being derived from the French Jacques, or any kindred form of that name, it comes from a diminutive of the middle English Johan, i.e., John."

He has added several appendices, in one of which he deals with the forms Jacky and Johnny, while in another he traces back Johan in English to about 1122. A copy of the pamphlet (pp. 33) will be sent to any one who addresses Mr. Nicholson, at the Bodleian Library, Oxford.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE first number of Chums, which will be issued next week by Messrs. Cassell & Co., will contain the commencement of a serial story by Mr. D. H. Parry, entitled "For Glory and Renown"; a story of the sea by Max Pemberton; a chat about Harrow by a Harrow Schoolboy; the first of a series of exciting adventures by "Ulysses"; a paper on "How to train for the Football Season"; particulars of upwards of 500 prizes offered to boys; "Our Reading Club," by "Spectator"; together with an abundance of illustrations.

A NEW serial story, by the author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland," will appear in Great Thoughts, beginning with the first weekly number for October.

AN article on "Queen Victoria's Dolls" will appear in the September issue of the Strand Magazine, giving illustrations of a large number of dolls dressed by the Queen when a little girl, mostly as historical characters. The dolls were sent from Windsor to be specially photographed for the magazine, and the Queen has been pleased to read and revise the article, and to add notes herself.

AMONG the articles appearing in the September issue of the Religious Review of Reviews will be "The Lincoln Judgment and the Privy Council," by Mr. Charles Skinner; "The Duty of the Christian to the Jew," by Dr. R. N. Cust; "The Repeal of the Acts of Uniformity," II., by the Rev. F. T. Vine, and a paper by the Dean of Gloucester. Canon Fleming's Sandringham sermon, "One that Comforteth the Mourners," will also be given. With this number is started an Australian edition of the review.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

PURPLE CLEMATIS.

[THE clematis shows that the summer is nearly over; then follows autumn, and after it comes winter, which always reminds me of death—the end of everything.]

In purple splendour drooping,
The clematis by the gate,
Is the symbol of summer departing,
The summer which may not wait.

And autumn, with gifts so precious,
How soon it passeth away;
It crowneth the year with sadness—
It lingers, but may not stay.

Like old age, followeth winter,
And through its chilly breath
We dimly see, in a mirror,
The misty face of death.

To the living spring returneth,
But what avails to the dead
That the grass should be green above them,
The primrose bloom o'er their head?
Is there aught remaineth of knowledge,
Of hope, of faith, or of love,
When the winter of death is round us,
And only a mound above
In some graveyard is left for a token
That we who once were are not, now
That ineffable mystic presence
We call death stooped and kissed our brow?

And we—we arose and followed
Out into the blackness of night:
And none whom we left behind us
May know if the morning light
Ever breaks on a great hereafter:
Or if death is the end of life,
And a dreamless annihilation
Be the finish of earthly strife.

FLORENCE PEACOCK.

OBITUARY.

DR. W. F. SKENE.

WE have to record the death, at the ripe age of eighty-three, of Dr. W. F. Skene, the historian of Celtic Scotland. He died at his residence in Inverleith-road, Edinburgh, on Monday, August 29.

William Forbes Skene was born at Inverie, Kincardineshire, in 1809. His father was that James Skene to whom Scott dedicated, in language of warmest affection, the fourth Canto of "Marmion"; and his mother was a daughter of Sir William Forbes, of Pitsligo, the benefactor and biographer of Boattie. It was by the advice of Scott that Skene was sent, as a young man, to the Highlands to study Gaelic; and it was also on a visit to Abbotsford that his interest was first aroused in Celtic antiquities. He was admitted a Writer to the Signet in 1831, and for many years held an official appointment in the bill chamber of the Court of Session. He was an active member of the antiquarian societies and printing clubs of the North; and on the death of Dr. John Hill Burton in 1881, he was appointed to the coveted office of Historiographer Royal for Scotland.

Though Dr. Skene was not a professed philologist, the critical study of Celtic origins owes as much to him as to any other single man. It is hardly going too far to say that he has brushed aside for ever the cloud of legends that used to envelop early Scottish history. And while disclosing the succession of Celtic tribes in his own country, he has also thrown much light upon the contemporary movements in Ireland, England, and Wales. Thanks to him, no visitor to Edinburgh has now any difficulty in recognising that Arthur was an eponymous hero of the Lothians, at least as much as of Cornwall. If his views with regard to the ethnic affinities of the Picts are not universally accepted, they are at any rate based upon rational grounds.

Skene's first work was The Highlanders of Scotland: their Origin, History and Antiquities (1837). After that he devoted himself for many years to a patient study of all the extant materials for early Celtic history, so that he did not publish any more until 1862. Then followed, in pretty quick succession, editions of the Dean of Lismore's Book, the Four Ancient Books of Wales, Fordun's Chronicle, &c. He was now ready to write his magnum opus—Celtic Scotland: A History of Alban—which came out, in three volumes, between 1876 and 1880, and of which a new edition has recently appeared. The first volume deals with the ethnology and civil history of the different races which occupied Scotland in early times; the second, with the Celtic Church and its influence on the language and culture of the people; the third is devoted to an examination of the social condition of the people, and especially of their land tenures, down to the extinction of the clan system in the Highlands. It remains to add that Dr. Skene's last work was a Gospel History for the Young: being Lessons on the Life of Christ, in three volumes (1883-84).

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

RECENT issues of the Revista Contemporanea are particularly rich in details of Spanish bibliography. In the numbers for July 15, 30, August 15, 30, D. César Moreno Garcia has a series of articles not yet concluded, entitled "La Historia literaria en España," treating in chronological order of all works that have been written on Spanish literature. In the numbers for August 15, 30, a pseudonymous writer, Maxirarth, contributes articles on Spanish pseudonyms, giving first an alphabetical list of the true names, with the pseudonym opposite, and in the following number an alphabetical list of the pseudonyms, with the true name opposite, and the date of the century. Though incomplete, inasmuch as the titles of the works to which these pseudonyms are attached are not given, these lists will be of great service to foreign students, who are often at a loss to identify Spanish pseudonymous writers. Another useful article in the number for August 30 is "La Última Estadística de la Prensa Española," by D. J. Criado y Domínguez, giving an account of the publications of the periodical press in Spain. "El Regionalismo en Galicia," by D. Leopoldo Pedreira, still in progress, has some details about modern Gallegan literature.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S LIST.

"THE Dawn of Astronomy," by Norman Lockyer, illustrated; "The Diplomatic Itinerrances of Lord Augustus Loftus, 1837-1862," with portrait, in two vols.; "Diary of the Salisbury Parliament," by H. W. Lucy, illustrated by Harry Furniss; "King Henry VIII.," with a series of photogravures from drawings by Sir James Linton, the text printed in red and black on hand-made paper, with introduction by Prof. Dowden; "A Vision of Saints," by Lewis Morris, an édition de luxe, uniform with the illustrated edition of "The Epic of Hades," with twenty full-page illustrations from the old masters and from contemporary portraits; "Dante's Inferno," illustrated by Gustave Doré, with introduction by A. J. Butler; "The Career of Columbus," by Charles Elton; "The Medicine Lady," by L. T. Meade, in three vols.; "The Snare of the Fowler," by Mrs. Alexander, in 3 vols.; new and cheaper editions of "Cassell's International Series of Copyright Novels," by English, American, and Continental authors:—"The Little Minister," by J. M. Barrie; "Sybil Knox, or Home Again," a Story of To-day, by Edward E. Hale; "The Story of Francis Cludde," by Stanley J. Weyman; "The Faith Doctor," by Dr. Edward Eggleston; "Dr. Dumany's Wife," by Maurus Jokai, translated from the Hungarian by F. Steinitz; "Out of the Jaws of Death," by Frank Barrett, 3 vols.; "The New Ohio," a Story of East and West, by Edward Everett Hale; "Leona," by Mrs. Molesworth; "A Blot of Ink," translated from the French of René Bazin by Q. and Paul M. Francke; "Fairway Island," by Horace Hutchinson, with four full-page plates; "The Beach of Falesá and The Bottle Imp," by Robert Louis Stevenson; "O'Driscoll's Weird and other Stories," by

A. Werner; "The Reputation of George Saxon, and other Stories," by Morley Roberts; "Maggie Steele's Diary," by E. A. Dillwyn; "Playthings and Parodies," short stories by Barry Pain; "The Lady's Dressing-room," translated from the French of Baroness Staffe by Lady Colin Campbell; "The Perfect Gentleman," by the Rev. Dr. A. Smythe-Palmer; "The Successful Life: A Book for Young Men Commencing Business," containing counsel, instruction, comfort, by an Elder Brother; "Football: the Rugby Union Game," edited by Rev. F. Marshall, assisted by all the chief authorities on the game, with numerous illustrations; "The Breech-Loader, and How to Use It," by W. W. Greener; "Beetles, Butterflies, Moths, and other Insects," with twelve coloured plates from "Der Insekten Sammler"; "The Art of Making and Using Sketches," from the French of Prof. G. Fraipont, by Clara Bell, with fifty illustrations from drawings by the author; "New Light on the Bible and the Holy Land," by B. T. A. Evetts, illustrated; "Cassell's New Biographical Dictionary," containing memoirs of the most eminent men and women of all ages and countries; "Cassell's English Dictionary," giving definitions of more than 100,000 words and phrases, cheap edition; "Mme. Henriette Ronner," the popular painter of cat life and cat character, containing a series of illustrations, the text by M. H. Spielmann; "Rivers of the East Coast," descriptive, historical, pictorial, with numerous engravings, popular edition; "Historic Houses of the United Kingdom," profusely illustrated, with contributions by Prof. Bonney, William Senior, Aaron Watson, Charles Edwardes, Harold Lewis, and others; "The Magazine of Art," yearly volume for 1892, vol. xv., with 12 etchings, photogravures, &c., and about four hundred illustrations from original drawings; "European Pictures of the Year," being the foreign art supplement to the "Magazine of Art"; "The World of Romance," with new illustrations; "English Writers," an attempt towards a history of English literature, by Henry Morley, vol. ix., "Spenser and His Time"; Series III. of "The Cabinet Portrait Gallery," containing 36 photographs of men and women of the day, from photographs by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, with biographical sketches; popular edition of "The Doré Bible," with 200 full-page illustrations by Gustave Doré; "Shaftesbury, K.G., The Seventh Earl of," the Life and Work of, by Edwin Hodder, illustrated, cheap edition; "The Bible Student in the British Museum," by the Rev. J. G. Kitchin, new and revised edition; "Paddles and Politics down the Danube," by Poulteney Bigelow, with illustrations by the author; "Bashful Fifteen," by L. T. Meade, with 8 full-page illustrations; "Bob Lovell's Career," a Story of American Railway Life, by Edward S. Ellis. New illustrated books for the little ones.—"Firelight Stories," by Maggie Browne; "Sunlight and Shade," by Sam Browne; "Rub-a-dub Tales," by Maggie Browne; "Fine Feathers and Fluffy Fur," by Aunt Ethel; "A Bundle of Tales," by Maggie Browne, Sam Browne, and Aunt Ethel, illustrated; vol. i. of "The Story of Africa and its Explorers," by Dr. Robert Brown, with numerous illustrations; vol. v. of the new and revised edition of "Cassell's History of England," with new illustrations specially executed for this edition, the text carefully revised throughout; vol. iii. of "Cassell's Storehouse of General Information," illustrated with wood engravings and with maps and coloured plates; "Cassell's New Latin Dictionary" (Latin-English and English-Latin), thoroughly revised and corrected, and in part rewritten by J. R. V. Marchant and J. F.

Charles; second year of issue of "The Year-Book of Science," edited by Prof. Bonney; "Peep of Day: An Old Friend in a New Dress," illustrated; "Fair Tales in other Lands," by Julia Goddard, illustrated; "The Sunday Scrap-Book," containing several hundred Scripture stories in pictures. Cheap editions of popular volumes for young people, with eight full-page illustrations in each.—"In Quest of Gold: or, Under the Whanga Falls," by Alfred St. Johnston; "On Board the Esmeralda; or, Martin Leigh's Log," by John C. Hutcheson; "The Romance of Invention: Vignettes from the Annals of Industry and Science," by James Burnley.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co.'s LIST.

Theology and Philosophy.—"History of the Christian Church: A.D. 1-600," by the late Prof. Wilhelm Moeller, of Kiel, translated by Dr. Andrew Rutherford; "The Skeptics of the Italian and French Renaissance," by the Rev. John Owen, in 2 vols.; "Strauss's Life of Jesus," translated by George Eliot, reprinted with an introduction by Prof. Otto Pfeleiderer; "The Problem of Reality," by E. Belfort Bax; "Library of Philosophy": Additions—"Appearance and Reality," by F. H. Bradley; "The Principles of Psychology," by G. F. Stout.

Science.—"Text-Book of Embryology: Man and Mammals," by Dr. Oscar Hertwig, of Berlin, translated and edited from the third German Edition by Prof. E. L. Mark, of Harvard, illustrated; "Text-Book of Embryology: Invertebrates," by Drs. Korschelt and Heider, of Berlin, translated and edited by Prof. E. L. Mark and Dr. W. M. Woodworth, illustrated; "Text-Book of Comparative Geology," adapted from the work of Prof. Kayser, of Marburg, by Philip Lake, illustrated; "Text-Book of Palaeontology for Zoological Students," by Theodore T. Groom, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds, illustrated; "Text-Book of Petrology," by Dr. F. H. Hatch, of the Geological Survey, a revised and enlarged edition of "An Introduction to the Study of Petrology," with eighty-six illustrations; "Handbook of Systematic Botany," by Prof. E. Warming, of Stockholm, translated and edited by M. C. Potter, illustrated; "Practical Bacteriology," by Dr. Migula, translated and edited by Dr. H. J. Campbell; "The Geographical Distribution of Disease in England and Wales," by Dr. Alfred Haviland, with several coloured maps; "A Treatise on Public Hygiene and its Applications in different European Countries," by Dr. Albert Palmberg, translated, and the English portion edited and revised, by Dr. Arthur Newsholme, illustrated; "The Photographer's Pocket-Book," by Dr. E. Vogel, translated by E. C. Conrad, illustrated; "The Recrudescence of Leprosy and the Report of the Leprosy Commission," by William Tebb; "Roaring in Horses: Its Pathology and Treatment," by P. J. Cadiot, translated by Thomas J. Watt Dollar; "Introductory Science Text-Books": Additions—"Zoology," by B. Lindsay; "The Amphioxus," by Dr. B. Hatschek and James Tuckey; "Geology," by Edward B. Aveling; "Physiological Psychology," by Prof. Th. Ziehen, adapted by Dr. Otto Beyer and C. C. Vanliew, with 21 illustrations; "Biology," by Dr. H. J. Campbell; "Young Collector Series": Additions—"Flowering Plants," by James Britten; "Grasses," by W. Hutchinson; "Fishes," by the Rev. H. C. Macpherson; "Mammalia," by the Rev. H. C. Macpherson.

Belles Lettres, History, &c.—"History of South Africa: 1834-1848," by George McCall Theal, forming Vol. IV. of the Consolidated History, with seven maps; "Esquemelin's Buccaneers of America," a reprint of the very scarce edition of 1684, with facsimile reproductions of all the portraits, plates, and maps, edited by Henry Powell; "Greek Constitutional Antiquities," by Dr. Gilbert, translated by E. Nicklin; "The Industrial Arts of the Anglo-Saxons," by Baron J. de Baye, translated by T. B. Harbottle, with seventeen steel plates and a few woodcuts in the text; "Preferences in Art Life and Literature," by Harry Quilter, with illustrations; "The Story of Kaspar Hauser," by Elizabeth E. Evans, with a portrait; "Sketches of Life and Character in Hungary," by Margaret Fletcher, with illustrations by Rose Le Quesne; "From Adam's Peak to Elephanta (Ceylon and India)," by Edward Carpenter, with illustrations; "A Concordance to the Poetical Works of Milton," by Dr. John Bradshaw; "A Cyclopaedia of Military Science," by Captain C. N. Watts; "A Browning Primer," by E. P. Defries, uniform with "Selections from Browning's Poetry"; "Standard Authors Series": Additions—"The Diary and Letters of Madame d'Arblay," in 4 vols.; "The Letters and Works of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu," in 2 vols.; "The Life of Beau Brummel," by Captain Jesse, in 2 vols.; "Dilettante Library": Additions—"Browning and Whitman": a Study in Democracy, by Oscar L. Triggs; "Victor Hugo," by J. Pringle Nichol; "The Greek Comic Poets," translated by the late F. A. Paley, with the texts.

Social Economics.—"History of the Landed Interest," by R. M. Garnier; "Social Science Series": Additions—"Illegitimacy, and the Influence of Seasons on Conduct," by Dr. Albert Leffingwell, second edition; "Catholic Socialism," by Dr. Nitti; "University Extension," by Dr. M. E. Sadler; "Socialism: Scientific and Utopian," by Frederick Engels; "The Elements of Social Economy," by Yves Guyot; "The Progress and Prospects of Political Economy," by Prof. J. K. Ingram; "The Elements of Socialism," by Prof. R. T. Ely; "The Rights of Women," by M. Ostrogorzki; "The Ethic of Usury and Interest," by W. Blissard; "The Labour Church Movement," by John Trevor; "Land Nationalisation," by Alfred Russel Wallace; "Social Peace: Schultz-Gaevernitz," edited by Graham Wallas; "Ferdinand Lassalle," by Edward Bernstein, translated by Eleanor Marx Aveling; "The Labour Party in New South Wales: A History of its Formation and Legislative Career," by Thomas B. Roydhouse and H. J. Taperell, with a portrait of Sir George Grey.

Educational.—"Empire and Papacy in the Middle Ages," A Text-book of Mediaeval History for use in Schools, by Alice D. Greenwood, with maps; "An Anglo-Saxon Reader," with Notes and Glossary, by Prof. James W. Bright of Johns Hopkins; "A Short History of Pedagogy," by Prof. W. Rein, translated by C. C. Van Liew; "How Gertrude Teaches Her Children," by J. H. Pestalozzi, edited by E. Cooke; "A Manual of Roman Law," by D. Chamier; "A German Exercise Book," by A. Sonnenschein; "Parallel Grammar Series": Additions—"Spanish Grammar," by H. B. Clarke; "Spanish Reader and Writer," by H. B. Clarke; "Greek Grammar" (Accidence), by Prof. Sonnenschein; School Authors: "Die Vierzehn Nothelfer," by Wilhelm Heinrich Riehl, edited by Russell E. Macnaghten; "Short Stories," by Robert Reinich, edited by James Cobille; "Cicero pro Milone," edited by W. Yorke Fausset; "Cicero pro Lege Manilia," edited by the Rev. J. Hunter Smith; "Select Readings in French Prose and Verse," by V. Oger.

Fiction and Gift Books.—"Jenny's Case," by Ellen F. Pinsent, 2 vols; "Had I But Known," by Ella Fordyce, with Preface by Edna Lyall; "The Wild Pigs," by Gerald

Young, with four full-page and numerous text illustrations by W. Parkinson; "Heroes and Heroines for Home Readers," by Frances E. Cooke.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BABAL, G. La Connaissance de la Mer. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr. 50 c.
 BAYE, le Baron J. de. Le Trésor de Szilagy-Somlyo (Transylvanie). Paris: Nilsson. 8 fr.
 SAINT-DENYS, Hervé de. Six Nouvelles nouvelles, traduites du chinois. Paris: Maisonneuve. 5 fr.
 SCHOENEN, G. Die kölnischen Studienstiftungen, erläutert. Köln: M. du Mont-Schauberg. 10 M.
 TAUMELKAT, C. L'Algérie légendaire. Paris: Challamel. 4 fr.

THEOLOGY.

- BEYSCHLAG, W. Neutestamentliche Theologie. 2. Bd. Halle: Strien. 10 M.
 PETERS, N. Die Prophetie Obadjahs, untersucht u. erklärt. Paderborn: Schöningh. 2 M.
 STEINMEYER, F. L. Beiträge zum Verständnis d. Johanneischen Evangeliums. VII. Die Rede Jesu in der Schule zu Capernaum. Berlin: Wiegandt. 1 M. 80 Pf.
 TORRELLI, A. Sul Cantico del Canticle. Naples: Detken. 10 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- DAMADE, L. Histoire chantée de la première République, 1789 à 1799. Paris: Schmidt. 5 fr.
 D'AMONVILLE, Le Capitaine. Les Cuirassiers du Roy: le 8^e Cuirassiers (1638-1892). Paris: Lahure. 10 fr.
 FONTES rerum Austriacarum. 2. Abth. 47. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Die Reise d. Papstes Pius VI. nach Wien. Von H. Schlüter. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 60 Pf.
 KROB, G. C. Die Stifterherren v. St. Thomas zu Strassburg (1518-1548). Strassburg: Schmidt. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 KRAHL, J. Die etruskischen Mumienbinden d. Agramer National-Museums. Leipzig: Freytag. 8 M.
 MOLTKE, Graf H. v. Gesammelte Schriften u. Denkwürdigkeiten. 5. Bd. Berlin: Mittler. 5 M.
 REGER, M. Christian II. v. Anhalt Gesandtschaftsreise nach Savoyen (1617). Dessau: Baumann. 1 M.
 REINDL, W. Dr. Wenzeslaus Linck aus Colditz 1483-1517. 1. Thl. Pfr. zur reformator. Thätigkeit in Altenburg. Marburg: Elhrhardt. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 TREMBLAY, P. de la. Les Sculptures de l'Eglise abbatiale de Solosmes (1496-1553). Paris: Picard. 40 fr.
 UNTERSUCHUNGEN zur deutschen Staats- u. Rechtsgeschichte. 40. Bd. Die Beziehungen d. Papstthums zum fränkischen Staats- u. Kirchenrecht unter den Karolingern. Breslau: Koebner. 8 M.
 WERENKA, D. Bukowinas Entstehen u. Aufblühen. 1. Thl. 1772-1775. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M.
 ZANENBERGER, K. Die Wappen, Helmzierden u. Standarten der grossen Heidelberger Liederhandschrift (Manesse-Codex). 5. Lfg. Heidelberg: Siebert. 7 M. 50 Pf.
 ZIMMERMANN, F. u. C. Werner. Urkundenbuch zur Geschichte der Deutschen in Siebenbürgen. 1. Bd. 1191-1342. Hermannstadt: Michaels. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ABHANDLUNGEN zur Geschichte der Mathematik. 6. Hft. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M.
 BRAUER, A. Ueb. das El v. Branchipus Grubii v. Dyp. von der Bildung bis zur Ablage. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M. 80 Pf.
 HEINE, Les Diptérocarpaees. Paris: Soc. des Editions Scientifiques. 15 fr.
 HUBER, Th. Fauna germanica. Hemiptera heteroptera. 2. Hft. Berlin: Friedländer. 3 M.
 KRAZER, A. u. P. F. Neue Grundlagen e. Theorie der allgemeinen Theatrfunktionen. Leipzig: Teubner. 7 M. 20 Pf.
 LAGRANGE, Oeuvres de. T. 14 et dernier. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 15 fr.
 SCHWENDENER, S. u. G. KRAHBE. Untersuchg. üb. die Orientationsrichtungen der Blätter u. Blüthen. Berlin: Reimer. 6 M. 30 Pf.
 STURM, R. Die Gebilde I. u. 2. Grades der Liniengeometrie in synthetischer Behandlung. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- COUDREAU, H. Vocabulaires méthodiques des langues Guayana, Apariti, Oyampi, Emérillon (Guyane). Paris: Maisonneuve. 12 fr.
 GREYER, R. Gedichte u. Fragmente d' Aus ibn Hajar. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M.
 GONSOORUP, J. R. P. F. Hikajat Kalila dan Dawina. Sammlung Maleischer Erzählungen. Leiden: Djinhoff. 6 M. 50 Pf.
 GRUBENIUS, L. Kritische Untersuchung d. Midrasch Kohelet Rabba. 1. Thl. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Kauffmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 HERONDAE mimiambi. Accedunt Phoeniceis Conistae Mattii mimiamborum fragmenta. Ed. O. Crusius. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 HESS, J. J. Der gnostische Papyrus v. London. Einleitg., Text u. demotisch-deutsches Glossar. Freiburg (Schweiz): Friesenbahn. 30 M.
 HEMMEL, F. Aufsätze u. Abhandlungen arabisch-orientalistischen Inhalts. 1. Hälfte. 8 M. Der babylonische Ursprung der ägyptischen Kultur, nachgewiesen. 5 M. München: Franz.
 MÜLLER, D. H. Die Recensionen u. Versionen d. Eldad had-Dini. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 40 Pf.
 PELAGONI artis veterinae quae extant recensuit etc. M. Ihm. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 PERLWITZ, W. Etymologisches Wörterbuch der griechischen Sprache n. besond. Berücksicht. d. Neuhebräisch-deutschen u. e. deutschen Wörterverzeichnis. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CRYPTOGRAM IN THE CAMBRIDGE JUVENCUS.

Parigné, Ile et Vilaine: Sept. 2, 1892.

On the upper margin of p. 67 of an eighth or ninth century codex of Juvencus, written in a British hand, preserved in the University Library, Cambridge, and marked Ff. 1. 42, are the following three lines, here transcribed from a photograph:

REBELATAΘAKI TEIKKΔITIH TEICEIH TEΘIOEIK
 HEI I :
 IAEIΓΘIOEIK ΔIB uΓAIΘICEIH ΘEICEIΘIOEIK
 IΔICAIΘE ICICIS IBEI :
 IBIΘIC

Correcting the inaccurate copy printed in the Transactions of the Philological Society (1860-61, p. 221), and in Kuhn u. Schleicher's Beiträge (iv. 407), and applying the key published in the ACADEMY for July 23, 1892, p. 71, Miss Olwen Rhys and her father, Prof. Rhys, deciphered these lines thus:

"Cemelliauc prudens prespiter hec . . .
 leniter Deum fratres firmiter orate pro me . . .
 mter."

Prof. Rhys remarks in a letter dated July 23, 1892, "that the whole runs in four lines, making a sort of englyn of the old fashion:

Cemelliauc prudens prespiter
 Hec (scripsit? scripsi?) leniter.
 Deum, fratres, firmiter
 Orate pro me (pre)mi[ter]."

He adds: "Who Cemelliauc was I do not know, unless he was our Cemelliauc of the Liber Landavensis, who died Bishop of Llandaff in 927."

WHITLEY STOKES.

SAINTS AND SEQUENCES.

Bardwell Rectory, Suffolk: Aug. 27, 1892.

1. When I was in Cambridge a few days ago, Mr. James, of King's College, called my attention to a MS. (ADD. 3041), of the existence of which all persons interested in the obscure points of English and Celtic hagiology should be made aware.

It is a voluminous early seventeenth-century collection of the Lives of English, Scottish, and Irish saints, with a complete Calendar and Index. It seems to contain information not to be found elsewhere, though no doubt some of its biographies are merely translations or reproductions of John of Tynemouth, Capgrave, and some later English martyrologies.

The following entries in the Calendar may be taken as specimens of curious information:

(februari 4. St. Aklad or Eldad b. con.

May 17. Trans[lation] of 3 of the 11000 vir[gins] from Colun to Elhonafehangell.

July 20. St. Arild v. et. m. St. Joseph of Aramathia.

July 27. St. Joseph of Aramathia, &c., &c.

On the lower margin of August this note occurs:

"Lamas as sum think takes name of Iyen a frenc worde signifying a bande, others of lumes used to be offred on y^e daye in some churches and namely in yorke."

2. Possessors of Julian's Dictionary of Hymnology and of Weale's Analecta Liturgica may be glad to take note of this small correction. A Sequence entered in the former as "Viac plebs ethereae" and in the latter as "Ulae plebs ethereae" (the latter word being supposed to be the first word of the Sequence), really commences "Aulae plebs ethereae"; the capital A has been accidentally omitted by the rubricator. The same is the case with a capital P in the line immediately above it in the C. C. C. Winchester Tropary MS. No. 473, fol. 123 b.

F. E. WARREN.

THE OBI OF ST. COLUMBA.

Voughal: August 31, 1892.

With reference to the year of St. Columba's death, "the choice," in the words of Dr. Reeves (Admann, p. 312), "lies between 596 and 597." In the current number of the English Historical Review, Mr. Alfred Ancombe essays to establish that the date was 580. His proof is as follows. According to three native authorities, the saint died on Whitsunday, June 9. Born in the sixth century, he was in his 76th year at his death, which consequently took place in 580.

"This year agrees in every particular with the requirements of the problem; the Dominical of June is F, its ninth day was Sunday, that day was Pentecost."

No doubt, in accordance with the Alexandrine Computation, whereby Easter was celebrated from the 15th to the 21st of the moon, Pentecost fell upon June 9 in 580. But we learn from Bishop Colman (Bede, II. E. III. 25) that Columba and his successors kept Easter from the 14th to the 20th of the moon. Hence it lies upon Mr. Ancombe to prove that Whitsunday in 580 fell upon June 9, according to the Computus followed in Iona. 'Till this is done, his conclusion remains "a nebulous hypothesis."

Meanwhile, it may be of interest to note a few more of Mr. Ancombe's statements. "The compiler or continuator of the Annals of Ulster," he informs us, was "Senait mac Manus." This is to take the Piræus for a man! Senait mac Maghnusa is an island in Lough Erne, of which Charles Mac Guire, the compiler of the Annals of Ulster, was dean.

"This annalist ['Senait mac Manus'] accepted [1] the year 597 (he writes 595 [2]), but is habitually two years higher than the date he intends to fix [3] for St. Columba's obit, and rendered the whole chronology of the century subservient to that date [4]."

These four important assertions Mr. Ancombe will doubtless in due time supplement by proof. In connexion herewith, he will do good service likewise in giving his grounds for equating A.D. 507 of the Innisfallen Annals with A.D. 509, and the Passion year 405 of Nennius with A.D. 433.

"An. Ult. [563] Kal. Jan. 2 f., l. 21, A.D. dlxii. The correct description of the year 563 is Kal. Jan. 2 feria, Solar Cycle 12. The Annals of Ulster have l. 21 by mistake; eleven years lower [574] they give the correct figures, l. 23 namely."

Though I have devoted some attention to the subject, these remarkable results, I am free to confess, are new to me. They were apparently obtained by the formula for finding the Vulgar Soli-cyclic number of a given A.D. year: (563+9) ÷ 28 leaves 12; (574+9) ÷ 28 leaves 23.

Two difficulties (capable, no doubt, of solution by the discoverer) suggest themselves. In the first place, what does l. stand for in the annual signatures throughout the Annals? Secondly, A.D. 504 (Mr. Ancombe's natal year of St. Columba) "is the 9th of the Solar Cycle, and its dominicals are DC." Quite so; but, here and elsewhere, "Senait mac Manus" perversely gives l. 29—a number not contained in the Solar Cycle of 28.

Finally, Dr. Reeves, having quoted from an Irish Life that St. Columba was born on December 7, Thursday, writes:

"This will give the choice of 517 and 523 for his birth: for, December 7 is c, therefore, it being Thursday, A. is the Sunday letter, which belongs to the above years" (Admann, p. lxxix.).

But Mr. Ancombe is of a different opinion.

"I consider," he says, "that it is the Kalends of the year that are indicated rather than the day of the week on which St. Columba was born."

The original (not given in its entirety by Dr. Reeves) is, however, very precise.

I sept Id Decimbir tra Now, on the seventh of ar ai lathi mis grene the Ides of December, rogénir : Dárdain diuo on the day of the solar ar ai lathi uil.maine. month was he born : [on] Lebar Brece, p. 31a, ll. Thursday indeed on the 49-50. day of the week.

With this statement before us, we may be pardoned for hesitating to accept the dictum of Mr. Ancombe that Thursday meant January 1, not December 7.

B. MACCARTHY.

SCIENCE.

THE HISTORY OF THE SELJUK TURKS.

Histoire des Seldjoucides de l'Asie Mineure.
Texte Turc, publié d'après les MSS. de Leide et de Paris. Par M. Th. Houtsma.
(Leiden : Brill.)

The present publication of Prof. Houtsma forms the third volume of his Oriental texts recording the history of the Seljukides; the two previous volumes contained a Persian account of the Seljuks of Kerman and an Arab chronicle of Imadeddin giving the history of the Seljuks of Iran. The book before us was originally written in Persian by a certain Ibn Bibi, as we learn from the information given by M. Schefer in the Recueil de Textes et de Traductions, published by the Professors of the Ecole des Langues Orientales Vivantes. It is therefore a Turkish translation of the Persian original (now unhappily lost) that we have to deal with; and since the name of the translator is unknown, it is only through his mentioning the Sultan Murad II. in the customary benediction of the prefatory remarks that we can guess his date—namely, the first half of the fifteenth century. This coincides exactly with the linguistic character of the text, the wording of which bears a striking resemblance to the Turkish dialect in which the tales known as “El feredj baad esh shiddet” are written. The latter, dating from A.H. 854 (A.D. 1451), forms, so to say, the connecting link between the Seljukian dialect of the poem in the Rebabnameh and the Ottoman language which came into use after the conquest of Constantinople; and although the language used by the translator of the history of the Seljukides is less original in its grammatical forms than are the tales, it is nevertheless highly interesting to the student of dialects, and it will render an essential service to the scholar engaged in the historical development of the Ottoman Turkish. So much about the linguistic value of the publication of Prof. Houtsma.

As regards its historical value, we have only to mention that Mirkhond's Rauzat es Sefa devotes only a few scanty remarks to the events which are here narrated with minute detail in a volume of 328 pages; and considering that this portion of the history of the Seljukides of Asia Minor is closely connected with that of the Byzantine empire, there is no exaggeration in asserting that the present text is indispensable to the general historian. It is, therefore, highly desirable that its contents should be made accessible to those who are not Oriental scholars. The period covered extends from 1192 to about 1225 A.D.—namely, from the death of Kilij-Arslan to the reign of Ala-ed-din Keikubad. The chief subject is the wars which the sons of Kilij-Arslan waged for the crown of their father; but considerable light is also thrown upon the last Crusade, as well as upon the history of Byzantium and of Armenia, showing the enfeebled condition of these kingdoms before the Ottoman-Turks, the inheritors of the Seljukides, succeeded to power.

Of course this is only the first portion of the entire work, for the editor says:

“Le reste de l'ouvrage suivra plus tard, accompagné d'une préface dans laquelle je traiterai plus amplement diverses questions qui se rapportent à l'auteur, à son ouvrage et à mon édition.”

We might have deferred our notice of this publication till then, but various reasons have induced us to draw the attention of Orientalists at once to the labours of the Dutch scholar. First, we would point to the difference in style and conception between the present work and those of later Persian and Turkish historians, such as Edrisi, Saadeddin, and others. The fanatical outbursts of hatred and contempt against Christians, which disfigure the writings of later authors, are rarely to be met with in the present publication, which goes as far as to quote Greek words in a rather queer transcription—to which an Ottoman writer would never have condescended. Thus the editor has correctly discovered the following formula of a Christian oath:—εἰς τὴν πίστιν μετὰ χριστοῦ μετὰ παναγίας, certainly a much happier decipherment than that of the Greek poem in the Rebabnameh, which still awaits full explanation. We find a tournament between a Seljukian prince and a European knight described in fairly impartial language; and not less striking to the scholar acquainted with the style of Ottoman historians of a later age is the decorum with which the emperor of Byzantium is mentioned.

Apart from its linguistic and historical value, the publication of Prof. Houtsma abounds in information of ethnographical importance. In the details given about dress, arms, and mode of fighting, we easily recognise manners and customs that prevail to-day among the Turkomans. It is certainly strange that the nomadic warriors of the Steppes should have been able to retain so many features of their former life amid their Greek, Armenian, and Arab neighbours. If their pristine vigour has suffered some essential changes, this has resulted from their adoption of luxury and the extravagant use of wine, both alike borrowed from the manners of Byzantium. A hundred years later we find the Osmanlis already imbued with many customs of Greek origin, and it is only their military spirit which has remained unimpaired up to the present day.

In a word, the History of the Seljukides of Asia Minor, as given in the publication before us, is a rich mine of information regarding the early history of the Turks, and the services rendered by Prof. Houtsma in rendering it accessible cannot be too highly valued.

A. VAMBERY.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

Moral Teachings of Science. By Arabella B. Buckley (Mrs. Fisher). (Stanford.) Those who are acquainted with the earlier works of this authoress will not need to be assured of her ability to deal with what forms the subject of her latest book. Of course it is by no means a novel one, but the treatment which it receives at Mrs. Fisher's hands is marked by an accuracy of statement and a knowledge of natural science which no merely popular writer has at command. Her language is singularly simple and perspicuous, and she is not content with only pointing out the confirmations which the sanctions of morality derive from the conclusions of science. She does not hesitate to accept all the inferences which may legitimately be deduced from any argument, even though they may be somewhat startling. Thus, having shown that life is an ever active force working from the lowest to the highest form, and in itself indestructible, she does not dismiss with a word the suggestion that all living existences must therefore continue after physical death has taken place. Life, being the cause and not the consequence of organisation, does not depend upon it for a continued existence, and would seem to be unaffected by the dissolution of the structure through which it has worked. Her answer is that there is room enough in the universe for all grades of the living principle, and that, as suffering and struggle have existed from the beginning, annihilation in all sentient beings would leave an unjust balance. We can thoroughly recommend Mrs. Fisher's book to young but thoughtful readers, and we cannot dismiss it without a special word of commendation for the excellence of its paper and print.

A Cyclopaedia of Nature's Teachings. With an Introduction by H. Macmillan. (Elliot Stock.) The intention of these selected chapters on nature is to render the inner meaning of natural phenomena useful to divines and religious teachers. A compilation of this character, even when it runs to 550 pages with double columns, must needs disappoint readers. One will expect some fine passage which is dear to memory, and be annoyed at its omission; another will search its pages for natural imagery wherewith to deck a dull moral subject, and be equally vexed at finding nothing which exactly suits. Dr. Macmillan's selections are slightly common-place, diversified with a good many purple patches from Mr. Ruskin, Vernon Lee, and the like. Each is headed by a short moral or religious aphorism; but when “Skyey Influences” is prefaced by the statement, “Everyone is more or less affected by the conditions of the atmosphere,” it is difficult to learn much from a dogma which, like Dr. Johnson, we entirely disbelieve. Nor does there seem much novel truth in the preface of a few paragraphs on “Nature and Truth,” “Nature ministers to Revelation.” A long extract from one of Mr. William Black's novels, including the “moonlit heavens,” the “lapping waves,” the “rugs and shawls brought on deck,” suggests that the book may be used advantageously as a volume of elegant extracts. Such authorities as “Sarah Smiley,” “Selected,” “Chambers' Journal,” “Family Treasury,” and “Laura L. McLauchlan Backler,” scarcely commend themselves to those who would put the book to its original use. A stupid printer's error, “The pretty cobwebs we have spun,” defaces a passage from In Memoriam. Yet much industry has been spent in this compilation, and it is furnished with excellent indices. From the nature of the case it is far from being exhaustive. Thus, a reference to carefulness, patience, gratitude, pride, mercy, proves in each case abortive. It may, however, be serviceable to some after the mechanical fashion of a Gradus. Most men will prefer their own memories and commonplace books.

Selections from the Correspondence of Dr. George Johnston. Arranged by Mrs. Barwell-Carter. Edited by James Hardy, LL.D. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.) Dr. Johnston lived and died (in 1855) as a country doctor at Berwick-on-Tweed. His life was absolutely uneventful, but his intellectual qualities and general amiability secured him a large circle of correspondents on natural history, of which he was ever an earnest student. He wrote a Flora of his town, an excellent History of British Zoophytes and of Sponges, and had much to do with the establishment of the Ray Society. All this devotion to science, however, and even the possession of a warm heart and much genial feeling, does not necessarily imply the power of writing bright and characteristic letters. As a matter of fact, Dr. Johnston's correspondence is dull, business-like, and uniform to a degree. It is, therefore, a mistake to have printed 500 octavo pages of it; fifty would have given the measure of the writer and not have terrified the reader. The letters deal mainly with arrangements for printing and questions on the lesser known zoophytes. Even a professed biologist is shy of remarks on Flustra Peachii, Beania mirabilis, or Doris tuberculata, succeeding each other with more or less regularity through so great a number of pages, and it may be feared that the "general reader" will at once pronounce over it Rob Roy's anathema on the Statutes and their shelves. It is really curious to note how absorbing a particular line of study can become, and how seldom in certain minds it permits the sympathies a wider range. Fancy, unexpected turns of thought, humour, poetry are conspicuously absent from these letters. But they show extreme enthusiasm and the perseverance of a lifetime in collecting and arranging plant-insects, and no one will grudge Dr. Johnston the certain meed of fame which these researches brought him. In other respects the letters point to an upright, earnest disposition, which never lost a friend or made an enemy.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME JAINA-PRĀKRIT AND PĀLI WORDS.

Harold Wood, Essex.

1. Panta-lāha = panīta-lūkha.

"Muni monam samādāya dhūne kammasariragam pantam [ca] lūham sevanti virā sammattadamsino."

Āyāramgasutta I. 2. 5, § 6; I. 5. 3 § 5.)

Prof. Jacobi gives the following rendering of the foregoing verse:

"A sage adopting a life of wisdom* should treat his gross body roughly. The heroes who have right intuition use mean and rough (food)."

Dhūne kammasariragam would correspond in Pāli to dhūne kammasarirukam = "should get rid of his body of karma." Compare dhunāi samussayam, "shakes off the aggregate" (Āyār. I. 4. 4, § 2; and Sūyagadamgasutta I. 15.22, p. 550):

"Pamdie viriyam laddhum nigghāyāya pavattagam dhūne puvvakadam kammam navam vā vi na kuvvati" (see Āyār. I. 4.2).

The sage having acquired the fortitude (of enduring hardship) should get rid of his previously contracted karma, leading to the torrent (of rebirth), and should not form any new karma. Here dhūne = dhunīyāt, apanayet. In Pāli we find dhunāti pāpake dhamme, "he shakes off (or gets rid of) evil conditions" (Theragāthā, v. 2, p. 1).

With respect to the Jaina text quoted above, Prof. Jacobi has the following remarks:

"These words apparently form a cloka, though the third pāda is too short by one syllable; but this fault can easily be corrected by inserting ca: 'pantam lūham ca sevanti.' The commentators treat the passage as prose" (Jaina Sūtras, S. B. E. xlii., p. 26).

The difficulty does not altogether consist in the omission of a syllable, but in the employment of panta, as here used in the sense of "mean" or "poor," a signification not found in classical or Buddhist Sanskrit, Pāli, the literary Prakrits of Hāla, Setubandha, &c., or in the modern dialects of India—Hindi, Bangali, Marāthi.

Panta represents, of course, Skt. prānta, "border," whence Pāli panta (1) "border," (2) "remote," "distant." Compare "sevetha pantāni senāsānāni" (Samyutta vi. 2.3; Sutta-nipāta v. 72, p. 11; Theragāthā 142, p. 20; Milinda, p. 402), "pantamhi sayanāsane" (Jāt. iii. 524; see Āṅguttara iv. 135.2).

In Buddhist Sanskrit prānta is not uncommon, and its uses agree closely with that of the Pāli panta: Prānta-cayanāsana bhakta" (Divyavādāna 188.15; see 132.21), "prānta-cayanāsana-sevin" (ib. 312.8-9); "prāntāni cayanāsānāni" (ib. 344.10).

In the above examples of prānta we get no trace of the sense of "mean" or "rude," though, of course, the distant or remote seats and beds would be but poor affairs after all.

In Jaina-Prākṛit, so far, at least, as the explanation of the Commentators goes, panta seems to have the signification of "mean," "poor":

"anta-caragā . . . panta-caragā . . . lūha-caragā . . . amtāhārā . . . pamtāhārā . . . lūhā-hārā . . . anta-jivī . . . panta-jivī . . ." (Sūyagad ii. 2.72, p. 758-9).

Compare also i. 15.15, p. 547, where the first anta is employed in the sense of "a poor state": "Amtāni dhīrā sevanti tena amtakarā iḥa." The Dipikā has the following note:

"Amtān anta-prāntāhārān sevanti virās tena samsārasyāntakarāste."

The Tika is a little fuller:

"Amtān pariyāntān visayakṣayatrīṣṇā-āhārasya vānta-prāntāni dhīrā mahāsatvā visaya sukhanis prihāḥ sevanti 'bhyasyanti tena cānta-prāntā-bhyasanenāntakarāḥ samsārasya kṣayakarino bhavanti."

In the Kalpasūtra (Jinacarita, § 17), we find panta (and anta) applied to kula ("family"):

"Jan nam arahantā vā cakkavattī vā . . . anta kulesu vā panta-kulesu vā daridda-kulesu vā . . . āyāmsu vā āyānti vā āyāssanti vā."

"For it never has happened, nor does it happen, nor will it happen, that Arhats, Cakravartins . . . should be born in low families, mean families, poor families . . ." (Sacred Books of the East, xxii. p. 225).

According to Buddhist authorities, a Buddha could not be born in an obscure or out-of-the-way place (Jāt. i.); and a similar law held good for the Jaina Arhats, hence Mahāvira was born in the Brahminical and best part of the town of Cundagrāma.

The epithet panta, therefore, defines the locality of the kula or family, so that it would be possible to take panta here in its older sense of "a border," a border or frontier family being, indeed, equivalent to a mean or obscure family. In fact, panta-kula has much the same sense as Pāli paccanta-visaya (= pratyanta-visaya) in Saddhammapāyana, v. xi.

So much then for the original signification of panta (in pantakula), which might have acquired the secondary meaning of "mean" or "rude." But, while this is not at all unlikely with regard to its employment with kula, it is not so easy to see how it has, against older and widespread usage, become associated with lūha—(1) "rough," "coarse," as applied to food; (2) used also substantively in the sense of coarse-fare, hard-life (sampanna), and even "one who lives the hard life of a mendicant." Compare the following passages where lūha (lukkha, rukkha) is employed in Jaina-Prākṛit in the sense above mentioned:

"Aha javittha tohenam" (Āyār. I. 8.1, § 4); "tambā lūhā parivitta reijā" (ib. i. 6.5, § 3); "Sūram unnavati appāna yava lūham na sevati" (Sūyagad i. 3.1, § 3, p. 161); "Vīratā carissāham rukkham" (ib. i. 4.12, p. 239); "Nikkimāno bhikkhū su-lūha-jivī je garavaṇa hoi salogapamī" (ib. i. 13.12, p. 497).

The note in the Dipikā is as follows:

"Bāhyārthena nikkimāno bhikkhū su-rūka-jivī vallacavakādi prāntāhārā evambhūto pi kaccid gauravapriye."

The Tika:

"Bāhyārthena nikkimāno pi bhikkhū saṅgīto bhikkhū paradattabhojī tathā su-chu-rūkaṇṭa-prāntam vallacavakādi tena jivitaṇṭa prāntāhārā kartum gīḥam asya sa su-rūka-jivī evambhūto pi yuk kaccid gauravakriyo bhavati." "Aham am bhikkhū lūhe" (ib. ii. i.10, p. 578; see also ii. i.60, p. 665-6; ii. 2.72, p. 758-9).

Here the Jaina lūha corresponds to Skt. rūksa or lūksa. Pāli lūka. Buddhist-Skt. lūha or lūha (see Vyutpatti ed. Minayeff 131.19, p. 41; and ACADEMY, July 12, 1890).

In Pāli lūka is never associated with panta as regards food, but with panita ("dainty") = Skt. prānta ("dressed," "cooked"). Compare the following uses of the Pāli terms:

"Jarasigālo bhojanam patilabhitvā na vicināti lūham vā panitam vāti" (Milinda, p. 395).

"Panitam yadivā lūkhū appam vā yadivā bahum Yapanatham abhuñjissu agiddhā nādhimuc- chitā."

(Theragāthā v. 923, p. 81; see, also, v. 136, p. 16, v. 579, p. 60.)

"Panitam pi lūkhū denti" (Dhammapad., p. 214); "Sūkhā-panitādisu yam kiñci dento" (ib., p. 374); "Sūkhū denti no panitam" (Samyutta xvi. 4.5, pt. ii., p. 200).

In Divyavādāna, p. 425, we find lūha-pranīta:

"Sa pracyati āyushmato Vitāṇakasya pāncukūlam ca civaram mṛinmayam pātram yāvad annabhaik- shyam lūha-pranitam drishṭvā ca rājāḥ pādayor nipatyā kṛitāṅjalir uvāca."

In the light of the foregoing illustrations of lūha and panita we would venture to amend the faulty lection in the third pāda of the Āyāramgasutta i. 2.6, § 3, by reading, in deference to the older usages of the Sanskrit and Pāli languages, "panitam lūham sevanti" virā sammattadamsino," which would correspond in Pāli to "panita-lūkhū sevanti virā (? dhīrā) sammattadamsino." But *sammattadamsino was probably not in the oldest form of the Jain text; and were there an exact parallel passage in our Pāli documents, we should doubtless find sammattadamsino (Cf. sammattadamsino in Āyār. i. 5.3, § 5, p. 24), "observing indifference." "The heroes who observe indifference (with regard to food) use dainty and coarse fare" (see Jaina Sūtras, p. 47). They do not pick out the dainty pieces out of the alms they receive, but eat the coarse along with the daintier morsels (see Jaina Sūtras i., p. 112). Compare the previous cloka beginning "Nāra- tim," which has a parallel in Āṅguttara Nikāya iv. 283 (see Journal Pāli Text Society, 1889, p. 210).

* Or panitalūham sevanti.

† Sammattadamsi occurs in Āyār. i. 3.2.1.

‡ Compare the Pāli use of avāṇṭasāha with Jaina-Prākṛit arai-raisaha, Āyār. i. 3.1, § 1.

* Moua in Pāli usually signifies "silence," "solitude."

We must bear in mind that the language and traditions of both Buddhists and Jains were derived from a common source, and would, as a matter of course, have many points of similarity in common. It is true that the redaction of the Jaina canon was very much later than the settlement of the canonical books by the Buddhist redactors, and the latter may have kept the dialect of their sacred books in a less corrupt form than the Jains; but, on the other hand, the Jaina Prākṛit, as Dr. Jacobi has pointed out, is nearer to Pāli than the literary Prākṛits of Hāla, Setubandha, &c.; and the earliest works of the Jaina canon are probably older than such North-Buddhist texts as the Lalitā Vistara, Mahāvastu, Divyavadāna, &c. (see Int. to Jaina Sūtras, "Sacred Books of the East," xxxvii., xl.-xliii.).

It is quite possible that the Jains, although using many well-known Buddhist terms, may have purposely altered their opponent's phraseology, and changed terms like paṇita-lūkha into paṇita-lūkha; or perhaps the later Jaina scribes, not understanding the older use of paṇita with reference to food, substituted the more familiar paṇita, which originally referred to locality, and not to state or condition. Compare "prāṇte Vasudattapure" (Kathāsarit. vi. 29, 152). In one passage, however, of the Āyāmagasutta (i. 8.3, § 2, p. 43), we find paṇita, as in Pāli, employed as an epithet of seyya and āsana, in the sense of "remote," "out-of-the-way":

"Aha duccara-Lādham acāri
Vajjhabbhūmi ca Subbhābhūmi ca
Paṇitam seyyam sevimsu
Āsanagāmi ceva paṇitām."

"He travelled in the pathless country of the Lādhas, in Vajjhabbhūmi and Subbhābhūmi; he used (frequented) these miserable beds and miserable seats" (Jacobi).

R. MORRIS.

CHINA AND BABYLONIA.

London: Sept. 5, 1892.

In Prof. Max Müller's presidential address to-day, at the opening of the Ninth International Congress of Orientalists, he referred to a theory which I have been maintaining for the last twelve years (in more than forty articles, pamphlets, and books), and which has found lately a further supporter in the Rev. C. J. Ball from a somewhat different point of view. It has also received the complete approbation of the leading scholars in Sinology and Assyriology. The theory is to the effect that the early written characters and civilisation of the Chinese were derived from ancient Babylonia and Elam.

Prof. Max Müller, in the printed copy of his address issued at the end of the meeting, says that "I think it possible to show that the oldest cuneiform letters . . . owed their first origin to China." The reasoning he founds on this is sound enough; but as I have never advanced such a theory, and as my views are just the reverse, making Babylonia the ultimate fountain head of the civilisation of the Middle Kingdom, the argumentation of the learned professor falls to the ground.

TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE.

"THE HISTORY OF THE MOGHAL EMPERORS ILLUSTRATED BY THEIR COINS."

Sept. 7, 1892.

The only difference between your reviewer and myself, as to his correction of the date I have given in my History of the Moghul Emperors illustrated by their Coins for the grant of mint-privileges to the East India Company by Sirāj-ad-daula, is that instead of qualifying it as "a curious mistake" he should have called it "an obvious misprint." Sirāj-ad-daula granted the privilege of coining in his treaty of February 7, 1757, and died the same year, shortly after the battle of Plassey. The printers converted 1757 into 1759, as printers sometimes will, and I failed to detect the error in the proof-sheets.

As to the derivation of "John Company" from Kumpani Jahān or Jahān Kumpani, my authority, I think, was Sir George Birdwood's article in the Journal of Indian Art; but as I am at a distance from my books, I cannot verify the reference.

STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

"TEL" AND NOT "TELL."

Brighton: Sept. 5, 1892.

I beg to corroborate, briefly, Prof. Sayce's correction of the spelling of the word "Tell" in his review of the Tell el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum in the ACADEMY of last week.

The word is not pronounced in Arabic as the word "tell" in English, but is uttered with a short articulation.

This is one of the errors which I pointed out to Mr. Renouf, the late keeper of the Department of Assyrian and Egyptian Antiquities, more than eight months ago.

Whoever assisted the Principal Librarian in compiling the article on Assyrian and Babylonian Antiquities in the British Museum Green Guide of 1890 was not thoroughly acquainted either with the languages of Biblical lands or with the history and geography of the ancient Assyrian and Babylonian sites.

H. RASSAM.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. have issued this week, in time to be laid before the Oriental Congress, the comprehensive Persian-English Dictionary upon which Dr. F. Steingass has been engaged for several years past. Originally intended as a revised edition of Johnson's enlargement of Richardson—it is curious that these two familiar names should recur together in oriental lexicography—the work has gradually grown under its author's hands, until it may now claim to be an independent dictionary. An important feature is the incorporation of the vocabulary of contemporary Persian literature, including the Shah's diaries of his visits to Europe. It forms a massive imperial octavo of nearly 1600 pages, in double column; and, having received a large subsidy from the Secretary of State for India, it is appropriately issued by the old publishers to the India Office, with a graceful dedication to Dr. Reinhold Rost.

IN connexion with the Oriental Congress, Messrs. Luzac & Co., of 46 Great Russell-street, have brought together a collection of oriental works published in England since 1889, and have also issued a bibliographical list of the same, arranged mainly according to subjects, with an index of authors' names.

PROF. A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON, of Columbia College, New York, has ready for publication (Boston: Ginn & Co.) the first Part of a Zend Grammar in comparison with Sanskrit, based upon Geldner's edition of the Avesta. Besides an introduction, giving an account of the language and its literature, the subjects dealt with in this part are the phonetic laws, the inflectional system, and the word-formation of Zend, with the corresponding inflections and forms in Sanskrit, as given in Whitney's Grammar. A second Part, already at press, will treat of the syntax.

THE August number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record has come out with commendable promptitude. It contains an elaborate review of the Tell el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum, by Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen, who gives his own transliteration and translation of some of them; notes on other cuneiform tablets in the Museum, throwing light on the history of the times of the Seleucidae, by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches; a further instalment of Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie's proofs of the origin of the early Chinese Civilisation from Babylonia; and a note by the same, explaining how the ancient Egyptians used to obtain fire by means of a bow-drill. But the most important article of all is that in which MM. Yadrintzeff and Deniker describe the recent Russian expeditions into Mongolia, to explore the valley of the Orkhon and the ruins of Karakorum, the capital of Gengis Khan. Apart from architectural remains and sculptures, a number of bilingual inscriptions were discovered, written both in Chinese characters and in the Runic script previously found on the Yenissei. The Chinese inscriptions date from the eighth century A.D., and were erected by the Chinese emperor in honour of the civil and military exploits of the Uighur Khan. The general result is to prove that, before the Mongol invasion, this part of the country was inhabited by Turk tribes in a comparatively high stage of civilisation: they not only knew the arts of writing, architecture, &c., but also practised agriculture on a large scale, by means of an extensive system of irrigation.

FINE ART.

The Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards. By William Ridgeway. (Cambridge: University Press.)

ANYTHING that comes from Prof. Ridgeway's pen is sure to be distinguished by erudition and originality. The present volume, as yet his most ambitious literary venture, is not only learned, ingenious, and suggestive, but revolutionary, attacking sundry accepted doctrines of the masters of metrological science—Boeckh, Brandis, Mommsen, Hultsch, Head, and Petrie. The quality of the book is such that these novel theories cannot be summarily dismissed, but will have to be taken into account by future inquirers. It is too soon to pronounce any definite judgment as to many of the speculations here propounded. Some, probably, may stand the test of the sharp criticism they are certain to receive, others will have to be modified or withdrawn. I will therefore confine myself to a comparison of Prof. Ridgeway's heresies with the orthodox doctrines, mentioning a few of the objections which he will have to answer.

In the earlier chapters he deals with ancient trade routes, the distribution of the precious metals, and the systems of barter among savage and semi-civilised peoples, which are mostly based on articles of ornament or use, such as cowries, beads, hoes, axes, needles, fish hooks, wire, metal rings, cloth, blankets, sheep, oxen, slaves, stock-fish, and tobacco, thus leading up to his main thesis, that among the more civilised peoples of antiquity the unit of barter was the ox, and that when the precious metals were discovered, a fixed weight of metal was substituted for the ox unit, as is indicated by the Latin word pecunia derived from pecus, and the English fee cognate with the German vieh. The light Babylonian shekel, the Persian daric, the Attic gold stater, all weighing from 130 to 133 grains, were, he considers, bullion equivalents of the ox. He also maintains that the Homeric talent, consisting of 130 grains of gold, and independently derived from the ox-unit of barter, was the basis of all the Greek monetary standards.

Passing over for the present these speculations as to the ox unit and the Homeric talent, which, as we shall presently see, rest on somewhat insecure foundations, we come to Prof. Ridgeway's theory of the origin of the Greek silver standards. This is the portion of the book which will probably meet with the greatest amount of hostile criticism, but which, if it stands the test, will have an important bearing on metrological science. The new theory is ingenious and intrinsically probable, but whether it is capable of strict proof is another question. Probably the available materials do not suffice for either a demonstration or a refutation.

The chief silver standards whose origin has to be explained are the Phœcean stater of 260 grains, the Aeginetic of 194 grains, the Euboic, Attic, or Corinthian of 134 grains, and the Macedonian of 224 grains. These standards have hitherto been deduced by various devices and assumptions either from the Babylonian shekel of 130 grains, or from the Egyptian gold standard of about 200 grains. In lieu of all these elaborate explanations Prof. Ridgeway propounds one clear and simple principle. Rejecting the theory of a transmission of the Asiatic weight standards, he contends, as already stated, that the Greeks started with the supposed Homeric talent of 130 grains, which represented the ox as the unit of barter. This gold unit, he thinks, remained stable; but when silver became known the relative values of gold and silver constantly changed, and the successive silver standards arose from attempts to equate the ever varying ratios of the values of gold and silver. As he tersely puts his argument, "from first to last the Greek communities were engaged in an endless quest after bi-metallism."

It is impossible to do justice to this theory without testing it by special cases, and comparing the method by which Prof. Ridgeway explains the origin of the chief silver standards with the established or orthodox theories, which are all based on the probable hypothesis of the transmission of weight standards from the East and the very improbable assumption that the relative values of gold and silver remained constant for many centuries.

On certain bronze lion-weights and stone duck-weights found at Nineveh and elsewhere the values are inscribed, and hence we obtain authentic knowledge of the Babylonian and Assyrian weight standards. The most important of these weights are dated from the reigns of Tiglath Pileser in the eighth century B.C., of Shalmaneser in the ninth, of Irta Merodach in the eleventh, and of Dungi, who is assigned to the twenty-first. From these weights we obtain the value of the light mina of 7793.3 grains, one sixtieth of which is the light shekel of 129.89 grains (130 in round numbers), the heavy mina and the heavy shekel being exactly double these weights, and the talent being 60 minas.

From the oldest Greek tombs, and from Schliemann's excavations at Hissarlik and Mycenae, we learn that gold was known before silver. Hence we may assume that silver was at first scarcer, and therefore more valuable than gold. After the discovery of the silver mines of Cilicia, Spain, and Laurium, and the exhaustion of the gold in the river gravels of Lydia, silver became relatively cheaper—a grain of gold being worth at various times ten, eleven, thirteen, fifteen, or seventeen grains of silver; and, finally, when the gold mines of Thrace were worked by Philip of Macedon, and the hoarded gold of Darius had been put into circulation by Alexander, the ratio again fell. "All this," Prof. Ridgeway confesses, "is purely conjectural" (p. 291); but if we grant his premises, we obtain a very simple explanation of the perplexing variations of the Greek silver standards. The chief difficulty is Prof. Ridgeway's hypothetical Homeric ox-unit; but this can be jettisoned without damage by substituting for it the Persian gold daric, which circulated freely in Greece, and was of the exact weight required. The daric weighed 129.2 grains, and may be regarded as identical with the Babylonian gold shekel of 129.89 grains. There is no difficulty in regarding the Hebrew shekel of 253 grains, and the early Phœcean electron and silver staters of 254 grains, as degraded forms of the heavy Babylonian shekel of 260 grains.

Herodotus informs us that in the empire of Darius gold was 13 times as valuable as silver. The actual ratio, as deduced from coins, seems to have been 1 to 13.3. With this ratio the Babylonian silver shekel of 173 grains, 10 of which were equivalent to 1 gold shekel, is easily obtained from the gold shekel of 130 grains ($130 \times 13.3 \div 10 = 172.9$). Taking the same ratio of gold to silver, the Phœnician silver standard of 225 grains (called by Brandis the 15 stater standard) has hitherto been derived from the heavy gold shekel of 260 grains, by dividing it into 15 silver shekels ($260 \times 13.3 \div 15 = 230$). The normal Phœnician shekel is, however, not 230 grains but 225, but this difficulty is got over by the hypothesis of degradation. Phœnician shekels, minted at different periods, range in fact from 236 down to 220 grains. Prof. Ridgeway's first great heresy is his rejection of the famous 15 stater standard. He objects that the division into 15 shekels is purely conjectural, and he contends that the normal Phœnician silver standard was 220 grains, and he obtains it from the light gold shekel of 130 grains, by assuming that the value of gold to silver was 1 to 17 or thereabouts ($130 \times 17 \div 10 = 221$). He considers that this low value of silver about 1000 B.C. was due to the discovery of the silver mines of Spain. In the time of Solomon we read that "silver was nothing accounted of in Jerusalem." We thus get rid of the anomalous 15 stater hypothesis, and are able to explain the variations in the weight of the Phœnician shekel.

This Phœnician silver standard (220—225 grains) has hitherto been believed to have been the source of the Macedonian standard of 224 grains, on which the enormous silver coinage of Philip of Macedon was struck.

Prof. Ridgeway contends that it was obtained independently from the 130 grain gold unit, and is to be explained by the depreciation of silver due to the abundant supply from the Bisaltian silver mines.

We now come to the crucial test of the new theory, the Aeginetic standard, the first on which coins were struck in any European mint. Normally it may have been as high as 196 grains, the actual coins which we possess weighing from 194 to 180 grains. The origin of this standard, which at one time extended to Sicily and Italy, and prevailed over the greater portion of the Greek world, has been the source of prolonged controversy. Brandis considered it to be the Babylonian silver standard of 173 grains, raised, for some mysterious reason, to 196 grains, a most improbable supposition. Mr. Head maintains that it was a degraded form of the Phœnician silver standard of 225 grains. Hultsch thinks that this 196 grain standard was a sort of compromise between the Babylonian standard of 173 grains and the Phœnician of 225. Mr. Petrie, with more probability, derives it from the Egyptian gold unit which he found in some XVIIIth Dynasty tombs at Illahun in the Fayum (circa 2100 B.C.), and which in the time of Amenhotep III. (circa 1500 B.C.) weighed 207 grains, but was afterwards degraded at Memphis to 201 and then to 196 grains, the precise Aeginetic weight. Prof. Ridgeway on the other hand derives it directly from the 130 grain gold standard, by supposing that in the eighth or seventh century B.C., when Phœdon of Argos first struck silver coins at Aegina, the value of gold to silver was as 1 : 15, and that, as usual, ten silver staters were equivalent to one gold stater ($130 \times 15 \div 10 = 195$).

This perplexing Aeginetic standard affords the most favourable test that can be applied to Prof. Ridgeway's hypothesis. Of the five solutions proposed, those of Mr. Petrie and Prof. Ridgeway seem more probable than the hypotheses of Mr. Head, Brandis, or Hultsch, but are not without difficulties. Aegina was a place of considerable commerce; but it is doubtful whether, as early as the seventh century B.C., the commerce with Egypt was so considerable as to make it probable that the Greeks would have adopted an Egyptian standard as their own. On the other hand, Prof. Ridgeway has to assume that about the tenth century B.C., when, as he supposes, the Phœnician standard originated, the value of silver to gold was 17 : 1, that in the seventh century it was 15 : 1, in the fifth century, 13 : 1, and in the fourth century, 10 : 1; whereas his previous argument as to the value of what he calls the ox-unit depends on the assumption that gold and silver were originally at par, and that the disparity kept increasing instead of diminishing till the Macedonian epoch. If Prof. Ridgeway can answer this objection, his theory of the origin of the Aeginetic standard may be provisionally accepted as the best that has been yet propounded.

The next standard is the Euboic, Attic, or Corinthian, on which were struck those Athenian "owls" and Corinthian "colts" which ultimately superseded the Aeginetic coins, and for many years formed the chief currency of the Mediterranean. The weight varies from 135 to 125 grains, the normal weight being probably 134. Three weights found by Schliemann at Hissarlik belong to this standard, ranging from 136.4 to 137.4 grains. The Euboic standard is usually explained by supposing that the Asiatic gold standard of 130 grains, having been transmitted from Samos to Euboea, was adopted for silver, and slightly raised. This Prof. Ridgeway will not admit. He believes that the Euboic standard was derived from the Homeric talent of 130 grains, founded on the ox-unit, which, he thinks, was used by the Greeks for weighing gold during the long period when they possessed no gold coinage of their own. We have already seen that the Persian gold daric circulated freely among the Greeks, constituting practically their gold currency. It is, therefore, needless to resort to a hypothetical Homeric talent of precisely the same weight, the very existence of which is doubtful, and whose transmission from Homeric to Macedonian times is more doubtful still.

We are therefore confronted with two important elements in the discussion—the general probability of the transmission of weight standards, and the existence of this Homeric talent or ox-unit of 130 grains of gold, on which so much of the theory is unnecessarily based. As we have seen, Prof. Ridgeway maintains that in Greece, Egypt, and Babylonia the ox was the primitive unit of barter, and that the value of the ox was everywhere 130 grains of gold, and also that the value of the ox as measured by gold remained stable while the relative value of silver continually varied. The existence of this Homeric talent of the value of an ox rests on very slender evidence. Practically we have nothing definite beyond the fact that in the footrace in the Iliad the second prize was a cow, and the third was half a talent of gold. This Prof. Ridgeway couples with the statement of an anonymous Alexandrine writer of unknown but late date, who tells us that the Homeric talent was of the same value as the Persian daric. This late Alexandrine writer, who must have written many centuries after the composition of the Homeric poems, could not have been in possession of any real evidence; and the deduction that the value of the ox was 130 grains of gold conflicts with other evidence of a surer kind. Thus Solon (circa 600 B.C.), when commuting into money fines Draco's fines of sheep and oxen, puts the value of the ox at five silver drachmas; and as the Euboic standard was then used at Athens, and as a Euboic drachma weighed 67.5 grains, the value of silver to gold being then probably as 13.3 to 1, this would give 25.3 grains of gold, instead of 130, for the value of the ox. Moreover, in a well-known passage Pollux tell us that the old Athenian didrachma was called the "ox" because it had an ox stamped upon it, and he goes on to say that at Delos the priests accepted an Attic didrachma in lieu of the offering of an ox. These didrachmas or staters must have been silver and not gold, as when gold drachmas are meant they are always design-nated as such; and these ox coins to which Pollux refers have been identified with certain silver coins with a bull's head struck in Euboea which circulated in Attica, where chiefly they have been found, while no gold coins were struck in Euboea before the Roman conquest, and all Athenian gold coins have the owl and not the ox. We must therefore take the value of the ox in Delos at two silver drachmas; so that it would be worth little more than 10 grains of gold, instead of 130 as Prof. Ridgeway contends.

Again, the value of the ox in Egypt about 1000 B.C. was one kat of silver, or 140 grains. Prof. Ridgeway brings this statement into accordance with his theory, that the ox was everywhere worth 130 grains of gold, by assuming that in Egypt the value of silver was at first greater than that of gold, and that gradually gold became more valuable. This may be admitted; but the chronological difficulty is fatal to the theory, since, about 1000 B.C., silver was so plentiful in Jerusalem as to be of no account, and, as we have already seen, Prof. Ridgeway has himself estimated the ratio of gold to silver in Phoenicia at this very time as 1 to 17. It is impossible that at the same epoch gold and silver were nearly at par in Egypt, and at 1 to 17 in Palestine. Moreover, when the Lex Tarpeia was passed, the value of the cow at Rome was 100 asses or 10 denarii; and as the denarius contained 70 grains of silver, the value of the ox in gold would be from 46 to 54 grains of gold, according as we take the ratio of gold to silver as 1:15 or as 1:13.

The theory of a universal ox-unit of 130 grains of gold is therefore difficult to reconcile with such evidence as we possess. There are also grave reasons for doubting whether the gold value of the ox could have remained stationary for any considerable time. The relative value of gold and of cattle seems to be more liable to sudden fluctuations than the relative value of gold and silver; for, not to speak of the variable supply of gold, the price of cattle is extremely unstable, being affected by murrains and by the supply of fodder.

Thus, to take a modern example, the accounts of the Priory of Finchale show that in 1312 an ox cost 12s., in 1367 it cost 17s., in 1398 it cost 12s., in 1450 it cost 6s. 8d., in 1458 it cost 12s., in 1516 it cost 16s., in 1525 it cost 10s., and in 1528 it cost 20s. Before the Norman Conquest the value of the ox was between two and three shillings. The fluctuations prove that the values are not solely due to the depreciation of the silver coinage.

Prof. Ridgeway even contends that the weights of the earliest gold coins of the Gauls and Germans depended on the value of the ox. He argues that in Gaul and North of the Alps gold was scarcer and cattle more abundant than in Greece, and, therefore, the Gaulish and German coins were reduced from 130 to 120 grains. But these Gaulish and German coins were barbarous imitations of the Macedonian Philippi, which bore on the obverse the laurel crowned head of Apollo, and on the reverse a victory in a biga. Sir John Evans has shown that the Philippi were copied in Southern Gaul, and that copies of these copies gradually spread from tribe to tribe to Northern Gaul, Britain, and Germany—"each copy in its turn served as the model from which other copies were made," each more barbarous in type than its predecessor, and of baser metal, gradually descending from 120 grains of gold in 300 B.C. to 84 grains in 20 B.C. Evidently the copies were made from worn coins, and there was a continual tendency to reduce the standard. This gradual reduction in weight depended on transmission and degradation, and not on the diminished value of the ox; in fact, the value of the ox continually increased, being valued at 96 grains of gold in the earliest German laws, and afterwards at 144 grains.

The same process of degradation took place in the opposite region. The Philippi were imitated in Bactria, but the standard steadily fell from 133 grains to 118, just as in Gaul, Germany, and Britain, the imitations of the Philippi fell from 133 to 120, and ultimately to 84 grains. The Italian soldo, the French sou, and the English shilling are descendants of the solidus, originally a gold coin heavier than a sovereign; its descendant is worth a halfpenny in France and a shilling in England. The English penny and the French denier were descended from the denarius; but the value of the penny was 24 times that of the denier. The English denarius or silver penny originally weighed 24 grains of silver; in the reign of Edward III. it had fallen to 18, in the reign of Edward IV. to 12, and in that of Edward VI. to 8 grains. Thus the law is transmission and degradation. The Indian coins were copied from those of Bactria, and the Bactrian from the Macedonian. The early coins of Arabia Felix were rude copies of the Athenian owls. The Anglo-Saxon sceattas are copies of Byzantine coins. The dinars and dirhems of the Caliphs were, as the names show, successors of the denarius and the drachma.

Since the Greek alphabet, and the Greek names of many musical instruments, of spices and precious stones, of gold and bronze, and, above all, of weights and coins, were of Semitic origin, it is difficult to believe that the weight standards were not themselves so derived, especially when we know that nothing passes more easily by commerce—witness our own weights and measures—Troy weight, Apothecaries weight, and Avoirdupois. Hence it is difficult to believe with Prof. Ridgeway that, when the Athenians in the fifth century B.C. first coined gold staters of 133 grains, the weight had no reference to the Persian darics of 130 grains, which had long circulated in Greece, a standard which goes back to the eleventh, and probably to the twenty-first century B.C. If the legendary Homeric talent was, as Prof. Ridgeway contends, 130 grains of gold, which is the more probable—that it was based on the ancient Asiatic standard of 130 grains, or that it persistently represented the value of the ox, which in Solon's time was worth only 25 grains and at Delos was worth 10?

This article has extended to such length that it is impossible to discuss the subject of the types of Greek coins. Prof. Ridgeway way thinks that the symbols of the cow and the bull were placed on coins because the coins represented the ox-unit of barter, but the earliest coins on which these types occur are silver drachmas and half drachmas. Besides, these types are quite exceptional. Did the coins with lions and dolphins represent the value of these animals? On the oldest Athenian coins we have the types of the owl and the olive branch, which are usually regarded as symbols of the tutelary deity of Athens. Prof. Ridgeway maintains that olives and olive oil were units of value in Attica, a fact denoted by the olive branch on the coins. But how about the owl? Were owls also units of barter among the Athenians? The cuttlefish appears on the coins of Croton. Prof. Ridgeway thinks this was because they formed a staple article of diet. The tortoise is the type on the coins of Aegina. Prof. Ridgeway tells us that the Aeginetans must have had something to barter for other commodities. What did this barren island yield but tortoises? Hence the tortoise became the unit of barter, and was therefore chosen as the type on Aeginetan coins. The Boeotian type is a shield, usually supposed to be the shield of Hercules—but no, hides, and shields of hide formed the barter unit of Boeotian commerce. On early Lycian coins the type is the boar, which was adopted because, forsooth, the Lycians may have made good bacon and hams.

Though Prof. Ridgeway rides some of his hobbies too hard, it is impossible to deny the value of the book. Not only does it supply a very probable solution of the difficult problem of the Greek silver standards, but it abounds with incidental remarks which are valuable and suggestive.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: Sept. 5, 1892.

Permit me to repair an omission in my letter of last week. Among the false-necked vases in the Fourth Egyptian Room at the British Museum, there is one with the number 22,821 upon its label. The vase is of Mycenaean ware, and decorated in Mycenaean style. The label says that it was found at Dêr el-Bahari in the tomb of one of the grandsons of King Pinetchem.

Pinetchem reigned in the XXIst Dynasty, and was a grandson of King Herheru, the founder of that dynasty. According to the common system of chronology, the dynasty was founded about 1100 B.C. If so, the tomb of the founder's great-great-grandson can hardly date from before 1000 years B.C. Under the system of chronology adopted by Mr. Petrie, the date would be later still.

In his final letter Mr. Petrie said, "Whenever a single clear datum can be produced which stands outside of the propositions which I have laid down in my last letter, I shall be glad to consider it." The first of these propositions was, "That all the data yet found with the widely-spread examples [of Mycenaean pottery] in Greece and Egypt show a period of between 1450 B.C. and 1100 B.C. Well, here is a "datum" which "shows a period" of about 1000 years B.C.

CECIL TORK.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR NOEL PATON has just completed an important symbolical picture, entitled "De Profundis:—Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord; lead me to the rock that is higher than I." We see a female figure, which typifies the human soul, struggling up a steep, rocky way, from an unseen valley beneath, in which she has been wandering, lost and desolate, and whence dreary coils of thick, chilling mist are being driven upwards by the wind and cling around her feet. Her white garments, and the richly tinted wings that appear at her shoulders, are rent and stained; but a flash of glad surprise illumines her features, and passes into an expression of utter peace, as she recognises her Divine Helper in the figure who kneels to receive and embrace her, his pierced hands sustaining her worn and weary frame, and the hollow eyes and suffering face that appear from beneath the crown of thorns gazing into her human countenance with a look of ineffable love and compassion. Behind is visible a vista of quiet landscape, with a space of still waters and a stretch of folded hills lying "softer than sleep" in the misty atmosphere of the dawn, beneath a sky in which the morning star is still visible, but which is gathering colour from the sunrise, and is ready to pass into the perfect day. The picture shows all the learned and carefully finished execution that is characteristic of the painter, and is full of the reverent, solemnly ideal aim which has never been absent from his treatment of religious and symbolical subjects.

This year's number of Yule Tide will be illustrated almost entirely by Mr. Harry Furniss, who contributes four cartoons in colours and a number of other drawings to accompany the letterpress, which is entitled, "The Decline and Fall of the New Empire." The coloured plate will be from a painting called "Rose, Shamrock, and Thistle," by Mr. George Joy.

The annual exhibition of paintings from the Paris Salons will open next week in the Continental Gallery, New Bond-street.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Homolle, director of the French School at Athens, gave a report on the work done during the spring and summer of the present year. Three members have divided among themselves the exploration of the islands in the Egean. M. Homolle has himself undertaken to publish, in a series of monographs, the inscriptions from the islands. M. Chaumond is at present engaged upon the temple of Delos, where the inscriptions furnish detailed materials for a very exact description and restoration. M. Jonbin has excavated the site of Stratos, of which M. Henzey long ago pointed out the importance. He has laid bare the agora and the temple, and has collected a large number of terracottas, as well as interesting inscriptions.

WE have just received the last Part of the American Journal of Archaeology for 1891. The lateness of publication derives emphasis from the fact that about half the contents consist of news of discoveries, &c., which took place more than eight months ago. The Part opens with papers of the American School at Athens. Mr. John Pickard contributes a very careful study of the topography of ancient Erctria, based upon a survey made in the early spring of 1891. Mr. Henry S. describes the remains of an ancient temple, found at Plataia later in the same spring, which he shows reason for identifying with the famous Heraion, built by the Thebans in 426-5 B.C., after the destruction of an earlier temple on the same site. Next, we have the text of a long votive inscription, also from Plataia, with a valuable comment by Mr. Rufus H. Richardson; while, lastly, Mr. F. B. Tarbell gives an account of a so-called "mensa ponderaria" from Anson. Passing from classical archaeology, we have an elaborate paper by Prof. Allan Marquand, illustrated with two plates, on an altarpiece in the Metropolitan Museum at New York, which he is able to assign to the hand of Andrea del Robbia. Prof. A. L. Frothingham continues his series on the introduction of Gothic architecture into Italy by French Cistercians, dealing this time with the little-known monastery of Arbona in the Abruzzi; and he finds himself compelled to protest against the discourteous treatment his work has received from a young French scholar. Among the minor items, we may mention a letter from Dr. J. P. Peters, giving a summary of the results of his recent expedition to Babylonia (see ACADEMY, September 5, 1891); and a detailed review of Paton and Hicks's "Inscriptions of Cos," by J. H. Wright.

MR. HENRY O'SHEA has just brought out in French a new guide to the collections of the Louvre (Paris: Dentu). Not a page is wasted in this closely-packed 18mo volume of 430 pages. It is neatly bound in cloth, and contains plans of the ground and first floor of the Louvre, with a history of the several collections, a chronology of the schools of painting, biographies of artists when first mentioned, and an appreciation of their chief pictures. Mr. H. O'Shea is no novice in art-criticism; he has studied the subject for more than thirty years. Those who are acquainted with the Guide to Spain which bears his name, will welcome this new volume, in which he has done for the Musées du Louvre, but on a larger scale, what he formerly did for the Museo de Madrid.

MUSIC.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Gloucester. Sept. 7, 1892.

THE selection of music for the present Festival has justly given general satisfaction: the claims of both old and modern masters have been fully recognised, while four works, of greater or less importance, and all by English composers, supply the novelties without which no Festival scheme is now considered complete.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" attracted an immense audience yesterday (Tuesday) morning; and until it shows signs of decline in popular favour, the promoters of the Festival, whose special object is to benefit charity, will continue to assign to it the place of honour. For Leeds, the argument assumes quite a different aspect: music there is the first consideration. The solo vocalists were Miss A. Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd and Santley, the last two specially distinguishing themselves. In the evening Gounod's "Redemption" was given, with the assistance of Mme. Nordica, Miss Jessie King, and Messrs. Houghton, Watkin Mills, and Plunket Greene. As only the Monday before the Festival is devoted to rehearsal of band and chorus, everything cannot be properly gone through, and some things, indeed, are left to take care of themselves. At the performances both yesterday and to-day there were moments of indecision, not to say confusion. It is easy to advise that more time should be spent upon rehearsal; but that means greater expense, and, consequently, less for the charity. In the long run, however, it might be found not only a wiser but also more profitable policy to present the works in as perfect a manner as possible.

The programme this morning was devoted to Handel and Bach, and to Dr. Bridge. The oratorio of "Joshua" is almost a novelty; it was revived a few seasons ago by Mr. E. Prout at the Borough of Hackney Concerts, but, with that exception, we can recall no performance of it either in London or at a provincial festival. Of course, "Joshua," like many of Handel's oratorios, is far too long, and many numbers have to be cut. By this the work is indeed improved; for the composer in writing both his oratorios and his operas was not concerned so much about the unity of his work, as about keeping all his singers well employed. But why the "See the conquering hero comes" (so well known in connexion with "Judas Maccabæus," to which it was transferred) was omitted in the performance here is a mystery. Was it considered too secular for the cathedral? Handel's work contains some splendid specimens of his genius, but there are also many passages in which the master's pen was moved by instinct rather than by inspiration. The juxtaposition of works by the two musical giants of the eighteenth century naturally led one to reflect on this picture and on this. Handel's music, for the most part, is objective, while that of Bach is subjective; and this difference caused the one to aim at simplicity, and drew the other into complexity. Over a mixed audience, Handel will, probably, always exert a more direct and more powerful influence; but Bach shows the full might of his genius only to those who study him until the complexity of detail no longer conceals the deep underlying thought and emotion. Bach's Cantata, "My spirit was in heaviness," contains some of his finest music, but the performance was by no means a satisfactory one. The soloists for "Joshua" were Miss A. Williams, Miss H. Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd and Watkin Mills. The two ladies sang well, but the two gentlemen specially distinguished themselves. Mr. Lloyd was in splendid voice. In the Bach, Miss A. Williams and Messrs. Houghton and Plunket Greene were the soloists; and of these the last named seemed most in sympathy with the music. The choral singing was at times very unsteady. Mr. C. Lee Williams is an able musician, and a good conductor; he certainly is inclined to drag the tempi, but, for want of proper time for rehearsal, his efforts should be judged with indulgence.

Dr. Bridge's setting of the Lord's Prayer, which was given under the composer's direction after the oratorio, is a very short composition, occupying only ten minutes in performance. He has used the English version by the Rev. E. H. Plunket, late Dean of Wells, of the paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer in Dante's Purgatorio, Canto XI. Dr. Bridge has often proved his skill as a composer, and in this new work there are some effective passages. The opening phrase (which, by the way, faintly recalls Mozart's Ave Verum) is dignified; in the supplication for forgiveness there is fine cadence; and in the "But from his evil sting deliverance give"—the final section—there is some broad, effective (Gounod-like) writing. But somehow or other the composition sounds patchy, for there is no leading thought giving unity to the work. Then, again, the composer does not seem to us to have caught the colour of the context. The Lord's Prayer is uttered by souls in purgatory, who, no longer capable of sin, pray not for themselves, but for their brethren on earth. One would have expected music of a more mystic character.

In the evening there was a miscellaneous concert at the Shire Hall, at which was given Miss Ellicott's setting of Mr. Lewis Morris's poem entitled "The Birth of Song." There seems to us more thought than poetry in the "poem"; but, anyhow, it provided certain contrasts of mood of which Miss Ellicott has taken good advantage. Three years ago, this talented lady wrote a Cantata full of charm, entitled "Elysium," and in the present work she has again shown skill and refinement. Nevertheless, we are more favourably inclined towards the earlier work. "The Birth of Song" may be praised for the naturalness of the writing; the composer always keeps within bounds, and expresses her thoughts in a clear, decisive manner. The music in its neat and melodious phrases often reminds one of Mendelssohn, while here and there are traces of acquaintance with Wagner's music-dramas. The opening of the Cantata is very fresh and pleasing. The tenor solo, "Shall he attune his voice," if it does not rise to a high level, is attractive. The chorus, "Nor 'mid the clang and rush of mightier thought," is not lacking in energy; but it has no real climax, and there is also a certain monotony of key in it. The chorus later on divides into six parts, and there is some effective writing. The scoring is good, but, on the whole, too heavy. The soli parts were taken by Miss Nordica and Mr. Houghton; the former was not in good voice. The performance of the work was praiseworthy, but there was at times a lack of refinement: energy rather than sweetness was displayed in the choral singing. Miss Ellicott was summoned to the platform at the close of the performance and received with enthusiasm. Next came Mozart's immortal Jupiter Symphony, of which a very creditable performance was given under the direction of Mr. C. Lee Williams. The second part of the programme commenced with a very charming part-song, entitled "Song and Summer," by A. H. Brewer, sung con amore by the choir. The composer was recalled. The hall was crowded.

The chorus, supplied by Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Bristol, &c., was not reinforced this year by singers from Leeds. The voices are of good quality, and are well balanced: the basses seemed rather weak on Tuesday, but to-day they came out in full strength in the great closing chorus of Bach's Cantata.

Tomorrow the other two novelties—Dr. C. H. Parry's "Job" and Mr. C. L. Williams's "Gethsemane"—will be produced; but notice of these must wait until next week.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

"THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION HANDBOOKS."

Edited by J. Y. W. MACALISTER and THOMAS MASON
(Hon. Secretaries of the Association).

No. 1.—Now ready, price 1s. net.

LIBRARY APPLIANCES: being a Descriptive Guide to the Complete Technical Equipment of Libraries, in- cluding Fittings, Furniture, Records, Forms, &c., &c.

By JAMES D. BROWN, Librarian, Clerkenwell Public Library.

No. 2.—Immediately, price 2s. 6d. net.

PUBLIC LIBRARY LAW. A COMPLETE DIGEST

OF THE

NEW CONSOLIDATED AND AMENDED LIBRARY LAW.

By H. W. FOVARGUE, Town Clerk of Eastbourne, and J. J. OGLE, Librarian of the Public Library, Epsom.

As the new Law, which comes into force on the 1st October next, requires Commissioners and other Library Authorities to take various steps in pursuance of its provisions it is important that all Library Authorities should make themselves conversant with the details of the Act before that date.

In addition to the new Law, this Handbook contains a Complete Digest of the Library Law of Scotland and of Ireland.

N.B.—Copies can still be obtained of Messrs. FOVARGUE and OGLE'S.

DIGEST OF PUBLIC LIBRARY LAW from 1835 to 1890. Although to some extent superseded by the new Law, this work will always be of value for reference, as it contains com- plete reports of Judgments in the most important leading cases. Price 2s. 6d. net.

IMPORTANT TO BOOKSELLERS.

NOW READY.

The LIBRARY ASSOCIATION YEAR-BOOK

Price One Shilling net.

In addition to other information valuable to Booksellers and of interest in Libraries, the Year-Book contains a complete List of the Public Libraries in the United Kingdom and of other Libraries represented in the Association, a complete List of Members and their Addresses, and full particulars of the Association's Publications, Syllabus of Examinations and Specimen Questions, price 1s.

Published for the Association by DAVID STOTT, 370, Oxford Street, W.

WHITTIER'S POEMS.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

With Illustrated notice of his Life, Notes, Index, &c.

New Complete Editions of this popular Poet's Works can be had in the following styles:—

THE ALBION POETS. Large crown 8vo, large type, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE LANSDOWNE POETS. With Portrait and Page Illustrations, red-line border, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

* * Both these Editions are supplied in handsome morocco, calf, or Persian bindings.

THE CHANDOS CLASSICS. Crown 8vo, stiff wrapper, 1s. 6d.

Ditto, cloth gilt, new style, 2s.

Ditto, plain cloth, uncut, with label, 2s.

Ditto, imitation half-Roxburghe, gilt top, leather label,
2s. 6d.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co., London and New York.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES, Also,
ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

SPECIAL APPOINTMENT.

EVERY TEACHER and SCHOOL

BOARD CLERK may hear of a high-class Agency for a leading Life Company, whose rates are about Fifty per cent. less than those of other offices, by addressing "LIFE," 120, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO

The COURSE of INSTRUCTION in DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.

PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON
Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

Messrs. A. & C. BLACK beg to announce that on November 1st will be published

VOLUME I.
OF THE DRYBURGH EDITION
OF THE
WAVERLEY NOVELS,

To be completed in Twenty-five Monthly Volumes, large crown 8vo, cloth,

Price 5s.

EACH VOLUME CONTAINING A COMPLETE NOVEL.

This Edition will contain the latest revised Text, with ample Glossaries and Indices; and will be Illustrated with 250 Wood Engravings, specially drawn by the following Artists:—

CHARLES GREEN,
GORDON BROWNE,
PAUL HARDY,
WALTER PAGET,
FRANK DADD,

HUGH THOMSON,
H. M. PAGET,
JOHN WILLIAMSON,
GODFREY C. HINDLEY,
WILLIAM HOLE, R.S.A.,

LOCKHART BOGLE,
GEORGE HAY, R.S.A.
C. M. HARDIE, R.S.A.
W. H. OVEREND,
STANLEY BERKELEY.

There will be a Large-Paper Edition, strictly limited to 300 copies, specially printed on Hand-made Paper, price 15s. net each volume, to be supplied to Subscribers according to date of order.

Prospectuses, Handbills, Show Cards, &c., may now be had on application to the Publishers.

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK, EDINBURGH: 22, HANOVER STREET.
LONDON: SOHO SQUARE, W.

BLACKIE & SON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

READING.

The Century Readers. Fully Illustrated and bound in cloth.

First Primer. 24d.	Second Primer. 3d.
Infant Reader. 6d.	Fourth Reader. 1s. 4d.
Second Reader. 8d.	Fifth Reader. 1s. 6d.
Third Reader. 1s.	Sixth Reader. 1s. 6d.

Stories for the Schoolroom. Selected from Popular Authors, and adapted for Class Reading. Edited by J. H. YOXALL. Charmingly illustrated, and bound in cloth.

Infant Reader. 6d.	Third Book. 1s.
First Book. 8d.	Fourth Book. 1s. 4d.
Second Book. 3d.	Fifth Book. 1s. 6d.

Readings from Standard Authors. With Notes, &c. Cloth, 1s. 3d. each.

Robinson Crusoe.	Sir Walter Scott.
Mary Queen of Scots.	Addison's Spectator.

The Sovereign Reader. Scenes from the Life and Reign of Queen Victoria. By G. A. HENTY. Illustrated. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

The Dickens Reader. Selected Passages from the WORKS OF CHARLES DICKENS, Arranged and Annotated for Class Reading. With a Biographical Notice of the Author. Cloth, 1s. 4d.

Shakespeare's Plays. Carefully Edited, with Notes. Cloth, 8d. each.

King Richard II.	King John.
Julius Caesar.	As You Like It.
Macbeth.	Merchant of Venice.
Henry the Eighth.	The Tempest.
Henry the Fifth. 10d.	Hamlet. 10d.
	King Lear. 10d.

WRITING.

Vere Foster's Copy-Books. These books have been designed by Mr. VERE FOSTER to carry out the principle of clear and legible handwriting, and to afford a simple, rapid, and elegant style of writing for general correspondence.

THE ORIGINAL SERIES. In 18 Numbers, at 2d. each.
THE BOLD WRITING SERIES. In 23 Numbers, at 2d. each.
THE PALMERSTON SERIES. In 11 Numbers, at 3d. each.

ARITHMETIC.

Blackie's Complete Arithmetic. Cloth, 1s.; or with Answers, 1s. 6d. The Answers separately, 6d.

A Practical Arithmetic on an entirely New METHOD. By JOHN JACKSON. Third Edition. Cloth, 4s.

Examination Arithmetic. Containing 1,200 Arithmetical Problems and Exercises (with Answers), selected from Examination Papers, &c. Classified by T. S. HARVEY. Cloth, 2s.—KEY, 4s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

Compendious English Grammar. With Exercises. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

English Composition Exercises. Comprising Short Stories, Subjects and Hints for Essays, Rules and Models for Letters, &c. Cloth, 1s.

Stories and Essays. A Sequel to "English Composition Exercises." Cloth, 1s.

The English Language and Literature: an Outline for Schools. By DAVID CAMPBELL. Cloth, 6d.

LATIN.

Elementary Latin Grammar. Cloth, 1s.

Caesar de Bello Gallico, Book I. Containing Brief Notes. By JOHN BROWN, M.A. Cloth, 1s.

Dr. Burns's Praxis Primaria: Progressive Exercises in Writing Latin, with Notes. Ninth Edition. Cloth, 2s.—KEY, 3s. 6d.

MYTHOLOGY.

Myths and Legends of Ancient Greece and Rome. By E. M. BERENS. Illustrated from Antique Sculptures. New Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

ELOCUTION.

Select Readings and Recitations. With Rules and Exercises on Pronunciation, Gesture, Tone, and Emphasis. By GEO. W. BAYNEHAM. Sixth Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

DICTIONARIES.

Annandale's Concise English Dictionary. Literary, Scientific, Etymological, and Pronouncing. New Edition, Revised and Extended. 864 pp., cloth, 5s.; half-roxburgh, 6s. 6d.; half-morocco, 7s.

Ogilvie's Student's English Dictionary; Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. With about 300 Engravings on Wood. Roxburgh, 7s. 6d.; half-calf, 10s. 6d.

Ogilvie's Smaller Dictionary of the English LANGUAGE. Abridged from the "Student's Dictionary." Cloth, 2s. 6d.; roxburgh, 3s. 6d.

DRAWING.

Poynter's South Kensington Drawing Books.

Produced under the direct superintendence of E. J. POYNTER, R.A., and sanctioned by the Committee of Council on Education. With Instructions and Diagrams to simplify the work of both Teacher and Pupil. Each Book contains paper for drawing on.

Freehand, for Children	4 Books, 4d. each.
Freehand, Elementary Design	2 Books, 4d. each.
Freehand, First Grade, Ornament	6 Books, 4d. each.
Freehand, First Grade, Plants	6 Books, 4d. each.
Freehand, Second Grade	4 Books, 1s. each.

* * The Designs are published also on Cards.

Vere Foster's Drawing Books. Approved by the Science and Art Department. With Instructions and paper for Drawing on.

In 70 Numbers at Twopenny each.

Freehand Series, 20 Numbers.	Geometrical Series, 12 Nos.
Landscape, 12 Numbers.	Perspective, 4 Numbers.
Animals, 12 Numbers.	Model Drawing, 4 Numbers.
Human Figure, 4 Numbers.	Shading, 2 Numbers.
Blank Exercise Book.	40 pages of Drawing Paper.

* * Published also in 18 Parts, at 9d. each.

HISTORY.

A History of the British Empire. With Illustrations, Genealogical Tables, Maps, and Plans. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Our Country: a Reading Book for Junior Classes. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1s. 4d.

The Story of England: a Reading Book for Schools. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Outlines of the World's History. Ancient, Medieval, and Modern. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. With numerous Illustrations and 8 Coloured Maps. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

Also in separate Parts:—

Part 1. ANCIENT HISTORY.	1s.
Part 2. GREECE and ROME.	2s.
Part 3. MEDIEVAL HISTORY.	1s.
Part 4. MODERN HISTORY.	2s. 6d.

A Synopsis of English History; or, Historical Note-Book. Compiled by HERBERT WILLIS. Cloth, 2s.

An Epitome of History, Ancient, Medieval, and Modern. For Higher Schools, Colleges, and Private Study. Translated from the German of CARL PLOETZ. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY.

Blackie's Geographical Manuals for Middle-CLASS and HIGHER SCHOOLS. By W. G. BAKER, M.A.

The BRITISH EMPIRE. Part I. The Home Countries.	With 7 Coloured Maps, &c. Cloth, 2s.
The BRITISH EMPIRE. Part II. The Colonies and Dependencies.	With 6 Coloured Maps, &c. Cloth, 2s.
The BRITISH EMPIRE. Complete in 1 vol., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Commercial Geography: a Complete Manual of the Countries of the World. By DR. CARL ZEBDEN. Translated by FINDLAY MUIRHEAD, M.A. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A Synoptical Geography of the World: a Concise Handbook for rapid revision in preparing for Examinations, and for ready reference. With a complete Series of Maps. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

SCIENCE FOR BEGINNERS.

Mechanics. With Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Animal Physiology. By VINCENT T. MURCHE. With Coloured Plates and Diagrams. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Botany. By VINCENT T. MURCHE. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

Chemistry. By W. JEROME HARRISON. With numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 1s.

Magnetism and Electricity. By W. G. BAKER, M.A. With numerous Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

Agriculture. With Woodcuts. Cloth, 1s.

Blackie's Science Readers. In a Series of Simple Lessons. Fully illustrated and bound in cloth.

No. 1. COMMON OBJECTS.	8d.
No. 2. COMMON OBJECTS.	10d.
No. 3. PRINCIPLES OF CLASSIFICATION.	Substances used in Arts and Manufactures, &c. 1s.
No. 4. ANIMAL and PLANT LIFE.	By the Rev. Theodore Wood, F.E.S. 1s. 4d.
No. 5. ANIMAL and PLANT LIFE.	By the Rev. Theodore Wood, F.E.S. 1s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Prof. J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L. Twelfth Edition, Revised throughout. Copiously illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s. In Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part 1. Mechanics, &c.	Part 3. Electricity, &c.
Part 2. Heat.	Part 4. Sound and Light.

Outlines of Natural Philosophy: a Text-Book of Elementary Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. New Edition. With numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. Illustrated by many Woodcuts. Sixth Edition, Revised. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Earth Knowledge: a Text-Book of Physiography. By W. J. HARRISON and H. R. WAKEFIELD. Part I. ELEMENTARY, 1s. 6d. Part 2. ADVANCED, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Geology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S. Copiously illustrated. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany at the Birmingham Midland Institute. Cloth, 2s.

Magnetism and Electricity. By W. JEROME HARRISON and CHARLES A. WHITE. Numerous Illustrations. Second Edition. Cloth, 2s.

Light, Heat, and Sound. By CHARLES H. DRAPER, D.Sc. Lond., Head Master of the Woolwich High School. Fully illustrated. New Edition. Cloth, 2s.

Inorganic Chemistry: Theoretical and Practical. By Prof. A. HUMBOLDT SEXTON. New Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By Prof. A. BERTHELEMY, Ph.D. Translated by GEORGE MCGOWAN, Ph.D., University College of North Wales, Bangor. Cheaper Edition. Cloth, 6s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Physiology. By J. MCGREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A., M.B. Numerous Illustrations. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Text-Book of Dynamics and HYDROSTATICS. By H. H. PINKERTON, B.A. Second Edition, Enlarged. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Theoretical Mechanics. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. New Edition. Cloth, 2s.

An Elementary Text-Book of Applied MECHANICS. By DAVID ALLAN LOW, Head Master of the People's Palace Technical Schools. Cloth, 2s.

Guides to the Science Examinations of the SCIENCE and ART DEPARTMENT. By W. J. HARRISON.

PHYSIOGRAPHY (Answers, 1882-91).	6d.
MAGNETISM and ELECTRICITY (Answers, 1883-91).	6d.
CHEMISTRY (Answers, 1882-91).	6d.
GEOLOGY (Answers, 1883-91).	6d.

[Others to follow.]

MATHEMATICS.

First Mathematical Course. Comprising Arithmetic, Algebra (to Simple Equations), and the First Book of Euclid. Third Edition. With Answers, 2s.; without Answers, 1s. 9d.; Answers, 6d.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A., Head Master of Stafford Grammar School. Books I. to VI. with XI., and Appendix, and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. Cloth, 4s. 6d.—KEY, 5s.

Books I. to IV., in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; Book I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI., together, 1s.; XI., 1s. 6d.

Mathematical Wrinkles. Consisting of 6 Sets of London Matriculation Papers in Mathematics. With full Solutions. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Blackie's Elementary Algebra. From Notation to Easy Quadratic Equations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. With Answers, cloth, 2s.

Algebra. Up to and including Progressions and Scales of Notation. By J. G. KERR, M.A. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Algebraic Factors. How to Find Them and How to Use Them. Enlarged Edition. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. Cloth, 2s.—KEY, 2s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of Trigonometry. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. New Edition, Revised and Extended. Cloth, 2s.

Elementary Mensuration, Lines, Surfaces, and SOLIDS. With numerous Exercises. Cloth, 10d.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUE OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1063.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. MURRAY'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S LANGUAGE SERIES.

LATIN. THE YOUNG BEGINNER.

4 Parts, 2s. each.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE PRINCIPIA LATINA.

PRINCIPIA LATINA. 5 Parts. 3s. 6d. each.

*Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabularies.

*Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.

*Part II. A First Latin Reading Book.

*Part III. A First Latin Verse Book.

*Part IV. Latin Prose Composition.

*Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose.

Students' Latin Grammar. 6s.

Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

A Child's First Latin Book. Comprising a Full Practice of Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. By T. D. HALL. 2s.

GREEK.

INITIA GRÆCA. 3 Parts. 3s. 6d. each.

*Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabularies.

*Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.

*Part II. A Greek Reading Book.

*Part III. Prose Composition.

Students' Greek Grammar. 6s.

Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

Plato.—Selections. With Notes. 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

*English Grammar. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.

*Primary English Grammar. 1s.

Primary History of Britain. Coloured Map. 430 pp., 2s. 6d.

Modern Geography. 5s.

Smaller Modern Geography. 2s. 6d.

English Composition. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA.

*Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabularies, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.

*Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.

*Part II. A French Reading Book; with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.

*Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.

Students' French Grammar. With an Introduction by M. LITTRE. 6s.

Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN.

GERMAN PRINCIPIA. 2 Parts. 3s. 6d. each.

*Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabularies, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.

*Part II. Reading Book; with Dictionary. 3s. 6d.

Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

ITALIAN.

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA. 2 Parts. 3s. 6d. each.

*Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabularies.

*Part II. An Italian Reading Book.

MURRAY'S STUDENT'S MANUALS.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

With Maps and Woodcuts.

The Students' Home: a History of England from the Earliest Times to the Revolution in 1688. Thoroughly Revised Edition. Continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By Prof. J. S. BREWER. 830 pp.

Also in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. Part I. B.C. 55-A.D. 1485; Part II. A.D. 1485-1688; Part III. 1688-1878.

Modern Europe. By R. LODGE, M.A.

Hallam's Europe during the Middle Ages.

Hallam's Constitutional History of England.

Old and New Testament History. 2 vols.

Ancient History, to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH.

Ecclesiastical History. 2 vols.: I. A.D. 30-1000; II. 1000-1611. By PHILIP SMITH.

English Church History. 3 vols.: I. 590-1500; II. 1500-1717; III. 1717-1884. By Canon PEARCY.

Greece. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH.

Rome. By Dean LIDDELL.

Gibbon. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH.

France. By W. H. JERVIS.

Ancient and Modern Geography. 2 vols.

Geography of British India. By Dr. GEO. SMITH.

English Language: its Origin and Growth.

English Literature. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW.

Specimens of English Literature. 5s.

Moral Philosophy. By Dr. FLEMING.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES.

Maps, Plans, and Woodcuts. 16mo, 3s. 6d. each.

England, from the Earliest Times to 1887.

Scripture History, continued down to A.D. 70.

Ancient History, down to the Conquests of Alexander the Great.

Ancient Geography.

Modern Geography, Physical and Political. 2s. 6d.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire.

Greece, to the Roman Conquest.

Classical Mythology. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons.

English Literature. With Lives of Writers.

Specimens of English Literature.

University Extension Manuals.

Edited by Prof. KNIGHT.

Now ready.

The Realm of Nature: a Manual of Physiography. With 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. 5s.

The Use and Abuse of Money. 3s.

French Literature. 3s.

English Colonisation and Empire. Maps and Plans. 3s. 6d.

The Philosophy of the Beautiful. 3s. 6d.

The Elements of Ethics. 3s.

The Study of Animal Life. Numerous Illustrations. 5s.

The Fine Arts. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

* Other Volumes will follow at regular intervals. Full details sent on application to the Publisher.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

LATIN.

Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. Third Edition. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH and Prof. T. D. HALL, M.A. 730 pp. 7s. 6d.

Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d.

Larger Latin-English Dictionary. 16s.

Larger English-Latin Dictionary. 16s.

BIBLE.

Concise Dictionary. Illustrations. 2s.

Smaller Dictionary. Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

Classical Dictionary of Greek and Roman Mythology, Biography, and Geography. With 700 Woodcuts. 18s.

Smaller Classical Dictionary. With 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH AND LATIN.

Readable English Dictionary. Etymologically arranged. By DAVID MILNE. 7s. 6d.

An English-Latin Gradus, or Verse Dictionary. By A. C. AINSIE and H. G. WINTLE, Assistant Masters in Eton College. 118 pp. Crown 8vo, 9s.

LITTLE ARTHUR'S HISTORIES.

England. With 26 Woodcuts. 1s. 6d.

France. Maps and Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

MRS. MARKHAM'S HISTORIES.

England. With 100 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

France. 70 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

Germany. 50 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

ETON COLLEGE BOOKS.

The Eton Latin Grammar. By F. H. RAWLIN, M.A., and W. R. INGE, M.A. 6s.

The Eton Elementary Latin Grammar. By A. C. AINSIE and H. G. WINTLE. 3s. 6d.

Also by the SAME EDITORS.

A First Latin Exercise Book. Adapted to the above Grammar. 2s.

The Preparatory Eton Grammar. Abridged from the above Work. 2s.

Eton Fourth Form Ovid and Tibullus. With Notes by H. G. WINTLE. 2s. 6d.

The Eton Horace. The ODES, EPIQUES, and CARMEN SECVLARE. With Notes by F. W. CORNISH. Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

*Eton Exercises in Algebra. By H. P. ROSE and A. COCKSHOTT. Crown 8vo, 3s.

*Eton Exercises in Arithmetic. By the Rev. T. DALTON, M.A. Crown 8vo, 3s.

STANDARD SCHOOL BOOKS.

Electricity. By E. M. CAILLARD. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Invisible Powers of Nature. Some Elementary Lessons in Physical Science for Young Beginners. By E. M. CAILLARD. 6s.

Kirk's Handbook of Physiology. Edited by W. MORRANT BAKER and V. D. HARRIS. Illustrations. 14s.

A Dictionary of Place-Names. Giving their Derivations. With Introduction by JOHN S. BLACKIE. 7s.

A Short Practical Hebrew Grammar. With Analysis and Vocabulary. By Prof. S. LEVINE. 7s. 6d.

Newth's First Book of Natural Philosophy. Small 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Lyell's Students' Elements of Geology. A New Edition. By Prof. MORRIS DUNCAN. 600 Illustrations. 9s.

* Keys to these Works supplied to authenticated Teachers on written application.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUE SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

BASTABLE'S PUBLIC FINANCE, by JAMES BONAR	229
AIKEN'S EDITION OF MARVELL, by E. K. CHAMBERS	230
MISS STOKES'S SIX MONTHS IN THE APENNINES, by REGINALD HUGHES	231
SIR LEPHEL GRIFFIN'S RAMSIT SINGH, by H. G. KEENE	232
A HISTORY OF COSTUME IN BOHEMIA, by W. R. MORFILL	232
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	233
SOME THEOLOGICAL SERIES	234
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	236
NOTES AND NEWS	236
ORIGINAL VERSE: "LOVE IN THE WATER-MEADOWS," by MAURICE HEWLETT	237
OBITUARY: WHITTIER AND CURTIS, by WALTER LEWIN	237
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	238
THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS LIST	238
MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARBON, & COMPANY'S LIST	238
MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S LIST	239
MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S LIST	239
THE S.P.C.K. LIST	240
MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK'S LIST	240
MESSRS. W. B. CLIVE & CO.'S LIST	240
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	240
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Newton Stone, by Prof. W. M. Ramsay	240
SCOTT'S DICTIONARY OF THE MANG'ANJA LANGUAGE, by MISS A. WERNER	241
THE OKHON INSCRIPTIONS	242
CORRESPONDENCE:— Notes on some Jaina-Prakrit and Pali Words, by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; "Tel" or "Teli," by Prof. Robertson Smith and Col. Ross	242
PHILOLOGY NOTES	243
BAES'S HISTORICAL TOWERS OF BELGIUM, by F. WEDMORE	244
THE ART MAGAZINES	245
CORRESPONDENCE:— "The Origin of Metallic Currency," by Prof. Ridgeway; Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by W. M. Flinders Petrie	245
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	245
THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	246
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	246
MUSIC NOTES	246

EXCEEDINGLY quaint OLD OAK
FURNITURE, viz., Corner Cupboard, Grandfather's Tall Case Clock (brass face), and Lower Chest. Each article is richly carved, £9 the lot or separate. Particulars forwarded.—Apply Lady, Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

"BLACK AND WHITE."

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN'S STUDIO
The COURSE of INSTRUCTION in DRAWING for the PRESS is continued five days a week, with Technical Assistants. Students have an opportunity of studying from Mr. Blackburn's unique Collection of Pen Drawings; also of seeing and handling the various materials, plates, wood-blocks, tools, &c., in use for the New Processes.
PUBLIC LECTURES as usual.—Address 123, Victoria Street, S.W.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS.

Chancellor—His Grace The DUKE of ARGYLL, K.T., LL.D.
Rector—The MARQUIS of DUFFERIN and AVA, P.C., K.P., G.C.B.
Principal—JAMES DONALDSON, M.A., LL.D.

OPENING OF SESSION, 1892-93.

October 1st—The Academical year begins.
October 8th to 15th—M.A. (Honours) Examinations at St. Andrews.
October 10th to 15th—M.A. (Ordinary Degree) and B.Sc. Examinations at St. Andrews.
October 11th and 12th—Preliminary Examinations in Medicine at St. Andrews.
October 10th to 15th—Bursary Competitions, and Preliminary Examinations in Arts and Science, at St. Andrews and Dundee.
October 18th—Opening of the United College, St. Andrews, and of University College, Dundee (Faculties of Arts, Science and Medicine).
November 8th—Opening of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews (Faculty of Theology).
November 9th—Bursary Competition at St. Mary's College.
November 11th and 12th—B.D. Examinations at St. Andrews.

The Classes in the University are open to both sexes, and a number of the Bursaries may be competed for by Women.

Specimen Examination Papers and full particulars respecting the Courses of Instruction, Fees, Examinations for Degrees, &c., will be found in the CALENDAR of the UNIVERSITY, published by Messrs. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, 45, George Street, Edinburgh, price 2s.; by post, 2s. 3d.

A general Prospectus for the coming Session, as well as detailed information regarding any department of the University, may be had on application to J. MAITLAND ANDERSON, Secretary, University of St. Andrews, Sept., 1892.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, LONDON

(FOR LADIES), 43 and 45, HARLEY STREET, W.
Founded 1848. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1853.
Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

Theology The Rev. Canon ELYN, M.A., Principal.

I.—DEPARTMENT OF LANGUAGES.

English Literature W. HALL GAFFIN, B.A.
Latin O. C. WARR, M.A.
Greek H. F. WILSON, M.A.
French H. LALLEMAND, B. es. Sc.
German G. BARR, Ph.D.
Italian L. RICE, E.A.

Conversation Classes in Modern Languages.

MICHELMAS TERM begins OCTOBER 3rd. For Syllabus apply to Miss CROFTAGE, Lady Resident.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, AND ARTS.

The NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 10th. The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving, Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be Open Daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

DEMONSTRATOR AND ASSISTANT LECTURER IN BIOLOGY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in BIOLOGY, at a stipend of £120 per annum. It is necessary that candidates should have a special knowledge of Botany. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to IYON JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, August 9th, 1892.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY.

The Council is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in HISTORY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of Testimonials and References, should be sent in on or before SEPTEMBER the 20th.

For further information apply to IYON JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, August 9th, 1892.

THE DATCHELOR TRAINING COLLEGE.

CAMBERWELL GROVE.

(In connexion with the Datchelor Collegiate School for Girls.)

Principal—Miss RIGG.

Mistress of Method and Lecturer—Miss C. E. CARPENTER;

Assisted by other Teachers and Lecturers.

A full Course of Training and Preparation for the Cambridge Teachers' Certificate (Theory and Practice). Lectures on the Theory, History, and Practice of Education. Special provision made for instruction in Physiology and Hygiene, Elocution, Drawing, and Swedish Drill (Ling's System). Abundant opportunity for practical work (in a school of more than 400 pupils). Model and Criticism Lessons. Regular Class Teaching.

Fees moderate. Good home for Students.

Apply—PRINCIPAL.

THE NEW FULHAM SCHOOL of ART

OPENS SEPTEMBER 12th.

Practical Tuition in all Branches of Decorative Art.

Life Class, Modelling, Painting, Carving, Etching, &c.

Full particulars from the Art Manager,

E. MAROLLA,

Metallic Paving and Artificial Stone Company, Ltd.,

The Arch Studios, Fulham,

London, S.W.

HAMPSTEAD—Mr. and Mrs. SONNEN-

SCHULIN RECEIVE BOARDERS at the HAMPSTEAD COLLEGIATE SCHOOL for GIRLS, THE KNOLL, EAST HEATH. Preparation for London University Examinations. Accomplishments by eminent Professors. Lessons in Swimming at the Baths, and in Riding, Lawn-Tennis and open air Gymnasium. Beautiful situation on the Heath, and every domestic comfort; sanitary arrangements perfect. Prospectuses and references as above.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, 1892.

CONDUCTOR—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

BAND and CHORUS of 450.

PRINCIPALS.—Mme. Albani, Miss Macintyre, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Henry Percy, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Norman Salmood, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Plunket Greene. Principal First Violin: Mr. J. T. Carrodus. Organist: Mr. A. Benton.

SERIAL TICKET (transferable), admitting to all the Concerts except Saturday Night
First Seats—Morning £3 5 0
Ditto Evening 1 10 0
Second Seats—Morning 0 10 8
Ditto Evening 0 8 0
Unreserved Seats—Morning 0 5 0
Ditto Evening 0 3 6

SATURDAY EVENING ONLY.

FIRST SEATS, Gallery and Ground Floor (A) 0 15 0
Ditto (B) 0 10 8
SECOND SEATS (A) 0 8 0
Ditto Unreserved 0 3 6

Applications for Tickets cannot be attended to unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of the Tickets required.

Full Programmes (free) on application.

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

Festival Offices, Municipal Buildings.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of Lectures on Zoology by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., commences on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th at 1 p.m. These Lectures are intended to meet the requirements of Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London.

A Special Course of Lectures on ANIMAL VARIATION, addressed to Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology will be given in the Lent Term.

J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.

Professors—Sealey, King's Coll.; Dr. Dolcken, Rudolph, Lowman

Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpod, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

Full list and references on application.

Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM,

Cromwell Road, London, S.W.

SWINEY LECTURES ON GEOLOGY in connection with the British Museum.

Professor H. ALLEYNE NICHOLSON, M.D., D.Sc., F.G.S., will deliver a COURSE OF TWELVE LECTURES on "THE GREAT PERIODS OF GEOLOGICAL HISTORY" on MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS, at 3 p.m., beginning 3rd OCTOBER and ending 28th October, 1892. Admission to the Course free. Syllabus may be obtained at the Museum.

By order of the Trustees,

W. H. FLOWER, Director.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

Prof. F. MAX MULLER'S OPENING ADDRESS.

Held in London, September 5th, 1892, 1s. 6d.

Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.—ARCHAIC GREECE and the EAST. 1s.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL LIST OF BOOKS on AFRICA and the EAST. Published in England, 1889-92. Systematically Arranged, with Preface and Authors' Index. 1s.

Luzac & Co., opposite the British Museum, W.C.

OXFORD.—ASCHAM SCHOOL.—

Home for Daughters of Gentlemen. Highest Educational Advantages. Arrangement for Anglo-Indian children. Unity and Foreign teachers. Prep. Roy. Coll. and Acad. Music, Univ. Loc. exams., &c. Reference—Rev. Canon Christopher, Oxford. Vacancy PUPIL-GOV.

SPECIAL APPOINTMENT.

EVERY TEACHER and SCHOOL

BOARD CLERK may hear of a high-class Agency for a leading Life Company, whose rates are about Fifty per cent. less than those of other offices, by addressing "LIFE," 128, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

COMPANION-PUPIL WANTED, gentleman's son, aged 15-18. Only three received. Comfortable home; healthy, quiet place; sea-side.—Rev. A. FANBORNER, M.A., Leydown Vicarage, Sheerness.

Shortly, Fifth Edition.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL?

and HOW CAN I KEEP SO? a clear explanation of the Salisbury Treatment. 272 pp. by ELMA STUART Keulworth, With Portrait in 1880. Price net, post free, 6s. 3d. Will be sent at once on receipt of remittance.

PROF. LOISELLE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics. Lost memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better. Any book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A self-coaching method for all subjects. Indispensable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS!!!

MEMORY AND SUCCESS

PROSPECTUS POST FREE, with opinions of Mr. R. A. PROCTOR, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.

Great Inducements to Correspondence Classes in

NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING

Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.

PROF. LOISELLE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS:

Notes and Recollections.
DURING THE REIGN OF LOUIS PHILIPPE AND THE EMPIRE.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s. [SIXTH THOUSAND IN A FEW DAYS.]
CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."

Mr. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS writes:—"It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."

Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d

Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free, on application. FRANCIS BIRKBECK & CO. Managers.

THE LINOTYPE

Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

Works for the Library.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT

FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBRELL. With 41 Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greathach. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters.

Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The Popular Edition. With Index and Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits of Distinguished Commanders on Steel, 42s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD. By Sir EDWARD CREASY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee Guille-

MIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2 6s. 6d.

*. Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by the Rev. P. W. DICKSON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

THE LETTERS of HORACE WAL-

POLE, FOURTH EARL of ORFORD. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, £5 5s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE

ANTOINETTE. By HENRIETTE FELICITE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. With 2 Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

LIBRARY EDITION OF MISS FERRIER'S NOVELS.

(The EDINBURGH EDITION.)

6 vols., small crown 8vo. The Set, 30s.; or separately as under:—

MARRIAGE. 2 vols., 10s.

THE INHERITANCE. 2 vols., 10s.

DESTINY. 2 vols., 10s.

This Edition is printed from the Original Edition, corrected by the Author, of whom a Short Memoir is prefixed in "Marriage."

LIBRARY EDITION OF JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS.

(Messrs. BENTLEY'S are the ONLY COMPLETE EDITIONS.)

In 6 vols., crown 8vo, 30s.

Vol. 1. SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

Vol. 2. PRIDE and PREJUDICE.

Vol. 3. MANSFIELD PARK.

Vol. 4. EMMA.

Vol. 5. NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.

Vol. 6. LADY SUSAN, THE WATSONS, &c. With a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress.

LIBRARY EDITION OF W. E. NORRIS'S NOVELS.

THRILBY HALL.

A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.

MAJOR and MINOR.

MISS SHAFTO.

THE ROGUE.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

NEW FRENCH BOOK BY MR. BOIELLE.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

A FIRST FRENCH COURSE. By James BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Coll.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

Mr. Boielle's "First French Course" is intended to form a complete manual for beginners. Great stress is laid upon the study of the verb, which is in all languages the most important factor, and in French particularly affords invaluable opportunities for exercise in idiomatic usages. It is not too much to say that a pupil who has thoroughly mastered the French verb, will find all other difficulties vanish as he approaches them.

In the grammatical portion of the book, the object has been not to load the pupils with a number of rules and terms peculiar to French, but to adopt a classification which he will be able to bring to bear upon other languages, and thus compare and contrast their forms with what is already familiar to him, upon similar lines.

The Exercises from English into French, and from French into English, which are appended to every lesson, are carefully graduated and composed in such a way as to illustrate all the points selected for instruction; and the Vocabulary employed is useful and practical, consisting of words worth knowing and remembering, both for reading and conversational purposes.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

A FIRST FRENCH READER and EXERCISE BOOK. Edited by W. J. GREENSTREET, M.A., Head Master of the Marlborough School, Stroud. Crown 8vo, 1s.

This little volume consists of a number of carefully graduated pieces adapted for pupils just able to read easy connected passages in French. The length of the pieces is adjusted to the time usually occupied by a lesson in class, and the book contains amply sufficient for a term's working. The Exercises for re-translation are developed in harmony with the French pieces, and are designed to test the pupil's memory of what he has read, while he is making progress with composition. Ample Vocabularies are included.

EDITED FOR USE IN SCHOOLS.

DUMAS.—MONTE CRISTO. Edited by F. TARVER. 2s. 6d. net.

HUGO.—QUATREVINGT-TREIZE. Edited by J. BOIELLE. 2s. 6d. net.

GREVILLE.—PERDUE. Edited by J. Boielle 2s. 6d. net.

FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS. Edited by A. J. SMITH. 2s. net.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS. Edited by A. J. SMITH. 3s.

DUMAS.—LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES. Edited by M. C. SUMCHURAST. 3s. 6d.

NEW ARITHMETIC BY DR. WORMELL.

THE MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC. By RICHARD WORMELL, M.A., D.Sc., Headmaster of the Central Foundation Schools of London. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. With Answers (64 pages additional), 4s. net.

A Manual for use in Schools, with copious Exercises and Examples and full Explanations of all the Rules, based upon the best scientific methods. Great attention has been bestowed upon those branches of Arithmetic which are useful in business matters, such as Exchange, Foreign Currency, Weights and Measures, and Stocks, while special Chapters are devoted to the Metric System, Discounts, and Percentages. J. MILLAR, Esq., Carnarvon School, Glasgow:—"The information given on practical details is an excellent feature of this book, and the pupil who has gone through it is in possession of much that is not usually obtained until after many months' experience of office work." Teachers' Aid—"Admirable in every respect."

NEW MECHANICS BY DR. WORMELL.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK of MECHANICS. By R. WORMELL, D.Sc., M.A., Headmaster of the Central Foundation Schools of London. With 90 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

An entirely new work, specially adapted for the London Matriculation, Science and Art Department, College of Preceptors, and other Examinations.

Solutions to Problems for Teachers and Private Students. 3s. net.

J. MURRAY, Esq., Seaford College—"To say that I am delighted with it would be but an inadequate estimate of my opinion. I shall introduce it here, and recommend it to all my friends."

IN THREE PARTS, ISSUED SEPARATELY.

LECTURES on HEAT, SOUND, and LIGHT. By Dr. WORMELL. Intended as an Introduction to the Study of the Subject in Schools and Science Classes. In Three Parts, issued separately, each 1s. net.

A NEW ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK.

THE STANDARD COURSE of ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY. By E. J. COX, F.R.S., Headmaster of the Technical School, Birmingham. In Five Parts, issued separately, bound in cloth and illustrated. Parts I.-IV., 7d. each; Part V., 1s. The Complete Work in One Vol., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

PART I.—PROPERTIES of the COMMON GASES.

PART II.—THE ATMOSPHERE.

PART III.—WATER.

PART IV.—CARBON and NON-METALLIC ELEMENTS.

PART V.—METALLIC BODIES, COMBINATION, SYMBOLS, and FORMULÆ.

THE GATE to CÆSAR. By W. C. COLLAR, Author of "Practical Latin Compositions," &c. 133 pp. Cloth, 2s.

This volume contains: (1) A simplified Text of Gallic War, Book II.; (2) The original Text; (3) Notes on both Texts; (4) Exercises on the simplified Text; (5) Vocabulary; (6) Etymological Vocabulary.

Journal of Education—"The book is a very thorough piece of work, and will prove a real gate to Cæsar, enabling boys to read Cæsar with less waste of time, fresher interest, and added sense of power."

PRACTICAL LATIN COMPOSITION. By W. C. COLLAR, M.A. With Exercises and Extracts for Translation. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ALLEN and GREENOUGH'S LATIN GRAMMAR. Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 488 pp., half-morocco, 6s.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,

37, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Publisher to the India Office.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

THE QUEEN'S PRIME MINISTERS.

A Series of Political Biographies,

Edited by STUART J. REID.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, with Photogravure Portraits, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

EARL of BEACONSFIELD. By J. A. FROUDE, Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford. Seventh Edition.

LORD MELBOURNE. By Henry Dunckley ("Verax"). Second Edition.

SIR ROBERT PEEL. By Justin McCarthy, M.P. Second Edition, with an additional chapter based on the Peel Correspondence.

THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. By G. W. E. RUSSELL, M.P. New Edition. Twelfth Thousand.

THE MARQUIS of SALISBURY, K.G. By H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L. Second Edition.

LORD PALMERSTON. By the Marquis of LORNE, K.T. Second Edition.

THE EARL of DERBY. By George Saintsbury.

THE EARL of ABERDEEN. By the Hon. Sir ARTHUR GORDON, G.C.M.G., &c. [November.]

EARL RUSSELL. By Stuart J. Reid. [Shortly.]

*. A Limited Library Edition of TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY COPIES, each numbered, printed on hand-made paper, parchment binding, gilt top, with facsimile reproductions, in some cases of characteristic notes of Speeches and Letters, which are not included in the ordinary edition, and some additional Portraits. Price for the Complete Set of Nine Volumes, Four Guinea net. No Volumes of this Edition sold separately.

PREACHERS of THE AGE.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

VOLUMES NOW READY.

By His Grace THE ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.

"Living Theology."

By the Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"The Conquering Christ."

(Second Edition.)

By the LORD BISHOP of DERRY.

"Verbum Crucis." (Second Edition.)

By the Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A.

"Ethical Christianity."

*. Circulation forbidden in Russia by the Official Censor.

By the LORD BISHOP of WAKEFIELD.

"The Knowledge of God."

By the Rev. H. R. REYNOLDS, D.D., Principal of Cheshunt College.

"Light and Peace": Sermons and Addresses.

By the Rev. W. J. KNOX LITTLE, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Worcester Cathedral.

"The Journey of Life."

By the Rev. CHARLES HADDON SPURGEON.

"Messages to the Multitude."

VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

By the Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, M.A., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

"Christ is All." [October.]

By the Rev. J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D., Principal of the English Presbyterian College, London.

"Plain Words on Great Themes." [October.]

By the LORD BISHOP of WINCHESTER.

"The Gospel of Work." [Nov.]

By the Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

"Christ in the Centuries." [Dec.]

*. Other volumes will be duly announced.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1892.

No. 1063, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Public Finance. By C. F. Bastable, Professor of Political Economy, University of Dublin. (Macmillans.)

PROF. BASTABLE has written a book well worthy of his chair. He has treated, in its unity, as one large subject, a body of doctrines hitherto handled by English writers piecemeal and dispersedly—one part by the economists, another by the philosophers, a third by the lawyers, a fourth by the politicians. Yet he has not widened but narrowed the use of the term finance. He defines it, with the Germans, as relating to "the supply and application of state resources" (p. 1), not, with the English, as relating to monetary matters in general. The "state," however, is a wide word; it includes not only the central government but also the subordinate governing bodies, down to county councils, towns, and parishes: in short, all bodies that have power to levy contributions for public purposes. In the introductory and early chapters, where also the different views of the scope and method of the subject are clearly stated and criticised, and the points of difference between private and public economy are well brought out, the remotely analogous difficulty of distinguishing local from imperial finance meets us early and recurs frequently. "Taxation," says our author, "is always an attribute of sovereignty" (p. 370), and (the context shows) of sovereignty alone. Yet we are told (pp. 244, 354) that rating is undistinguishable from taxing; and are the rating bodies to be called sovereign? Mr. Bastable would reply by pointing to the control exercised by the central government over the rating powers and lending powers of the smaller bodies (p. 120). The question comes up in another form in Switzerland, where the cantons impose an income tax and the Federal government does not (p. 420), and in the United States, where (as Mr. Adams points out, Public Debts, p. 288) the separate States can independently contract loans and cannot by the central government be prevented from repudiating payment. Yet the Federal government is described by Prof. Bastable as the sovereign for purposes of taxation (p. 370). It is, perhaps, wise to follow the advice of Prof. Sidgwick (Politics, p. 611), and avoid absolute propositions in regard to the seat of sovereignty. Wherever the sovereignty may lie, public finance is both local and imperial. We may take a rapid view of Prof. Bastable's six books on this large subject.

In the first of them (on public expenditure) he deals with questions fully treated by economical writers before him, especially by Mill and Adam Smith. The latter (we are told) still retains his place as "the greatest of theorists on finance" (p. 24), though this proud position does not save him from very searching criticism (e.g., pp. 57, 81, 253, 373); and Prof. Bastable, writing at the end of the nineteenth century, is rightly guided by the work of his own contemporaries, especially Stourm, Beaulieu, Wagner, and (for an important part of the subject), Mr. H. C. Adams. The last writer might, perhaps, have been used even more freely. When we are told by Prof. Bastable (p. 51) that "state wants in their main features are permanent to a surprising degree," and that it is "in the modes of supplying them that the most remarkable changes occur," it seems hard to reconcile this with the strong tendency to enlarge the sphere of the state's action (admitted on p. 52). Mr. Adams points out (Public Debts, p. 19) that the greatest addition to French expenditure since the war has been due not to military needs, but to "public works," which would surely mean an enlargement of state wants. In practice Prof. Bastable seems to adopt this view, and gives us a very full account of the new wants in this first book. Defence and justice are old wants; but a multitude of requirements under the head of public works could hardly bear the description.

The second book (on the "Economic or Quasi-Private Revenue of the State") contains much that will be fresh to English readers. The state as a "juristic person" may get a revenue, like an individual, from holding lands and forests, or from investments in funds and stocks (as in Suez Canal shares), or from actual industrial business (as in railways and Post-Office), and it may get not indeed revenue but "utility" from such forms of property as government buildings, public parks, museums, and libraries (pp. 151, 228). The rationale of penny postage is put very happily:—

"The reason is that the actual cost of carrying letters is small enough to be ignored. At the rate of one penny per ounce, a ton of letters all up to the full weight would produce almost £150, while the mere cost of conveyance would certainly not be £5 or one-thirtieth part of the receipts. The real charges are those of collection and distribution, and the maintenance of offices, the cost of which is equal on all letters. . . . It is in the extension of this principle to International Postage that the greatest advance in the future may be expected" (pp. 189, 190).

To most economical (as distinguished from strictly financial) writers in England, public finance has meant taxation and public debts. The third and fourth of Prof. Bastable's books deal with taxation. A tax he defines as "a compulsory contribution from the wealth of a person or body of persons for the service of the public powers" (p. 243), stretching "wealth" to include personal services, as in the corvée, forced military service, and attendance on juries (p. 73). Our author contends strongly against the idea (found, for example, in Montesquieu, Adam Smith, Mirabeau, and the school of laissez faire) that taxes are a quid pro quo, the state giving protection and other services, and the citizen giving a payment for them. He argues that "there is no possibility of measuring precisely the most important of the benefits rendered by the state. Security against aggression is literally speaking an incalculable good. Social order cannot be sold by retail like tea and sugar, and so is it with the other state functions, even the purely economic ones. Indeed, it would be very near the truth to say that the difficulty of supplying the normal method of purchase makes a given form of activity suitable for state management; if defence and justice could be readily bought and paid for, we might trust to private enterprise for a sufficient supply" (pp. 246-7).

Even if (he continues) the services rendered by the state were definitely measurable, they could not be allotted to each individual in the exact proportion in which he was willing to pay for them (p. 39). This statement of the case is hardly fair to the older writers. They probably meant, for the most part, no more than Prof. Bastable means when he says (p. 247) that it is always well for the community as a whole to "consider whether the advantages of a government are a compensation for its cost. This test should be steadily applied in judging the merits of any proposed expenditure." In regard to local finance, they could not go farther than Prof. Bastable, who concedes that taxation there should be in proportion to advantage received, and even political power should perhaps depend on the amount contributed (pp. 299, 356, 362, 364, 626). What is "medieval" and obsolete (see p. 276) would surely be not the retention of the idea of payment for service, but the attempt to make the terms of equivalence too precise to apply to benefits essentially broad, general, and (sometimes) intangible. The church, the press, the university, as well as the state, render benefits in return for an equivalent which leaves, in many cases, a large "consumer's rent" to the beneficiary; but we do not deny that a "consumer" has paid for such services quid pro quo, even if he gains more than his neighbours by the bargain.

A passing protest must be made against Prof. Bastable's endeavour to give "indirect" and "direct" taxation a new meaning which he himself allows to be less useful than the old (p. 251, cf. 317-8); and not less against his use of "repercussion" in place of the good English word "shifting" (pp. 294, 317, &c.), which Prof. Seligman wisely retains in a recent pamphlet on the subject. It is perhaps too late in the day to find fault with "budgetary legislation" and "juristic person." As a rule, the language of our author is adequate to his thoughts; and the thoughts are always worth following—nowhere more so than in the books on taxation.

In regard to these particular financial questions which have lately come within the range of practical politics, Prof. Bastable has been cautious in drawing conclusions. He is favourable on the whole to the taxation of ground rents (p. 362); he sums up against a progressive income tax (pp. 294-292), against infringement of the Sinking Fund (pp. 618, 622), and against increase of the death-duties (p. 525); he leans to bimetallism (p. 624). He shows perhaps less than his usual wisdom in desiring the restoration of duties on sugar (pp. 479, 497, 594.)

His fifth book (on the relation of expenditure and receipts) discusses public debts, and gives not only a survey of English national and local debt, but also a comparison with the debts of France, Italy, Germany, and the United States. Some account might be desired (in a new edition) of the situation of Russia, Austria, Holland, and the remaining states of the continent, in this particular; and, throughout the volume, India might be thought to get less than her due share of attention. French finance is treated very fully.

The sixth and last book (on Financial Administration and Control) is practically an account of the English Budget and the French in close comparison. This part of the work contains some skilful applications of recent economical theory. For example, in speaking of the justification of debts, our author writes:

"The productiveness of every separate tax has its limits, and so has that of the tax system taken as a whole. Each additional charge implies a more than proportional sacrifice by the contributors, and greater difficulty in getting in revenue on the part of the state. The existence of a law of 'diminishing returns' in public receipts is a valid ground for the employment of loans, when, all things considered, they will be less onerous than further taxation" (p. 593).

Another good example is the following on a kindred subject:

"If we hesitate to redeem debt on account of the badness of the necessary taxes, we must remember that we are thereby retaining worse taxes in the future than would otherwise be required. For let us suppose the several forms of contribution to be arranged in the order of their eligibility as follows: A, B, C, D, E, F. Then the surrender of F—the worst tax—in preference to paying off debt means the prolongation of E, which ex hypothesi is worse than D, since with the disappearance of the debt the taxes appropriated to its service would also disappear" (p. 615).

The following seems more vulnerable: "Limited as the gains of employers are by the competition of inferior rivals, the effect of a tax in driving out the weakest of those would help to shift a part at least of the weight from the survivors" (p. 348). But the meaning is that, as the competition has been lessened, prices can be raised, and the consumers will thus help to pay the tax.

Enough has been said to show that this book is a valuable addition to the literature of finance. Its usefulness would be increased by an index, the absence of which in a volume of this size and character is more than usually discreditable.

JAMES BONAR.

"THE MUSES LIBRARY."—The Poems of Andrew Marvell. Satires of Andrew Marvell. Edited by G. A. Aitken. In 2 vols. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

THE calling of the publisher, no longer merely a trade, begins to take place among the fine arts. Truly this is a thing to be thankful for, more than we are aware. The present book illustrates the blessings thereof.

For the better part of the century Marvell was attainable only in the imperfect editions of incapable and ignorant men. So that he was represented to the ordinary reader by selections; and in especial by two ill-understood stanzas of the Horatian Ode, wherein is set forth the theatrical bearing of Charles I., "the royal actor," upon his day of execution. About twenty years ago Marvell was edited—badly—by Dr. Grosart. Who, indeed, has escaped being edited—badly—by Dr. Grosart? And Dr. Grosart's edition is moreover a limited issue, a thing dear to the bibliophile, and unspeakably hateful to the lover of literature. But now at last come Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, and give us a charming book in two volumes, delicately bound, beautifully printed on good paper, and at least adequately edited. For the historical side of his work, which must have meant considerable labour, and for the brief but perfectly sufficient biography, Mr. Aitken deserves great credit. His critical notes are not quite so happy, and at times he seems to have fallen into error by blindly borrowing from Dr. Grosart. And one would have been glad of some more elaborate attempt to appreciate the place of Marvell in English literature. That is a task which an editor has never a right to shirk; and in the present case it was more than usually necessary, for I cannot but think that these volumes will come as a discovery to many who did not quite know the greatness of this half-forgotten poet.

Marvell holds a unique place in the seventeenth century. He stands at the parting of the ways, between the extravagancies of the lyrical Jacobeans on the one hand, and the new formalism initiated by Waller on the other. He is not unaffected by either influence. The modish handling of the decasyllable couplet is very marked here and there. You have it, for instance, in the poem on Blake:

"Bold Stayner leads; this fleet's designed by fate
To give him laurel, as the last did plate."

And elsewhere, of course, he has conceits which cry aloud in their flagrancy. But his real affinities are with a greater than Waller or Suckling. Milton in those days "was like a star, and dwelt apart"; but of all who "called him friend," Marvell is the one who can claim the most of spiritual kinship. The very circumstances of their lives are curiously similar. Each left poetry for statecraft and polemic: for Milton the flowering time came late; for Marvell, never. And their poetic temper is one: it is the music of Puritanism,—the Puritanism of Spenser and Sidney, not uncultivated, not ungracious, not unsensuous even, but always with the same dominant note in it, of moral strength and moral purity. Marvell is a Puritan; but his spirit has not entered the prison-house, nor had the key turned on it there. He is a poet still, such as there have been few in any age. The lyric gift of Herrick he has not, nor Donne's incomparable subtlety and intensity of emotion; but for imaginative power, for decent melody, for that self-restraint of phrase which is the fair half of art, he must certainly hold high rank among his fellows. The clear sign of this self-restraint is his mastery over the octosyllable couplet, a metre which in less skilful hands so readily becomes diffuse and wearisome.

Marvell writes love poems, but he is not essentially a love poet. He sings beautifully to Juliana and Chlora, but they themselves are only accidents in his song. His real passion—a most uncommon one in the seventeenth century—is for nature, exactly as we moderns mean nature, the great spiritual influence which deepens and widens life for us. How should the intoxication of meadow, and woodland, and garden, be better expressed than in these two lines—

"Stumbling on melons, as I pass, Insnares with flowers, I fall on grass."

unless indeed it be here—

"I am the mower Damon, known
Through all the meadows I have mown,
On me the morn her dew distills
Before her darling daffodils;
And if at noon my toil me heat,
The sun himself licks off my sweat;
While, going home, the evening sweet
In cowslip water bathes my feet."

These mower-idylls, never found in the anthologies, are among the most characteristic of Marvell's shorter poems. I cannot forbear to quote two stanzas from "The Mower to the Glowworms":

"Ye living lamps, by whose dear light
The nightingale doth sit so late,
And studying all the summer night,
Her matchless songs doth meditate.

Ye country comets, that portend
Nor war, nor prince's funeral,
Shining unto no higher end
Than to presage the grass's fall."

Observe how Marvell makes of the nightingale a conscious artist, a winged diva. Elsewhere he speaks of her as sitting among the "squatted thorns," in order "to sing the trials of her voice."

I must needs see in Marvell something of a nature-philosophy strangely anticipative of George Meredith. For the one, as for the other, complete absorption in nature, the unreserved abandonment of self to the skyeey influences, is the really true and sanative wisdom. Marvell describes his soul, freed of the body's vesture, perched like a bird upon the garden boughs—

"Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade."

The same idea is to be found in the lines "Upon Appleton House," a poem which will repay careful study from all who wish to get at the secret of Marvell's genius. It shows him at his best—and at his worst, in the protracted conceit, whereby a garden, its flowers and its bees, are likened to a fort with a garrison. And here I am minded to enter a plea against the indiscriminate condemnation of conceits in poetry. After all, a conceit is only an analogy, a comparison, a revealing of likeness in things dissimilar, and therefore of the very essence of poetic imagination. Often it illumines, and where it fails it is not because it is a conceit, but because it is a bad conceit; because the thing compared is not beautiful in itself, or because the comparison is not flashed upon you, but worked out with such tedious elaboration as to be "merely fantastical." Many of Marvell's conceits are, in effect, bad; the well-known poem, "On a Drop of Dow," redeemed though it is by the last line and a half, affords a terrible example. But others are shining successes. Here is one, set in a haunting melody, as of Browning:

"Gentler times for love are meant:
Who for parting pleasures strain,
Gather roses in the rain,
Wet themselves and spoil their scent."

Next to green fields, Marvell is perhaps happiest in treating of death. His is the mixed mode of the Christian scholar, not all unapaganised, a lover of heaven, but a lover of the earthly life too. There is the epitaph on a nameless lady, with its splendid close:

"Modest as morn, as mid-day bright,
Gentle as evening, cool as night:
'Tis true: but all too weakly said:
'Twas more significant. She's dead."

There is the outburst on the death of the poet's hero, the great Protector:

"O human glory vain! O Death! O wings!
O worthless world! O transitory things!"

And to crown all, there are these lines, which remind me, for their felicities, their quaintness, and the organ-note in them, of the Hydriotaphia:

"But at my back I always hear Time's winged chariot hurrying near.
And yonder all before us lie
Deserts of vast eternity.
Thy beauty shall no more be found,
Nor, in thy marble vault, shall sound
My echoing song; then worms shall try
Thy long-preserved virginity,
And your quaint honour turn to dust,
And into ashes all my lust:
Thy grave's a fine and private place,
But none, I think, do there embrace."

I have left myself no room to speak of the Satires. They are not a subject to dwell upon with pleasure. One sees that they were inevitable, that a man of Marvell's strenuous moral fibre, in all the corruption of the Restoration court, could not but break forth into savage invective; yet one regrets them, as one regrets the Defensio and Eikonoklastes. It may, however, be well to remind anyone, who is tempted by the beauty of Messrs. Lawrence and Bullen's book to buy it for a love-gift to his mistress, that the first volume, containing the Poems, is alone suitable to his purpose.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

IRISH SAINTS IN ITALY.

Six Months in the Apennines. By Margaret Stokes. (Bell.)

THE authoress, who is well known as an antiquary on the other side of St. George's Channel, has given us here a series of studies on the Irish saints, who, from the sixth century onwards, were busy in founding houses of religion in Central and Southern Europe. The present volume—which, we understand, is only an instalment—is confined to those confessors who, though they laboured in more than one country, are chiefly remembered for what they did within the shadow of the Apennines. Thither Miss Stokes has gone in search of the reliquiae of her countrymen, examining their tombs, visiting their monasteries, and exploring their hermitages and caves.

Her present list of saints is an imposing one, and covers a considerable period, for it includes the great Columban and Finnian, who "flourished" in the era of Gregory (590-604), when the world recognised as its lord the one Caesar at Byzantium, and goes down to Dungal and Donatus, Andrew and Brigid, subjects of the third and fourth generation of Carolingian emperors. A life of each saint precedes the account of the author's personal investigations, and makes us feel that these holy personages have been very fortunate in securing so laborious and sympathetic a biographer.

She seeks, however, to do more than revive these memories of Irish devotion. Her more important object is to find a clue to the origin of Irish art. The problem is as yet hardly worked out in detail, but on some points, at any rate, the ground has been cleared for future investigation. It had been supposed, for instance, that because the patterns of the interlacing designs, the stone basket and knot work, found in such places as Columban's crypt at Bobbio and Finnian's Church at Pisa, resemble those carved on the high crosses of Ireland, therefore the style must have been an Irish importation into Italy. Miss Stokes points out that the opposite inference is the right one. In Italy, stone carving identical in character with the so-called Irish work at Bobbio and Lucca is found in many places when it could not by any chance have been executed by an Irish hand, and it is some centuries earlier in date than the earliest work of the kind in Ireland. The stonework in question is readily identifiable, for it resembles Byzantine sculpture almost as closely as the architecture of San Vitale resembles that of St. Sophia. The only Italian art of the sixth century was in fact a paraphrase of the decadent Greek art on the Bosphorus, and this art, when it travelled to Ireland, was a copy of that paraphrase. It is true that in Ireland, subsequent to the seventh century, modifications of these Byzantine designs occur, which are, no doubt, distinctively Celtic. And this, too, is natural; for the Irish were in possession of models derived from their own prehistoric school of ornament, which dealt specially in spirals and trumpet patterns and the like, and which could hardly fail to suggest new possibilities of combination. But it is significant that the distinctively Irish varieties are not found on the tombs of Irish saints in Italy. It is clear, in short, that Irish art was not indigenous, but part of the Christian civilisation which came to Ireland from Italy and the East; and when in the ninth and tenth centuries it began to appear on the continent as an importation from Ireland, it was only a return wave moving to the land whence it had originally come, and where it had fallen into disuse. So also with regard to the customs of these early Christians, Miss Stokes asks:—

"Did the cave-dwellers and hermits on our Northern shores get their traditions of anchorite life direct from the Laura of Egypt or the deserts of Arabia and Syria, or can we find traces of similar customs all along the line from the Mediterranean, through Western Europe, to the island of Skellig-Michael off the coast of Kerry? Or if we do find traces of such hermitages on the sea-cliffs and mountain-tops in Italy and Gaul, were they never tenanted save by these Irish fakirs, wanderers who brought their strange customs into Europe from the sixth to the twelfth century?"

The answer to these questions is plain enough to one who has seen the Irupe Cavo and the other caves of the anchorites on the mountains between Lucca and Pisa, they were just as remote from the haunts of men as are now the hermitages on the mountain-tops of Ireland or on the Islands of the Atlantic coast, and they were in use in Italy from the first and second centuries of the Christian era.

It is, of course, difficult to explain the extraordinary numbers of Irish saints who, in the dark age that followed the barbarian irruption into the Empire, visited France and Italy. The closing of Great Britain by the English Conquest may have determined the course which they had to steer, but affords no clue to the motive which led these first pious wanderers from their native land. They are somewhat loosely spoken of as missionaries; but Columban and his imitators were, as Dean Milman long ago pointed out, certainly not actuated by proselytising zeal. Later, no doubt, the conversion of the heathen grew to be something like a passion; but it may be doubted whether it animated any "pious wanderer" before Boniface, and the apostle of Germany comes on the scene in A.D. 716 or thereabouts, which is quite a century later than Columban. Miss Stokes's explanation is that they set forth originally as pilgrims, either to the Holy Land or to the tombs of the martyrs and apostles in Rome. Crossing the Continent on foot, they fell in with mountaineers and dwellers in the wilderness or in the forest, who either had never heard the name of Christ, or had relapsed into heathenism. Then the pilgrims, their pilgrimage ended, bethought them of the heathen they had seen, and returned to effect their conversion. "Thus," as she puts it, "the missionary system of the Celtic Church was a development of the pilgrimage customs of the early Christians." The history of Columban shows conclusively that he, at any rate, was no missionary. Starting from Bangor in the County Down, after various adventures, he settles down in Austrasia, where he finds favour with the sovereign. In the mountains of the Vosges he is allowed to found a religious house, and, subsequently, amid the ruins of Luxeuil rises the monastery of Luxeuil. There are pagans in the vicinity and the crown of martyrdom across the Rhine. But Columban remains in the neighbourhood of the Christian court of the Burgundian Thierry and Brunehaut. He rebukes their vices, it is true, but his general tone is that of one demanding to be left alone. Later, he comes across some heathens on the frontier, and they are converted; but it is, so to speak, an accident. Miss Stokes, following his latest biographers, makes Columban visit Italy twice, although the contemporary chronicler, Jonas, is silent as to this second journey; but on no occasion, though he spends some time in denouncing heresy, does he show the least interest in the evangelisation of the heathen. So, after his expulsion from the Burgundian kingdom, and a most circuitous wandering, in which he crosses Western Neustria (prematurely described as Normandy), when the saint finds himself on the shores of Zürich, surrounded by a heathen population, he leaves this promising field for another: he passes on into Italy, visits Rome, and founds, or perhaps only revisits, the monastery with which his name is associated.

The chapter on that famous place of religion, Bobbio, as Miss Stokes, adopting the old and still phonetic spelling, prefers to write it, is one of the pleasantest in the book. It is surprising that it is not oftener visited; for, notwithstanding that it has been more or less ransacked ever since the sixteenth century, it still contains many curious historical relics. Here is the mazer or wooden porringer of Columban, which had the convenient faculty of bringing back water to a dried-up well, and the saint's little Irish bell, and the horn-handled knife which communicated virtue to what it cut. In this connexion Miss Stokes restores the text of the Bobbio MS. at Turin, which baffled the acumen of the Bishop of Salisbury. The knife is referred to as "cultellus quo patris populo preciditur die ascensionis domini in monticulo qui dicitur crux vera." This Dr. Wordsworth amended by altering populo into populus, and translating as "the knife with which the poplar of the father is trimmed on ascension day on the Mount which is called the true cross," asking if it refers to a tree planted by the saint or one under which he sat. But why should Columban cut, or rather "top" his poplar on a particularly holy day in a place evidently of some sanctity? There is certainly a slip in the MS., but one which no less certainly can be put right by the substitution of panis for patris, as suggested by Prof. Mahaffy. This makes the passage read, "the knife with which the bread is cut for the people on the day of the Lord's ascension," referring to a practice continued doubtless long after Columban's death, and which explains the permanence of the tradition of the miraculous knife, and probably accounts for its actual survival.

REGINALD HUGHES.

"RULERS OF INDIA."—Ranjit Singh. By Sir Lepel Griffin. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

LET it be admitted, once for all, that this little book is likely to tax the resources of the most experienced critic. The matter is confusedly arranged, as if a collection of official reports tied up under one common docket. There is a chapter on the Sikhs, and another on the Sikh Theocracy, a third on the state of the Panjab at the time of the hero's birth. Not until p. 88 do we get to "The Maharaja"; and this chapter begins abruptly with a description of Ranjit's personal appearance at some unspecified period of his career, and is followed by an account of his court (chap. vi.), his army and administration (vii.), passing on to his early conquests (viii.), then diverging into an account of the relations of the government of British India with the territory south of the river Sutlej (ix.). Later conquests—mostly at the expense of the Afghans—form the subject of chap. x., with which the work suddenly ends. Full of talent and boldness as it is, one can regard it neither as regular history nor as pure biography; and thus it may easily fail to attract the attention of that somewhat otiose being, the general reader, which would be his loss and a thousand pities; for—besides its manly originality—it contains in a small compass an immense quantity of most important information.

How many of us, for example, could tell what was the relation of Maharaja Dulip Singh to the old "Lion of the Punjab"; what is the exact meaning of the word "Sikh" as denoting a peculiar people; what are the numbers of that people, and whether the Sikhs form a majority of the population in the Punjab and are increasing in strength and distinctness or tending to merge in the general bulk of the Hindus. These things are all to be learned from the book before us; and from it we may also learn how Kashmir and the Peshawar Valley became part of the Punjab, and what are the feelings and attitude of the various classes of the province towards the British Government.

Dulip (or, as Sir Lepel, following the multitude, reads, "Dhulip") was not the son of Ranjit Singh, as we are assured; nay, could not possibly have been. His mother was a dancing girl in the Maharaja's service, his putative father an enterprising waterman named Gulu. Further, the word "Sikh" means disciple, and has no ethnic significance; the Sikhs are not increasing, either in number or in polemical obstinacy. From the reports of the recent census it seems that Amritsir, the sacred capital, is the only city of India whose population shows a large decrease since 1881. While the general population of India has increased ten per cent. during the last decennial period, the total Sikh community throughout India has only increased three per cent., and is under two millions—the more's the pity.

As for the origin of the Sikhs, Sir Lepel regards them as mainly, but not wholly, of Jat extraction; and the Jats he holds to be a sort of autochthonous Rajputs, coming from the more central parts of India. In some of these views he is opposed to the veteran archaeologist, General Sir A. Cunningham, in whose official reports (Part iv., p. 19) will be found arguments in favour of this race being regarded as a somewhat late wave of northern immigration. And it is also asserted by some authorities that the first Indian settlements of the Jats were in the valley of the Indus; Tamerlane met with them in Bhatiana, and they have never—in any considerable numbers—been settled much to the east of Agra and Bhurtpore. But these are high points to be settled by the experts.

In the meantime our author's long and practical experience may, in any case, be safely trusted to pilot the inquirer through the intricate relations of the Sikhs among themselves. He traces the origin and exploits of the different mishls, or confederations, and of their families; and he gives vivid pictures of the characters and careers of the warriors and statesmen by whom Ranjit was aided to obtain and preserve his great but transitory sway. How after his death, in 1839, that power crumbled is also briefly shown. "When Ranjit Singh and his wisdom [or 'widow' as an up-country paper misprinted Dalhousie's proclamation] no longer guided the conduct of the State," the chiefs intrigued for the succession and the administration, while committees of the soldiers were formed to express the grievances of the army, and to foment the ambition of brave but unintelligent men. At last, by a combination of evil influences, the troops were dashed and broken against the rock of British discipline; and in that unpromising manner a foundation was commenced for that new rule in the Punjab which is so full of good augury for the future of the empire. Our author well advises that use should be constantly made of this precious war material, which he justly regards as one of the most valuable kind. The Sikhs fought us twice, boldly and on almost even terms; they helped greatly in the suppression of the mutiny and rebellion in Hindustan; and they are still ready to send their thousands against any possible new enemy.

It is a pity, however, that Sir Lepel, when dwelling so much upon the hatred of the Sikhs for the followers of the Prophet, should have omitted to notice how eclectic a faith Sikhism is, and how largely its inception was indebted to the inspiration of Islam. Judging from their names, Kabir and Shaikh Farid—whose mystical couplets are said to be the most effective parts of the Sikh Scriptures—must both have been Muhammadans; and along article in this sense will be found under the head "Sikhism" in Hughes's Dictionary of Islam.

Discussions on such topics might perhaps be thought uncalled for in a biography of Ranjit. But when the writer judged it necessary to extend his view over the origin of the "Theocracy," it might have been expected that all salient points would have come under notice. Smaller omissions and errors might also be pointed out. But it would not be right to conclude without hearty and ungrudging acknowledgment of a book which, if sometimes careless, is full of instruction and a most valuable contribution to Indian history.

The transliteration should be revised in reproducing the work. The fatal aspirate of Anglo-Indians has been noticed in the name "Dulip"; it will also be observed in the word mukt (salvation), which is printed "mukht," at the very same time that it is—quite correctly—assigned as the etymological origin of the name of the place where the battle of Muktsar was fought: as it could not have been if the k were an aspirated letter.

H. G. KEENE.

A HISTORY OF COSTUME IN BOHEMIA.

Dějiny Kroje v Zemích Českých od dob nejstarších až do války husitské. Sepsal Dr. Cenek Zíbrt. (Prague.)

THE subject of this book will be a novelty to most of our readers; but we can promise them abundance of curious information if they have only made themselves masters of Bohemian. Unfortunately to many, owing to the little knowledge of the Slavonic languages among us, the interesting labours of Dr. Zibrt must remain unknown.

We are struck with the great number of authorities on the subject of costume, which our author has consulted. No prominent work has been neglected, and the mere list extends over several pages, some English books appearing among the number. There are about 235 illustrations which have a special value as copies from monuments or illuminated MSS. How rich Bohemia is in such works could easily be learned from those which were shown at the Exhibition last year. How clearly it could be ascertained that the Bohemian language had occupied a proud position in old times, to which it has only been restored by patriots in the present century. Thus Dr. Zibrt gives several illustrations from the fine MSS. of some of the writings of the scholastic divine Thomas Stitny, now preserved in the library of the University of Prague. These have always struck us as very characteristic. The discussions on the derivation of the names of the various articles of clothing are curious. Many of them are traced from mediæval Latin. Thus the Bohemian kosile, a shirt, comes from Latin casula; kaliholy, boots, from caligae. The strange thing is that many Slavonic words got into Western vocabularies. Thus, a coarse woollen cloak was called in mediæval Latin selavina, and became in French esclavine; and the Slavonic snikne was spread, as Dr. Zibrt shows, through Western Europe. In the Roman de la Rose we have

"Nul robe n'est si bele, Que sosquanie a demoisele."

Littré gives the word souquenille, which he also quotes in a Greek form, σουλκία, but declares the origin to be unknown. Our author also tells us something of the peaked shoes, or "cracowes," as they were called, which were worn in England in the time of Wycliffe. Of course a great number of the Magyar words for articles of dress are of Slavonic origin, as is the case with so much of their vocabulary relating to objects of culture.

Dr. Zibrt begins from the earliest times, but first approaches historical ground in the tenth century. He describes the dress of the Bohemians from the record of the Arabian writer, Al Bekri, who travelled in Bohemia about 965, and speaks of Prague as being the most important Slavonic trading place. The elaborate head-dresses of the time are illustrated from the Vsehrad Codex and from ancient monuments (p. 56). The peasants, to judge from the picture on p. 58, wore hoods; they were probably clad in leather, as they were at the same time in England. The upper classes wore cloth tunics, and on their legs and feet they had nohavice, which are also illustrated from the Vsehrad Codex. Feminine dress naturally occupies a large part of the volume. The women's robes are handsomely embroidered; their shoes resemble those worn by men. The earrings anciently in use are illustrated (p. 98) from actual specimens found in tombs. There is also a picture (p. 101) from the Velislav Biblo representing Abraham's servant bringing two golden earrings to Rebecca. Brooches and rings are illustrated by specimens which have been preserved. The next division of the book deals with the dress of the soldiers, especially their armour. This is seen on the seal of St. Wenceslaus (p. 112) and on coins, admirably figured (p. 116); from Bohemian pennies of the twelfth century. We can form a good idea of the array of the Bohemian knight of that period. A special section is given to the dress of the kings.

The second book opens with a discussion of the influence of knighthood upon the Bohemians. On p. 140 is the seal of the unfortunate Premysl Otakar II., who was destined to fall in battle with Rudolph of Habsburg. His horse has very gorgeous trappings; we see corresponding figures in illuminated French MSS. Gorgeous, also, is the seal (p. 168) of King John of Luxembourg, who is familiar to us as the blind hero of the battle of Crecy. He somewhat resembles the figure of Robert Bruce on one of his seals. Two very strange helmets are figured on p. 170. The warrior's shield was naturally an important part of his equipment, and many illustrations are given to show the elaborate horse-trappings.

The third book deals with dress in Bohemia in the second half of the thirteenth century till the arrival of Charles, the son of John, and his wife Blanche. The first chapter tells us of the favourite colours in dress; that worn as mourning was white (p. 210). The countries from which the raw materials came are enumerated; Flanders and Italy naturally had a pre-eminence. Pages 221-226 contain a list of words applied to peculiar kinds of cloth and other materials, the derivations of which Dr. Zibrt traces. Hero Flanders is very conspicuous; thus we have pannos de Bruzle (Brussels), pannos de Gent, pannos de Ypra (Ypres), whence our "diaper," duo stamina de Louren. To these may be added Mechelen, called by us Malines; Poperinghe, a name which, as our readers will remember, occurs in Chaucer's "Rime of Sir Thopas"; and, lastly, unum pannum de Dorn (Flemish Doornik, our Tournay), a word which we believe survives among us only in "dornicks," a coarse kind of gloves. The form dornex will be found in Halliwell. The word for "silk" in Bohemian, hedvab, Polish jedwab, is very difficult to explain. Miklosich was inclined to think it of German origin. In this period the head-dresses of the men, as figured on p. 232, have become more varied. The picture of a man with a girdle (p. 251), from the Kunhutín Passional, is very quaint. The Jews also had their peculiar dress, and wore, as quoted from a document on p. 255, cornutum pileum.

The fourth book describes Bohemian dress from the time of Charles IV. to the Hussite War. Our author is as copious as ever in the passages which he brings to bear on the illustration of the subject, and naturally gives quotations from that strange old Bohemian writer, Smil Flaska, of Pardubice (p. 280). Many of the plates in this part of the work are truly excellent. The MSS. of Stitny, as usual, furnish some. Curious is that representing the publication of the Golden Bull preserved in the Hofbibliothek at Vienna (p. 311), which is used to illustrate the kabatek or short jacket then in use. On page 311 we have a picture of the girdle (pas) worn by Eliska, the wife of Charles IV., so dear to the memory of Bohemians. This is now preserved in the museum of Königgratz. It has on it an inscription in Chekh. Many curious passages are collected from old Bohemian chroniclers to illustrate the dress of the lower orders of society, who are not often represented in the MSS. which were illuminated, we must remember, for knights and their aristocratic retinues. A special chapter, copiously illustrated, is devoted to the dresses of the Bohemian kings and queens at their coronation.

Lastly, the fifth book describes the ecclesiastical dress till the beginning of the fifteenth century. The whole work ends with a copious index.

Unquestionably Dr. Zibrt has collected a mass of curious information upon the subject about which he writes, and the reader is helped to follow his remarks by the excellent illustrations. Many of his descriptions of course apply equally to other countries of Europe; and this strikes us especially as the case when we are dealing with the Luxembourg kings, for at that time Prague was one of the most important centres of European knighthood. In this and his other books Dr. Zibrt has shown himself fully possessed of the antiquarian spirit. We hope that the second part of his valuable work will soon appear.

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS

The Heritage of the Kurts. By Björnstjerne Björnson. (Heinemann.)

For His Sake. By Mrs. Alexander. In 3 vols. (White.)

The General's Daughter. By the author of "A Russian Priest." (Fisher Unwin.)

A Highland Chronicle. By S. Bayard Dod. (Hutchinson.)

In the Tilt-yard of Life. By Henry Newill. (Ward & Downey.)

True to the Prince. A Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By Gertrude Bell. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Had I But Known. By Ella Fordyce. (Sonnenschein.)

Eleanor's Discipline. By Janet Brown. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrior.)

MR. HEINEMANN has added to his International Library Björnson's novel Det flager i Byen og paa Harnen ("Flags are Flying in Town and Harbour") which is presented to English readers under the much more accurately descriptive title, The Heritage of the Kurts. The book "naturally divides itself"—as preachers used to say of their texts—into two parts, the stormy chronicle of the wild Kurts through four generations, and the story of the great scheme of Tomas Kurt (otherwise Rendalen) to divert for his little world the current of heredity, and stem the force of the evil traditions of thought and action which have left him with such a terrible inheritance of tendency and environment. The first part has an unintermittent imaginative intensity, a Rembrandt-like breadth of literary chiaroscuro, and a vigorous realism of that relentless kind which of late has exercised such a fascination over both writers and readers; and it leaves the impression of immense creative energy revelling in its own activity. In the remainder of the book this creative energy is put into harness and made to drag a heavy chariot, or rather a prosaic cart, filled with theories—theories of education, of heredity, and sexual morals, the result being that its paces are subdued to a spiritless amble which is unspeakably depressing. Imagination, in fact, ceases to be itself, for the condition of its life is a condition of free, instructive action: it becomes mere construction—the building up of character and incident, with a view to certain controversial ends. With regard to the matter of didacticism in fiction, it is specially needful that we should clear our minds from cant. There is a sense in which fiction must be didactic, because life itself (of which it is an eclectic presentment) is didactic to any man who sees it steadily and sees it whole. But the teaching, ethical or otherwise, of life is suggested, not formulated; it is a thing of principles, not of theories, and therefore a rendering of life which commits it to a theory, even to a demonstrably true theory, must needs be distorted, untrue, inartistic. Now, life in the latter half of Björnson's book—the half for the sake of which the book exists—is thus committed to theory, and the consequence is that it is arid, doctrinaire, unimaginative. It lacks the fine unexpectedness of growth: it has in the main the rigidity of manufacture. In the Kurts of Tomas's ancestry there is a rich warmth of baleful vitality; we feel the palpitation of their wild hearts; and their story may be fitly described as a Norse Wuthering Heights. Had the writer continued to work the imaginative vein struck in the opening chapter, The Heritage of the Kurts would have been a romance of sombre power; as it stands, it is ineffective, with that kind of ineffectiveness which must be found wherever creation is dominated by polemics.

Anthony Trollope would probably have made a readable novel even out of the very thin story told in For His Sake; but, then, Anthony Trollope could do various things which may not, with wisdom, be attempted by novelists in general or even by Mrs. Alexander in particular. Sybil Carew seems to have been a fascinating young lady, only, unfortunately, she bears so strong a resemblance to a thousand other fascinating young ladies of fiction that she inspires a very tepid interest. We are not greatly moved even by her embarrassment on finding herself in love with one man a few months after she has fervidly engaged herself to another. We are pretty sure that Sybil will not break her vow to the impecunious Dick, because in a novel no real heroine ever jilts a man who is poor, even when she has transferred her affections to somebody else; but we know also that the course of true love must finally run smooth, and that therefore Dick is destined to a premature decease, that room may be made for the high-minded supplanter, Brian Rashleigh. It is not a story which it can have been very easy to spread over three volumes, and even Mrs. Alexander's skill in the dextrous use of padding does not suffice to save the book from something like dulness.

The General's Daughter is a grim and gloomy study of a strong, unbalanced character, seen first in dull repose and afterwards in the feverish energy roused by sudden subjection to an overmastering and, finally, disintegrating moral stimulus. The woman who gives a title to the book enters into it only as a shadowy influence, for she has died before the action begins; and yet the story, like the play of "Julius Caesar," is well named. Claudia Antonovna, through the manuscript autobiography which she has left behind her, dominates the storm-tossed life of Mária Vladimirovna, who has succeeded her in the little Russian village schoolhouse, and is the true heroine of the book, living again a vicarious second life of struggling foiled aspiration in the body and spirit of the girl who has found a mist of possible salvation in the story of a victory that may be hers. The General's Daughter is a spiritual tragedy, the motive of which is the discovery by Mária Vladimirovna that she lacks the strength to realise the ideal which in the hour of suddenly awakened moral enthusiasm she has made her own, and that the energy of life is exhausted while the goal is still hopelessly ahead. It is a depressing book, because it is the story of a moral failure; it is a pessimistic book, because the failure is represented as inevitable—the struggle of an aspiring soul against moral barriers as insurmountable as the barriers of physical law; but it is a strong book, with that impressive kind of strength that is displayed by a close imaginative grip of certain central facts of human experience.

Two or three orthographies in A Highland Chronicle seem to indicate its American authorship; but be Mr. Dod's nationality what it may, the important fact is that he has written a capital story—certainly one of the best stories of its kind that we have had since Dr. Conan Doyle gave us his delightful Micah Clarke. The period is the latter half of the eighteenth century, and we have a glimpse of Prince Charlie and of the battle of Culloden; but they come in by the way, and the body of the narrative deals in a most fresh and charming way with the ordinary aspects of Highland life and character a century ago. The story is too full of incident to admit much elaboration of portraiture, but Mr. Dod's men and women are broadly individualised and unmistakably alive. The Scotch of the dialogue is not overdone, the writer in this matter following the example of Sir Walter rather than that of some later novelists. Surely, however, he makes a slip in giving "my laird" as a style of address to an untitled Scots' squire. "Laird," doubtless; but the "my" is a solecism.

In the Tilt-yard of Life is the meaningless title of a collection of short tales with no unity either of matter or manner. The last story in the book—"A Jew in Moscow"—is not destitute of power, and "Elizabeth's Confession" has a certain measure of crude cleverness, which unfortunately throws into relief one or two glaring offences against good taste. There is a passage about a kiss, on page 67, which is positively sickening, and in other portions of the story Mr. Newill's attempts at "realism" are the reverse of admirable. The greater number of the tales are fair magazine padding, but little, if anything, more.

Miss Gertrude Bell is far from being the first writer who has found in Motley's Rise of the Dutch Republic the materials for a stirring historical story. True to the Prince covers the period between the execution of Egmont and the relief of Leyden, and the incidents are well chosen and handled with a good deal of spirit. There is nothing specially striking in the story, but it justifies the pains which have evidently been spent upon it; and young people, who are nowadays the principal patrons of historical fiction, will find it decidedly enjoyable.

The prefatory commendation by Edna Lyall of the short and slight story, Had I But Known, rouses expectations which the book itself miserably fails to satisfy. When we are told that a story is "strange and weird," and that it "bases its claim to be read on the fact that it is strictly true," we naturally look for something out of the common in the way of incident, and we are rather irritated when we reach the last page and find that we have looked in vain. There is certainly a fulfilment of a gipsy's prophecy which, if true, is rather curious; but this is the only item in the tale which is not utterly commonplace, with the kind of conventional commonplaceness that belongs to the average circulating library novel. Edna Lyall must not follow Mr. Gladstone's example by scattering her commendations broadcast.

Eleanor's Discipline is a short story of rural life in Scotland. It has no conspicuous faults; and though fairly well written, it has no conspicuous merits. All that needs to be said of it is that it is a creditable but entirely unarresting performance.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME THEOLOGICAL SERIES.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Acts of the Apostles. By G. T. Stokes, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Dr. Stokes's exposition of the Acts of the Apostles "down to, but not including, the conversion of St. Paul and the baptism of Cornelius," will at once arrest the attention of readers. It impresses us as less conventional than any other volume of the series in which it appears. The writer makes a special and a successful effort to make his history live for his readers by illustrations taken from all sources, usual and unusual, and by a discussion and analysis of his text, which is sometimes commonplace but always vivacious. The danger of Dr. Stokes's method is that his accumulation of illustration is apt to bewilder, while his comments and digressions cannot always be said to be relevant. He prevents his readers from obtaining a clear and logical conception of the facts related in the first eight chapters of the Acts, by overlaying them with a mass of interesting but confusing comment. Occasionally when he should be lengthy he is disappointingly short. He seriously maintains the view, which to our mind makes nonsense of the whole history of the Acts, that the Apostles habitually enjoyed the power of speaking the languages of the countries they visited. He insists that the gift of tongues as exercised at Corinth was nothing but this power of speaking foreign languages, giving as his reason that otherwise the gift was a "mere uttering of gibberish unworthy of apostolical notice." Dr. Stokes ignores the fact that many students understand St. Paul to describe quite plainly just this "mere uttering of gibberish"—if such a question-begging description must be used. St. Paul, in these critics' view, is flatly contradicted, merely because Dr. Stokes neither understands nor approves a practice of primitive Christians readily recognised as natural by students of oriental races. There are many other comments on minor points which we should like to make. To suppose that, because Pliny and Martial testify to the use of a kind of shorthand by the Romans, it was therefore employed by the fishermen of Galilee, or even by the scribes of Jerusalem, seems rash. We should like to know why three of the seven deacons "were probably Hebrew Christians." But our space will not admit of detailed comment. Serious students of the Acts will be able to pick out of Dr. Stokes's volume many original illustrations and useful suggestions, but will not find fresh light thrown upon any acknowledged difficulties.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Epistles to the Thessalonians. By the Rev. James Denney. (Hodder & Stoughton.) It is unfortunate that we should be called upon to read Mr. Denney's expositions of 1 and 2 Thessalonians in connexion with the English translation of Prof. Sabatier's book. The Epistles to the Thessalonians contain signs of immaturity which even the unlearned reader is occasionally conscious of. Mr. Denney's attitude towards "those who wish to trace the spiritual development of St. Paul" is not sympathetic; he makes, indeed, no serious attempt to consider his Epistles from their point of view. Then, again, his work is diffuse: we feel that Prof. Sabatier, in twenty pages, tells us more about the Epistles than Mr. Denney in four hundred. Judged as discourses intended for an ordinary English congregation, Mr. Denney's chapters are much above the average: although somewhat commonplace, they are vigorous and sensible; but considered as contributions to an "Expositor's Bible," they contain too much that is obvious—or, rather, the obvious comment is not stated with the freshness and compression without which obvious comment is unreadable. We are glad to note that Mr. Denney recognises "the obvious fact that Paul was mistaken as to the nearness of the Second Advent," but we are sorry that he should think it necessary to speak of critics who find the Apostle ambitious as "devil's advocates."

"PREACHERS OF THE AGE."—Living Theology. By the Archbishop of Canterbury. (Sampson Low.) The Archbishop of Canterbury is fitly chosen as the author of the first of a series of volumes intended to be specimens of the style and power of the most eminent living preachers. His thirteen sermons are divided into two books. The first and larger contains sermons specially archiepiscopal, dealing with questions such as the relations of rich to poor, of religion to science, of the Church to dissent, of the Church in England to the Church in America and the Colonies. The five sermons of the second book occupy themselves with the spiritual life of the individual, and are examples of the Archbishop's powers as bishop of souls rather than as a bishop of a diocese. The sermons of the second book will be preferred by many readers to those of the first, because they deal with some familiar topics of the pulpit in a style both fresh and earnest; but the first book is nevertheless the more important section of the volume. It is an excellent sign of the times that the Archbishop of Canterbury should feel it his duty to preach sermons on social questions. Bishops, in their published sermons, are too much inclined to compete with the parish priest, and to forget that their position challenges them to form opinions and to teach them upon many subjects which very directly and vitally affect dioceses, while they can only be said to affect parishes indirectly. We have only space to note here the large-minded enthusiasm of the sermon on "The Spirit of Inquiry," with its clear recognition of the value of that spirit, not only in itself, but as "a specific solvent for false forms of Christianity"; and the clearness with which the social duties of Christians are insisted on in the striking sermon on "Powerful Rich and Powerful Poor," and in the definition of the work of the Church, which admits that "we have to make the responsibility of wage-giving felt by those who hold certain classes of the poor in their grasp; to make fuller provision for the childhood, the old age, and the fresh start in life of the very poor; . . . to protect uncivilised continents against civilised vice."

The Archbishop's style continually arrests our attention by freshness of phrase or word. Occasionally such a combination as "marrowless yieldingness to pressure" obviously misses the mark; but failures are rare, while fine phrases and original thoughts happily expressed continually occur in the volume.

"PREACHERS OF THE AGE."—Verbum Crucis. By the Lord Bishop of Derry. (Sampson Low.) It will be sufficient to say of these sermons that they are characteristic of the preacher—characteristically earnest, scholarly, and beautiful. The first ten are "on the mystery and the words of the Cross," the remaining four have been preached on public occasions of interest. They are introduced by a short but charming preface, in which the preacher confesses that "the truth is that for many years he has never but twice or thrice written an entire sermon." He takes a "complete skeleton," with "a few entire leading sentences" into the pulpit, but "often gets away from this mooring into another track." This little fragment of autobiography is followed by an earnest declaration that the writer, "as the evening of his life closes in . . . has no wish to be numbered among the combative preachers of the Church militant." These combative preachers he is wont to reduce to three classes. "There are those who, with many professions of affection and declarations of real unity, deftly drive their epigrams into the heart of him whom they affect to salute. So 'Joab took Amasa by the beard to kiss him,' after saying, 'Art thou in health, my brother?' But 'he smote him in the fifth rib, and he died.'" Such controversialists the bishop would call "Joabites." "Gileadites" are those who invite the unfortunate Ephraimite "just to 'say Shibboleth,' and smite him if he 'cannot frame to pronounce it aright'"; and finally, "combative theologians of causes long popular, but about to fall, may be called 'Ephesian' controversialists, whose argument is an assumption, and their stock-in-trade a cry." Among these the bishop hopes never to be numbered, desiring only to help "reflective people who, in an age of perplexity, desire to reconcile that in them which feels and prays with that which thinks."

"PREACHERS OF THE AGE."—Ethical Christianity. By the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

(Sampson Low.) Mr. Hughes explains that his sermons are entitled "Ethical Christianity" because they endeavour to describe "the particular kind of life upon earth" which the Christian should live. He is careful to premise that the Christian life can be lived adequately only by the help of that "union with God in Christ," which he holds that Christ has made possible for us; and in the thirteenth sermon on "the decisive evidence of Christianity," he defines very carefully what a "positive consciousness of fellowship with Christ" ought to be. But the sermons as a whole deal with the activities spiritual, mental, and practical of the converted Christian, and endeavour to stir them up. The sermons are very different from those of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Derry. They do not appeal to the saint or the student: they are indeed somewhat commonplace in style and thought; but they get very close to the ordinary citizen: they are intensely full of energy. The preacher makes a sustained, almost painful, effort to raise the sluggish wills of his hearers above themselves. When we read the sermons one upon the other, we are filled with admiration of the preacher's faithful obstinacy—his continued insistence on his message—his persistent endeavour to hold before his brethren the highest standard of Christian perfection. Mr. Hughes has the defects of his qualities. An occasional note of exaggeration reminds us that the preacher has to wind himself up as well as his audience. He is not sufficiently on his guard against superlatives. His earnestness, as for instance in the opening sentences of the sermon on evil, is sometimes almost ludicrously dogmatic. But the critic is ashamed to criticise such honest and eager discourses as these, and cares only to respectfully acknowledge the unselfish effort they display. Even when they do not convince either our hearts or our heads, they yet contrive to convey into us some share of the preacher's strenuousness, and give our spiritual energies fresh power.

"PREACHERS OF THE AGE."—The Knowledge of God and Other Sermons. By the Bishop of Wakefield. (Sampson Low.) This collection of sermons is more heterogeneous than any of the three already noticed, and, as being less written for the occasion, perhaps less remarkable. They are pleasant, not because their arguments are novel, or their style eloquent, but because they bring us very close to a singularly frank and kindly personality. Few Christian preachers succeed in retaining the grace of humility as unaffectedly and genuinely as the Bishop of Wakefield; and even fewer, in dealing with social questions and the relations of rich and poor, are as careful to speak from the firm ground of personal experience and knowledge. We care more for the sermons on social and moral subjects than for those addressed to the agnostic and sceptic, but these last have the rare merit of entire kindness and courtesy of tone. The volume contains seventeen sermons, all of them characteristic, and none of them feeble or careless.

We note as an excellent feature of the whole series, a short bibliography of each preacher at the end of his volume.

"ENGLISH LEADERS OF RELIGION."—Charles Simon. By the Rev. H. C. G. Moule. (Methuen.) In each of the many series of popular biographies that have been published of late years, the critic can usually select one or two of unusual merit, which are real additions to the literature of the subject with which they deal. Mr. Moule has produced such a biography of Charles Simeon. He is in complete sympathy with his hero, and therefore without any strain or affectation can use his enthusiasm in describing his life and character as vividly and fully as his space permits; and, moreover, he is careful and thorough. There are several volumes of memoirs and recollections of Simeon of more than average merit, but Mr. Moule has so exhaustively studied his materials and used them so judiciously that his biography is at once the most concise and the most complete account that has appeared. It will not easily be superseded.

"ENGLISH LEADERS OF RELIGION."—Bishop Wilberforce. By the Rev. G. W. Daniell. (Methuen.) It is more difficult to write a life of Bishop Wilberforce than of Charles Simeon. It is impossible to give to the character of the Bishop quite the same quality of enthusiastic reverence which many Christians instinctively feel towards Simeon; and in sketching the various controversies in which as a bishop Wilberforce took a leading part, it is difficult to avoid obscurity on the one hand, and tiresome accumulation of detail on the other. Mr. Daniell has not completely triumphed over his difficulties, but he has produced an interesting book. A reader who has not sufficient time or patience to read the three volumes of the standard Life will gain from Mr. Daniell's two hundred pages a very fair idea of what those three volumes contain. We think that Mr. Daniell might more boldly and decidedly admire the Bishop's conduct in the Hampden case, while we cannot in the least share his appreciation of Wilberforce's review of The Origin of Species, and his attitude towards Colenso. But on the whole Mr. Daniell has performed a difficult task well.

NOTES AND NEWS.

JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS is engaged upon a biographical and critical sketch of Count von Moltke, which will be published by Messrs. Ward & Downey.

MR. EDWARD NORTH BUXTON has written an account of his adventures in pursuit of large game in various parts of the world, which will shortly be published by Mr. Stanford under the title of Short Stalks; or Hunting Camps, North, East, South, and West, accompanied by a number of original illustrations.

AMONG Mr. David Nutt's immediately forthcoming publications is the first volume of the Rev. W. E. Addis's new translation of the documents of the Hexateuch chronologically arranged. This will comprise the documents commonly known as Jahvistie and Elohistie, the combination of which forms the oldest book of Hebrew history. The second volume, to appear, it is hoped, next year, will comprise the Deuteronomist and the Priestly Writer. Prof. Kuno Meyer's edition of the Vision of MacConglinne is also ready for issue. The two versions of the Irish text are printed for the first time; Hennessy's translation has been thoroughly revised and corrected, and the philological importance of the twelfth-century text is brought out by elaborate notes and glossary. Prof. W. Wollner, of Leipzig, contributes an introduction, dealing with the composition, origin, and authorship of the tale.

Two new volumes of The Poets and Poetry of the Century, edited by Mr. Alfred H. Miles, will shortly be issued. Among the contributors are Dr. Furnivall, who writes on Robert Browning; Mr. Joseph Knight, on William Bell Scott; Mr. Austin Dobson, on Frederick Locker-Lampson; Mr. Ashcroft Noble, on George Meredith and Arthur Hugh Clough; Dr. Garnett, on Coventry Patmore and Sydney Dobell; Dr. Japp, on Lord Tennyson, Frederick Tennyson, and several other poets; Mr. Hall Caine, on Dante Rossetti; and Mr. Mackenzie Bell, on Aubrey de Vere and Sir Edwin Arnold.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week, in the "Cameo Series," The Love-Songs of Robert Burns, edited by Sir George Douglas, Bart. A frontispiece portrait will accompany the volume, which will also have an introduction by the editor.

A TRANSLATION into English of Dr. Theodor Posewitz's work, Borneo: its Geology and Mineral Resources, has been made by Dr. Hatch, of the Geological Survey, and will shortly be issued by Mr. Stanford. The translator has added a number of references and notes, and four new maps accompany the translation.

UNDER the title of Castorologia; or, The Traditions of a Canadian Beaver, Mr. Horace T. Martin, of Montreal, has prepared a monograph on the little creature which played such an important part in the rise and prosperity of the Dominion. The work will be a handsome octavo, with a number of maps and illustrations. It will be published by Mr. Stanford.

THE same publisher hopes to issue in November the volume on The Partition of Africa, by Mr. J. Scott Keltie, secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. It will be brought well up to date and supplied with an apparatus of maps.

Missing Friends; or, the Adventures of a Danish Emigrant in Queensland, is the title of the new "Adventure" volume to be published next week by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. It is not a reprint, but a narrative of fact, which has hitherto existed only in MS.

A NEW novel, by Mrs. Alexander, will be published next week by Messrs. Cassell & Co., under the title of The Snare of the Fowler.

THE new volume of the "Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour" will consist of short stories by Mr. Walter Herries Pollock, under the title of King Zub, and will be published simultaneously in England and America.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN announces for immediate publication a new book of adventure by Mr. Bertram Mitford, entitled 'Tween Snow and Fire: a Tale of the Last Kafir War. The same publisher will issue, in a few days, a new and enlarged edition of Mr. Whistler's The Gentle Art of Making Enemies.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co. will publish immediately a translation of M. Paul Bourget's recent book, Nouveaux Pastels. The translator is Mr. John Gray; and the title chosen for the English volume, after the leading story, is "A Saint and Others."

THE next volume in the Scott Library will be Selections from Sydney Smith, with an introduction by Mr. Ernest Rhys.

Household Nursing: a Text-book for the Family, by Dr. Ogle Tunstall, will be issued next week by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The author has had considerable experience as senior resident medical officer of the Birmingham Infirmary.

THE Folklore Society will publish through Mr. Nutt as their extra volume for 1891 the first instalment of Dr. Hardy's new and enlarged edition of the Denham Tracts. The papers and translations of the Second International Folklore Congress will be issued to members in October.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. announce a new edition of the translation, by George Eliot, of Strauss's Leben Jesus, with an introduction by Prof. Otto Pfleiderer, of Berlin.

AMONG new editions Mr. Stanford has in preparation a second edition of Captain Hore's Tanganyika: Eleven Years in Central Africa; a sixth edition, revised by Mr. W. Topley, of the late Sir Andrew Rausay's Physical Geology and Geography of Great Britain; a third edition of Prof. James Geikie's Great Ice Age, thoroughly revised; also a third edition of the late Sir Charles Anderson's Lincoln Guide, revised by the Rev. A. R. Maddison, librarian and successor of Lincoln Cathedral.

AT the annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, now being held at Paris, a resolution was passed to compile a catalogue of Early English printed books down to 1640, as a supplement to that of the British Museum.

M. AL. BELJAME, professor at the Faculté des Lettres de Paris—who has already published an admirable essay on the Augustan age of English literature, as well as translations of Robinson Crusoe, The Vicar of Wakefield, &c.—has now issued (Paris: Hachette) two little books on Enoch Arden, which we cannot praise too highly. One consists of a translation into limpid French prose, with the English original on the opposite side of the page; the other is an annotated edition, with preliminary matter. We have here a brief but sufficient life of the poet, which concludes with a just estimate of his position; an analysis of the story, with mention of its literary analogues, and a bibliography. From this we learn that Enoch Arden has been translated six times into German, five times into French, twice into Italian and Dutch, and once into Spanish, Norwegian, and Dutch. Then follow some remarks upon the orthography; and finally there is an elaborate dissertation on the versification, extending to more than thirty pages. On one or two minor points it might be possible to differ with the author; but on matters of opinion rather than of fact. But, taking the work as a whole, it is our pleasant duty to say that we know no more scholarly and adequate edition of a modern classic.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE forthcoming number of the Economic Journal will contain an article by Mr. Robert Giffen, entitled "Fancy Monetary Standards," to which is appended a paper of the late Walter Bagehot reprinted from the Economist; also the Rev. Dr. Cunningham's paper on "The Perversion of Economic History," followed by a reply from Prof. Alfred Marshall.

IN the October number of the Cosmopolitan will appear an article on "A Cosmopolitan Language: its Prospects and Practicability," by Mr. Maltus Q. Holyoake, containing the opinions on the subject expressed to the author by Mr. Gladstone, John Bright, Prof. Max Müller, Matthew Arnold, and others.

THE first number of The Young Woman, which is to be published on September 23, will contain serial stories by L. T. Meade and Evelyn Everett Green; articles on "The Women of France," by Mrs. Crawford; "Young Women and Journalism," by W. T. Stead; "The Choice of a Husband," by the author of "How to be Happy though Married"; and "Physical Exercises for Women," by Dr. B. W. Richardson. Mrs. Mayo contributes a character sketch of the Countess of Aberdeen, with a portrait; and Archdeacon Farrar, with a paper on "Ruth," opens a series of articles on "Young Women of the Bible."

A NEW series of Cassell's Saturday Journal will be begun next week, enlarged and issued in a coloured wrapper. The first number will contain the commencement of a serial story entitled "Witness to the Deed," by Mr. Manville Fenn, and pages of amusing illustrations will in future appear in each issue. Among the new features will be a weekly page of personal paragraphs and anecdotes.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

LOVE IN THE WATER-MEADOWS.*

WHAT mad embrace is here! In a green mead
Thick with lush grass and nodding poppy-heads,
Under a smouldering western sun there spreads
A clinging mist of evening; young lumps feed
Or lag behind their dams, or crop the weed
And cool thick herbage. Eagerly he treads—
Among the dewy grasses and the sedge—
The brown-limbed herd-boy, lithe and slinkykneed.

His the round cheek, and his the ruddy hair;
The maiden bosom, milk-white, azure-veined,
The willowy fresh limbs of the peasant lass.
His playfellow. Panting he seized her there
And crushed her soft white body as he strained
Towards her, passionate, kissing, in the grass.

MAURICE HEWLETT.

OBITUARY.

WHITTIER AND CURTIS

THE death of George William Curtis took place at New York on Wednesday, August 31; and exactly one week later, namely, on September 7, John Greenleaf Whittier died at Hampton Falls (N.H.). Thus America loses at the same time two of her leading men of letters—a brilliant prose writer, and a famous poet.

Curtis and Whittier were not men of letters only. Both of them at one time or another had taken an active part in public affairs. Whittier in his youth and manhood was a strenuous worker for negro emancipation. Curtis, coming later, did his share also, not only for the liberation of the slaves, but for the cause of righteous government. It is noteworthy that, with few exceptions, the men who gave being to American literature were actively engaged in public affairs. Almost the only exception to this rule, among writers of the first rank, is Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. Science and literature have occupied him amid all the troubles through which his country has passed during the last sixty years. Nearly every one of his literary contemporaries turned aside, for a while at least, from the ordinary task of the student to say something, to do something, in connexion with the emancipation movement, or the war which followed, or the struggle to bring order out of chaos which came after the war. It was an old charge against America that she had no literature of her own, but supplied her mental needs from England, either at first hand or by imitation. Some few critics try to maintain it still, but it has lost the force it once had. Even then, however, it was an unworthy charge, for the time for a national literature had not arrived. A nation in the making cannot be expected to have a literature of its own. Government must become settled, and commerce must be sufficiently organised to yield the necessities of living, first of all. As soon as these things seemed fairly secured in America, literature did begin to spring up. But there came an unexpected check. The settlement of the nation proved to have been more apparent than real. Agitation arose so violent as almost to break the nation to pieces. Thus it was that men of letters found their interest divided between building up literature and helping to save the State. In the long run American literature will be all the better because her pioneers were good citizens as well as scholars. As to American public life, it is not perhaps so noble as it might be, but it is better than it would have been if the scholars had not shared in it. It is better for the service of the two men whose death we now record.

Whittier was born in 1807, the year of Longfellow's birth. William Cullen Bryant, so long the recognised American veteran poet, was then thirteen years old. Bryant was a nature-lover, sensitive to natural beauty. He wrote of trees and flowers and sea and sky. As a poet he was not interested in man. Whittier was quite the reverse. While Bryant was reposeful, he was fervent. His eyes were open to human grief and joy. His sympathies were early enlisted in the cause of the negro slave. William Lloyd Garrison, two years his senior, was his friend and fellow-worker. Legends of New England in Prose and Verse, was his first book. It was about this time (1831) that he definitely threw in his lot with Garrison and the Liberator. As a consequence, his interest in the struggle for freedom in the past was merged in his greater interest in the struggle then going on before his eyes. The halo of romance is dear to most poets, and, in the living things of to-day, it is not present, or it is not visible to them. Time gives it, making coarse and common things seem glorious and worthy of the poet's attention. How beautiful the old times seem when Tennyson sings of them. One man running away with another's wife told in the Idylls, is a totally different thing from a similar occurrence in the police reports. Perhaps at the time, to the persons concerned, it seemed less lovely. But the poet's gift is great enough to transmute greedy robbers and fornicators into chivalrous knights. Hereafter some poet will arise to commemorate our own century; and, where we see on one side the capitalist grasping all he can, and, on the other, the worker grasping all he can, that poet will discern, and tell in graceful numbers, of armies of swartly workers wrestling with nature for the fruits of the earth, and fed, and clothed, and housed by noble captains of industry. Whittier was not a poet of this type. While Tennyson was singing of ancient virtues, he was singing of modern wrongs. To him, an apostle of freedom, the desperate struggle for freedom was a worthy subject. The pieces which make up the volume of Voices of Freedom, published in 1849, were written during the years from 1833 to 1848. There, and elsewhere, he made visible the wrongs of the slave, and helped to arouse the moral sentiment which should abolish those wrongs. Whether in this Whittier kept within the legitimate functions of the poet need not be discussed here. It may be that the poet, like the critic, should refuse "to lend himself to the point of view of the practical man." Probably Whittier's best poetry is to be found elsewhere than in his slave pieces. Be this as it may, he served humanity more and poetry not less than do those writers who pass as poets, whose poetry springs from no depth of character or earnestness of purpose, but is for the most part a chronicle of bar-parlour amours and the equally unedifying reflections of the next morning, given in the shape of sonnet, triolet, or rhymed epigram.

Not the slave alone, but the victim of any form of oppression, had a claim on Whittier's sympathy. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and his family for generations had been Friends. He loved freedom as a principle, as the Friends mostly do; not as a mere possession, like the Puritans. If the Puritans had loved freedom as a principle, negro slavery could never have become an established institution among their descendants; and the United States to-day would not be dominated by King Majority and Mrs. Grundy. The Mayflower is immortalised because it carried the Pilgrim Fathers; but on its next voyage it was engaged in the slave trade. In like manner, the Pilgrim Fathers, as soon as they were free themselves, began to establish over others a tyranny at least as harsh as any they had escaped from. Whittier's regard for freedom was not of this selfish type. He asked for it less for himself than for others. The spirit in which he regarded it, and in which he worked for it, is expressed in his own verse:

"O Freedom! if to me belong
Nor mighty Milton's gift divine,
Nor Marvell's wit and graceful song,
Still with a love as deep and strong
As theirs, I lay, like them, my best gifts on thy shrine."

Quick as Whittier was to see and sympathise with those who were wronged, he was far from being a melancholy or despairing poet. He had faith that there was an overruling providence which could and would evolve good even out of seeming evil. He trusted, he said, that Providence,

"How dark so'er it seems, may tend
By rays I cannot comprehend
To some unguessed benignant end;

"That every loss and lapse may gain
The clear-aided heights by steps of pain
And never cross is borne in vain."

His tone, generally, is energetic and hopeful. It is distinctly less melancholy than that of Longfellow. Which of these was the greater poet is a point upon which opinions may differ. Longfellow, however, had the advantage in graceful and befitting phrase. Compare, for example, his poems on "Channing" and "Bayard Taylor" with Whittier's, or his "Building of the Ship" with Whittier's "The Ship Builders."

Curtis, like Whittier, was a power for good in American politics. His attitude was, however, less that of an advocate and more that of a critic. A year ago, on the occasion of the death of James Russell Lowell, I referred to Lowell and Curtis as two leading members of a small body of men who, not standing apart from politics and not wholly from political parties, were yet bound by no fast ties to any party or section, but held themselves always free to act as, in the interests of justice, the occasion may require. I said that these men had been for a number of years the conscience of the political life of the United States. Curtis was always in the front of any movement against corrupt government. Naturally, at the time of the Civil War, his sympathies were with the Republican party. Harper's Weekly, of which he was the editor, was strongly Republican. Nevertheless he never supported his party in the base tactics to which, like most political parties, they resorted from time to time. He supported General Grant for the first and second term, but opposed him when he offered himself for a third term. As a determined advocate of Civil Service Reform it was natural that he should prefer Cleveland, the Democrat, to Blaine the Republican in 1884; and the action of himself and the other "Independents" who worked with him secured Cleveland's election. Four years later, Cleveland, having partly forfeited the confidence of this section, was defeated. Here the influence of Curtis and his friends is plainly visible, but it was not confined to such leading events as presidential elections. It was exercised for good in the inner workings of the political life of the time. Curtis published few books; fewer than many authors who are successful writers but not men of letters. He was a man of letters of the first rank who valued literature too highly to publish over much. He did a great quantity of journalistic work. He was a contributor to the Harbinger in the days of Brook Farm; later, he wrote for the New York Tribune. Harper's Weekly was founded in 1857, and he was its editor from its outset or soon afterwards. The "Easy Chair" of Harper's Monthly has long been occupied by him. His earliest books were two volumes of travel,

* Suggested by Maurice Greiffenhagen's picture, "An Idyl," in the recent Guildhall Exhibition, and now at Liverpool.

Nile Notes of a Howadji (1850), and The Howadji in Syria (1852). Lotus Eating appeared in 1852; The Poliphar Papers—bright critical social studies—in 1853; Homes of American Authors, in 1854; Prue and I, in 1856; and Trumps, in 1862. His literary work is characterised by keen critical insight, wit, and occasional sarcasm, with, however, never failing courtesy. He could not say a coarse or offensive thing.

Mr. Lowell, in his "Epistle," addressed him as—

"Curtis whose wit, with fancy arm in arm, Masks half its muscle in its skill to charm,
And who so gently can the wrong expose
As sometimes to make converts, never foes."

And he proceeds, as he says, to "vex his ears" with praise which is ardent but fully deserved. Lowell's estimate, written in 1874, stands good to-day:

"Curtis, skilled equally with voice and pen
To stir the hearts or mould the minds of men—
That voice whose music, for I've heard you sing,
Sweet as Casella, can with passion ring,
That pen whose rapid ease ne'er trips with haste,
Nor scrapes, nor sputters, pointed with good taste,
First Steele's, then Goldsmith's, next it came to you,
Whom Thackeray rated best of all our crew—
Had letters kept you, every wreath were yours;
Had the world tempted, all his chariest doors
Had swung on flattered hinges to admit
Such high-bred manners, such good-natured wit;
At courts, in senates, who so fit to serve?
And both invited, but you would not swerve,
All meaner prizes waiving that you might
In civic duty spend your heat and light,
Unpaid, untrammelled, with a sweet disdain
Refusing posts men grovel to attain.
Good Man all own you; what is left me, then,
To heighten praise with but Good Citizen."

Anyone who is unfamiliar with Mr. Curtis's literary work should procure Prue and I, in the series published by Mr. David Douglas. It is an exquisite idyll in prose.

Whittier died at the ripe age of eighty-five, in the fulness of time, his work well done. Curtis was sixty-eight, and we had hoped there were years of continued usefulness before him. American politics and American literature can ill afford to lose him now.

WALTER LEWIN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE August number of L'Art et l'Idée is the least interesting that has yet appeared, a fact to be explained, if not excused, by the holiday season. The only illustration is much more commonplace than M. Uzanne has accustomed us to; and the literary articles—a renewal of his own remarks on the unhealthy state of the Paris book-market, an essay on "Les écrivains de main," and another on the obsolescence of those of yesterday—have little attraction, while M. Gausseron is in a state of bricks without straw for his chronicle. However, it is unfair to expect every day to be a feast, and no doubt M. Uzanne will "disdamage" us shortly.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS LIST.

Theology.—"The Old Testament in Greek according to the Septuagint," edited by Prof. Swete, Vol. III., completing the edition; "The Philocalia of Origen," the Greek text edited from the MSS., with Critical Apparatus and Indexes, and an introduction on the sources of the text, by J. Armitage Robinson; "The New Testament in the Original Greek," according to the text followed in the Authorised Version, together with the variations adopted in the Revised Version, edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, by the late F. H. A. Scrivener, new and cheaper edition; "Adversaria Critica Sacra," by the late F. H. A. Scrivener.

Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature, edited by J. Armitage Robinson:—Vol. I., No. 1, "The Apology of Aristides on behalf of the Christians," second edition; Vol. II., No. 2, "The Testament of Abraham," by M. R. James, with an appendix containing translations from the Arabic of the Testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by W. E. Barnes; No. 3, "The Rules of Tyconius, freshly edited from the MSS., with an examination of his witness to the Old Latin Version, by F. C. Burkitt; No. 4, "Apocrypha Anecdota," containing the Latin Version of the Apocalypse of Paul, the Apocalypses of the Virgin, of Sedrach, of Zosimas, &c., by M. R. James; No. 5, "The Homeric Centones," by J. Rendel Harris.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.—"The Books of Ezra and Nehemiah," by Prof. Ryle; "The Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon," by the Rev. H. C. G. Moule; "The Epistles to Timothy and Titus," by the Rev. A. E. Humphreys; "The Book of Judges," by J. S. Black; "The Book of Revelation," by the late W. H. Simcox.

Law, Historical and Miscellaneous.—"The Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases," edited by Dr. C. A. M. Fennell; "The Growth of English Industry and Commerce in Modern Times," by the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham; "The Growth of British Policy," by Prof. Seeley; Two unfinished papers by the late Henry Bradshaw, (1) "The Collectio Canonum Hibernensis," (2) "On the Chartres and Tours MSS. of the Hibernensis"; "The New History (Tarikh-i-Jadid)," a circumstantial account of the Babi movement in Persia from its first beginnings till the death of the founder (A.D. 1844–1850), chiefly based on the contemporary history of Hajji Mirza Jani of Káshán, translated into English from a text prepared by collation of the only two complete MSS. known to exist in Europe, and supplemented by original historical documents, p'ans, and facsimiles, by Edward G. Browne; "A Descriptive Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Fitz-William Museum," illustrated with twenty plates of photographic reproductions, by Montague Rhodes James; "A Catalogue of the Egyptian Antiquities in the Fitz-William Museum," by Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge; "The Science of International Law," being a general sketch of the historic basis of the rules observed by states in their normal and abnormal relations in the past and the present, by T. A. Walker; "The History of the Doctrine of Consideration in English Law," being the Yorke Prize Essay for 1891, by E. Jenks; "An Inaugural Address delivered at the opening of the Third Series of Vacation Courses of Study at Cambridge, July 26, 1892," by James Stuart; "Milton's Paradise Lost," Books I. and II., edited, with introduction, notes and indexes, by A. W. Verity; "Milton's Paradise Lost," Books V. and VI., by the same editor; "A Discourse of the Commonwealth of thys Realme of Englande," first printed in 1581, and commonly attributed to W. S., edited from the MSS. by the late Elisabeth Lamond; "Corneille," "Polyeucte," with introduction and notes, by E. G. W. Braunholtz; "Ancient Ships," by Cecil Torr, with numerous illustrations.

Greek and Latin Classics.—"Aristophanes: Equites," with introduction and notes by R. A. Neil; "Aristophanes: Vespæ," with introduction and notes by C. E. Graves; "Homer's Iliad," the text edited in accordance with modern criticism by Arthur Platt; "The Mimes of Herondas," the text edited with a commentary by Walter Headlam; "Plato's Protagoras," with introduction and notes by J. Adam and A. M. Adam; "Plutarch's Life of Demosthenes," with introduction, notes, and indexes, by Hubert A. Holden; "Livy," Book VI., with notes and introduction by the Rev. H. M. Stephenson; "Graduated Passages from Greek and Latin Authors for First-Sight Translation," selected and supplied with short notes for beginners by H. Bendall and C. E. Laurence.

Mathematical and Scientific Works.—"The Collected Mathematical Papers of Prof. Cayley," Vol. V.; "A History of the Theory of Elasticity and of the Strength of Materials," by the late Dr. I. Todhunter, edited and completed by Prof. Karl Pearson: Vol. II. "Saint Venant to Lord Kelvin (Sir William Thomson)"; "A Treatise on Analytical Statics," by Dr. E. J. Routh, Vol. II.; "A Treatise on the Theory of Functions of a Complex Variable," by Dr. A. R. Forsyth; "The Jurassic Rocks of Cambridge," being the Sedgwick Prize Essay for the year 1886, by the late T. Roberts; "Fossil Plants as Tests of Climate," being the Sedgwick Prize Essay for 1892, by A. C. Seward; "An Elementary Treatise on Plane Trigonometry," by E. W. Hobson and C. M. Jessop; "Euclid's Elements of Geometry," Books V. and VI., by H. M. Taylor; "Mechanics and Hydrostatics for Beginners," by S. L. Loney.

MESSRS. SAMPPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S LIST.

Travel.—"Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp 1882-1892," from the original manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, of the Austrian Mission in Kordofan, who recently escaped with two Sisters of Mercy on camels from the Sudan, by Major F. R. Wingate, R.A., illustrated with photographs, maps, and special drawings by Walter C. Horsley; "On Sledge and Horseback to Outcast Siberian Lepers," by Miss Kate Marsden, with portraits and illustrations from photographs and drawings by Walter C. Horsley and others; "Afloat and Ashore on the Mediterranean," by Lee Meriwether, with 24 full-page illustrations; "Artistic Travel in Normandy, Brittany, The Pyrenees, Spain, and Algeria," by Henry Blackburn, with 130 illustrations; "Bombay and Western India," by James Douglas, with maps and plans, 13 full-page photogravures, collotype reproductions from old documents, one coloured reproduction of an old picture, and over 100 other text illustrations, in 2 vols.; "Sport and Work on the Nepaul Frontier," being twelve years' sporting reminiscences of a pioneer planter in an Indian frontier district, by the Hon. Jas. Inglis ("Maori"), with twenty-two illustrations in chromo-lithography; "Tales of Adventure and Stories of Travel of Fifty Years Ago," edited by Joseph Cundall, illustrated with twenty plates from "The Annuals"; "Corsican Studies," by J. W. Barry, with maps and illustrations; "Holiday Wanderings in Madeira," by A. E. W. Marsh, with many full-page and other illustrations; "Through the Land of the Aztecs: Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico," by a Gringo, illustrated; "A Tramp Across the Continent: from Ohio to California on foot, 3507 miles," by Charles F. Lummis, illustrated; "Sinners and Saints: a Tour across the States, and Round them; with Three Months among the Mormons," by Phil Robinson, new edition; "A Ride through Wonderland," by Georgina M. Synge, with map and illustrations.

Biography, History, and Criticism.—"A Memoir of Edward Calvert, Artist," by his third son, Samuel Calvert, with thirty inset plates and more than thirty other illustrations in facsimile from the artist's designs, limited edition of 350 copies; "Charles Keene's Life and Letters," by George Somnes Layard, with three portraits, thirty full-page and forty-four smaller illustrations, including fifteen photographs, second edition; "Shepherd Smith, the Universalist: the Story of a Mind," being a life of the Rev. James E. Smith, by W. Anderson Smith, with photogravure portrait and other illustrations; "A Famous Fox-Hunter: Reminiscences of the late Thomas Assheton Smith, Esq.," by the late Sir John E. Eardley Wilmot, Bart., with portrait and other illustrations, fourth and cheaper edition; "The Queen's Prime Ministers," edited by Stuart J. Reid, with photogravure portraits: "The Earl of Aberdeen, by the Hon. Sir Arthur Gordon; "Earl Russell," by Stewart J. Reid; "The History of South Australia," from its foundation to the year of its jubilee, with a chronological summary of all the principal events of interest, by Edwin Hodder, with maps, two vols; "Frederic Chopin," a biography, by Charles Willeby, with photogravure portrait, facsimile of autograph, and illustrations of his music; "Louisa May Alcott," her Life, Letters, and Journals, edited by Ednah D. Cheney, with two portraits, and a view of her Concord Home, new edition; "One Hundred Days in Europe," by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, fifth and cheaper edition; "The Earlier History of Bookselling," by W. Roberts, new and cheaper edition; "Parliamentary Government in England," its Origin, Development, and Practical Operation, by the late Alpheus Todd, Librarian of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada, new edition, abridged, revised, and brought up to date by Mr. Spencer Walpole, in 2 vols.; "The Life of John Ericsson," by Colonel W. C. Church, with portraits and other illustrations, new edition, in 2 vols.; "The Colonial Era in America," by Prof. George P. Fisher, of Yale, with three maps; "Essays by Sir Morell Mackenzie," edited by his brother, A. W. Mackenzie, with portrait; "The Glacial Nightmare," by Sir Henry H. Howorth, M.P., in 2 vols; "Religious Thought in Old English Verse," by the Rev. C. J. Abbey.

Fine Art.—"The Capitals of the World," translated from the French, with an introduction by H. D. Traill, in 2 vols; "History of Engraving in England," by Louis Fagan, illustrated with one hundred typical examples reproduced from rare and unique prints in the British Museum, exemplifying the progress of the art from the end of the sixteenth century to the earlier years of Her Majesty's reign; "The Block-books of the Fifteenth Century," in four imperial quarto volumes, edited by W. Salt Brasington; "The Flowers of Japan, and the Art of Floral Arrangement," by Josiah Conder, Architect to the Japanese Government, illustrated by Japanese artists, with fifty-four plates, fourteen in colour, and numerous wood-engravings in the text, bound in a paper cover with silk cords, the whole printed and reproduced in Japan by the Hakubunsha, Tokio.

Fiction.—"Wolfenberger," by William Black, in 3 vols.; "The Clocks of Rondaine, and other Stories," by Frank R. Stockton, illustrated by E. H. Blashfield, W. A. Rogers, and others; "The Fever of Life," by Fergus Hume, in 2 vols.; "The Preacher's Daughter," by Amelia E. Barr; "The Mystery of St. Dunstan's," a realistic and sensational story of Fleet-street in 1724, by Thomas Wright, in 2 vols.; "Hypoerites," by Hugh Coleman Davidson, illustrated; "Out of the Groove," a romance of Australian life, by E. B. Kennedy.

Books for Young People.—"Stories told in an African Forest by Grown-up Children of Africa," by A. J. Mounteney Jephson, with numerous illustrations from drawings by Walter W. Buckley; "Mistress Brannican," by Jules Verne, illustrated; "Axel Ebersen, the Graduate of Upsala," by André Laurie, illustrated; "Sandy Carmichael, by C. J. Hyne, with eight illustrations; "The Priceless Orchid": a story of adventure in the forests of Yucatan, by Percy Ainslie, with eight illustrations; "Ellie's Visit to Cloudland and the Moon," by Frances V. Austen, with illustrations by E. J. Austen; "Captain January," by Laura E. Richards, with illustrations by Frank T. Merrill; "Recollections of My Childhood's Days," by Louisa May Alcott, new edition.

General Literature.—"Days in Clover," by "The Amateur Angler"; "City Festivals," by Will Carleton; "Theory and Analysis of Ornament," applied to the work of elementary and technical schools, by François Louis Schauermann, with numerous illustrations; "The Student's Chemistry, by R. L. Taylor, illustrated; "A Handbook for Farmers and Small Holders," edited by John Watson; "The Chant Book Companion to the Book of Common Prayer," edited by Dr. Charles Vincent; "Daily Strength for Daily Needs," selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours" (Mary W. Tileston), new edition; "Doing and Suffering": Memorials of Elizabeth and Frances, daughters of the late Rev. E. Bickersteth, by their sister, with preface by the Bishop of Exeter, new edition; "The Diamond Mines of South Africa," by Prof. Reunert, with maps and illustrations; "The Rats' Plaint" an old legend, translated from the original Chinese by Archibald Little; "Japanese Jingles," by Mae St. John Bramhall; "The Children's Japan," by Mrs. W. H. Smith.

Preachers of the Age, with photogravure portraits.—"Christ is All," by the Rev. Handley C. G. Moule; "Plain Words on Great Themes," by the Rev. Dr. J. Oswald Dykes; "The Gospel of Work," by the Bishop of Winchester; "Christ in the Centuries," by Principal Fairbairn; "Agony Christi," by the Dean of Norwich; "The Transfigured Sackcloth," by the Rev. W. L. Watkinson.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S LIST.

Geography and Travel.—"British New Guinea," a compendium of all the most recent information respecting our Papuan possession, by J. P. Thomson, with scientific appendix dealing with the geology, fauna, flora, &c., illustrated with engravings and photographs, and a coloured map; "Up the Niger," narrative of Major Claude Macdonald's Mission to the Niger and Benue Rivers, by Captain A. F. Mockler-Ferryman, with a chapter on native music and musical instruments, by Captain C. R. Day, illustrated with photogravure frontispiece, full-page photographs, and a coloured map; "Paraguay," the Land and the People, Natural Wealth and Commercial Capabilities, by Dr. E. De Bourgade la Dardye, edited by E. G. Ravenstein, with full-page illustrations and large coloured map; "Christopher Columbus," by Clement R. Markham, forming Vol. VII. of the "World's Great Explorers and Explorations," with twenty-five illustrations and coloured maps; "The Development of Africa," a study in applied geography, by Arthur Silverwhite, second edition, revised to date.

Scientific and General.—"Atlas of Astronomy," a series of seventy-two plates, with explanatory notes and index, by Sir Robert Stawell Ball; "Astronomy for Every-day Readers," a popular manual of elementary astronomy, by B. J. Hopkins, with thirty illustrations; "A Scheme for a National System of Rest-funds (or Pensions) for Working People," by David Sharp.

Educational.—Series Method of Teaching Languages—"The Art of Teaching and Studying Languages," by François Gouin, translated by Howard Swan and Victor Bétis, second edition;

"A First Lesson in French," for the use of teachers, forming the first volume of the practical part of the "Series" Method, by François Gouin, translated and adapted by Howard Swan and Victor Bétis; "Thèmes d'Initiation," being a series of one hundred elementary exercises for use in connexion with above, by François Gouin; Manual Training—"The Theory of Educational Sloyd," the only authorised edition of the lectures of Otto Salomon, director of the Seminarium for Teachers at Naas, revised and edited for English and American students by an Inspector of schools, together with a résumé of the history of manual training, and a portrait and biography of Herr Salomon; "Working Diagrams of the High School Series of Sloyd Models," drawn to English measurements, and intended to accompany Johansson's "Practical Directions," by William Nelson; Physical Training:—"Bandage Drill," with music for children from five years of age, by Mrs. Francis Steintal; "Musical Drill for Infants"—Part II., for use in schools and calisthenic classes, by A. Alexander, with 132 illustrations, and specially written and adapted musical accompaniments by Leslie Harris; New Geographies:—"The Advanced Class-book of Modern Geography," physical, political, commercial, by William Hughes, and J. Francon Williams; "The Class-book of Modern Geography," by William Hughes and J. Francon Williams, new edition, revised to date; "The Elementary Class-book of Modern Geography," abridged from the larger class-book, and simplified for the use of younger pupils, new edition, revised to date.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S LIST.

"The Dictionary of Australasian Biography" (1855-92), edited by Philip Mennell; "The Germ Growers," the Strange Adventures of Robert Easterley and John Wilbraham, by Canon Patter; "The Cuckoo in the Nest," in 3 vols, by Mrs. Oliphant; "The Japs at Home," by Douglas Sladen, with over fifty illustrations by Henry Savage Landor and W. J. Fenu; "A Brilliant Woman," in 3 vols., by the Hon. Mrs. Henry Chetwynd; "This Wicked World," and other essays, by the late J. Hain Friswell; "Love for an Hour is Love for Ever," by Amelia E. Barr; "Bygone London," by Frederick Ross; "Judith Grant," a novel in 3 vols., by the late Mrs. Locket; two new volumes of "The Poets and Poetry of the Century," edited by Alfred H. Mills, viz., "Tennyson to Arthur Hugh Clough," and "Frederick Charles Kingsley to James Thomson"; "Through Pain to Peace," in 3 vols., by Sarah Doudney; "Mr. and Mrs. Herries," by May Crommelin; "Bygone England," Social Studies in its Historic Byways and Highways, by W. Andrews, with illustrations; "The Village Blacksmith," in 3 vols., by Darley Dale; "A Waking," by Mrs. J. Kent Spender, with illustrations; "Bygone Scotland," Social Studies in its Historic Byways and Highways, by David Maxwell, with illustrations; "From Private to Colonel," the Wonderful Adventures of Frank Hurst, by W. Mitchell; "Godiva Durlough," by Sarah Doudney; "Namesakes," by Evelyn Everett Green; "Fifty-two other Stories for Boys," by G. A. Henty, G. Manville Fenn, R. E. Francillon, Ascott Hope, and others; "Faith, Hope, and Charity," by Anna E. Lisle; "Fifty-two other Stories for Girls," by Rosa Mulholland, Susan Coolidge, and others; "Fifty-two Fairy Tales," by various authors; "A Child of the Precinct," by Sarah Doudney; "No Humdrum Life for Me," by Mrs. J. Kent Spender; "A Woman without a Head," by the author of "A Trap to Catch a Sunbeam"; "The Warriors of the Crescent," by the late

W. H. Davenport Adams; "The Clever Miss Janey," by Margaret Haycraft; "Self and Self-Sacrifice," by Anna E. Lisle; "Among the Welsh Hills," by M. C. Halifax; and several new and cheap editions.

THE S.P.C.K.'S LIST.

Science.—"Romance of Science Series": "Secret Friends and Foes," by Prof. Percy Frankland; Klein's "Star Atlas," second edition, translated, revised, and brought up to date by the Rev. E. McClure; "Vegetable Wasps and Plant Worms," by Dr. M. C. Cooke; "Pictorial Architecture of France," by the Rev. H. H. Bishop; "How to make Common Things," by John A. Bower. A new series of penny booklets for the people dealing with questions of health, &c., will commence in October, the two first of the series being "A Case of Poisoning" and "Great Unwashed Jimmy," by Miss Agnes Giberne.

Religious.—"The Book of Genesis," by the Rev. F. Watson; "The Books of Chronicles," by the Bishop of Bath and Wells; "Our Worship," by Prebendary Sadler; "A Handy Book of the Church of England," by the Rev. E. L. Cutts, which aims at meeting inquiries upon the main points of the Church's history and present position; "A Manual of Parochial Work," by various writers, edited by Canon Ellerton, second edition; "Round the Round World," by the Rev. G. E. Mason, being an account of a trip round the globe on a Church mission; "Descriptive Lantern Lectures Illustrative of English Church History," by the Rev. C. A. Lane, Lecturer to the Church Defence Institution.

Fiction.—"Gil the Gunner," a narrative of the Indian Mutiny, by G. Manville Fenn; "Born to Command," a sea story, by Dr. Gordon Stables; "The Conroy Cousins," by the Rev. E. N. Hoare; "Here and Elsewhere," by the Rev. Harry Jones; "Honor Pentreath," a tale of Cornish life, by Mrs. Henry Clarke; "Kate, the Pride of the Parish," by Mrs. E. H. Mitchell; "Spitewinter," by Helen Shipton; "Don Carlos," by E. Everett Green; a Library Edition of the late Mrs. Ewing's "Jackanapes"; "Daddy Darwin's Dovecot," and "Lob-Lie-by-the-Fire." To the Penny Library of Fiction series will shortly be added "The Rancho in the Valley, by G. A. Henty.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK'S LIST.

"Christian Ethics," by the Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth, and "Apologetics," by Prof. B. Bruce, being the second and third volumes of "The International Theological Library," edited by Profs. Salmond and Briggs; "The Gospel of a Risen Saviour," by the Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church—in this volume the fact of Christ's Resurrection is first established on historical and critical grounds, and then the theological and spiritual significance of the risen Saviour, whose existence has been established, is carefully exhibited; "The Teaching of Jesus," by Prof. H. H. Wendt, of Heidelberg, the second and concluding volume of the English translation; "Old Testament Theology," by Prof. H. Schultz, of Göttingen, authorised English translation.

MESSRS. W. B. CLIVE & Co.'S LIST.

"Aristophanes: Vespæ," a translation, with test papers, by F. G. Plaistowe; "B. A. English, 1894," questions on all the pass subjects set, with advice on the choice of text-books; "Cicero: Ad Atticum," Book IV., edited, with introduction and notes, by J. H. Haydon; "Cicero: Ad Atticum," Book IV., a translation, with test papers, by J. H. Haydon; "Demosthenes: Adversus Leptinem," a translation, with test papers, by F. E. A. Traves; "Euripides: Hercules Furens," a translation, by R. M. Thomas; "Herodotus," Book VIII., edited by J. Thompson and R. M. Thomas; "Horace: Epistles," edited by F. G. Plaistowe and W. F. Masom; "Ovid: Tristia," Books I. and III., edited by A. H. Allcroft and B. J. Hayes; "Sallust: Catiline," edited by A. H. Allcroft and W. F. Masom; "Tacitus: Histories," Book I., edited by F. G. Plaistowe and H. J. Maidment; "Terence: Phormio," a translation, with test papers, by F. G. Plaistowe; "Xenophon: Hellenica," Book III., edited by A. H. Allcroft and F. L. D. Richardson; "The Tutorial French Accidence," by H. E. Just; "The Preliminary French Grammar"; "The Tutorial French Syntax," by H. E. Just; "History of England, 1485 to 1603," by C. S. Fearenside; "History of English Literature, 1485 to 1620," with test papers on the period 1558-1603, by W. H. Low; "The Tutorial History of England," by C. S. Fearenside and W. F. Masom; "History of Greece, B.C. 404-323," by A. H. Allcroft and W. F. Masom; "History of Rome, B.C. 78-31," by A. H. Allcroft and W. F. Masom; "An Elementary Text-Book of Hydrostatics," by William Briggs and G. H. Bryan; "Intermediate English, 1894," questions on all the pass and honours subjects set, with advice on text-books; "The Preliminary Latin Grammar"; "The Tutorial Latin Reader"; "Examples in Magnetism and Electricity," by R. W. Stewart; "Magnetism and Electricity," first stage; "Mensuration of the Simpler figures"; "Text-Book of Sound," by R. W. Stewart; "Sound, Light, and Heat," first stage; "The Geometrical Properties of the Sphere"; "The Elements of Trigonometry."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- GRECOBROVIUS, F. Römische Tagebücher. Hrg. v. F. Althaus. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
LE FÈVRE-DEUMIER, J. Entrétiens sur l'immortalité de l'âme. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 5 fr.
LHOMME, F. Les Artistes célèbres: Charlet. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 4 fr.
MARICOURT, le Baron de. Casquettes blanches et Croix-Rouge: Souvenirs de 1870. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
MURR, J. Die Gottheit der Griechen als Naturmacht. Innsbruck: Wagner. 2 M.
SAMMLUNG holländischer Meister d. 17. Jahrh. in der Kunsthalle zu Hamburg. 1. Sammlg. München: Verlagsanstalt f. Kunst. 75 M.
SCHLEICHTER-WSEHERD, O. Frh. v. Moral-Philosophie d. Morgenlandes, aus pers. Dichtern erläutert. Leipzig: Haessel. 3 M.
SCHEIDT, L. v. Worte der Wahrheit—Dhammapadam. Eine zum buddhist. Canon gehör. Spruchsammlg., in deutscher Uebersetzg. Leipzig: Haessel. 3 M.

THEOLOGY.

- SCHÜTTER, A. Der Commentar zu Esra u. Nehemia v. Jesaja di Trani, nach Handschriften der Angelica in Rom u. der Bodlejana in Oxford hrg. 1. Thl. Königsberg-i.-Pr.: Koch. 1 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BÖRMER, J. F. Regesta imperii. V. 1198-1272. 5. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 7 M. 80 Pf.
CASSE, le Baron A. du. La Crimée et Sebastopol de 1855 à 1858. Paris: Charles-Lavanzelle. 2 fr.
CORNIU, Dr. Un Patriote savoisien pendant la Révolution française: biographie de C. J. Caffé. Paris: Ducloz. 7 fr. 50 c.
EPMERIS epigraphica. Vol. VIII. Fasc. 2. Berlin: Reimer. 8 M.
GUIRAUD, J. Les Registres de Grégoire X. (1271-1276). 1er Fasc. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr. 40 c.
MILCHGÖPFER, A. Untersuchungen üb. die Dementordnung d. Kleisthenes. Berlin: Reimer. 2 M. 50 Pf.
MOLLAT, G. Quellenbuch zur Geschichte der deutschen Politik im 19. Jahrh. Leipzig: Haessel. 3 M.
REINACH, S. Antiquités du Bosphore cimmérien (1854), réédité. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 30 fr.
SANKER, H. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. vorarlbergischen Gerichte. Tannberg. 2. Hft. Innsbruck: Wagner. 1 M. 60 Pf.

SYLLOE epigraphica orbis romani. Vol. II. Inscriptiones Italiae, edidit D. Vaglieri. Fasc. 1. Rome: Loescher. 1 fr. 50 c.
URKUNDE zur Geschichte d. Kurfürsten Friedrich Wilhelm v. Brandenburg. 12. Bd. Politische Verhandlg. VIII. Hrg. v. F. Hirsch. Berlin: Reimer. 25 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- CROOK, A. R. Ueb. einige fossile Knochenfische aus der mittleren Kreide v. Kansas. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 10 M.
ENGLER, A. Die systematische Anordnung der monokolyledoneen Angiosepimen. Berlin: Reimer. 2 M. 50 Pf.
ROTHLEITZ, A. Die Perm-, Trias- u. Jura-Formation auf Timor u. Rotti im indischen Archipel. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 16 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- MÖLKEN, H. In commentarium de bello africano quaestiones criticae. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEWTON STONE.

Aberdeen: Sept. 3, 1892.

As I have had the advantage of the company and criticism of Lord Southesk and Mr. W. R. Paton at the Newton Stone, it may be worth while to send a few notes on the difficulties of the two texts. Let me first say that it would be fortunate if all our ancient monuments were so well taken care of as is the Newton Stone by Mr. Gordon of Newton.

In regard to the script, Dr. Stokes used my copy, which differed from all others known to me in one important part, at the end of the second line. I see no reason to alter my reading in any point, though I quite admit that the text is very difficult at that place. The clue to the difficulty seems to me to be given by a perfectly correct observation made by Lord Southesk. The last four letters of the second line are, as he has stated, added as an afterthought, when the inscription had been completed. I think they may possibly, or even probably, be by the same hand; but they are not so deeply and firmly cut, and the hand of the engraver has (if my judgment is correct) slipped three times, causing three small notches at the right side of three letters. The first two of these notches run into the succeeding letter on the right, but the last is attached to the right side of the last letter. The first of these notches is between the letters which I, like Dr. Stokes, interpret as V and A; and I quite acknowledge that the notch might very naturally be taken as forming part of the letter on the right, and as transforming the A into a different symbol, which occurs nowhere else on the stone. The difficulty is increased by the fact that a small natural fissure in the stone runs athwart the right limb of the V and divides it into two distinct parts. While I frankly acknowledge these difficulties, I must say that I cannot doubt about the reading; the general character of the handwriting and the run of the letters speak clearly to me. This however is a subjective impression; and better scholars than I am have differed from my reading, though I retain the belief that if they had worked for twelve years at rock inscriptions, as I have done, they would agree with me on this point.

These four final letters, which alone in the whole script are on a different face of the stone, must I think be interpreted as a separate word added as an afterthought; Lord Southesk's acute remark favours Dr. Stokes's interpretation of the four letters as an epithet of the preceding name.

The first letter of the third line consists of a C, followed by a very doubtful mark. In my first copy this mark is indicated by an uncertain and almost shapeless arrangement of dots. I think this is correct, and that the mark is natural. The first three letters of this line then would be equivalent to S U O. But of this I am very far from confident; and Lord Southesk considers the first letter to be C followed by a vertical stroke extending below the line.

Except in those two cases, there was little or no difference of opinion between Lord Southesk and myself about the forms of the symbols; they are clear, bold, and deep, and the only difficulty is with regard to their interpretation. In regard to the first symbol of the fifth line, he pointed out to me that the form is even more distinctly indicated than is represented in my original copy; but, like me, he has interpreted it as M, with which Dr. Stokes agrees. He is disposed to think that there are two separate letters, where Dr. Stokes and I see only one—viz., V or U. My first inclination, when I saw the stone in March, was to the same view; but I concluded that the varieties shade off into each other by such slight gradations of form that they should be interpreted as varying forms of one letter.

I now come to the Ogams, which are much more difficult, and in which objective certainty cannot be attained. Subjective estimate of the artist's intention must come into play. In the first half there is no distinct stem line. Its place is filled by the edge between two faces of the stone; but, as the faces are very irregular and the edge is nowhere very well marked, and is often hardly possible to be distinguished, it is sometimes very difficult to decide whether the marks are intended to be cross lines or side lines.

Lord Southesk agreed with me that the group representing I is probably the first symbol. A little above it, where a symbol might be looked for, there is a cross line; but it is longer both to right and left than the Ogams are, and is, in all probability, a purely natural fissure. We agreed that there was no absolute impossibility in the supposition that a symbol was here intended, but that as a fissure existed here, the engraver would be likely to choose a smooth surface for his first letter. After I follow D D A. The next group is doubtful; it consists of five cross lines, which are distinctly sloped. The first impression then is that they represent R. But, as Lord Southesk rightly says, the engraver was very arbitrary in respect of slope in many other cases. There can be no doubt that the lowest line of the group is less sloped than the uppermost line, and is nearly horizontal. They are all decidedly shorter than the lines of any certain R. Accordingly, I change my opinion about this group, and think that Lord Southesk may be right in considering it as I; but certainty is unattainable.

In regard to the next group, there is a doubt whether it consists of a single line right or cross with a group of four beneath, or is a single group of five lines right; there are thus three possibilities. It is undeniable that the single line is slightly more distant from the one beneath it than the four lines of the group are from one another; and that the single line is very slightly longer than the four. But it is also undeniable that the general impression (to which I trust greatly) is of a single group of five lines right, separated by bold intervals from I (or R) above and N below. According to the general impression, then, the symbol is Q; but here, again, certainty cannot be reached. If Q before N is an impossible interpretation, we must then fall back on the division into two groups. The lower group is C, and the upper line must, I think, be taken as H rather than as A; though the line is longer than those below, yet it can hardly be called a cross line. (Lord Southesk does not agree that this alternative is possible. I think it is.)

Then follow three groups, all indubitably N. I have from the first thought that this was due to an error of the scribe, who cut wrongly the central vowel; but here, again, subjective opinion comes in.

The next five groups are certainly those interpreted as V (or F) O R R E.

The next two groups are the same; each of five long lines, left, yet sloping in a very marked way. They are unusually far to the left of the uppermost edge of the stone. If we regard the position left of the stem line, they are N N: if we regard the slope (as Lord Southesk does), they are R R. Then follows certainly I, and after that an \times crossing the stem line, commonly interpreted as P.

Below this there is great difficulty; the lines are faint. First probably comes a group of three cross lines, U (but two cross lines O seemed to me not absolutely impossible). Next comes a single cross line A. Opposite this begins the artificial stem line which turns away upwards. Below this artificial stem line there are a number of cross lines; it is not possible to be certain how many there are, but perhaps seven, a group of five, and one of two, i.e., I O, can be distinguished.

On the artificial stem line, the symbols are probably those indicating I O S I R. The lines in the last group are slightly more sloped than those of the second last group; but the difference in this respect is not very marked, and considering how variable the engraver is in respect of slope, it could not be asserted positively that the last group represents R, not I. As to S, the question comes in as to what is right and what is left. The stem line is now running upwards—in the first half it ran downwards; direction is now reversed, and the question might arise whether our ideas of right and left ought also to be reversed or not? This is a question which only those practised in Ogams can determine by analogy of other cases.

It is possible, but (in my opinion) not probable, that the symbol H occurs as first on the artificial stem line. There is a slight mark, but I incline to believe it to be a natural fissure; for it is at too acute an angle with the stem line, it is very short, and is also very thick and irregular.

One more question remains as to the Ogams: why are they continued below the departure of the artificial stem line? Assuming the correctness of the very uncertain reading given above, we see two possible alternatives. (1) The engraver found towards the foot of the stone that the unevenness of the surface, with a deep vertical fissure about the place where the edge ought to be, made the two lowest groups I O very uncertain. He therefore began an artificial line opposite the next symbol above—viz., A, and repeated I O on the new stem. (2) The engraver, having two pairs of groups, closely resembling each other, omitted one pair, and afterwards, noticing the omission, added it below the junction of the two lines.

There is no doubt that the surface of the stone was almost exactly in its present state when the two inscriptions were engraved. The fissures now visible were all there; and no attempt was made to prepare the surface for the inscriptions.

Lord Southesk, who has seen these notes, asks me to add that, when he in a letter to the ACADEMY denied the existence of scores below the beginning of the artificial stem line, he was misinterpreting his own notes made ten years previously. His notes were intended to signify that he did not consider the marks to rank among the symbols of the inscription, and he afterwards wrongly understood them to mean that there were no marks at all.

I have now stated the facts as fairly as I can, and I need only add my acknowledgment of the kind terms in which both Dr. Stokes and Lord Southesk in their published letters have referred to myself.

W. M. RAMSAY.

SCIENCE.

A Cyclopaedic Dictionary of the Mang'anja Language, spoken in British Central Africa. By the Rev. David Clement Scott, Church of Scotland, Blantyre. (Edinburgh: Foreign Mission Committee of the Church of Scotland.)

THE study of the Bantu languages of Central and Southern Africa has considerably advanced of late years. A large number of more or less comprehensive vocabularies of new dialects spoken in the Congo basin or around the central lakes have appeared at various mission presses, all of which tend to show the curious homogeneity of this wide-spread group of tongues. Father Torrends, of the Jesuit Mission, and the Rev. F. W. Kolbe, and others, have attempted to survey it as a whole, from the standpoint of the comparative philologist; but for this, the materials on hand are as yet scarcely sufficient. We want a few more works on the scale and of the stamp of Bishop Colenso's Zulu Dictionary—to go back to one of the pioneers in this field—the Rev. Holman Bentley's Dictionary of the Kongo Languages, and the one under review.

Language in Africa—at any rate in Bantu-speaking Africa, which is really Africa proper—is seen, as it were, in the making. A fuller knowledge will probably throw much light on linguistic science, and modify if not wholly set aside the professedly tentative theories hitherto current. Mr. Scott avows his belief that “language is the poetic or creative attempt of a people to incarnate will and spirit in sound and word, and that it is neither a copy of nature nor unconscious reproduction of it, nor spasmodic sound.” Whether this is so or not, we certainly come into close contact with those simple sounds expressing general ideas generally called “roots,” and existing in the Aryan languages as a kind of legal fiction, and represented by supposed Sanskrit formulae, such as $\sqrt{\text{AR}}$ and $\sqrt{\text{PAD}}$. The essential characteristic of the Bantu speech, is—to quote Mr. Scott again—“its living touch with its root ideas.” Moreover—and this may sound strange to some people—there is no language which comes near it for expressing abstractions. It is very flexible, and has a power of marking minute distinctions possessed by no “Aryan” tongue.

Whatever may be thought of Mr. Scott's philological theories, there is no denying that this dictionary, unlike most dictionaries, is very interesting reading. Nearly every word is illustrated by sentences taken from actual native speech; and these are so arranged as to give at the same time glimpses into Mang'anja life and customs. Sometimes a word serves to introduce a complete story. Thus, under “Nadzikambe,” the chameleon, is given the myth of the chameleon and the lizard, sent by the Creator, with the messages of life and death. It is point for point the same as the Zulu legend, with this addition, in the Mang'anja version: “When people see the chameleon now they put tobacco into its paunchy mouth that the chameleon may die, because, say they, you delayed by the road when you should have arrived quickly; it were better that we return than that we should pass clean away; it is because of you and your habit of swinging your leg backwards and forwards before putting it down." The Zulus are either too much afraid of the uncanny creature's ill-luck, or too economical to waste good tobacco on so evil a beast. The story is also a good example of an "aetiological myth"—for Mr. Scott derives "nadzikambe" from na-dzi-kimbe-nkano—"he did not deliver himself of his message," which etymology looks as if it had suggested the story. The words magewera (a game), mzimu (a spirit), mubungu (god), and kachisi (temple, or "hut of sacrifice") have valuable notes—almost reaching the dimensions of little articles—appended to them.

The affinities of the Mang'anja language, according to Mr. Scott, are rather with the Zulu and Congo than the Swahili. But that there is a great similarity between all four is apparent from the following table. Where a blank occurs, the word used in that language is one which apparently has no connexion with the corresponding word in the others. This, of course, need not tell against the relationship; it is merely that one language has preferred a derivation from a different root to express the same idea; while cognate words are sometimes used in other senses. The same thing occurs over and over again in European languages. There is not the slightest similarity between the Spanish comer and the Italian mangiare, and philologists need not waste their time trying to find any: it is merely that the Spaniards preferred the Latin comedere for expressing the idea of eating, while the Italians used the less literary, if equally ancient, manducare. Again, finestra and fenêtre are direct derivatives from a Latin original which has nothing to do with the Spanish vendana and the Portuguese janella (= dianella). The origin of these preferences would be an interesting subject of speculation. Why did the Spaniards specially connect the idea of air with a window (we have the same thing, quite independently, in our English word) and the Portuguese that of daylight? Is it that the latter have an insurmountable objection to fresh air? But to return to our table. Here it is:—

English.	Mang'anja.	Swahili.	Congo.	Zulu.
Fire	moto	moto	—	—
Hand	dzanja	[mkono]	koko	(is)andhla.*
House	nyumba	nyumba	nzo	(in)hlu.
Child	mwana	mwana	mwana	(um)twana.
Man	muntu	mtu	muntu	(u)mntu.
	pl. antu	wantu	wantu	(aba)ntu.
Elephant	njobvu	ndovu	nzau	(in)dhlouu.
Fowl	nkuku	kuku	nsusu	(in)kuku.
Bird	—	nyuni	nuni	(in)yonu.
To go	-enda	-enda	-enda	The verb -enda is used by Zulus in a special and restricted sense. The usual word for "go" is namba .
One	-modzi	{(moja)	-moshi	-sye.
Two	-wiri	{-wili	-wole	-bili.
		{(mbili)	{-ole
Three	-tatu	-tatu	-tatu	-tatu.
Four	-ya	-yne	-ya	-ne.
Five	(zi)sanu	-tanu	-tanu	-hlanu.

(The numerals are given without prefixes.)

* It will be noticed that the highly developed Zulu gutturals are not found in the parallel languages. They appear to be represented by nd, ny, nj, dz, &c.

After five the numbers vary in a curious way. The Congo has distinct words up to ten (-kumi in all except Zulu, which has ishumi). The Swahili has borrowed the Arabic numerals for six and seven (sita and saba); eight is -nane (= nne + nne = 4 + 4; and nine kenda, which does not seem to be paralleled in the others. The Mang'anja express 6 by 5+1 (zisanu-ndichimodzi) and so on (7=5+2) up to kumi. In Zulu, we have tatisitupa, 6, and kombisa, 7, but for 8, "leave out 2 [from 10]" (ishiyangalombite) and for 9, "leave out one."

Mr. Scott has not attempted to give an English-Mang'anja section to his dictionary, further than by appending a short vocabulary at the end, which serves as a guide in finding words. This makes it a difficult book to use in acquiring the language, except by M. Gouin's process (we mean one of his unsuccessful ones) of learning it straight off from the beginning. But, as it stands, it is a notable achievement, especially when we consider that the language which supplies it with 682 pages of words has only been written down within the last seventeen years—the time the Blantyre Mission has been in existence. Mr. Scott, we believe, has been connected with it since 1881; and to him the largest share of this linguistic work is certainly due.

A short summary of the grammar and an excellent table, showing at a glance the structure of the language, are prefixed to the dictionary. A table of the numerals would be a most desirable addition. At present, they can only be found by looking them up singly in the English-Mang'anja section at the end, where they are not all given—e.g., we arrived at the Mang'anja for 5 by the following process: "five" was not to be found in the vocabulary, so we looked for "six," and, by great good luck, finding it to be (as already stated) zisanu-ndichimodzi, we obeyed a happy inspiration, and looked up "zisanu" in the first part. This defect should be easily remedied. The second part, while the language is, as far as we azungu are concerned, yet in the making, cannot be of equal importance with the first, and its extension must necessarily be a work of time; still we hope to see it accomplished in due course.

A. WERNER.

THE ORKHON INSCRIPTIONS.

WE quote from the Times the following report of two papers read before the Oriental Congress, in the section of China and the Far East:

"A paper was contributed by Mr. E. Delmar Morgan on 'The Results of the Russian Archaeological Researches in the Basin of the Orkhon in Mongolia.' Mr. Morgan drew attention to a splendid atlas of plates presented to the Congress by Dr. Radlof, of St. Petersburg, containing photographs and facsimiles of inscriptions copied by the members of the archaeological expedition sent by the Imperial Academy of Sciences to investigate the ruins on the Orkhon. These ruins comprise (1) the remains of an ancient Uighur town west of the Orkhon, (2) the ruins of a Mongol palace to the east of that river, and a large granite monument shattered into pieces. Excavations were also made of the burial places of the Khans of the Tuki or Turks inhabiting this part of Asia previously to the Uighurs, who drove them out. The earliest inscription dates from 732 A.D., and refers to a brother of the Khan of the Tuki mentioned in Chinese history. Additional interest attaches to these inscriptions owing to the fact that some of the characters are identical with those discovered on the Yenissei. The expedition to which the paper referred visited the monastery of Erdenitsu, and found there a number of stones with inscriptions in Mongol, Tibetan, and Persian, brought from the ruins of a town not far off. These ruins have been identified with Karakoram, the capital city of the first Khans of the dynasty of Jenghiz Khan.

"Prof. Donner wished to present to the Congress a publication by the Société Finno-Ougrienne at Helsingfors, containing inscriptions from the valley of the Orkhon, brought home by the Finnish Expedition in 1890. There are three large monuments, the first erected 732 A.D., by order of the Chinese Emperor in honour of Kiueh-Jeghin, younger brother of the Khan of the Tuki (Turks). On the west side it has an inscription in Chinese, speaking of the relations between the Tuki and Chinese. The Tartar historian, Ye-lu-chi, of the thirteenth century, saw it and gave some phrases from the front of it. On all the other sides is a long inscription of 70 lines in runic characters, which cannot be a mere translation of the Chinese because it numbers about 1400 words, while the Chinese inscription contains only about 800. The other monument has also a Chinese inscription on one side, but greatly effaced. On the other sides are runic inscriptions in 77 lines at least. This monument was erected, by order of the Chinese Emperor, in honour of Mekilikn (Mogulen), Khan of the Tuki, who died 733 A.D. About two-thirds of its runic inscription nearly line for line contains the same as the first monument, a circumstance of importance for the true reading of the text. The third monument, which has been the largest one, was destroyed by lightning and shattered into about fifty fragments. It is trilingual—viz., Chinese, Uighur, and runic or Yenissei characters. On comparing the texts they are found to contain many identical words and forms, proving that the languages were nearly identical. M. Devéria thinks that this is the memorial stone which the Uighur Khan, 784, A.D., placed at the gateway of his palace to record the benefits the Uighurs had done to the Chinese Empire. Concerning the characters of these inscriptions they show small modifications. The tomb inscriptions at Yenissei seem to be the more original; some characters have been altered in the Tuki alphabet and also in the third monument, representing in that way the three several nations—the Tuki, the Uighurs, who followed them, and the Hakas, or Khirgiz, at Yenissei. A comparison of the characters themselves with the alphabets in Asia Minor shows that about three-fourths of them are identical with the characters of the Ionian, Phrygian, and Syrian [?]. The other part has resemblances with the graphic systems of India and Central Asia. We can now expect that the deciphering of these interesting inscriptions will soon give us reliable specimens of the oldest Turk dialects."

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME JAINA-PRĀKRIT AND PĀLI WORDS.

Harold Wood, Essex.

2. Samiti, Samita = sati, sata.

In "Pāli Miscellany," p. 58, Trenckner has pointed out that in Milinda-Pāṇha (p. 3), the Pāli sati (Skt. smṛiti) has been replaced by sammuti (Skt. sammati). Something like this seems to have taken place in Jaina texts. In them we never find sai (= smṛiti) or sau (= smṛita)* employed in a technical sense, as in Buddhist phraseology. In their place we find samīi, samīyi, or samīti, and samīa, samīya, or samīta.

The Jaina samīti is referred by the Petersburg Dictionary to the root i, as if it were the ordinary classical Sanskrit samīti = "union," &c. Samīta is usually derived from the causative of gam or gram. In the scholiast's explanations, saṃiti and saṃita are connected as regards their meaning, but disconnected as to their etymology; but they ought, strictly speaking, to come from the same root, just as Pāli sati and sata are from the radicle smri.

* We do not meet with satinam = Pāli satimā in Jaina texts.

In meaning Pāli sati answers to Jaina saṃiti, and sata to saṃita; just as from smri we get the Prakṛit saṃarati, so smriti could become sumiti or sumiti, and from smrita would arise sumita or sumita. In Setu. ix. 87 we find vi-samita referred by the Commentators to vismrita, as well as to visamita and vi-grāmita. According to the scholiasts, the Jaina saṃita ought to mean "restrained," "calm"; but the exact sense required is "circumspect." The Commentators are often in doubt as to the etymology of saṃita; sometimes it is connected with saṃatā, and even with saṃyak.

If we examine a few passages where saṃita = saṃita occurs in Jaina texts, we shall clearly see that it answers in meaning to Skt. smṛita (cf. Pāli sato sampajāno), and not to saṃita or grāmita:

"Jao nam samane bhagavan Mahāvire anagāre jae iriyā-saṃie bhāsa-saṃie esanā-saṃie āyāna-bhanda-matta - nikkhevaṇā - saṃie uccārapāsaṇa - khela-singhāna - jalla - paritthāvaṇiyā - saṃie mana - saṃie vāya-saṃie kāya-saṃie (Kalpasūtra, Jin., § 118; see also Sāmācāri, § 53-4).

The scholiast explains here, as elsewhere, saṃie by samyak pravṛitta (see Praṇavyākaraṇa, p. 338).

The following is, with some slight alteration, Prof. Jacobi's translation of the foregoing extract:

"Henceforth the venerable Mahāvira was houseless, (1) circumspect (saṃita) in his walking, (2) circumspect in his speaking, (3) circumspect in his begging, (4) circumspect in his accepting anything, in the carrying of his outfit and drinking-vessel; (5) circumspect in relieving himself; *circumspect in his thoughts, words, and acts" (see Sūyagadāṃgasutta ii. 2.23, p. 704; ii. 2.73, p. 753).

Compare the following passage from the Mahā-pariṇibbānasutta, pp. 18 and 19:

"Idha . . . bhikkhu abhikkante paṭikkante sampajānakārī hoti, ālokite vilokite s. h., sammāñijite paṣārite s. h., sūghātipattācivaradhāraṇe s. h., asite pite khāyite s. h., uccārapāsaṇakamme s. h., gate thite nisīdane sutte jāgarite bhāsīte tūṣṭibhāve s. h., evam eva kho . . . bhikkhu sampajāno hoti."

"He (a mendicant) acts . . . in full presence of mind, whatever he may have to do, in going out and coming in, in looking and watching, in bending in his arm or stretching it forth, in wearing his robes or carrying his bowl, in eating and drinking, in consuming or tasting, in walking or standing or sitting, in sleeping or waking, in talking and in being silent" (Buddhist Suttas, p. 29).

"Tam ca bhikkhu parinnāya subbatte saṃite care" (Sūy. i. 3, § 1, p. 214). "Suvrataḥ cōbhana vṛatayuktaiḥ saṃitah pañca-saṃitibhīcāret saṃyamānusthānam kuryāt" (Com.).

"Pañcamahāvayajutto pañcasamio tiguttigutto ya" (Uttarādhyaṇa xix. 19, p. 606). "Mrigaputro pañcamahā vṛatayuktah Mrigaputra pañcamahāvṛata sahita pañca-saṃitī saṃitah trigupta-guptah" (Com.).

"Je khalu bho virā saṃitā sahita sayā jayā saṃghadāṃsino āvaraya aṭatahā logam uvehamānā iti saccamsi parivicittimsu" (Āyār. i. 4.4, § 1-4).

"There are those who have established themselves in the truth heroes endowed with knowledge, always exerting themselves, full of equanimity, valuing the world (as it deserves)."

Here saṃitā is left untranslated; sahitā = "wise"; jayā = "restrained." Saṃghadāṃsino can scarcely mean "full of equanimity" (nirantaradarśinah, cūbhācūbhāsa), but probably signifies "having a right view of matter" and the impermanency of its form, whether beautiful or otherwise (see Jaina Sūtras i. p. 41).

* Sometimes saṃita is rendered "guarded" (see Āyār. i. 3.2.1; i. 4.4.1).

Saṃghadā I take to be an error for saṃkṛhaya, i.e. saṃkṛhāda, Skt. saṃskṛita, Pāli saṃkṛhata (see Sūyagadāṃgasutta i. 2.10, p. 150). As Pāyālacchi has *saṃkṛhayaṇa, "body," which Prof. Bühler refers to Skt. saṃkṛhātana, there may have been a Pkt. saṃghadā or saṃkṛhata, the body, as an assemblage of various constituents, like Pāli saṃussaya; if so, this only strengthens the view I take with regard to the meaning of "saṃghadāṃsino."

We must now return to saṃiti. We have seen that in the phrase pañca saṃiti saṃita the scholiasts connect saṃita with the five saṃitis mentioned in the quotation from the Kalpasūtra. According to Mādhaba's Sarvadarśana-saṃgraha, saṃiti is one of the divisions of saṃvara (the stopping of the ācraṇas), and signifies "the acting so as to avoid injury to all living beings,"+ or "the keeping the attention properly alive" (so as to see immediately if an insect is in the way.)

This "keeping the attention alive" is not the true meaning of the Skt. saṃiti, but of smṛiti; while "circumspect" demands that saṃita should be referred to smṛita, and not to saṃita or grāmita. The Jains were fond of the number five, and had five saṃitis, whereas the Buddhist had only four saṃipatthānas. The technical term smṛityupasthāna seems to have been occasionally turned by the Jains into "saṃti-patthāna" = "grānti-pratisthāna"!

R. MORRIS.

"TEL" OR "TELL."

Christ's College, Cambridge: Sept. 12, 1892.

I note with some amusement that in the last two numbers of the ACADEMY Prof. Sayce and Mr. H. Rassam find fault with the authorities of the British Museum for writing "Tell el-Amarna" with a double i in the first word. In point of fact, tell is the only correct transcription, the double letter being invariably used by accurate European scholars where the Arabs write a letter with tashdid. As regards the pronunciation, a correct speaker of modern Arabic actually sounds the l twice, except at the end of a sentence; thus in our name he would say Tel-lel-Amarna. According to Prof. Sayce "the final consonant is never doubled before a vowel in the pronunciation of Upper Egypt, and to write 'Tell' transports us out of Egypt into Syria." About Upper Egypt I cannot speak, but in Lower Egypt the l is certainly doubled before a vowel. Such is my own recollection and that of several eminent Arabists whom I have been able to consult during the meetings of the Oriental Congress. Moreover, the careful Spitta, who has called special attention to cases of lost doublings, writes our word with two ls in his phonetic transcriptions. Thus the words "out of Egypt into Syria" are nonsense; and in any case a local slovenly pronunciation of the vulgar ought not to govern a scholarly transcription. Will Prof. Sayce affirm that to write "Waterloo Place" instead of "Waterloo Plice" (as Mr. Punch sometimes has it) transports us out of London into Edinburgh?

W. ROBERTSON SMITH.

Matlock: Sept. 10, 1892.

I note that Mr. Rassam in the ACADEMY of September 10 corroborates Prof. Sayce's correction of the spelling Tell el-Amarna—employed by the British Museum.

* In H.D. we find saṃkṛhayaṇa with the v.l. saṃkṛhanaya for saṃkṛhayaṇa = saṃkṛhātana.

+ Colebrooke's Essays, i. p. 419.

‡ Wilson's Essays on the Religion of the Hindus, i. p. 311.

I would beg with all deference to so great an authority to differ from Prof. Sayce as to the propriety of omitting the second l in Tell. It is undoubtedly an Arabic word, or at least a word brought into Arabic, and liable to all the rules of trilateral roots. Its plural is Tulul (or in Upper Egypt more often Tihl). The two ls become visible in Arabic writing in the plural, and hence it cannot properly drop an l even though it may be somewhat loosely pronounced before the article. From my own observation I think that it is the l of the article which is more or less elided, as in the case of El Ahāwah, a village about fifteen kilometres to the south of Sahag. The villagers call it practically "Lahāwah," and this spelling has been adopted in the English nomenclature of its canal. The el-is of course generally dropped when canals or police posts, &c., are referred to in European writings and speech. In the case of Tall Basta (Bubastis) the double l of the Tall is heard quite distinctly, and the Fathah has its true sound as of u in the English word "but." The whole of the Indian races and English races pronounce this sound naturally; but to the French, Turks, Greeks, &c., it is apparently a most difficult one, and they try to indicate it on paper by short e, and the result is that these, and other kindred words like Kelb, Meklūb, are sounded quite differently from the Arabian pronunciation of them.

In conclusion, I do not see the necessity of representing a doubtful phonetic local peculiarity of Upper Egypt, where the peculiarity probably arises from the excess of ls so near each other. If this principle is admitted, we would have to write Cairene words without the Qif, as it certainly requires a very delicate ear to hear its sound in a Cairene's mouth. We would thus have to write Alyūb and ullah for Qalyub, the town, and Qallah a goblet of water.

I would like to know if any of your readers have observed that the words tall a hillock, and kōm a heap, are used for artificial and natural mounds respectively in the Delta.

J. C. ROSS, Lt.-Col.

Late Inspector-General of Irrigation, Egypt.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Two works upon which Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie has been engaged for some time will be published immediately by Mr. Nutt. In The Beginnings of Writing in Thibet the author examines the existing systems of writing in Central Asia, and shows how they are connected through China with the cuneiform writing of the Euphrates valley. In his Yü-King he further develops and defends his well-known views respecting the nature and origin of this ancient Chinese classic.

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. are the publishers of the address delivered by Prof. Max Müller at the opening of the recent Oriental Congress, and also of the presidential address of Mr. Gladstone in the section of Archaic Greece and the East.

M. VICTOR CHAUVIN, professor of oriental history and literature at the University of Liège, has for some years past devoted himself to the compilation of an Arabic Bibliography, in continuation of that of Schnurrer; and he has just issued a specimen volume (Liège: Vaillant-Carmanne). This consists of: (1) a preface of nearly forty pages, in which he expounds most enlightened views about bibliography in general, and about Arabic bibliography in particular; (2) an alphabetic index of the names of authors, &c., in Schnurrer, whose arrangement was only chronological; and (3) a specimen of his own work, dealing with proverbs. The period he proposes to cover is from 1810, the year before the publication of the second edition of Schnurrer's Bibliotheca Arabica (1811), down to 1885, when the task is taken over by Friederici's Bibliotheca Orientalis and the Orientalische Bibliographie, edited by Prof. August Müller of Halle. The subject is limited to works published in Christian Europe, thus excluding the numerous lithographed texts which are always appearing in the East; but it will comprise the most insignificant pamphlet or paper in a Review, and will also give full details about each piece. The order of publication will be according to subject matter, and the whole will fill from fifteen to twenty volumes. The price of subscription is fixed at fifty centimes for a sheet of sixteen pages, but the author promises to reserve twenty copies for free distribution among young students. The work of compilation is entirely finished, and it will be sent to press as subscriptions come in. Prof. Chauvin incidentally mentions that the library of Schnurrer was purchased by All Souls College, Oxford.

MR. VINCENT A. SMITH has contributed to the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal a second paper upon "Graeco-Roman Influence on the Civilisation of Ancient India," in continuation of a former one, which was noticed at length in the ACADEMY of September 5, 1891. On the present occasion he is chiefly concerned with summarising articles on the subject by two foreign scholars, M. Senart and Prof. Weber. The former, while dealing primarily with inscriptions written in what is now called the Gandharian script, treats also of the sculptures associated with those inscriptions, which he is disposed to assign to the first half of the second century A.D. The latter devotes himself almost exclusively to the literary monuments of ancient Indian civilisation, pointing out in detail the correspondences in Greek literature. He mentions Sanskrit names for "pen," "ink," and "book," derived from the Greek μέλαν, κάλαμος, and ποσειδών; and finds traces of Homer in both the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyana. He goes on to suggest that the Aesopian fable was borrowed by the Buddhists from Greece, and even that the triple doctrine of dharma, artha, and kāma was possibly derived from τὰ κατὰ, ἀφ' ἑλίου, ἡδὲ αἰς Plato. Finally, he deals briefly with the resemblances in doctrine, legend, and ritual between Buddhism and Christianity, not hesitating to say that each has borrowed from the other in some particulars. For example, "rosary" is apparently a mistranslation of japamālā = "prayer-necklace," japā meaning also the China rose. Mr. Vincent Smith's summary of these two papers is rendered more valuable by a running commentary of his own.

THE August number of the Indian Antiquary—which is now appearing with commendable regularity—contains an article on the Bharaut inscriptions, by Dr. E. Hultzsch, of Bangalore. The inscriptions on the Buddhist Stupa of Bharaut were discovered and copied by Sir A. Cunningham in 1873; and most of them were removed by him, for safe preservation, to the Indian Museum at Calcutta. The present article is based upon mechanical impressions of them, made in 1885, and published at the time by Dr. Hultzsch in German. Only one of them supplies a date, which falls within the second or first century B.C. Their main interest consists in the fact that the inscriptions describe the sculptures connected with them, which themselves represent scenes in the life of Buddha. Most of these scenes can be identified in the Pali collection of Jatakas; and one of the inscriptions actually includes an almost literal translation of a verse in the Jataka Book. Dr. Hultzsch's article gives the text and translation of no less than 160 short inscriptions, together with a Prakrit and Sanskrit index. We may add that the Indian Antiquary is publishing a translation, by Mr. G. A. Grierson, of M. Senart's important work on the inscriptions of Piyadasi or Asoka; and that the present instalment deals with the relation of the Gatha or mixed Sanskrit of some of these inscriptions to the normal classical Sanskrit.

MR. CHARLES JOHNSTON, of the Bengal Civil Service, has published a cloth-bound pamphlet entitled Useful Sanskrit Nouns and Verbs (Luzac). He here prints, in Roman characters, as an introduction to Sanskrit grammar, paradigms of the simple declensions and conjugations, in a form in which they may most easily be learnt by heart.

THERE has lately been appearing in Science (New York) a series of papers upon the Maya hieroglyphs. Prof. Cyrus Thomas, of the Bureau of Ethnology—who has already published a study of the Troano MS.—claims to have discovered a key to their decipherment, based upon the statements of Bishop Landa. While admitting that there may be a certain number of ideographs or conventional symbols, he contends that the great majority of the characters are truly phonetic. His theory seems to have won the approval of other American scholars; but it is strongly contested by Dr. Ed. Seler, of Steglitz, who has long studied the subject. His position is the converse of that of Prof. Thomas, namely that, though "there existed in the Maya language compound hieroglyphs giving the name of a deity, a person, or a locality, whose elements united on the phonetic principle," yet "great part of the hieroglyphs were conventional symbols, built up on the ideographic principle." Prof. Thomas further claims to have found in the Palenque Tablet that the days of the month are reckoned, as in the Dresden Codex, not from the first of the given month, but from the last day of the preceding month.

FINE ART.

HISTORICAL TOWERS OF BELGIUM.

Tours et Tourelles Historiques de la Belgique. (Brussels: Claesen.)

WE owe to the enterprise of M. Lyon Claesen, the Brussels publisher of the true livre de luxe (whose London agency, it is worth mentioning, is at Mr. Hugo Cassires, 13, Paternoster-row), that book of art and elegance, of antiquarian interest and picturesque charm, Tours et Tourelles Historiques de la Belgique. The book, or the portfolio rather—to which attention has hitherto been but insufficiently drawn—consists of fifty chromo-lithographs executed in the finest, because the broadest, manner, after the water-colour sketches of M. Jean Baes. M. Jean Baes, who obtained an important decoration in virtue of the ten of these drawings which were first completed and exhibited, holds an official appointment at Brussels, but is yet more distinguished by his own manly and complete talent, by his individuality as a draughtsman of architecture, who never sacrifices picturesqueness to accuracy, nor accuracy to picturesqueness. And these drawings of his—the fifty towers and turrets of church and town-hall, from the simplicity of Blakenberg to the elaborate grace of Antwerp and Brussels—are reproduced with a success that almost creates an illusion by the dexterous chromo-lithographers who have grappled with the business of translating to perfection the work of M. Baes's hand. And M.

Baes—who is as fitted to deal with the themes he has chosen as was our English architectural draughtsman, Mr. John Fulleylove, when he ventured on the depicting of that which was most exquisite in Oxford and Cambridge—has, from the first to the last, from the earliest group of drawing down to the design which completed the admirable collection, contrived to impart an unusual variety to a theme in itself considerably varied. For in the course of inspecting all these towers and turrets, domes, roofs, spires, façades, and gable-ends, we pass, inevitably, from sacred work to secular, from a pure to a mixed style, from florid Gothic to severe Renaissance, or to that which is still more characteristic of the church and municipal as indeed of the domestic buildings of Belgium—a very free Classic, a Renaissance royant, bizarre, at times fantastic and whimsical. It was justly said by a professor of the architectural art in London that it were well for practical students—he might have included also students theoretic and historic—to learn a good deal to begin with of the Gothic in France and England and of the Classic and Renaissance in Italy before knowing anything of those treasures of architectural art in Belgium which lack severity and, above all, purity, but which yet, when taken at the right place and moment, are delights as legitimate as they are fascinating. And when the student has earned the right to enjoy these things and to enter into them, he will find no guide so agreeable, no cicerone so convincing, as these chromos from the drawings of M. Jean Baes. We spoke of their variety, and of a variety of treatment excelling even that which is the natural privilege of a theme in which we pass from the lace-like tower of Antwerp to the crown-capped steeple at Audenarde, from the belfry of the ruined church at Heyst-sur-mer, swept by the wind and with the sea grasses greenish grey at the tower's base, to the oriental-like, pagoda-like steeple of the church at Léau, and, at Bruges, from the Chapelle du Saint Sang to the for-once-elegant massiveness of the great square tower of St. Sauveur. This variety of treatment M. Baes has obtained in part by a due recognition—admirable indeed but unusual in an architectural draughtsman—of the effects, not precisely of atmosphere, but of illumination and weather, which give the interest of change to things beheld on successive days or in different hours. There is in the drawings abundance of local colour, apart from that which is supplied by stones, grey and yellow, by slate roofs, by timber platforms and galleries, but to anyone who is acquainted with the conditions of art it will be evident that mere atmospheric effects must in such drawings as M. Baes's be put into the second place. For where the artist is occupied very visibly with atmosphere he must cease to be occupied seriously with form—definiteness departs from his vision of the subject; pure form (which is the very business of M. Baes and of his fellows) eludes him. Now in Tours et Tourelles form has never eluded M. Baes. It is seized boldly and scientifically, and it is conveyed with decisiveness and with agreeable picturesqueness and breadth. We ought earlier to have called attention to a work so authoritative and so genuinely artistic.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE ART MAGAZINES.

It is not often that a poetical dream finds such adequate illustration as has been the fortune of Maurice de Guérin's "Centaur," in the Magazine of Art for September. Those, however, who have noted Mr. Arthur Lemon's pictures of Centaur-life will not be surprised at the spirit and poetry with which he has accomplished his congenial task. Mr. Charles Wibley's translation is also very good. This, with Mr. C. Rickett's charming illustration of Sir Thomas Wyatt's sonnet to "Mistress Anne Bullen," would entitle this number of the magazine to special notice; but the rest of it is well filled with an article by Mme. Villari on the late Italian painter Barabino, Mr. Harry Tilly's notes on Burmese Art, Mr. Claude Phillips's review of the Sculpture of the Year, and an enthusiastic note by Mr. James Orrock on David Cox's famous "Vale of Clwyd." The reputation of the magazine for wood engraving is well sustained by Prof. Berthold's admirable rendering of Lord Sackville's celebrated group of Eliza Anne Linley (Mrs. Sheridan) and her brother.

EQUALLY good, according to the special standard which the Portfolio has adhered to quietly through many years, is this month's number of that periodical. Two photographs, at once interesting, unacknowledged, and fine, give us nearly all that black and white can give, of Moretto's grand figure of Santa Giustina, one of the glories of the Imperial Picture Gallery at Vienna, and of that forcible picture of St. Victor, a Donor, (ascribed to Van der Goes) which was one of the principal attractions of the late exhibition of Netherlandish Painters at the Burlington Fine Arts Club. The former illustrates Mr. Claude Phillips's valuable paper on the Brescian Master, the latter Mr. Walter Armstrong's learned article on the exhibition in Savile-row. A short paper on Mr. William Sandby's recently published book about his ancestors, "Thomas and Paul Sandby," by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, a note by the editor on Mr. D. Y. Cameron's very skilful etchings of the Clyde, one of which is given, and a continuation of Mr. Loftie's pleasant gossip about "The Inns of Court," complete a notable number of this magazine.

In the Art Journal we meet again the ubiquitous Mr. Claude Phillips in an article on the Salon of the Champs de Mars; but in spite of this the number is not very lively. The united energies of the editor and Mr. Percy Robinson fail to render their "Rambles in the Isle of Wight" more than tolerably entertaining; nor can Mr. W. W. Fenn's tragical story of "A Painter I knew," be regarded as a great success. Mr. Aymer Vallance's paper on "Knives, Spoons, and Forks," Mr. Herbert Cundall's on the Museums at Sheffield and Wolverhampton, and Mr. Carter's accounts of the Art Sale of 1892, though good of their kind, scarcely relieve the general flatness which prevails over both letterpress and illustrations.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY."

Fen Ditton, Cambridge: Sept. 12, 1892.

May I make one or two short remarks on Canon Taylor's kind and sympathetic review of my Origin of Metallic Currency? I shall only refer to questions of fact about which he has made slips.

He speaks of a Phœcean silver standard of 260 grs. What is his authority for this? Certainly Dr. Head, in his latest splendid volume, the Catalogue of Coins of Ionia (p. xxxvii.), seems to know nothing of it.

Dealing with my Homeric ox-talent, Canon Taylor says it may be jetisoned, and its place supplied by the Daric. Is Canon Taylor going to assign an earlier date than 520 B.C. to the oldest Darics?

Canon Taylor thinks the true value of the old Greek ox is got from Solon's commutation of the ox-tine into five silver drachms. But he overlooks the statement of Plutarch (who is our informant) that it was owing to the great scarcity of coin that Solon so acted. This therefore cannot be taken as normal price in early times.

He thinks the Boës at Delos was only worth two silver drachms, because if they had been gold drachms Pollux would have said they were gold. But if Pollux had meant a silver coin, he would have said didrachm, as he does just above, and would not have specified two Attic drachms—the very expression used by the anonymous metrologist when describing the gold Daric.

Canon Taylor gets a low gold value for the old Roman ox by a dreadful slip. He says, "When the Lex Tarpeia was passed, the value of the cow at Rome was 100 asses, or ten denarii; and as the denarius contained seventy grains of silver, the value of the ox in gold would be from forty-six to fifty-four grs. of gold," &c. The Lex Tarpeia, passed in 451 B.C., deals with asses librali. Canon Taylor speaks as if there were silver denarii issued at the same time. Surely he forgets that the earliest Roman silver coinage only begins in 268 B.C. This slip of his lands him in the difficulty of having silver to copper as 700:1.

Canon Taylor finds a difficulty owing to variation in price of oxen in mediæval times; he will find my answer to that on p. 153. In dealing with the price of the Egyptian ox, if he looks again at the passage he will find that my discussion makes it not so much the worse for my theory, but for Brugseh's date of 1000 B.C.

Canon Taylor asks pleasantly, "Were owls articles of barter among the Athenians?" He will find my answer to this on pp. 314 and 315.

Canon Taylor speaks of the law of progressive degradation as if it were fully established. Yet he himself does not hesitate to violate it when he makes the Daric the source of all Greek gold coins. The Daric was about 130 grs., the Attic and Macedonian staters 135 grs. Is this degradation, or is it not elevation?

WILLIAM RIDGEWAY.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: Sept. 11, 1892.

Perhaps Mr. Torr will be able to ascertain somewhat more about the vase 22,821 in the British Museum, which he quotes; for unhappily it is not difficult to point out erroneous labels and misplaced objects in that department. No label therefore is scientific evidence, let alone that strict legal evidence otherwise required by Mr. Torr.

When we know (1) who brought the vase to England; (2) who took it out of the tomb; (3) whether the tomb was intact, or had been entered by others; (4) who "the grandson of Pinetem" was; and (5) what other objects were found with it, and where they now are, we shall be in a position to consider the evidence.

It may, perhaps, be proved that one vase was buried at a date four centuries later than the dating found with hundreds of others; but until we know more of its history, an anonymous label is no proof.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS will publish in October Edward Burne-Jones: a Record and Review, from the pen of Mr. Malcolm Bell. This work will be illustrated with about one hundred reproductions, photogravures, and process blocks, from the most representative works of the artist, including many not hitherto published. Among these latter are: a photogravure of "King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid" from the original in the possession of Lord Wharncliffe, and another of a portrait of a young lady, the daughter of a well-known American scholar, with many facsimile engravings of studies and early pen-drawings unknown to the general public. The tall-paper edition with Japanese vellum proofs is limited to twenty-five copies, while of the ordinary edition 385 will be for sale in this country.

THE Christmas number of the Art Journal, known as the Art Annual, will be devoted to a memoir of Prof. Herkomer, by Mr. W. L. Courtney. The illustrations will include an original etching by Prof. Herkomer, a photogravure plate of "The Last Muster," and forty specially prepared illustrations of the artist's principal pictures and drawings.

THE paper by Major R. Ianbury Brown, on "The Fayum and Lake Morris," communicated to the recent Oriental Congress, will shortly be issued in book form, with photographs by the author, diagrams, and a new map. Mr. Stanford is the publisher.

A SECOND and revised edition of Coins and Medals: their place in History and Art, by Mr. Stanley Lane Poole, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. LANG, NEIL & Co. will open at Brighton, in October, an exhibition of pictures and other objects connected with Palestine, to illustrate a diorama and lectures.

THE first summer exhibition of pictures at St. Helens, under the auspices of the corporation, has recently closed. The total number of visitors during three months was 18,000, and the receipts were practically equal to the expenses.

THE Times of Friday last (September 9) devotes a special article to the casts from sculptures at Persepolis, which Mr. Cecil Smith has been able to obtain for the British Museum through the munificence of Lord Savile, whose interest in archaeology is evidently not confined to ancient Italy. A duplicate set of the casts is to be sent to the Metropolitan Museum at New York, the committee of which contributed towards the expense. Mr. H. Weld Blundell gave an account of the expedition to the recent Oriental Congress.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, Prof. Maspero communicated the result of the excavations carried out on the site of Memphis by M. de Morgan, who has just been confirmed in the appointment of director of excavations in Egypt. He has discovered among the ruins of the temple of Ptah a number of monuments of considerable importance. First, a large boat of granite, similar to that in the museum at Turin, on which the figures are destroyed; next, several fragmentary colossi of Ramesses II., and in particular two gigantic upright figures, dedicated by this king, of Ptah, the god of Memphis, enshrouded in mummy-wrappings and holding a sceptre in both hands; lastly, some isolated figures, arranged in a court or a chamber. The importance of this discovery, said Prof. Maspero, will be realised when we bear in mind that we possess no divine image of large size, and that the very existence of statues of gods in Egyptian temples has sometimes been denied.

MUSIC.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

LAST week no comment was made on the performance of Handel's fine Concerto in F for organ and orchestra on the Wednesday morning: the solo part was most effectively rendered by Mr. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral. The additional accompaniments of Mr. E. Prout to Handel's "Joshua" were also left unnoticed. The term "additional" is a misleading one; they are merely accompaniments to replace others not preserved in writing. Mr. Prout's skill in orchestration and knowledge of Handel mark him out as one of the best men to restore the old master.

On Thursday morning Dr. Parry's "Job" was produced under the composer's direction. On the music it is called an Oratorio, on the festival programme a Cantata; of the two titles the latter is certainly much more appropriate. It is somewhat late to congratulate the composer upon the success of his new work. By success we mean artistic success, for in the Cathedral there was naturally no demonstration of opinion either during or at the close of the performance. It is often said, and truly, that a bad book will kill the best music; but on the other hand, a composer runs no little danger in selecting such poetry as that contained in the Book of Job: if the one drag a composer down, the other may leave him far behind. It would be mere flattery to say that Dr. Parry has risen to the full height of the great argument, but from first note to last he has kept at a very high level. There is boldness and breadth in the music. He is particularly happy in his employment of chromatic notes and chords: they are never introduced so as to monopolise attention, or to obscure the general design of a passage, but rather to colour and strengthen. Indeed, if in respect to the general character of his music he has caught the spirit of Wagner, in his part-writing he has taken as his guide the master of masters, Bach. What higher, what better influences could a composer desire? But Dr. Parry never becomes a mere imitator. The work is divided into four scenes. In the first, after the enunciation of a dignified theme by the orchestra, the Narrator (baritone) tells of Job's prosperity, and then follows the dialogue in heaven. Here Dr. Parry holds great command over himself, and he appears to stretch rather than to paint the scene. The composer, who prepared his own book, has introduced a shepherd boy, who sings of his master's flocks. This soprano song is quaint and simple, and has evidently been inserted for the purpose of contrast. The chorus of the Sabeen horde is a graphic piece of writing, and the dramatic energy in Satan's invocation to the "wind of the sea" is intense. After another effective chorus comes the "Lamentation of Job," a bass solo. It lasts over a quarter of an hour, and yet it does not appear long, for the composer has endless variety of melody and rhythm, throughout following closely the spirit of the words. There are some moments in this solo in which he soars very high; from the Lento espressivo to the end there is displayed something more than talent. The chorus, "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge," is remarkable for sustained power and dignity. The closing words of the Narrator announcing the return of prosperity at last to Job seem an anti-climax—but thus ends the old story. The performance of "Job" under the composer's direction was excellent. The choir was heard at its best. Mr. Plunket Greene added to his reputation by his expressive delivery of the "Lamentation." Mr. E. Lloyd sang the part of Satan, and Mr. Watkin Mills was the Narrator. The programme also included Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, of which a very good performance was given, and Spohr's "Fall of Babylon."

In the evening Mr. C. Lee Williams's Church Cantata, "Gethsemane," was given under the composer's direction. This work must not be judged from a purely musical standard. It is really written for church use. The book was prepared by Mr. J. Bennett, who has woven together Gospel narrative and lyrics of his own. All through the work Mr. Williams aims at simplicity, and he has the happy art of being simple and yet not commonplace. Moreover, there are some clever "effects" without any special sense of labour. The Cantata is indeed admirably suited for use in church, and there is little doubt but that it will meet with a success equal to that obtained by his "Bethany." The reverent attention during the performance at Gloucester (which was exceedingly good) showed that it was fully appreciated. It was followed by the "Hymn of Praise."

The "Messiah" on Friday, and a "Special Nave Service" in the evening, brought the Festival to a conclusion. The production of Dr. Parry's "Job" was the special feature of the week; and it is a work that will undoubtedly influence—and for good—the form and character of oratorio in the immediate future.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Songs and Romances. By Pietro Mascagni. (Bosworth.) Anyone acquainted with the composer's two operas will peruse these songs with considerable curiosity. Here again we meet with the "Volkstied" element in the melodies, while in the accompaniments the rhythms and harmonies bear traces of art as opposed to nature. No 1, "Thy Star," is quiet and pleasing. No 2, "Penalty of Love," is fresh, and has a clever coda. No 3, "He loves me—loves me not," is the gem of the collection. It is but a trifle, and yet how wonderfully effective! The little "Gipsy" opening symphony, the quaint harmonies, the changes of tempo, the "precipitando" coda—everything shows the hand of a master. No 4, "The Rose," has an element of weirdness about it; the tremolo passage is quite original. No 5, "To the Moon," is full of rhythmical life. The Italian poems by various writers are presented in English. Some of the lines are excellent; but No. 1 has uncomfortable syllables for the singer, and at times word and musical accent do not well agree.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Parts 94 and 95. (London Music Publishing Company). A March in G by E. Boggetti arranged by Dr. Spark is not very exciting; the music is, in fact, plain. Mr. Hamilton Clark's "Dirge" is rather interesting, but on the whole patchy and vague. A Fugue in F by R. W. Bexfield is, as one might expect, Handelian in character. But why style this short piece a Fugue? It is barely a Fughetta. There are some good points about Mr. E. Hake's "Slow Movement," though it is spun out to too great a length. Mr. Walter Wesche's "Adagio" from a Sonata is a thoughtful movement, but there is something uncomfortable both in rhythm and harmony about the opening theme. Part 95 opens with a vigorous Toccata and Fugue, by Frank J. Sawyer; the music is clever, but dry. Mr. Barry M. Gilholy's "Andante" is graceful, though sentimental. The "Solemn March by M. Philip de Soyres is plain and straightforward. The Trio consists of a flowing theme. We cannot find anything particularly "solemn" in this March.

MUSIC NOTES.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Palestrina to celebrate the tercentenary of the death of Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina, "il principe della musica," which took place on February 4, 1594. It is proposed to erect a statue at Palestrina; to finish the decoration of the apse in the cathedral, in which the composer was baptised; and to have commemorative musical performances, both at Palestrina and at Rome, during the year 1894.

THE Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts recommence on October 15. There will be, as usual, ten concerts before, and ten after, Christmas. The following novelties are announced:—Ballade for orchestra (Op. 7), after Doré's picture, "A Day Dream," by Mr. C. A. Lidgley; Mr. Cliffe's Symphony, composed for the Leeds Festival; Ballade for orchestra, "The Passing of Beatrice," by W. Wallace; a violin Concerto, by Tschaiakowsky. For the anniversary of Liszt's birthday (October 22) the programme contains some of the composer's best music, including the Symphonic Poem "Tasso." Franz Schubert has a whole programme devoted to him on November 19, the anniversary of his death. The grand Symphony in C is no longer announced as No. 10. Has Sir George Grove abandoned all hope of finding the "Gastair"? M. Vladimir de Pachmann makes his first appearance (October 15) at the Palace since 1886.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

LONDON.

With 121 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

By WALTER BESANT Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c.

"In the following chapters it has been my endeavour to present pictures of the City of London—instantaneous photographs, showing the streets, the buildings, and the citizens at work and at play. Above all, the citizens, with their daily life in the streets, in the shops, in the churches, and in the houses; the merchant in the quays and on 'Change'; the shopkeeper of Cheapside; the priests, and the monks and the friars; the shouting of those who sell; the laughter and singing of those who feast and drink; the ringing of the bells; the dragging of the criminal to the pillory; the riding of the Lord Mayor and his Aldermen; the liver, with its boats and barges; the cheerful sound of pipe and tabor; the Stage, with its tumblers and its rope-dancers; the 'Prentices with their clubs; the evening dance in the street. I want my pictures to show all these things."

Extract from Mr. BESANT'S PREFACE.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS IN THE PRESS.

THE MARQUIS of CARABAS. By Aaron Watson and Lillias

WASSERMANN. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Certainly one of the brightest and best novels of the season."—Glasgow Herald.

BOB MARTIN'S LITTLE GIRL. By David Christie Murray,

Author of "Joseph's Coat," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

TREASON-FELONY. By John Hill, Author of "Waters of Marah," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

THE IVORY GATE. By Walter Besant, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

[Shortly.]

TRUST-MONEY. By William Westall, Author of "Her Two Millions," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

[Shortly.]

VERBENA CAMELLIA STEPHANOTIS, By Walter Besant,

Author of "Dorothy Forster," &c. With a Frontispiece by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

A SOLDIER'S CHILDREN. By John Strange Winter, Author of

"Cavalry Life," &c. With 31 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMANT. By Mark Twain. Illustrated by

Hal Hurst and Dan Beard. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

HANDY NOVELS.

A New Series of Stories of the highest class, in uniform style, fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d. each.—THE FIRST VOLUME IS

THE OLD MAID'S SWEETHEART. By Alan St. Aubyn, Author of "A Fellow of Trinity."

"So beautifully told, so simply human, poetical, and pathetic, it delights us."—Vanity Fair.

MAID MARIAN and ROBIN HOOD: a Romance of Old Sherwood

Forest. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "The Dead Man's Secret," &c. With 12 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

A ROMANCE of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By W. H.

MALLOCK. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

[Shortly.]

THE DOWNFALL. By Emile Zola. Translated by Ernest A.

Vizetelly. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

WANTED! By Dick Donovan, Author of "Who Poisoned Hetty

Duncan?" &c. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

BIMBI: Stories for Children. By Ouida. With 9 Full-page Illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

MY FLIRTATIONS. By Margaret Wynman. With 13 Illustrations

by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

CHEAP EDITIONS, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

ALONE on a WIDE WIDE SEA. By W. Clark Russell, Author of

"The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" &c.

THE DUCHESS of POWYSLAND. By Grant Allen, Author of

"The Tents of Shem," &c.

CORINTHIA MARAZION. By Cecil Griffith, Author of "Victory

Deane," &c.

Frank Barrett's Collected Novels. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s. each; cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

A RECOILING VENGEANCE.
FOR LOVE and HONOUR.
FOUND GUILTY.FETTERED for LIFE.
BETWEEN LIFE and DEATH.
THE SIN of OLGA ZASSOULICH.

WHERE ART BEGINS. By Hume Nisbet, Author of "Lessons in Art," With 27 Illustrations. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

THE THOUSAND and ONE DAYS: Persian Tales. Edited by

JUSTIN H. MCCARTHY. With Photogravure Frontispiece to each volume by Stanley L. Wood. 2 vols., crown 8vo, half-purchase, 12s.

[Shortly.]

Mrs. B. M. Croker's Novels. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s. each; cloth limp, 2s. 6d. each.

PRETTY MISS NEVILLE.
PROPER PRIDE.A BIRD of PASSAGE.
DIANA BARRINGTON.

A PRINCE of the BLOOD. By James Payn, Author of "By Proxy."

Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn." Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s. each.
IN DURANCE VILE. | A MODERN CIRCE.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. It. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jock.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. Wyer, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Sain Sothern, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Aynon, Mr. G. Tomkins; Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Violet Armbruster, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Yorke, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10, FAITHFUL JAMES. And, at 9.50, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weedon Gramsmith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Bertridg, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNNDHAM.

THIS EVENING, at 9, BETSY. Messrs. W. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, S. Valentine, D. S. James, W. Dale, W. R. Shirley; Mesdames F. Robertson, Jennie Rogers, H. Crofton, F. Frances, S. Carlisle, Studholme, A. M' Rae. At 8.15 POOR MIGNONETTE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE QUEEN OF MANOA. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, Herbert Flemming, Charles Collette, Rudge Harding, E. Maurice, W. Cheesman, &c.; Misses Marie Linden, Henrietta Lindley, Emily Cross, Francis Ingreville, Tyndal, Hardinge, and Mrs. Langtry.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CIGARETTE. At 7.40, A PAIR OF LUNATICS. Messrs. Cairns James, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lancelles, Lyons, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Florence Bankhardt, Hannah Jones, Marion Eric, May Laurie, Helen Vicary, J. Bradford, C. Loseby, and Albu.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, T. W. Percival, H. Beatty, W. Brunton, jun., H. Gray Dalby, B. Whitcomb, H. Ludlow, Alker, Hennessy, Griffith; Mesdames Lesley Bell, M. Watson, F. Wyatt, L. Wyatt, Maude St. John, Ormesby, Herrick, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, NIOBE (ALL SMILES). Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtrey, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Ellison, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Emond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbini. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Emond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtrey, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Messrs. E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowne, Cecil Ramsey, Seymour Hicks, and George Shelton; Misses Eliza Johnston, Mary Ansell, Liston, Brough, and Irene Vaubrugh. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. Lawrence Irving, Harry Westland, Lowne, Arlton; Misses Cora Poole and Lovelady.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

IMRE KIRALFY'S VENICE AT OLYMPIA.

THIS DAY, at 12 to 5, and 6 to 11, Imre Kiralfy's superb Dramatic, Operatic Spectacle, VENICE, THE BRIDE OF THE SEA. Spectacle at 2.30 and 8.30. Charming Music. Ballet of 400 Dancers. Chorus of 200 voices. Band of 100, and over 1,400 performers in the Grand Aquatic Pageant and Storming of Chioggia.

NINTH ANNUAL VOLUME.

Now Ready, containing over 900 pp. Profusely Illustrated.
Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 8s.

The English Illustrated Magazine.

FOR 1891-1892.

The following are a few of the numerous Illustrated Articles in the Volume:—

W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P., by Henry W. Lucy—THE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, K.G.—A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.—LORD ROSEBURY, by Henry W. Lucy—A ROYAL RECEPTION, by the Author of "Mademoiselle Lee"—A DEPLORABLE AFFAIR, by W. E. Norris—ON THE WESTERN CIRCUIT, by Thomas Hardy—W. H. SMITH AND SON, by W. M. Acworth—THE "TIMES," by Edmund Vincent—CANDLE-MAKING, by Joseph Hatton—THE DERBY: DONCASTER AND THE ST. LEGER, by "Vigilant," of the "Sportsman"—ENGLISH RACING YACHTS, by Dixon Kemp—OUR RAILWAYS: 1. Broad Gauge Engines; 2. Great Eastern Railway Works at Stratford; 3. London and North Western Works at Crewe; 4. Midland Railway Locomotive Works at Derby; 5. North Eastern Railway and its Engines; 6. Swindon Works—MATCHBOX-MAKING AT HOME, by Clementina Black—RUGBY SCHOOL, by Judge Hughes, H. Lee Warner, and Lees Knowles, M.P.—TIGERS AND TIGER HUNTING, by Sir Samuel Baker.

N.B.—The October Number commences a New Volume.

MACMILLAN & Co., LONDON.

GAY & BIRD'S LIST.

Demy 8vo, handsomely bound and boxed, 25 Photogravures, 12s. 6d. net.

THE LILY OF THE ARNO;

OR,

FLORENCE, PAST AND PRESENT.

By VIRGINIA W. JOHNSON.

Spectator.—"This handsome volume is a triumph—it undoubtedly is a triumph—of illustration and typography, quite as much as of literature. . . . Altogether, this is a very pleasant, as well as useful and eminently handsome, book."

Queen.—"A sumptuous volume this. . . . It is enriched by photogravures—really enriched, for most of these are admirable."

Daily News.—"The result of all these honest raptures is a very pretty volume and very prettily written."

8vo Portrait, tastefully bound in cloth gilt, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net.

SIDNEY LANIER'S POEMS.

Edited by HIS WIFE.

With a Memorial by WILLIAM HAYES WARD.

Spectator.—"We have in Lanier an original poet—one more original, we think, than the United States has ever yet produced; more original than any poet whom England has produced during the last thirty years at least."

Review of Reviews.—"Than the short series, 'Hymns of the Marshes,' we know of nothing in any poetry more beautiful or more quivering with the spirit of nature."

LANGUAGES

FRENCH. Actually Spoken and Mastered in Ten Weeks
GERMAN. without leaving your homes, by Dr. Rosenthal's
SPANISH. Meisterschaft System. 550th Thousand. Pupils
ITALIAN. learn as if actually in the presence of a teacher.

MASTERED

ALL SUBSCRIBERS, 15 SHILLINGS FOR EACH LANGUAGE, receive 15 parts of three lessons each, in a neat paper box.

IN 10 WEEKS.

SEND FOR PROSPECTUS MENTIONING LANGUAGE REQUIRED.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston, U.S.A.—G. S. B. have been appointed SPECIAL AGENTS for the sale of this important firm's publications. Catalogue in preparation.

AMERICAN BOOKS are a Speciality with us. Catalogue gratis.

LONDON: GAY & BIRD, 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST.

GOSSIP OF THE CENTURY:

Personal and Traditional Memories—Social, Literary, Artistic.

WITH MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED PORTRAITS.

BY THE AUTHORS OF "FLEMISH INTERIORS."

Two vols, Royal 8vo, 1,050 pp. 42s.

The Times says:—" . . . The author's memories and appreciations are, for the most part, kindly and good-natured, though his account of Jenny Lind appears to be an exception to this statement. . . . The copious illustrations, consisting principally of portraits of the celebrities mentioned, are full of interest."

The Athenaeum says:—"Our author appears to have had more or less acquaintance with nearly all the literary celebrities of the past half-century; and about some of them—especially Rogers, Crabb Robinson, Harrison Ainsworth, and Bulwer Lytton—he gives interesting reminiscences. . . . More than a hundred illustrations . . . add much to the interest of these sumptuous volumes."

The Daily News says:—"In these two large and beautifully-printed volumes we have a great amount of the century's best gossip. . . . The two volumes are, in fact, a kind of encyclopaedia of gossip about monarchs, statesmen, doctors, writers, actors, singers, soldiers, men of fashion."

The Standard says:—"Covering so wide a range, they (the volumes) should be of great value to the student of manners in the earlier half of the present century, the more as the old order is so rapidly changing."

The Daily Telegraph says:—" . . . may be opened almost anywhere with the certainty of discovering something interesting and entertaining."

ANGELICA KAUFFMANN: a Biography. With a list of her Paintings and Drawings, and some Illustrative Reproductions thereof. By FRANCIS A. GERARD. 1 vol. 18s. [Next week.]

ROUNABOUT RECOLLECTIONS. By John AUGUSTUS O'SHEA. Author of "Leaves from the Life of a Special Correspondent." 2 vols. 21s.

"A book so lively in tone as these 'Roundabout Recollections' is not vouchsafed to us every day."—Morning Post.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

COMEDY and COMEDIANS in POLITICS. By the COUNTESS HUGO. 2s. 6d.

"The niece of Victor Hugo poses as the champion of Italy and the enemy of Signor Crispi. The book she has written is really a smart résumé of contemporaneous Italian History."—Publisher's Circular.

By MRS. FENWICK MILLER.

IN LADIES' COMPANY. Six Interesting

Women. By Mrs. FENWICK MILLER. Fcap. 5s.

"Mrs. Miller has given us a volume to be grateful for."—Daily Chronicle.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "HOLY WEDLOCK."

HONOURS EASY. By C. T. C. James. 3 vols.

THE INCOMPLETE ADVENTURER. By Tighe

HOPKINS. Author of the "Nuggets of Carriconna." Crown 8vo. 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY WILLIAM WESTALL.

BEN CLOUGH. By William Westall. 1 vol. 6s.

"No modern novelist appears to be so well acquainted with the details of manufacturing and commercial life in Lancashire as Mr. William Westall."—Manchester Examiner.

IN THE TILTYARD OF LIFE. By Henry Newill.

1 vol. 6s.

"The last tale, 'A Jew in Moscow,' is well and forcibly written, and from what we now of the treatment of the Jews in Russia it might be thought to be founded on fact, so strange is the fiction."—Publisher's Circular.

GEORGE WARING'S CHOICE. By Frank Baron.

6s.

"The story is a good one, well written, well worth reading, and very deeply interesting."—Scotsman.

IN FOOL'S PARADISE. By H. B. Finlay Knight.

1 vol. crown 8vo. 6s.

"Amongst the strongest of one-volume novels which have lately appeared. The faults are those common to a first work—a certain lavishness of good things not necessary to the story, and a want of connection about the whole."—Daily News.

NEW EDITIONS.

MISS WENTWORTH'S IDEA. By W. E. Norris.

3s. 6d.

A BAFFLING QUEST. By Richard Dowling.

3s. 6d.

READY NEXT WEEK.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. MACQUOID.

MISS EYNON OF EYNON COURT. By Katherine

S. MACQUOID, Author of "At an Old Chateau," &c. Crown 8vo. 6s.

WARD & DOWNEY, 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1064.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE BOOK of CHRONICLES in RELATION to the PENTATEUCH and the "HIGHER CRITICISM." By the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

DESCRIPTIVE LANTERN LECTURES on ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. By Rev. C. ARTHUR LANE. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE GREEK DEVOTIONS of LANCELOT ANDREWS, BISHOP of WINCHESTER. From the Manuscript given by him to WILLIAM LAUD, afterwards ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, and recently discovered. Edited by the Rev. Canon P. G. MEDD, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

THE CATHOLICOS of the EAST and his PEOPLE. Being the Impressions of Five Years' Work in the "Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission." By the Very Rev. A. J. MACLEAN and the Rev. W. H. BROWNE, LL.M. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

COLONIAL CHURCH HISTORIES: History of the Church in Eastern Canada and Newfoundland. By the Rev. J. LANGTRY. With Map. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE BOOK of the UNVEILING. Studies in the Revelation of St. John the Divine. By the AUTHOR of "THE CHRONICLES of the SCHÖNBERG-COTTA FAMILY." Printed in red and black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

CHRISTUS COMPROBATOR; or, the Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament. Seven Addresses by C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE AUTHENTICITY of the GOSPEL of ST. LUKE: its Bearing upon the Evidences of the Truth of Christianity. Five Lectures by the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

HANDY BOOK of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By Rev. E. L. CUTTS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s. [Ready shortly.]

ROUND the ROUND WORLD on a CHURCH MISSION. By Rev. G. E. MASON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

OUR WORSHIP. By the Rev. Preb. Sadler. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE BOOK GENESIS. By the Rev. F. Watson. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS.

[A Series of Manuals which furnish in a brief and popular form an Accurate Account of the Great Non-Christian Religious Systems of the World.]

CHRISTIANITY and BUDDHISM: a Comparison and a Contrast. Being the Donnellan Lectures for the year 1889-90. By the Rev. T. STELLING HERRY, D.D. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

* * * Seven other Volumes have already appeared in this Series.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

ARISTOTELIANISM. Part I. THE ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By the Rev. I. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Part II. THE LOGICAL TREATISES, the METAPHYSICS, the PSYCHOLOGY, the POLITICS. By the Rev. W. GRUNDY, M.A. The Two Parts in 1 vol. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, sixteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes, Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap. 8vo, sixteen cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. M. CLURE, M.A. New Edition, brought up to date. Imp. 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

* * * It was by this Atlas that Dr. ANDERSON discovered the new Star in Auriga.

VEGETABLE WASPS and PLANT WORMS. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated. Post 8vo, 5s.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

TIME. By Professor C. V. Boys. [In preparation.]

OLD POISONS. By Professor P. F. Frankland. [In preparation]

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. By Sir ROBERT S. BAILL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

[A Set of Works designed to present the Chief Races of Europe as they emerge out of prehistoric darkness into the light furnished by their earliest recorded words. The literature dealt with covers a period stretching from its beginning until the Middle Ages.]

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

* * * This book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature. — Scotsman.

* * * Others in preparation.

NEW SERIES OF PHOTO-RELIEVO MAPS. (Patented.)

Presenting each Region as if in actual relief, and thus affording an accurate Picture of the Configuration of the Earth's Surface.

ENGLAND and WALES. Size 56 in. by 46 in. Mounted on Canvas, Roller, and Varnished. Coloured, 13s.

SOUTH LONDON. Size 19 in. by 14 in. Stretching from London Bridge to Caterham, and from Greenwich to Hampton Court.

The importance of teaching Geography by beginning in a small centre has been strongly insisted upon by experts. This Map will be useful, therefore, to all the schools in the district embraced, as well as to others.

No. 2. PHYSICAL CONFIGURATION, Railways, Roads, and Chief Places, 6d.

NORTH LONDON. Size 19 in. by 14 in. No. 2. Railways, Roads, and Chief Places, 6d.

SCOTLAND. Size 19 in. by 14 in. No. 1. Names of Places and Rivers to be filled in by Scholars, 6d. No. 2. With Rivers and Names of Places, 6d. No. 3. With Names of Places and with County Divisions in Colours, 1s.

ENGLAND and WALES, EUROPE, and ASIA, same size and price.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF SIR GEORGE GREY, by W. WICKHAM	255
EDWIN ELLIS'S FATE IN ARCADIA, by Dr. JOHN TOMHUNTER	256
LEACH'S VISITATIONS OF SOUTHWELL MINSTER, by the Rev. Dr. J. C. COX	257
TWO BOOKS ON THE HISTORY OF RELIGION, by A. W. BENN	258
MAJOR EDEN BAKER'S PRELIMINARY TACTICS, by SPENSER WILKINSON	259
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	260
THE SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES	261
NOTES AND NEWS	262
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	262
ORIGINAL VERSE: A SONNET, by PERCY ADDLESHAW	263
MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST	263
THE CLARENDON PRESS LIST	264
MESSRS. BELL'S LIST	264
MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST	265
MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST	265
MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & CO.'S LIST	265
MESSRS. J. S. VIRTUE & CO.'S LIST	265
MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS'S LIST	266
MESSRS. WHITTAKER & CO.'S LIST	266
MESSRS. LUTZ & CO.'S LIST	266
MESSRS. JAMES CLARKE & CO.'S LIST	266
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	266
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	266
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Juvenescence Cryptogram , by Prof. Rhys	266
SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY	266
THE PETRIE PAPYRI	267
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Tel," "Tell," or "Tall," by Prof. Sayce, H. Rassam, and F. L. G.	267
PHILOLOGY NOTES	268
NISBET'S HIERALDIO PLATES, by J. M. GRAY	268
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"The Origin of Metallic Currency," by Canon Isaac Taylor; Agean Pottery in Egypt , by Cecil Torr	270
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	270
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	270

LIME TREE STUDIO, SEVENOAKS.
—AUTUMN TERM commences OCTOBER 2nd. Drawing and Painting on the French method. Life model.

SUB-EDITOR.—A LADY, with considerable experience, is open to an ENGAGEMENT as SUB-EDITOR of a Weekly or Monthly Periodical. Good worker. Moderate Terms.—Address E. S., 117, Chancery Lane, W.C.

EXCEEDINGLY quaint OLD OAK
FURNITURE, viz., Corner Cupboard, Grandfather's Tall Case Clock (brass face), and Dover Chest. Each article is richly carved. 29 the lot or separate. Particulars forwarded.—Apply LADY, Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

TO ART COLLECTORS and OTHERS.—A SMALL COLLECTION OF CABINET PICTURES, BRONZES, and WORKS OF ART, TO BE DISPOSED OF, the Property of a Gentleman removing. To be seen near London.—For particulars apply, by letter, to C. E., care of Waterlow & Sons, Ltd., Westminster, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.
TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUES.
BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURIST'S GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

NEW CLEARANCE CATALOGUE
(No. 78) OF SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS
now offered at Greatly Reduced Prices
(52 pages), sent gratis and post free to any address.
Includes many important Works in Travel, History, Biography, &c., Theology, Angling, Sport, and Natural History.
Magazines, and over 1,400 Cheap Novels.
A SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature, post free.
DOUGLAS & FORTIS, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.
Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR
FOR THE SESSION 1892-93.
MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNISH, Manchester.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL?
and HOW CAN I KEEP SO? a clear explanation of the Salisbury Treatment. 2nd. pp. by ELMA STUART, Kenilworth, With Portrait in 1891. Price net, post free, 3s. 3d. Will be sent at once on receipt of remittance.

ON the MODIFICATION of ORGANISMS
A CRITICISM ON DARWIN. By DAVID SYME. "Not?"—Dr. A. R. WALLACE. "A Shrewd Critic."—Dr. ROMANES. "A vigorous criticism."—Times. "No earnest student can afford to neglect so firm and clear and strong a criticism of Darwin."—Aberdeen Free Press. Price 3s. 6d.
SIMPSON, MARSHALL & Co., Limited, London.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

GRADUATION IN ARTS.

Under the New Ordinance there are Twenty-seven Subjects from which, with certain restrictions, students may select Seven Subjects for Graduation in Arts. The PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS begin on 12th OCTOBER. Women as well as Men are now admitted to the Lectures and to Graduation.
For further particulars see "Supplement to University Calendar" (JAMES THOM, South Bridge, Edinburgh, price 1s., by post, 1s. 1d.); or apply to the CLERK of SENATUS.

JOHN KIRKPATRICK, Secretary of Senatus.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

LADIES are admitted to all the ARTS LECTURES, at present embracing Twenty-four different Subjects, beginning on 12th October, and also to GRADUATION IN ARTS. For further information, see "Supplement to the University Calendar" (Mr. JAMES THOM, 53, South Bridge, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 1d.); or apply to the DEAN of FACULTY, or to the CLERK of SENATUS.
(Information as to board and lodgings may be obtained from Miss LOUISA STEVENSON, 11, Lion Sec., Edinburgh Association for the University Education of Women, 13, Randolph Crescent, Edinburgh.)

JOHN KIRKPATRICK, Secretary of Senatus.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of Lectures on Zoology by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., commences on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th at 1 p.m. These Lectures are intended to meet the requirements of students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London.

A Special Course of Lectures on ANIMAL VARIATION, addressed to Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology will be given in the Lent Term.

J. M. HOASBROUGH, M.A., Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Gloucester, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Perth, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS.

The NINETEENTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 10th. The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving, Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be Open Daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Secretary:—

1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, LONDON

(FOR LADIES), 43 and 45, HARLEY STREET, W.

Founded 1848. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1853.

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

II.—HISTORY and SCIENCE DEPARTMENT.

Church History	Rev. A. W. MILROY.
Ancient History	J. R. V. MARCHANT, M.A.
Modern History	HAROLD COX, R.A.; J. A. CHAMM, M.A.
Geology and Geography	H. G. SPEEY, F.R.S., Dean.
Mathematics	W. H. L. HENSON, M.D.
Chemistry	H. C. HERRICK, M.D., D.Sc.
Physics	C. F. HERROLD, F.R.C.
Astronomy	J. D. McCURIE, M.A.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins OCTOBER 3rd.

For particulars apply to Miss CHUTEACE, Lady Resident.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON

(LADIES' DEPARTMENT).

13, Kensington Square (close to High Street Kensington Station).

In this Department Lectures are given to Ladies in the various subjects of University Education by Professors and Lecturers on the Staff of King's College. The Lectures are adapted for Ladies above the age of 16.

A Class will be held for the special preparation of Ladies for the Matriculation Examination of the University of London. This Class will commence on the 12th September.

All other Classes commence on October 10th. On that day at 3 p.m., an INAUGURAL ADDRESS will be given by Prof. HALE (Clerk Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge), to which all Students and their friends are invited.

For a Prospectus or further information apply to the Vice-Principal, Miss C. G. SCHMIDT, at the above address.
In return for four stamps, a Complete Syllabus of Lectures may be obtained.

THE INSTITUTE of MERCANTILE

EDUCATION, Limited, Strentham Court, London, S.W.

MORTIMER H. DE LARMOYER, Managing Director.
The Governing Body has to announce that the Institute will open for work very shortly.

The Institute has been founded and organised to supply a fitting and appropriate course of Education of the Highest Class, for Young Gentlemen who intend to become Merchants and Business Men, and to achieve their place in the higher ranks of Commerce.

The Curriculum includes for the appointed fee, a well ordered Study of French, German, Spanish, Italian, Commercial Correspondence, Drawing, Shorthand, Natural History, Book-keeping, Arithmetic (Decimal and Duodecimal), Metric System, Algebra, Geometry, History and a sound liberal English education, with very particularly, as a special feature, the SCIENCE of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY—that is, a study of the productions organic and inorganic of the Earth, the Geographical Distribution of them, with the options to uses, as well as the interchange of them, which is Commerce.

Prospectus can be obtained on application.

SPECIAL APPOINTMENT.

EVERY TEACHER and SCHOOL

BOARD CLERK may hear of a high-class Agency for a leading Life Company, whose rates are about Fifty per cent. less than those of other offices, by addressing "LIFE," 120, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES.

An ASSISTANT LECTURER in MATHEMATICS and an ASSISTANT LECTURER and DEMONSTRATOR in CHEMISTRY will shortly be appointed. Intending applicants should communicate at once with the REGISTRAR, who will supply details.
Bangor, September 20th, 1892.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

80 to 84, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Chertside, E.C.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERMANN FAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions of this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions of issue. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums or deposits, and allows Interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

I.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard.WEDDED TO SPORT.

By the Author of

"The Girl in the Brown Habit,"

"That Pretty Little Horse-breaker," &c. 3 vols.

II.

By Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip).THE HON. JANE.

By the Author of "Allerton Towers," "Kate Valliant," &c. 3 vols.

III.

By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.A BIG STAKE.

By the Author of "Drawn Blank," "The Criton Hunt Mystery," &c. 3 vols.

The SCOTSMAN'S opinion—"There are some smart society sketches in 'A Big Stake'....the interest is well maintained to the end."
The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR'S opinion—"....it is a very good novel."

IV.

By Mrs. Alexander.FOR HIS SAKE.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," "A Woman's Heart," &c. 3 vols.

The ATHENÆUM'S opinion—"The story is well told, especially in the processes of growing love between Sybil and Brian Rashleigh."
The SCOTSMAN'S opinion—"From Mrs. Alexander's facile and interesting pen comes another novel which will receive a general welcome....is at once a good story well told....The story develops with rapidity....This is a novel in which the reader will find a good deal of pleasure."The DAILY TELEGRAPH'S opinion—"Sybil Carew is as charming a heroine as could be wished for, and ninety-nine readers in a hundred will be well content to follow the development and disposal of this pretty creature's affections....In her dialogue writing Mrs. Alexander is always happy, and as she makes her characters converse freely, the general effect of her latest novel is decidedly pleasant."
The MORNING POST'S opinion—"Sybil Carew's bright freshness of thought and word is of itself sufficient to make pleasant a novel of which she is the chief figure....Characters and plot are equally satisfactory in this brightly-written tale."

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

By Mrs. Alexander.—A WOMAN'S HEART.

In picture boards, 2s. each.

By Mrs. Alexander.—BLIND FATE.By F. C. Philips and Percy Fendall.—A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE (Third Edition).*"BELGRAVIA."

A London Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA LUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF "BELGRAVIA."

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by FLORENCE MARRYAT, ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Mrs. J. SALE LLOYD, SOMERVILLE GIBNEY, SAUMAREZ DE HAVILLAND, CHARLOTTE E. MOLLAND, &c.
Vol. LXXVIII. (260 pages), elegantly bound in gift cloth, with gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each."LONDON SOCIETY."

A Monthly Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales, entitled "THE COUNTESS PHARAMOND," by "RITA," and "A BURIED SIN," are running in the above Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF "LONDON SOCIETY."

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by B. M. CROKER, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, the Hon. Mrs. NATHANIEL FIENNES, the AUTHOR OF "MISS MOLLY," BEATRICE G. HILL, &c.
Vol. LXXI. (780 pages), handsomely bound in gift cloth, with gilt edge, price 10s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

TO BE HAD AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

Life of Thomas Paine.

With a History of his Literary, Political, and Religious Career in America, France, and England, to which is added a hitherto unpublished Sketch of Paine by WILLIAM COBBETT. By MONCURE D. CONWAY. Illustrated, 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s.

The publication of this work has been delayed in consequence of the discovery by the author of some important new material, including an unpublished sketch of Paine by William Cobbett. The paper by Cobbett possesses some exceptional importance because it expresses a complete change of opinion on the part of its writer from the view held by him at the time of some of his earlier utterances concerning the career of Paine; while it was largely upon some of these earlier utterances that were based upon the conclusions arrived at concerning Paine by those who first wrote about him after his death.

A POWERFUL ROMANCE, BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

Green.—Cynthia Wakeham's Money.

A Novel. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of "The Leavenworth Case." 16mo, cloth (with frontispiece), 2s. 6d.; boards, 2s.

This striking new story by Miss Green is one of the best the author has produced.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

The Old Stone House, and other Stories.

16mo, paper covers, 1s.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES.

By THOMAS HARDY.

NOTICE.—"Tess of the D'Urbervilles," in one volume with a New Preface and Portrait of the Author, will be ready on Friday, September 30.

MOLTKE: HIS LIFE AND CHARACTER.

Sketched in Journals, Letters, Memoir, a Novel, and Autobiographical Notes. Translated by MARY HERMS. With Illustrations from Water-colour and Black-and-White Sketches by Moltke; Portrait and Facsimile Letters. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. [Ready September 30.]

NOTE.—This volume includes Moltke's Novel, "The Two Friends," which, so far as is known, is the only work of fiction ever written by him; also his brief Essay, "Consolatory Thoughts on this Life and Trust in a Future Life."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for October

NOW READY.

LONDON: JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO., 45, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, W.

Messrs. ELKIN MATTHEWS & JOHN LANE

will publish next Monday, the First Edition—all of which are sold—of ENGLISH POEMS, by RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. For England and America: 150 copies large paper, price 12s. 6d. net., and 800 copies, post 8vo, price 5s. net.

SILHOUETTES: a Book of Verses, by ARTHUR SYMONS, in Two Editions, 25 copies large paper (all sold) price 12s. 6d. net; and 250 copies duodecimo, price 5s. net. A few remain.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. Wyes, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr. Sam Sothorn, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Aysom, Mr. G. Tomkins; Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Violet Armbruster, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Yorke, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10, FAITHFUL JAMES. And, at 9.50, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Beridge, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM. THIS EVENING, at 9, BETSY. Messrs. W. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, S. Valentine, D. S. James, W. Dale, W. R. Shirley; Mesdames F. Robertson, Jennie Rogers, H. Crofton, F. Frances, S. Carlisle, Studholme, A. M' Rae. At 8.15 POOR MIGNONETTE.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS. THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER. Messrs. Henry Neville, James Fernandez, Leonard Boyne, Julius Knight, Harry Nicholls, J. L. Shine, Arthur Williams, Charles Dodsworth; Misses Millward, Blanche Horlock, Fanny Brough.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE QUEEN OF MANOA. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, Herbert Fleming, Charles Collette, Rudge Harding, E. Maurice, W. Cheesman, &c.; Misses Marie Linden, Henrietta Lindley, Emily Cross, Francis Ingreville, Tyndal, Hardinge, and Mrs. Langtry.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THE BELLS. Mr. Henry Irving. SATURDAY, September 24. Mr. William Terriss. Mr. Tyars. Mr. Howe. Mrs. Pauncefort. Mr. Johnson. Miss Kate Phillips. Mr. Archer. Miss Coleridge. Preceded by THE KING AND THE MILLER at eight.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CIGARETTE. At 7.40, A PAIR OF LUNATICS. Messrs. Cairns James, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Lyons, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Florence Bankhardt, Hannah Jones, Marion Erie, May Laurie, Helen Vicary, J. Bradford, C. Loseby, and Albu.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs. Murray Carson, T. W. Percyval, H. Beatty, W. Brunton, jun., H. Gray Delby, B. Whitcomb, H. Ludlow, Alker, Homessy, Griffith; Mesdames Lesley Bell, M. Watson, F. Wyatt, L. Wyatt; Maude St. John, Ormesby, Herrick, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTE. SATURDAY EVENING at eight p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, NIOBE (ALL SMILES). Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtreay, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Eliason, Yvonne Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbini. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtreay, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER LONDON. Messrs. E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowe, Cecil Ramsey, Seymour Hicks, and George Shelton; Misses Eliza Johnston, Mary Ansell, Liston, Brough, and Irene Vanbrugh. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. Lawrence Irving, Harry Westland, Lowe, Arlton; Misses Cora Poole and Loveday.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston. THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers. THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

Ready Sept. 26, price 7d.

For OCTOBER, containing

THE CHAPEL of the PYX. Illustrated by Burke Downing.
TWO POPULAR STYLES of ART NEEDLEWORK. With Illustrations.
OUR BELONGINGS: THE GIRLS. Illustrated by W. Rainey, R.I.
WHEN FIRST WE MET. Words by J. F. Waller, LL.D. Music by J. W. Hinton, M.A., Mus.D.
AN ARTIST'S HAUNT. Illustrated by C. W. Wyllie.
HOW a WILDERNESS BECAME a GARDEN. Illustrated by Fairfax Muckley.
WHAT I FOUND in a ROCK POOL. By HENRY SCHERRAEN, F.Z.S. Illustrated.
CHIT-CHAT on DRESS: What to Wear in October. With Illustrations.
THE GATHERER: an Illustrated Record of Invention, Discovery, Literature, and Science.

COMPLETE STORIES.

THE COURTSHIP of FIREMAN DEANE: a Railway Romance. By HENRY FRITH. Illustrated by Gordon Browne.
ANOTHER INDIAN TALE. By ARTHUR MITCHELL. Illustrated by H. R. Millar.
HOW SHE CAME DOWN from the STILTS: an Alpine Travel Story. By J. EVELYN. With an Illustration by W. Hatherell, R.I.

SERIAL STORIES.

BARBARA MERIVALE. By ARABELLA M. HOPKINSON. Author of "The Probation of Dorothy Travers." Illustrated by Wal. Paget.
LADY LORIMER'S SCHEME. By EDITH E. CUTHELL. Author of "The Story of a Glamour." With Illustrations by W. H. Margetson.
CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Ready Sept. 26, price 1s.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

For OCTOBER, containing

"LITTLE BO-PEEP: a Portrait." By JAN VAN BEERS. Photographure by Paulussen.
JAN VAN BEERS. By M. H. SPIELMANN. With a Portrait of Jan Van Beers, and Five Illustrations of his Works.
COPYRIGHT in WORKS of FINE ART. By GILBERT E. SAMUEL, Solicitor.
AN OPEN SECRET. Poem by the late A. St. JOHNSTON.
THE DIXON BEQUEST at BETHNAL GREEN: III.—THE ENGLISH OIL-PAINTINGS. By WALTER SHAW-SPARROW. With Five Illustrations.
"HER FRIENDS." By R. PRINCE. With a Note.
BURMESE ART and BURMESE ARTISTS. With Sixteen Illustrations.
A BALLAD of a SHIELD. Poem by Cosmo MONKHOUSE. Illustration by C. Rickett.
FRENCH FEELING in PARISIAN PICTURES: Impressions of the Salons. By BERNARD HAMILTON, M.A. With Five Illustrations.
OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTE-BOOK. With Five Illustrations.
THE CHRONICLE of ART: ART in SEPTEMBER.
CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS.

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.

Estimates and all information furnished.

Contracts entered into.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM of MEMORY—"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—no change the how to light up the cellar. The information cost me but little, and figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The information cost me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

OCTOBER.

MRS. JULIET. By Mrs. ALFRED W. HUNT. Chaps. XXVIII.—XXX.
THE MAKING of GUNFLINTS. By P. ANDERSON GAHAM.
CAIRNSMILL DEN. By R. F. MURRAY.
THE POT-BOILER. By GRANT ALLEN.
DAY and NIGHT in the GUIANA FOREST. By JAMES RODWAY.
HIS GRACE. By W. E. NORRIS. Chaps. XVIII.—XXI.
AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE BOOKMAN.

SECOND YEAR.

MONTHLY, PRICE SIXPENCE.

The OCTOBER Number begins a New Volume, and will contain the following, among other Articles:—

THE FIRST of a SERIES of PERSONAL REMINISCENCES of LITERARY MEN. By the Author of "The Carlyles and a Segment of their Circle." The following will be among the subjects:—Lord Jeffrey, Wordsworth, Arthur Hugh Clough, Thomas Campbell, W. E. Aytoun, George Henry Lewes, James Hannay, Alexander Smith, Edwin Waugh.
A Separate PLATE PORTRAIT of PROFESSOR H. DRUMMOND, with Critical Estimate.
MR. CARLYLE on MR. FROUDE.
UNPUBLISHED LETTERS of GEORGE ELIOT.
"THE ANGEL in the HOUSE." With Portrait.
MR. R. H. HUTTON, of the SPECTATOR. By WILLIAM WATSON.
PORTRAIT of MRS. W. K. CLIFFORD, Author of "Aunt Anne."
MR. GLADSTONE'S ADDRESS at the ORIENTAL CONGRESS. By Professor W. M. RAMSAY, Author of "The Historical Geography of Asia Minor."
SURVEY of the LITERATURE of the MONTH.
NEWS NOTES: English, American, Journalistic, &c.
REVIEWS of BOOKS.
THE NOVELS of the MONTH.
COMPLETE LIST of NEW BOOKS, with CRITICISMS.

HONNER & STOUTON, 27, Paternoster Row.

FOR CONTENTS OF
THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

See Messrs. DENTLEY & SON'S Advertisement, page 234.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. . .	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THE LINO TYPE

Composing Machine

'S SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

JENNY'S CASE. By Ellen F. Pinsent.

2 vols.

First Review.—"Scotsman."

"The subject is a troublesome one, but it is here treated with becoming reticence and dignity. Touches of real portraiture."

Second Review.—"Glasgow Herald."

"A work of remarkable power. Without passion, declamation, digression, a driving after effect, the story is allowed to unfold itself step by step. Yet it is one with several strikingly dramatic incidents, as genuinely conceived and quietly presented as if the artist were quite unconscious of her power. It is the result of close observation and sympathetic study. It is doubtful if any writer, save George Eliot and Thomas Hardy, has so well caught the idiosyncracies of rustic character. 'Jenny's Case' is all the more heart-breaking because it is so real."

Third Review.—"Daily Chronicle."

"'Jenny's Case' was similar to that of Tess of the D'Urbervilles, and in one respect the author's treatment of it is more original than Mr. Hardy's. The story is told with extreme directness and simplicity, and with quite unaffected and unmanufactured pathos. We believe this is Mrs. Pinsent's first novel. Everyone who reads it will hope that it will not be her last, though she will find it hard to beat."

Fourth Review.—"Daily Graphic."

"The book cannot fail of a hearing, when its merits are so obvious."

Fifth Review.—"Literary World."

"Displays tender sympathy with a true appreciation of the shrewd and hard, yet easily love-led nature of the English peasant. The lesson of self-respect and prudence which is so well taught in this sad story of temptation and weakness, should be widely circulated amongst the class to which the heart-broken little heroine and her betrayer, as well as her wild, reckless, devoted soldier belong."

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LONDON.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891.

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."

Mr. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS writes:—"It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."

Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel of John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.
"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers.
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

IMRE KIRALFY'S VENICE AT OLYMPIA.

THIS DAY, at 12 to 5, and 6 to 11. Imre Kiralfy's superb Dramatic, Operatic Spectacle, VENICE, THE PRINCE OF THE SEA. Spectacle at 2.30 and 8.30. Charming Music. Ballet of 400 Dancers. Chorus of 300 voices. Band of 100, and over 1,400 performers in the Grand Aquatic Pageant and Storming of Chioggia.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER, 1892.

- I. GOD'S FOOL. Chaps XLII.—XLIV.
- II. THE PASSING MOOD.
- III. A TWILIGHT GOSSIP with the PAST.
- IV. WINTER MONTHS.
- V. TWO YORKSHIRE STORIES.
- VI. PAUL LOUIS COURIER.
- VII. RALLAD of a JESTER.
- VIII. PARIS: PRINTEMPS.
- IX. PORTRAIT of a GERMAN MUSIC-MASTER.
- X. A VERY IMPORTANT PLACE.
- XI. MRS. BLIGH. Chaps. V.—VIII.

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s.,
of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By MARY LINSKILL.

BETWEEN the HEATHER and the NORTHERN SEA.
THE HAVEN under the HILL.
IN EXCHANGE for a SOUL.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

ALDYTH.
THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
HEALEY.
KITH and KIN.
PROBATION.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY the GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX. WEE WIFIE.
WOODED and MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA. THELMA.
ARDATH. WORMWOOD.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL.
A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.
MAJOR and MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO.
THE ROGUE.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN. NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS!

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOLING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
THE EXECUTOR.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
IN a GLASS DARKLY.
THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

UGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GIBTON GIRL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

AN ENGLISHMAN in PARIS.

Notes and Recollections.

During the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s. [Sixth Thousand.]

SAMUEL LAING.

HUMAN ORIGINS:

Evidence from History and Science.

By SAMUEL LAING,
Author of "Modern Science and Modern Thought."
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.
[Fifth Thousand.]

AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE.

SHOOTING and SALMON FISHING:

Hints and Recollections.

By AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE,
Author of "Deerstalking."
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 16s.
[Second Edition in the press.]

CHARLES DIXON.

THE MIGRATION of BIRDS:

An Attempt to Reduce Avian Season-
Flight to Law.

By CHARLES DIXON.
Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD AND CONCLUDING VOLUME OF JUNKER'S "AFRICA."

TRAVELS in AFRICA DURING the YEARS 1882-1886.

By Dr. WILHELM JUNKER.
Translated from the German by A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S.
Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 21s.

SURGEON-GENERAL C. T. PASKE AND
F. G. AFLALO.

THE SEA and the ROD.

By Surgeon-General C. T. PASKE and F. G. AFLALO.
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 4s. 6d.
[Now ready.]

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU. PAPACY, SOCIALISM, and DEMOCRACY.

By ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU,
Member of the Institute of France.
Translated by Professor B. L. O'DONNELL.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [This day.]

W. H. MALLOCK.

A HUMAN DOCUMENT:

A Novel.

By W. H. MALLOCK.
A New Edition in one volume, crown 8vo.
[In the Press.]

MORLEY ROBERTS.

IN LOW RELIEF:

A Bohemian Transcript.

By MORLEY ROBERTS.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MARY A. DICKENS.

CROSS CURRENTS:

A Novel.

By MARY A. DICKENS.
Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's LIST.

RECENT BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL'S

TRAVELS in SOUTH AFRICA. With Special Portrait, numerous Illustrations, and Route Map. Second Edition. 1 vol. demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Unusually interesting; so sincere in tone, and so studded with practically suggestive matter touching recently acquired African territory as a field for either agricultural or commercial enterprise."—Athenaeum.

FROM the ARCTIC OCEAN to the

YELLOW SEA: the Narrative of a Journey across Siberia, Mongolia, the Gobi Desert, and North China.
By JULIUS M. PRICE, F.R.G.S. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimiles, and 150 Illustrations. Route Map.
Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 24s.

"A remarkably good book.....full of instruction and amusement.....Mr. Price's narrative leaves throughout definite impressions of the wild region through which he passed."—Spectator.

"A vivid and graphic account of travels in a region still but little known."—Times.

"An agreeable book, well illustrated, which will find many readers, and will please them."—Athenaeum.

NEWFOUNDLAND to COCHIN

CHINA, by the Golden Wave, New Nippon, and the Forbidden City. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT. With Reports on British Trade and Interests in Canada, Japan, and China by Col. HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P.
With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra,
7s. 6d.

"One of the brightest and most entertaining books of travel that have obtained publicity during the past decade."
Daily Telegraph.

RAMBLES THROUGH JAPAN

WITHOUT a GUIDE. By ALBERT TRACY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is difficult to believe that the writer has left a point of interest in the Land of the Rising Sun or the condition of its people untouched; yet there is no hurry in his style; he has seen, considered, and sympathetically regarded every place, object, and subject; he can be grave and impressive, lively and amusing; he is always graphic and keenly observant."
World.

THROUGH FAMINE-STRICKEN

RUSSIA. By W. BARNES STEVENI, Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle. With Portraits of Count Tolstoi and the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The Russian authorities have prohibited from circulation
'Through Famine-Stricken Russia,' the recently issued volume in which Mr. W. Barnes Steveni, the Special Correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, has described his tour through the famine-stricken regions of Russia."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BEST TOUR in NORWAY. By

E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious," &c. With 34 Full-Page Illustrations and Route Map. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"An entertaining companion on the voyage to Norway, and a valuable guide."—Daily Telegraph.

A WINTER CRUISE in SUMMER

SEAS; or, How I Found Health. By CHARLES C.
ATCHISON. Profusely illustrated by Walter W.
Buckley. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

"A really capital log-book of a cruise in search of health."
Court Journal.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS.

New Uniform Revised monthly Issue of Mr. BLACK'S COMPLETE NOVELS at 2s. 6d. each.

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of Mr. Black.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON.

A PRINCESS of THULE.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

MADCAP VIOLET.

THREE FEATHERS.

THE MAID of KILLEENA.

GREEN PASTURES and PICCADILLY.

MACLEOD of DARE. [Next week.]

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1892.

No. 1064, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Life and Times of Sir George Grey, K.C.B.
By William Leo Rees and L. Rees. In 2 vols. (Hutchinson).

It is perhaps too late to protest with any effect against the growing practice of writing biographies during the lifetime of their subjects. How can one fairly judge of a man's career till it is closed? Sir George Grey, happily, "lives, a prosperous gentleman." He is nearly three years younger than Mr. Gladstone, whom he resembles in activity, versatility, and mental vigour; perhaps when he attains the age of the present prime minister he may renew his political life in New Zealand, and there may be more to be recorded of him and added to his already brilliant career. Another serious objection to the practice is the impossibility of writing the life of a living man with impartiality. For the most part these biographies abound in panegyric, and this is the case with the present work. Must we believe that Sir George Grey was invariably in the right, and the able and eminent men with whom he differed always and of necessity in the wrong? Nevertheless, the authors have produced an interesting and, after making due allowance for partiality, an instructive work. They are both ardent admirers of Sir George Grey; they have had the advantage of access to his private papers, and have evidently learned much from personal intercourse with him.

It was in 1837 that George Grey, then a lieutenant in the 83rd regiment of foot, started on his expedition of Australian discovery. Among the many great qualities displayed by him at this time none was more conspicuous than his humanity and tenderness of human life; even when in danger from the blacks, he was ever unwilling to proceed to extreme measures. So favourable was the opinion formed of his ability and energy by Lord John Russell, then Colonial Secretary, that in 1841, when only twenty-eight years of age, Grey was appointed governor of South Australia. It was during his tenure of the government of South Australia, which he held until 1845, that he was first brought into conflict with the Wakefield system of colonisation, which he opposed both in that colony and afterwards in New Zealand. We cannot agree with the harsh and almost unjustifiable strictures of the authors on Mr. Wakefield and his plan of colonisation, a plan which was approved by many of the wisest and best informed men of the time. In 1845, George Grey received the great compliment of being ordered to take over the government of New Zealand, then distracted by a Maori war. He left South Australia in a very different condition from that in which he found it: he had found discontent, mutiny, want, and despair; his four years of careful management changed those for contentment, industry, and prosperity. Grey's first government of New Zealand, which extended from 1845 to 1854, was perhaps the most brilliant period of his long career. The war was speedily brought to an end.

"The prestige of the European was again established; terms of peace, neither derogatory to the crown nor to the natives, were agreed upon; while the strength and weight of the new governor's hand was felt and acknowledged by all the tribes. They believed, also, that while it was the hand of a strong ruler, it was the hand of a faithful friend."

The following anecdote illustrates his happy method of dealing with the Maoris.

"Nor did he confine himself to general principles of action. The peculiar characteristics of individual chiefs, and the circumstances of different tribes, gave to him opportunities, which were never neglected, of strengthening his government. One great chief refused to allow roads to be made in his territory. To a young and favourite wife of this stubborn Maori the governor presented a horse and carriage, at the same time conveying, with assurances of his friendship, the intimation that the use of the carriage would add both to the health and comfort of his dusky bride. Without hesitation, the husband entered upon the making of roads, which, as a chief, he had absolutely refused to sanction. To utilise the present made by the governor, and to please his young wife, the old Maori warrior made a passable road through country before inaccessible."

The best testimony to the merit of Sir George Grey's rule in New Zealand is that of Earl Grey, who writes:

"It is to the governor, Sir George Grey, that New Zealand is mainly indebted for the happy alteration in its condition and prospects. Nothing but the singular ability and judgment displayed by him during the whole of his administration, and especially in its commencement, could have arrested a war between the European and native inhabitants of those islands." . . . "The war, which had already begun when Sir George Grey reached New Zealand, and in which, at that time, all the advantage had been with our adversaries, would have been converted into a mortal struggle between the European and Maori races by the slightest error of judgment on his part, and by his failing to unite with the most cautious prudence, equal firmness and decision. Such a struggle, once commenced, could hardly have been closed except by our abandonment of the islands in disgrace, or the extermination of the aboriginal inhabitants."

. . . "His previous administration of South Australia under difficulties of another kind, but hardly less formidable than those he had to encounter in New Zealand, and the justness of all his views with regard to the latter as explained in his dispatches, entitled him to our unreserved confidence. This being the case, I am persuaded that we adopted the only course likely to lead to a happy result in resolving to embarrass him by few positive and no minute instructions, but to leave it almost entirely to his own judgment to determine upon the measures to be taken by him, and to be guided mainly by his advice in what we were ourselves called upon to do. This was the principle upon which we acted." . . . "As I have expressed so strongly the admiration I feel for Sir George Grey, I ought, perhaps, to say that my opinion has not been influenced by any private feelings of partiality. Notwithstanding the name he bears there is no relationship between Sir George Grey and myself, nor have I the advantage of any personal acquaintance with him; I never had the pleasure of seeing him, and know him only by his conduct and my correspondence with him in the public service."

"In short," he adds, "the contrast between the state of things at the end of 1850 and that which the present governor found existing on his arrival at the end of the year 1845, is so marked and so gratifying that it is difficult to believe that so great a change should have been accomplished in the short space of five years."

All this being admitted, the authors could have afforded to treat Sir G. Grey's opponents with some moderation; but in their estimation everyone who disagreed with him was not only mistaken, but morally wrong. Thus the New Zealand Company's plans are "nefarious"; it is guilty of "cupidity and selfishness." Sir George Grey was opposed to the endowment of the Church, which is therefore described as "oppressive." We are told that as soon as his back was turned his intentions were frustrated and his wishes neglected. What is this but saying that he was always to have his own way and never to be opposed; and it is said of those who had the misfortune to differ from him that through selfishness they desired to use political power for their own advantage.

The next governorship held by Sir George Grey was that of Cape Colony. He arrived in time to frustrate the astounding scheme, which had been approved by the preceding governor, Sir Benjamin Pine, in favour of Sir Theophilus, then Mr. Shepstone, and which is thus described by Sir George Grey:—

"The proposition, therefore, is nothing else than that Great Britain should establish a new kingdom in South Africa (it is so termed in letters I have seen); make Mr. Shepstone the king of that country; guarantee him the security and integrity of his dominions; give him a pension of £500 a year; and agree that he is to have despotic powers in governing the country, in raising its revenues, in expending them. No guarantees are exacted from him. It is not pretended that so princely a grant is to be bestowed on him in reward of past public services which entitle him to it. No condition is imposed on him precedent to his receiving this noble gift."

We agree with the authors that it is difficult to understand how such an outrageous proposal could ever have been entertained. And their censure of Sir Theophilus Shepstone is not too severe when they write of him:

"That no man has been more potent than he in wielding influences which have exposed the populations of South Africa to great disasters. History must declare that the astuteness displayed by him was singularly disastrous in its effects alike on friends and enemies."

The Indian Mutiny broke out while Sir G. Grey was governor of Cape Colony; and an opportunity was afforded him, which he seized with his accustomed readiness and vigour, of rendering a great service to the empire. When he heard the news from Lord Elphinstone, there was in Table Bay a man-of-war and two or three ships available for transport. The nearest troops with two batteries of artillery were embarked, horses, ammunition, and military stores were shipped; and within three days of the receipt of Lord Elphinstone's dispatch the man-of-war and transports sailed, and a commencement had been made towards the assistance of India which proved invaluable. A few days later a portion of the army then being sent to Lord Elgin in China arrived in Simons Bay. Sir George took upon himself to divert the course of this expedition, and directed the colonel, Adrian Hope, to proceed to Calcutta. These were the troops which arrived in India in time to enable Sir Colin Campbell to relieve Havelock at Lucknow. In 1859 Sir George Grey was recalled by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, the Secretary for the Colonies; but on his arrival in England the first news that greeted him was that he had been re-appointed to the governorship of Cape Colony by the Duke of Newcastle, who had, in the meantime, replaced Sir E. Bulwer Lytton at the Colonial Office. This may be taken as the culminating point in Sir George Grey's career. His second governorship of Cape Colony did not afford the same grounds for action as his first, and his second governorship of New Zealand, which followed, was distinctly unsuccessful. New Zealand had received a constitution, and the powers of the governor were much limited. Sir George was always a Liberal in politics, yet in action he was somewhat despotic; anyhow, he found the trammels of the ministry of New Zealand galling, and, in the end, he was superseded by the government at home.

On leaving New Zealand Sir George plunged into English politics, and it would have been better for his reputation had he not done so. He stood for Newark in opposition to Mr. Gladstone's candidate, and adopted Home Rule policy for Ireland in 1869. It is a pity that the authors, in their admiration for Sir George, should have thought it advisable to reprint from a pamphlet published by him in that year a draft of an Act to grant a provincial parliament to the kingdom of Ireland. Anything more crude and impracticable could not be imagined. In 1874 Sir George became a member of the House of Representatives of New Zealand, a singular step to be taken by one who had for many years been governor of the colony. His object in taking it was a laudable one—to do all he could to resist the measures of the doctrinaires who, in his opinion and in that of many other good judges, were doing their best to ruin the colony. This was the conclusion of his public career—a career to the greater part of which he may look back with justifiable pride and satisfaction.

Certainly in New Zealand and at the Cape the name of Sir George Grey can never be forgotten. If he had done nothing else for these colonies, the gift to each of a superb library would alone be enough to keep his name in lasting honour. It is a marvel that a man so constantly employed as he was, and almost always far from home, should have had the power of accumulating such large collections of books, and books of such special rarity and value. The authors delight to enlarge on the varied treasures of the Grey Library at Capetown, of its Caxtons, its first folio of Shakspeare, its chap books and other curiosities, its ethnological and philological collections. The library at Auckland contains the most complete collection of Bibles in the world; and both are rich in valuable manuscripts and autographs. What knowledge, what cultivation, and what taste must he not have been possessed of who formed these libraries! and how fine is the generosity that prompted him to part with collections of such pecuniary value in his life time!

WM. WICKHAM.

Fate in Arcadia, and other Poems. By Edwin J. Ellis. (Ward & Downey.)

WHEN Mr. Quaritch selected Mr. Ellis as one of the editors of his forthcoming edition of Blake's Prophetic Books, he made a happy choice, as this volume of poems proves. If Blake's hieroglyphs are to be deciphered at all, if his very complex mystical system is to be made intelligible, here is the man to find the method of his madness. Mr. Ellis is not quite a mystic himself, but he is in sympathy with the mystical method. His imagination superficially resembles Blake's in its symbolizing tendency; but, unlike Blake's, it is held in leash by a singularly subtle and self-conscious intellect. Hence it creates allegories rather than true myths. It habitually clothes intellectual abstractions in symbolic form, and it habitually extends its symbolism beyond the range of metaphor into the sphere of allegory. Mr. Ellis is never tired of telling us of the life and adventures of Love, Fate, Life, Death, Time, Hope, Despair, Sorrow, and Silence, in the world of ideas; and in some of the poems he succeeds in making these adventures interesting, in verse in which ingenuity of intellectual invention is vitalised by poetical imagination. His poetry is distinctly a criticism upon life, often tantalising by the fantastic subtlety of its thought, but just as often fascinating by the beauty of its poetic form. There is, indeed, enough of the stuff of thought in this volume to furnish forth many of our contemporary poets; though it is too often expressed in a form which is puzzling rather than illuminating, even to the careful reader.

The book opens with a charming preface in verse, which, with the omission of two stanzas, is as follows:—

"Here kneels my word, that may not say,
Even to the inward ear of night,
More than the laughter of the day,
Or the soft weeping of twilight.

"No waking hours, no sleep shall find
The world's continual dream revealed.
The living Word is silent mind,
And every book is closed and sealed.

"Our Mother Earth for daily things
Has given the daily mother-tongue;
But the mute wonder that she brings
All lips have kissed, no voice has sung.

"Thus every song is free from blame,
Though silence veil her inmost part,
Like the dark centre of the flame
Or the hot patience of the heart."

There is much of this "hot patience of the heart" beneath intellectual subtlety of Mr. Ellis's verses all through the volume.

The principal poem, "Fate in Arcadia," is a pastoral in rhymed decasyllabic couplets, which contains passages of great beauty. The scene is laid in Arcadia, a very modern Arcadia, and the poem is an allegory of the struggles of Love to pass from the sphere of dreams to its incarnation in the actual world. The personages are a knight and a maiden, an old woodcutter and a fairy. There are six scenes. In the first the knight comes at dawn to the borders of Arcadia, where he meets the woodman, who tells him that this is indeed Arcadia.

"But men here labour as elsewhere,
And maids here suffer."

And he complains that

"Less love is here since first I went a-Maying,
The world is old, and easily made wroth."

Arcadia has become old in immortal youth. Life and love have become more complex in modern times, and the old ideals seem withering in the winter that has invaded the Arcadian summer. The knight, however, is in pursuit of a maid:

"You are a woodman? What must be the maids?
Have they white arms, and bashful hair in braids,
And lips that seem to dream the use they know not,
And feet that pause in pretty fear, but go not,
And wisdom their hearts' quiet to defend,
Till Fate the master comes, and Love, the friend?"

He resolves to become an Arcadian, in spite of the woodman's warning that love in Arcadia means immortal youth.

In the second scene, the maid rejoicing in the dawn meets the fairy who proclaims the coming of day. The maid mourns over the dawn, and blames the sun for killing it.

"He kills the wonder of his welcoming.
How did the pretty herald harm the King?"

The fairy, who is an emanation from the knight's heart, the harbinger of the masculine element in love, rebukes her want of wisdom. Her maidenhood is "Cold without beauty, meagre without grace."

Now that the sun has come, the maid must change to a woman, and is in process of changing. She needs love, but fears it:

"Fairy: You and your pretty sister of the sky
Both need the god of day: the dawn goes by,
Being finished by his coming. If he stay,
Doubt not he is a god, and fear and pray.

"Maid: Must I for ever fear?

"Fairy: . . . Love feeds on fear.

"Maid: Love never comes to me.

"Fairy: . . . Love is now here,

And being come, may go; but come and gone
Leaves not the sweet clear solitude of dawn,
But only death, fair mortal. Live your day
And keep through noon what dew of dawn you may.

"Maid: Truth is the pearl for ever: dawn is none.

"Fairy: Only beware, the red cloud draws the sun,
But what the sun desires, he ends. Farewell!"

The fairy then goes out, and the knight enters and kisses the maid, who confesses that she loved him, knowing not. But now, unlike wholesome old-fashioned Arcadians, these introspective creatures begin to invent modesty, as Taine says Milton's Adam and Eve would have done, even if they had never sinned. The maid is shamed by her frank confession, and thinks that no man can love her now; the knight is abashed by the liberty he has taken, and puzzled:

"Man's wit has not the grace to understand,
Even in Arcadia so strange a thing
As this they call a maid."

Being modern, they seek to understand the alienation caused by their different needs in love, which as yet neither can supply. They part company, the knight to seek the woodman, the maid the fairy. The knight is oppressed with a sense of his own unworthiness:

"Woodman: They say Fate is a woman.
"Knight: . . . They say well,
For woman is all Heaven, and Earth, and Hell,
Our hope, our harvest, and our long despair.
Woodman, I cannot breathe Arcadian air,
A man has leisure to be mad here."

He has done nothing as yet:

"I wander aimless where the wild-fowl whir,
A bare-heeled Knight, and in my heart the spur."

He is not pure enough for the joy of love:

"The great summer lily's noon-day height
Rebukes all hearts that kneel not to her white,
Nor bring as tribute given in laughter's place,
Seven silences as candles round her face."

But he is killed by her coldness. He cannot be content if she yields herself as a grace, and so excites gratitude, not love, in return. Passion must answer passion:

"I should have loved her and not thanked."

Meanwhile the fairy tells the maid that

"He came for love, and found a scentless flower."

So the pretty little drama goes on to its fitting close—the reconciliation of the masculine and feminine ideals of love. But love still lives on fear.

The poem ends thus:

"Knight: Yet surely I will swear that if I may
I will become a lover most untrue.
If I can meet upon my wandering way
One heart that is more raised above the few,
That rise above the many, than this day
Your heart has risen, I'll be false to you.
But since I may not find what does not live,
And since I hold already my own friend,
And since my heart's a casket, not a sieve,
And since I shall not otherwise offend,
Save that I cannot alter love—forgive!"

"Maid: That will I. Forth to fortune. Strike and roam,
Be you my victory, I will be your home."

The above extracts will give some idea of the easy grace of Mr. Ellis's verse.

There are many other interesting poems in the book, which will repay careful reading. "To Earth, Mother of All," begins with this fine stanza:

"O Mother of the hills, forgive our towers!
O Mother of the clouds, forgive our dreams!
O Mother Earth, forgive; thy dreams are flowers.
O pity, Mother Earth; thy tears are streams!"

There is fine imaginative quality in the poem on "Night" and the masque of shadows called "Twelfth Night," in which the forms of Silence, Memory, and Love, pass before the dreamer's eyes. But on almost every page there are passages which show that Mr. Ellis has the art of clothing his thoughts and fancies in stately pageantries of words. There are some curious poems on Christ as Man and Logos, and one on Christ and Judas, which in the quaintness of its thought recalls some of Blake's utterances. It begins thus:

"This is the tree where Judas died,
And this where Christ was crucified;
And there's but little difference in,
Save here one died for his own sin,
That which the Other did for his,
For his and ours; and thus it is
That though the Church but little dreamed,
Judas, it seems was twice redeemed,
If there be power in sacrifice,
To get men safe to Paradise."

Here, finally, is a complete poem on "Summer":

"Now Time is moving slowly; heavy bees
Are warm upon his wing, and peace begins,
As though Forgiveness upon last year's sins
Had breathed, and they were lost in the blue eas."

"The farmer stands half idle and half praying;
God has released his fellow of the plough.
Labour can do no more, and wondering now
Bids the heart ponder what the corn is saying."

"Time trembles as the madness of the rose,
And kneels down silent to the lily's power;
While, in the sudden hush, like one more flower
The secrets of Eternity unclose."

JOHN TODMUNTER.

Visitations and Memorials of Southwell Minster. Edited by Arthur Francis Leach. (Printed for the Camden Society.)

THE Camden Society were well advised in admitting to a place among their valuable chronicles this account of the pre-Reformation registers of the old collegiate church of Southwell. Mr. Leach, while discharging his duty as an assistant Charity Commissioner in connexion with Southwell Collegiate Grammar School, found it necessary to ascertain precisely the position which the school used to hold with regard to the collegiate church. Their old registers demanded his attention; and the interest of the light they throw on the ecclesiastical life of the church and of the community at large in the century immediately before the Reformation became so absorbing, that it resulted in the reproduction of nearly the whole of the most interesting of these registers, together with abundant glosses, and a painstaking introduction of one hundred pages.

Southwell, which was never in its earliest days of monastic foundation, became one of the most important of the great collegiate churches of England. It was the cathedral church of the northern primate for the county of Nottingham; and before Lincoln was cut off after the Conquest, it probably occupied that position for the whole of the Southumbrian portion of the great diocese of York. Mr. Leach brings out very clearly, by quotations from Bishop Stubbs and as the result of his own investigations, the difference between a monastery of monks and a minster of secular priests or canons. The former were bound by the threefold vow of poverty, chastity, and obedience, as well as by the specific statutes of their own rule, and were not necessarily in holy orders; the latter were ordinary clergy, bound by no other vows than those of their ordination, but living together on common estates, serving a common church, and under common local statutes. Mr. Leach is undoubtedly right in saying that the origin of the secular canons was that of missionary priests having a common centre, and serving neighbouring mission stations, while at the same time they were attendants on the services of the mother church. This can be most interestingly followed up in Derbyshire, in which small county there were in the early days of Mercian Christianity at least five small minster or common churches, — Ashbourne, Bakewell, Chesterfield, Derby, and Wirksworth—round each of which the mission stations have gradually changed, by a process occupying sometimes many centuries, into independent parishes, with their own beneficed priest.

The original number of canons at Southwell was probably the number of perfection, seven, as was the case at York, Beverley, Ripon, Lichfield, and elsewhere. Other prebends were founded by successive Archbishops of York, until, in 1291, Southwell stood complete with sixteen canons, whilst Ripon remained at seven, and Beverley had only increased to nine. This exceptional state of things seems to have been due "to Southwell being the most southern, and therefore the safest, pleasantest, and most fashionable manor and residence of the archbishops." Southwell as the great church of Nottinghamshire attained to rare privileges. In spiritual matters she was free from all episcopal jurisdiction, save by way of appeal, and she possessed all episcopal functions except ordination. Her rights and privileges were based on those of York, save in one or two important respects, the most striking of which was that the college of canons had no head. In this it was almost unique, differing from every other collegiate church in the land save that of Ripon. Indeed Southwell was absolutely unique, for at Ripon a recognised supremacy was attached to a special prebendary; it was in fact "a republic among surrounding monarchies." The archbishop became only a nominal suzerain; and the position, as Mr. Leach well puts it, was exactly like that of Florence or Ham-burgh under the nominal sovereignty of the emperor, an independent self-governing republic. The chapter was its own "ordinary"; it alone visited and furnished the inferior ministers of the church and the prebends. It would be contrary to human nature to expect that such a system would work well, especially in lax times.

The register of the Acts of Chapter from 1469 to 1542, much of which is given in extenso, in these pages, tells, indeed, a sorry tale, so far as the triennial visitations of the vicars and chanting priests are concerned. The visitations, as a rule, were held by only one of the canons residentiary.

"The oddest farrago of offences," says Mr. Leach, "is presented to us in these visitations. Crimes of the darkest complexions are mixed up with the most trivial delinquencies. Leaving the church door open, sleeping at matins, talking and laughing during service, spitting and blowing your nose in the choir, are jumbled up higgledy-piggledy with stabbing and fighting, stealing and adultery; and it is hard to say whether either the witnesses or the judges really think there is much difference between them."

There is a good deal more of this smart writing in the Introduction as to the mixture of offences, but it is illogical and unworthy of an historian. If diverse offences come under the cognisance of a court how can they escape being recorded? The same kind of satire might be exercised with regard to modern assizes, or even a day at a police court. In ecclesiastical courts this medley of offences could not, moreover, possibly be avoided; and the contrast is perhaps greater, because they rightly dealt with irreverence as well as with defamation or immorality. We are thoroughly conversant with a number of unpublished parochial Visitations of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, as well as with others of the first half of the seventeenth century, and just the same features are there noticeable. In those of the latter date the gravest acts of immorality are interlarded with such offences as removing a pulpit cushion, violently shaking an hour glass, and throwing a ball on the church roof. As to the assumption made by Mr. Leach, that neither witnesses nor judge seemed to think there was any difference in the sins, such an assumption can only be made, when the brevity of the records is considered, out of arrant wantonness. Had Mr. Leach made a study of the course of procedure in ecclesiastical courts, other satirical paragraphs would not have been printed; for however lax may have been the discipline at Southwell, the warning (monitio), or "don't do it again on pain of punishment," as he likes to term it, was often a necessity, and in accordance with the usual rule even if the judge had been of the severest mould. The fact that such offences as gabbling the psalms, shirking choir, muttering the offices, lolling on the seats, celebrating mass in their gowns or with torn and dirty vestments, not lighting the lamps, and flinging down their choral habits, were brought before the court at all is not a proof to any reasonable man that such customs were general, but rather that there was at all events a prevalent feeling that such things were sins if done by the ministers of a church, and required checking. However, after making all these allowances, there can be no doubt that the revelations made by these Visitations with regard to the immoral and generally irregular life of not a few of the inferior clergy of Southwell in the century before the Reformation are painful and surprising. Mr. Leach, as though he held a brief to blacken the later mediæval clergy, labours hard to prove that this condition of things was in no wise exceptional; but having a somewhat exceptionally wide knowledge of both published and unpublished Visitations, we have no hesitation in saying that these revelations are exceptionally bad. Southwell having a specially inadequate form of government for correction, suffered in a peculiar degree from the comparative laxity and freedom that were the natural results.

The mistakes, too, that Mr. Leach makes are all on the side of his assumption of the general vileness of the English clergy. For instance, he tells us positively that all the vicars of collegiate or minster churches were invariably in holy orders before the Reformation. This is certainly not the case. At Lichfield, for example, immediately before the Reformation, there were fourteen priest vicars and seven lay vicars. Nor is there any spirit of fairness in the absurd comparisons which he attempts to draw between the status of the vicars and minor clergy of Southwell (always a small country town), and the condition of those with whom he would fain have us compare them in the present day. He gravely declares that the records he is dealing with are those of a picked section of society, and that "the true parallel to-day would be an inquisition on the masters of a public school or the dons of a university." We have a shrewd fancy that even some of these might be found guilty of similar offences to the Southwell ministers if they were properly "visited," but the true parallel would be the vicars choral of our cathedral churches. A few years ago the present writer had occasion to draw the attention of the dean of one of our old foundations to the visitation questions issued by his predecessors to the vicars choral with some regularity last century, and the suggestion was ventured upon that such a visitation might, with profit, be repeated. The reply of the dean was half in jest, but half in earnest. "Oh, no; pray nothing of the kind, if we are to have any singing men at all."

When Mr. Leach deals with subjects that have no immediate reference to clerical misdeeds, his assumptions and conjectures are often valuable; and at all events we can afford to be most grateful to him for the pains he has taken in giving careful transcripts and elucidating them in a happy way, without full translation, by a well arranged marginal summary in English. The book is in many respects of true value to the ecclesiologist and theologian, as well as to the student of the manners and morals of the past. A dispensation in 1465 to a priest for food and drink before singing mass is a bit of evidence that will be severely scrutinised by those who take an interest in the canonical discussions as to fasting communion; the references to York, Beverley, and Ripon throw new light on the constitutions and customs of those northern minsters; and in various other ways these pages will be found to be replete with interest. Yet the flavour that this carefully studied book leaves on our palate induces us to add, as a last word or hope, that the council of the Camden Society will in the future issue a general instruction to their editors to eschew as far as possible broad reflections and drawn-out comparisons; for such work can only be done well by those of the widest reading, is only suitable for general history, and cannot fail to disfigure the more particular subjects that the society was founded to illustrate.

J. CHARLES COX.

TWO BOOKS ON THE HISTORY OF RELIGION.

History of the Jews. By the late Prof. H. Graetz. Edited, and in part translated, by Bella Löwy. (David Nutt.)

THE HIBBERT LECTURES FOR 1891: On the Origin and Growth of the Conception of God. By Count Goblet d'Alviella. (Williams & Norgate.)

THE three bulky volumes completing the English translation of Prof. Graetz's History of the Jews cover a period extending from the fall of the Western Empire to the year 1870. Although necessarily dealing with events and characters of far less interest, they greatly surpass in value the first two volumes, and are translated in a more careful and spirited manner, at least down to the middle of the fifth volume, after which there is a decided falling off. One has again to lament the entire absence of notes. If those in the original could not be reproduced in extenso, room might surely have been found for a brief reference to the authorities used by Dr. Graetz. In a survey extending over so many countries and so many centuries, mistakes were perhaps unavoidable; but some of those that I have noted may fairly be ascribed to the ignorance of the translators. We hear of "Ostrogothic emperors" (vol. iii., p. 29), a phrase that would have shocked Mr. Freeman. As in a recent book of Mr. F. Newman's, Arius is made a bishop (ibid., p. 46). The phrase "eternal torments in the flames of purgatory" (ibid., p. 50) shows that we are not on Christian ground. If anyone ever said that Caesarea at the time of the Saracen conquest could send forth 700,000 fighting men (ibid., p. 88), a statement so clearly fabulous should not have been cited by a serious historian. Spinoza was not "born in Spain," as is stated here (vol. v., p. 92), but in Holland. On the other hand, the field of Waterloo is not Dutch (ibid., p. 553, but Flemish; and Villafranca is no more in Savoy than is its neighbour Nice. To say that Louis XV., who had only one queen, "was ruled by his wives," sounds rather odd, even as a euphemism. One cannot believe that a German scholar described Fichte as "the editor of Kant's work" (ibid., p. 490). Lord Palmerston was not "Prime Minister" (ibid., p. 715), but Foreign Secretary, in 1846.

During the earlier Middle Ages, that is from the break-up of Rome to the First Crusade, the condition of the Jews was relatively happy and prosperous. Dr. Graetz does indeed complain of various laws forbidding them to hold Christian slaves; but as the Jews made a point of converting their slaves to their own religion, and not always, we may suspect, by simple persuasion, such laws did not transgress the bounds of legitimate self-defence. But with the Crusades began that long series of massacres, persecutions, expropriations, and expatriations which make up the most piteous chapter in the dreadful annals of religious fanaticism. He must have the heart and brain of an anti-Semite who can read without tears the tale of inexhaustible cruelty on the one side, of inexhaustible heroism on the other, as it stands recorded in the eloquent pages of Dr. Graetz. But one must regret that the national and religious partisanship of the historian should have led him again and again into bitter and unjustifiable sarcasms at the expense of Christianity, as if none but the Christians had ever persecuted and despoiled his countrymen, as if the lesson of intolerance had not been taught in the Jewish Scriptures, as if the infant Church had not to fight for its very existence against Pharisaical fanaticism, as if within the pale of Judaism itself the Rabbis did not try to put down their opponents by force, at one time calling in the aid of the Dominicans for the purpose (vol. iii., p. 560), at another imitating the procedure of the Spanish Inquisition against heretics (vol. iv., p. 728). Cheap sneers about the "religion of love" come with a singularly bad grace from one who would have been the first to insist on the derivation of Christian ethics from Mosaism, and who, as an historian, has to record numerous instances in which Christian ecclesiastics sought with more or less success to protect the persecuted Jews against the rage of the ignorant multitude or the tyranny of unscrupulous princes.

Count Goblet d'Alviella gives us little more than a convenient summary of recent investigations into the natural history of religion. He adheres to the old view that the deification of physical objects and forces is a spontaneous result of primitive speculation, silently putting aside rather than controverting the far-fetched explanations of Mr. Sponcer and Prof. Max Müller. I may observe that, whatever support the recognition of a fixed order in nature gives to Theism, the lecturer is quite mistaken when he finds such an argument suggested in the Heccuba of Euripides (p. 199, note). "We believe in the gods through law," simply means we believe in them because the law of the land commands us so to do. Nómos is quite distinct from and even opposed to what we understand by a "law of nature." The Count's own religion is ethical theism with an agnostic shading—Elsmerianism in short. He holds that although man has evolved this faith from his own moral consciousness, morality has now become entirely dependant on it; and he joins hands with Mr. Mivart in asserting that determinism "undermines the foundations of moral obligation" (p. 284). No one who was quite at home in English philosophy would repeat the hollow phrases of continental spiritualism with such unquestioning confidence. For the rest, the lecturer builds his hopes for the religion of the future on the gradual modification of existing Churches in a liberal sense, rather than on the rise of any new sect.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Preliminary Tactics. An Introduction to the Study of War for the use of Junior Officers. By Major Eden Baker, Instructor, Artillery College. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

MAJOR EDEN BAKER, in his Preface, complains that subalterns nowadays are learned on the subject of commanding army corps or armies, but are not thoroughly versed in the actual handling of such small parties as are likely to be under their command. Ho gives the young officer some excellent advice:

"Learn from the numerous works in existence the principles of action of the three arms; the system upon which scouting and reconnaissance are carried out; the manipulation of small advanced flank and rearwards and outposts, and the treatment of the different arms in connexion with rivers, defiles, villages, woods, and convoys. After he has learnt all this he must set to work at the most difficult part of his task, viz., to acquire a true military eye and a ready judgment in the field."

Nothing could be better. But will the attainment of the knowledge here described and its application in practice be made easier by putting before the beginner a new additional course of elaborate memory work, to be mastered before the beginnings of tactics are approached?

There is, undoubtedly, a kind of knowledge which would be a valuable preliminary to the art of command, were it not that it cannot be learned in advance and in the abstract. The leader of troops must know the human heart, its high daring, its sudden quailings, and its mysterious imperative need to give itself with entire devotion to some master-spirit. But no text-book or compilation can teach this. The young officer will learn it, if he ever can learn it at all, in the friction of life and in the companionship of those whom he obeys and commands. A tactician should also know something of the horse, which can learn to do more work than English cavalry officers sometimes expect from it. Here, again, reading can give only a train of thought to be followed out, and such a stimulus will be best found in Nolan's old book, or in the new dialogues of the late Prince Hohenlohe. The mystery of ground is another element not exhausted, as some think, by the idea of cover, but full of resources for attack. This is a secret to be won only from mother earth and yielded by her to none but the assiduous wooer. Lastly there is the natural history of the bullet and the shell. Of this Major Eden Baker gives a thorough and useful account, though it is presented in a not very attractive form.

The opening chapter, on organisation, is too much like an extract from a statistical dictionary, propagating the details of "field establishments": that is, of the organisation which the War Office intends to give to its army corps when it gets them. The field establishments are valuable in their place, and so, too, are the details of armament and equipment. But a preis of them is useless. Anyone who needs to go into such matters usually wants much more than is here given. Major Eden Baker seems to hold that a subaltern is not to learn how to lead a patrol until he has digested this sort of thing:—

"The approximate fighting strength of a normal German army corps is 24,176 rifles, 1204 sabres, and 102 guns; and of a German cavalry division 3612 sabres and 12 guns. Those of other nations are much the same."

It can hardly be right to make the statistical study of foreign armies a preliminary to the first lessons in tactics, yet Major Eden Baker has whole pages like this:

"Austria.—The H.A. gun: calibre, 3.14 in.;

weight, 5.9 cwt.; M.V., 1365 f.s.; ring shell, 9.5 lb.; shrapnel, 10.27 lb. Weights behind the teams: gun, 3410 lb.; wagon, 4287 lb. No detachments are carried on the gun. The ammunition carried per gun per battery is: ring shell, 84; shrapnel, 54; case, 8; incendiary shell, 6; a total of 152 rounds. There are 19 carriages in a battery.

"The F.A. gun: calibre, 3.54 in.; weight, 9.5 cwt.; M.V., 1440 f.s.; ring shell, 14.1 lb.; shrapnel, 15.6 lb. Weights behind the teams: gun, 5040 lb.; wagon, 4121 lb. The ammunition carried per gun per battery is: ring shell, 70; shrapnel, 45; case, 8; incendiary shell, 5; total, 128. There are 22 carriages in a battery."

The four last chapters are sketches—too general to be of use for reference, and too detailed and too little concentrated into principles to help beginners—of supply, transport, halting arrangements, and marches. Statistical information on these matters is freely given in the Soldier's Pocket Book. But Lord Wolseley never dreamed that the young officer was to get up the dictionary part of his useful volume before learning how to take his half company through a wood. Major Eden Baker declares (p. 175) that every officer "should be thoroughly acquainted in detail" with organisation, cadres, arms, and ammunition supply "before he commences to study his profession," and (p. vi.) that "organisation, equipment, &c.," are "the basis of all formations." In other words, he thinks tactics must be subordinate to organisation: I believe that organisation should as far as possible be subordinate to tactics.

The chapters on infantry and artillery fire are excellent. For infantry fire the author has rightly followed in the wake of Captain Mayne and of the Règlement of 1882. The account of artillery fire is clear and useful; and about "fire and ground" sound doctrines are set forth. Even these chapters, however, are loaded with bad detail. Three pages are given to the oiling and keeping clean of a gun-carriage. I think our English schools of ballistics a little pedantic upon initial velocity (an illusion now happily dispelled after years of a mischievous reign), and upon calculations of $W \cdot d^2$. Would not the beginner learn more from being told that other things being equal, a long bullet goes further than a short one? The table of percentage of hits that may be expected in battle is surely a mistake. The percentage depends on the men's training and leading, and the field-firing at Attock in 1890 shows that better results than Major Eden Baker's may be looked for in the future. The definitions, distinguishing between fire tactics, fire management, fire direction, fire control, fire superintendence, and fire discipline, seem to me bad pedagogy. It is quite right to explain the share in the conduct of fire, of sergeant, captain, colonel, and general. But to invent an artificial terminology like this is unnecessary, and leads to confusion.

Major Eden Baker is, no doubt, right in thinking that tactics cannot be profitably studied by an officer who makes no attempt to grasp the composition, armament, and equipment of the various arms and services. So long as the peace organisation of the army does not admit of this familiarity being acquired in the officer's every-day life, some such text-book as he has written is necessary. The difficulty is to give enough without giving too much. Is not the happy mean to be found by putting into the preliminary text-book only those details which are indispensable for the elements of tactics, and relegating all the rest to a book of reference? Judged by this test, the present volume seems overloaded.

SPENSER WILKINSON.

NEW NOVELS.

In Spite of Herself. By Leslie Keith. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The One Good Guest. By L. B. Walford. (Longmans.)

His Life's Magnet. By Theodora C. Elmslie. (Frederick Warne.)

Zillah. By Joseph Hocking. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

Wyhola. By Evelyn Everett-Green. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Where the Sea-Birds Cry. By Castle Hill. (Digby, Long & Co.)

For Hal's Sake. By Amy Manifold. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Wanted. By Dick Donovan. (Chatto & Windus.)

A CAREFUL study of a thoroughly selfish woman and a thoroughly unselfish man, such as we have from Leslie Keith, was certainly worth making and giving to the public; but it is too long. In spite of Lady Chatty and Sir Peter, and Lawrence Hutton and two love-affairs, and even the patient Decima—who would have done very well if she had had a whole novel to disport herself in—the true interest of In Spite of Herself rests in the life of Anthony Vidal and his wife Susie, the husband who is all self-effacement, the wife who is all self-regard, if not all self-enjoyment. The contrast between the two is almost too strongly emphasised. By nine out of ten readers of the story the final martyrdom of Antony for the sake of Susie will be regarded as a mistake. But it surrounds what would otherwise be a rather commonplace plot with a halo of something like idealism. For the rest, In Spite of Herself is a painstaking study of the men and women, boys and girls, none of them romantically bad, that haunt the drawing-rooms of an unromantic society. As already said, Decima, the unselfish sister of the selfishly "smart" Susie, should have had a novel to herself, for she is to Susie what Little Dorrit was to her sister Fanny. Her lover Archie is a trifle too plain, however, in spite of "a shapely calf that looked its best in a shooting-stockings." For "the close-cropped curls on his head were undeniably red"; and there is not generally supposed to be any special attraction for women in "a wholesome, open, plain-featured face, embrowned with the weather, and freckled where it is not brown." In Spite of Herself is a painstaking product of second-class art in fiction. It is not at all unreadable, in spite of its length, and (like Archie's face) is thoroughly wholesome.

The One Good Guest is the most thoroughly juvenile of all Mrs. Walford's books. It is indeed a study of the characters of a boy and a girl; for although Tom and Ida Barnet are old enough to entertain guests at their country house during a season which is more notable for rain than shooting, and to defy outspoken oldsters like General Thistleblow, they are but boy and girl after all, so far as their best (and happily dominating) instincts are concerned. Nothing could be simpler than the plot of One Good Guest. Among the guests included by Tom and Ida Barnet in their first country-house party is Maurice Stafford, who is good-natured, obliging, and hopeful under the most discouraging meteorological circumstances. But he is mistaken—wilfully or unintentionally does not at first appear—for a scampish brother; and certain spiteful cats and male weaklings of the sort represented as being very numerous in Society, spread the story abroad that the Barnets have been entertaining a devil unawares. Influenced by a letter to a quite unnecessary extent, Ida very discourteously dismissed the young man whom she "secretly loves." Tom proves to be made of firmer stuff. He believes in Stafford, and confounds his maligners; and of course in the end Ida and her lover are brought together. This is the whole of One Good Guest. It is a story and nothing more, and a story of the type of John Strange Winter's rather than of Mrs. Walford's. Tom Barnet is a good portrait, however, and some of Maurice's slanderers are cleverly enough sketched. In short, The One Good Guest is one of those stories which should be written in a fortnight and can be read in an hour.

Sir Reginald Guest, known to everybody as "Rex," is a young man of generous instincts. But he is passionate, he is apt to dash off from the regular path of life into dissipation, he bears a startling resemblance to that Rochester who distinguished himself in the days when "the Nell Gwynne Defender of the Faith" was king, and he is under a family curse which will not be removed till a Guest gives his life for a Le Marchant. The three hundred and fifty pages of which His Life's Magnet is composed are devoted to the desperate efforts of Rex to escape from the bonds of fate. Apparently he succeeds when he saves the life of Serène Garland and falls in love with her, and she with him. But she proves to be a Le Marchant, and to have a father who is under a cloud, while a "certain person" has figured in Rex's history before Serène. So there is nothing left for Rex but to gratify his tastes for dissipation to the uttermost, and to die while attempting to save the life of the man whom he erroneously supposes to be his successful rival. Thus it will be seen that His Life's Magnet is neither an original nor a satisfactory story, and the leading characters in it are very commonplace. One or two of the minor personages, such as Hopperty, a lame boy, whose loyalty to Rex is unbounded, and the family of that Harry Conquest whom the jealous young man considers to be a treacherous friend, are carefully and even cleverly drawn. The length to which His Life's Magnet runs is quite unnecessary.

As a mere romance—as present-day romances go—Zillah is readable and even exhilarating, in an old-fashioned way and to a quite old-fashioned extent. Zillah is a very good example of the beautiful, lovable maiden whose father is an Englishman, whose mother is a Spaniard, who is the heir to a squire, and who has fallen into the hands of scoundrels. Jack Harcourt, too—impressible, courageous, inventive, and indomitable—is just the sort of young man to fall in love with Zillah, to carry her off, and to knock down the man who occupies the place of the superior fiend among her enemies. These enemies, too, would all be sufficiently natural and real but for their dealings—and, indeed, but for the dealings of everybody in the story—with spiritualism and kindred "phenomena." No doubt these give a certain modern piquancy to the story, and, in the case of the credulous Uncle William, take the place of character. But one gets tired long before Zillah closes of its feeble "mediums" and of "powers" which, when they are tested by a genuine emergency, show themselves to be no powers at all.

Wyhola is a rather thin story of a rustic beauty of the familiar, almost passionless, sort whom young men and second-rate novelists rave of, and who is within an ace of marrying the wrong man. Wyhola is, fortunately, distinguished from most girls of the kind that would naturally obtain such a nickname as "The Rose of Corve Dale" by the genuine simple Puritanism of her nature, which takes the form of pretty obstinacy when she has to decide between duty and love. The disloyal Lancelot is, as his rival Basil puts it, a bit of a cur, but he is even more of a goose. Otherwise, it is inconceivable that he should have quarrelled with Wyhola, a girl brought up to the performance of deeds of philanthropy, because she has been true to her second nature, even to the extent of committing a trifling breach of decorum. Writers of such stories as this have a special constituency in view for which they cater; and, doubtless, with a view to this constituency, the author of The Rose of Corve Dale has made the curish Lancelot and the mildly treacherous Bianca tolerably happy, and reconciled them to Wyhola. But the reconciliation will strike the believer in the reality of ordinary human nature as a bluish or au otherwise fairly good plot.

It is eminently inadvisable that people who live in the south of England should go to the west coast of Scotland for change of air and bathing, even if they take a nurse with their children. There is a risk that one at least of the children may be carried off by gypsies, who it seems frequent that region. George, the boy who in Where the Sea-Birds Cry is thus carried off, fares very well indeed. Though he has quite a host of adventures, all ends well with him in the long run, for these experiences serve mainly to harden him. But of course all children who go to the west coast of Scotland might not get off so easily. There is no special merit of any kind in Where the Sea-Birds Cry, which has a juvenile look. The Irish dialect in it is decidedly antique, and the incidents, of which it is almost entirely composed, are of the familiarly "stirring" kind.

There is in For Hal's Sake a pleasant American flavour of the sort to be found in Little Lord Fauntleroy. A boy and a girl with a man who professes to be their father turn up from the other side of the Atlantic in the house of Colonel Treherne, of Suffolk, who is a gentleman of the Thomas Newcome type. This man is on no good errand. He professes to have married Colonel Treherne's sister in America, and to have discovered that Colonel Treherne's father made a will leaving the house and lands in Suffolk to the son of this sister. In spite of this, and in spite of the appearance on the scene of Miss Vowles, the governess of the children of Cyrus Hodgson, of Montana, the Treherne family fraternise with their relatives in the friendliest possible way. The two sets of children come to know each other thoroughly. Although poor Hal, the true heir to the Chaso, dies, all ends well for the Trehernes, for the supposed father of the American children turns out to be the brother of their governess. Mollie Hodgson also is adopted by her uncle, and so is not separated from her cousins. But the strength of For Hal's Sake lies not in the plot, but in the childish dialogues, confidences, and adventures, with which it is filled. They are thoroughly natural, and the differences between the British and the American temperaments and educational methods are admirably brought out.

It may be hoped that Dick Donovan is the last of the detectives in fiction. Though he is by no means the worst, yet Wanted! suggests that he has exhausted his imagination or his note-book. Stories of the type of "Springthorpe's Last Flutter"—an adventure of the gambling-table abroad—can only have been inserted here because their author is of opinion that he has published quite enough about smashers, forgers, burglars, murderers, and sanctimonious scoundrels, and that he had better have something to say in future of humanity that is ordinarily and not abnormally weak. At the same time Dick Donovan has lost none of his power of inventing a story of criminals and clues—a power in which he is inferior only to the biographer of Sherlock Holmes. "A Strange Conspiracy," "Old Jinks's Money," and "Taken in the Act," are sufficient evidences of the existence of this faculty unimpaired. Dick Donovan's style, too, improves as time passes. He writes more gracefully, and with a lighter hand than he used to do.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co.'s scarlet-covered "Social Science Series" continues its miscellaneous course, and bids fair to become a permanency. With the wide range of subject which it covers, and the varied views of its contributors, there seems no reason why it should come to an end. In quality we think it improves as it goes on. It contains no really important work, but some of the recent volumes are earnest and useful contributions to social questions. They do not exhaust, or even go deeply into, any subject. They do not affect to do any such thing. It is enough that they give us a ready means of observing the strength and direction of prevailing opinions on social and industrial matters.

In Neighbourhood Guilds Dr. Stanton Coit takes up General Booth's challenge to bring forward a better scheme than his for lifting the fallen classes of society into independence and prosperity. The idea of the Guilds is that,

"irrespective of religious belief or non-belief, all the people, men, women, and children, in any one street, or any small number of streets, in every working-class district in London, shall be organised into a set of clubs, which are by themselves, or in alliance with those of other neighbourhoods, to carry out, or induce others to carry out, all the reforms—domestic, industrial, educational, provident, or recreative—which the social ideal demands."

Dr. Coit has himself successfully tested his plan in New York and in London; and if he can make many others work in his own healthy spirit and with his own good sense, the Guilds may or may not be great instruments of social reform, but at any rate they will bring a wholesome influence into many dull lives.

A USEFUL supplement to Miss Potter's work on The Co-operative Movement, which we have already noticed as appearing in the same series, is an essay on Distributing Co-operative Societies, by Dr. Luigi Pizzamiglio. It expounds the nature and merits of distributive co-operation, discusses some of its vexed questions (as whether goods should be sold at cost price or at current market price, and whether sales should be confined to members), and gives a brief account of the spread of co-operation throughout Europe.

In The Student's Marx, Dr. Aveling epitomises in 174 short pages the first volume of Das Capital, and has performed this very difficult task with great care and skill. He intends the analysis for those who have read, and for those who have not read, the work itself. To the former, it will be of considerable service; it will, in fact, be the next best thing to an analysis made by themselves. To the latter, whether they afterwards go to the original or not, it will be of doubtful benefit. It will not make the reading of Marx one whit the easier; and taken by itself, being a mere skeleton of argument, it would leave the student with a good many false and a great many crude ideas. In short, it should be used as a document is used in the witness-box, to refresh the memory; and for that purpose it is exceedingly good.

BOTH those who believe in Mr. Henry George and those who do not will derive considerable satisfaction from his open letter to Leo XIII. on The Condition of Labour. The believers will find his doctrine of the iniquity of private property in land enforced with a truly enviable vigour of rhetoric. The unbelievers, on their part, cannot fail to enjoy the pedagogic solemnity with which Mr. George lectures the Pope, and the intimate acquaintance which he displays with the designs of Providence. His way of taxing land "is the way intended by God for raising public revenues." In the increasing value of land, from the growth of population, is it not clear that we have "a tendency willed by the Creator? Can it mean anything else than that He who ordained the State, with its needs, has, in the values which attach to land, provided the means to meet those needs?" And then Mr. George proceeds, with many professions of personal esteem, to show his Holiness that, in defending private property in land, he is defending a system which means robbery, murder, and other evil things. A translation of the Encyclical of last year is appended. Mr. George hopes that his Holiness will not be offended at the frankness of his letter. We are certain that his Holiness will not be offended; his feelings will be of an entirely different kind.

The Modern State in relation to Society and the Individual. By Paul Leroy Beaulieu. M. Beaulieu, who is an individualist without being a fanatic, dissents from the dictum of M. Jules Simon that "the State ought to strive to render itself useless, and to prepare for its own decease." He would leave it three functions. Firstly, it should guarantee security—the collective security of the nation, and the personal security of the individual and of his rights. Secondly, though it does not create rights (for right is of spontaneous growth), it should define, sanction, and regulate them in its administration of justice. Thirdly, being the representative of social permanence, it should prevent the general conditions of existence from deteriorating among its people, and should even seek to improve them. Under this last head M. Beaulieu speaks of such matters as drainage and forestry. But his general principle is wide enough to cover the extremest forms of State intervention. That the State should safeguard permanent interests against the short-sighted pursuit of present interests, is the ground on which is based the demand for State regulation of the hours of labour. A classification of functions which M. Beaulieu and Mr. Herbert Spencer on the one hand, and the Fabian Society on the other hand, can equally accept is not very helpful. M. Beaulieu's essay is bright and lucid; he shows easily enough that modern governments do many things badly; but neither his criticism nor his principles will enable us to decide whether the State should control the liquor traffic or give pensions to aged people. The warnings of the philosopher and the economist can never do more than make us move cautiously. If they have that effect, it is a great deal.

In The Destitute Alien in Great Britain, edited by Mr. Arnold White, we have several essays on foreign pauper immigration and the necessity of imposing restrictions upon it. Mr. C. B. Shaw gives an account of the Huguenot and Flemish settlers, as if to warn us that we should be cautious in accepting the policy advocated in the rest of the volume; Mr. Crackanthorpe states generally the case for government interference; the Rev. G. T. Reaney deals with the moral aspect, and Mr. W. A. McArthur with the imperial aspect, of the question; Mr. C. J. Follett sketches briefly the history of legislation as to aliens; and Mr. W. H. Wilkins and Mr. T. H. Jeyes describe the extent and character of pauper immigration and its influence on English labour. It is in determining this last point that the difficulty consists; and, as Mr. Arnold Whitesays, the question is unlikely to be settled in this country without a more thorough examination into the facts than has yet been made. If it be shown that foreign immigration, to any considerable extent, lowers the English labourer's standard of life and tends to keep it low, we shall certainly follow the example of the United States and Australia in imposing restrictions. But the case has not yet been made out, and Mr. White's essayists too readily assume that a stringent Alien Act could cure the undoubted evils which they describe.

The Impossibility of Social Democracy. By Dr. A. Schäffle. This is a supplement to The Quintessence of Socialism, a translation of which has already appeared in Messrs. Sonnenschein's series. In the form of letters to a friend, Dr.

Schäffle describes the characteristics of Social Democracy, gives an elaborate criticism of it in its various phases and relations, and states his method of combating it. The last part of the work is that which will be most helpful to English readers. Unless they have leanings towards Collectivism, they may safely omit his analysis and criticism (in the course of which he permits himself to use a good many arguments which are not wise or discreet), and may begin with his third letter, in which he elaborates a positive social policy. "There must be an end," he says, "of the anti-governmental, the truly nihilistic laissez faire, laissez aller, of the thorough Liberals, just as much as of Democratic Collectivism." His argument on this head is interesting not only on general grounds, but as an indication of the different currents of opinion in Germany.

IN Poverty: Its Genesis and Exodus, Mr. J. G. Godard resolves the causes of poverty into insufficient production, waste, unequal distribution (the most potent cause of all), and poverty itself; and proceeds to explain how by socialist remedies these causes can be removed. The community is to acquire the ownership of land and capital. But he would proceed gradually. For a practical programme, to mention some of his proposals, he would make land bear a larger share of taxation, he would disendow the Church, there should be a differentiated and graduated income tax, municipal bodies should take over the liquor traffic, and more adequate provision should be made for education. Mr. Godard writes very confidently, and his book should find appreciation as a good Progressive manual.

NOTES AND NEWS.

AMONG the most interesting announcements of Messrs. Macmillans, to be found in full on another page of the ACADEMY, we may mention here a new volume of poems by Lord Tennyson, to be called Akbar's Dream; a new volume of poems by Mr. George Meredith; and a volume of historical essays by Lord Acton.

THE Rev. H. R. Haweis, at the request of the family, has undertaken the compilation of a memoir of Sir Morell Mackenzie from private papers and personal reminiscences. The work will be issued about the close of the year by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will issue early next month, under the title of Twenty-five Years in the Secret Service: the Recollections of a Spy, Major Le Caron's diaries and notebooks, with a number of hitherto unpublished documents and portraits. Major Le Caron will be remembered as one of the principal witnesses on behalf of the Times in the Parnell trial.

LORD CHARLES BRUCE, who, as is well known, has made a study of the contents of the Althorpe Library, has written an account of the most important books in the collection. This will shortly be published, in a volume of some three hundred pages quarto, with numerous illustrations and facsimiles, under the title Treasures of the Althorpe Library: The Origin and Development of the Art of Printing, illustrated by examples from the collection of Earl Spencer. The publisher will be Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a volume of essays by the late Richard Jefferies, dealing with the condition of the agricultural labourer, most of which originally appeared in Fraser's Magazine, but one, cast in the form of a story, has not before been published. It will be called The Tillers of the Field, and will have for frontispiece a portrait from the bust in Salisbury Cathedral.

MESSRS. SAMPSON Low announce a volume, entitled Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp, 1882-1893, edited by Major F. R. Wingate, director of intelligence in the Egyptian army. It is based upon the original manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, of the Austrian mission in Kordofan, who escaped early in the present year from the Soudan with two Sisters of Mercy. The book will be illustrated with photographs, maps, and special drawings by Mr. Walter C. Horsley.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE will publish next week Mr. Le Gallienne's new volume, English Poems, the whole edition of which has been disposed of before issue. The principal poem is a version of the story of Paolo and Francesca. The same publishers will also issue, simultaneously, Mr. Arthur Symonds's Silhouettes: A Book of Verses, with a title page designed by Mr. Herbert Horne.

A VOLUME of Memorial Verses by Mr. George Barlow will shortly be published by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. The book will be entitled A Lost Mother, and will contain an autotype reproduction of W. Bell Scott's etching after Blake's highly finished water-colour in the British Museum, illustrating the words: "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will shortly publish a work by Mr. Stephen Bonsall (special correspondent of the "Central News"), on Morocco as it is, containing an account of Sir Charles Euan Smith's recent mission and its importance to England in relation to Gibraltar.

MR. I. ZANGWILL's Children of the Ghetto, will be published in three-volume form by Mr. W. Heinemann towards the end of the month. The story, which is of a realistic nature, deals with phases of Jewish life in London, and is divided into two books—"Children of the Ghetto," and "Grandchildren of the Ghetto," treating of the East-end Jew and the West-end Jew respectively. An American edition will be published simultaneously, and a copy will be presented by the Jewish Publication Society of America to each of its 4000 members as a New Year's gift.

MESSRS. BELL will issue on the 28th inst. Horae Evangelicæ; or, the Internal Evidence of the Gospel History, being an inquiry into the structure and origin of the Four Gospels, and the characteristic design of each narrative, by the Rev. J. R. Birks.

THE next volume in the series of "Great Writers" will be Voltaire, by Mr. Francis Espinasse.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will issue the first volume of his new "Independent Library" next week, under the title of The Shifting of the Fire, a novel by Mr. Ford Hueffer, with a dedication to the author's grandfather, Mr. Ford Madox Brown. The new series is designed to include both Foreign and English fiction, but no reprints. It is "Independent" because there is no connexion between the volumes composing it.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will publish immediately Mr. Silas K. Hocking's new work, Where Duty Lies, of which the scene is again laid among the quaint villages on the Cornish coast.

The Village Blacksmith is the title of a three-volume novel, by Darley Dale, which will be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. at the end of the month.

THE first edition of Lord Augustus Loftus's Reminiscences has been already exhausted. The work is now reprinting, and a second edition will be ready in a few days.

MESSRS. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co. will publish immediately a new edition of Mr. Lawrence Hutton's Literary Landmarks of London, illustrated with more than seventy portraits.

A NEW serial issue of Electricity in the Service of Man, revised by R. Mullineux Walmsley, is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. Part I. will appear on Sept. 26.

A SWEDISH translation of Mr. Hall Caine's Scapegoat has just appeared, under the title of "Synabocken"; and a German translation is being made by Dr. Koenig, the historian of German literature. We also understand that the one-volume English edition has reached a sale of sixteen thousand.

MR. ANDREW W. TUER, of the Leadenhall Press, who is engaged upon a work on Horn-Books, will be grateful for references to material and examples.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NOROATE will publish in October: The Galilean, a Portrait of Jesus of Nazareth, by the Rev. Walter Lloyd; The Supernatural: its Origin, Nature, and Evolution, by John H. King, in 2 vols.; Against Dogma and Free Will, by H. Croft Hillier, in which the author tries to show from Weismann's investigations the impossibility of free will, the certainties of science, and the uncertainties of metaphysics.

THEY have also nearly ready: the Hibbert Lectures for 1892, by Claude Montefiore, on The Origin, Foundation, and History of the Hebrew Religion; Silva Gadelica, a Collection of Tales in Irish, with extracts illustrating persons and places, edited from MSS. and translated by Standish H. O'Grady, in 2 vols.; and in the press a second series of a translation of Haus-rath's "New Testament Times," The Times of the Apostles, in 2 vols.

BEFORE Mr. C. H. Pearson left Melbourne for England, to take up the appointment of secretary to the Agent-General of Victoria, vacant by the death of J. Cashel Hoey, an address was presented to him on August 12, in the private room of Chief Justice Higinbotham. Among the subscribers were most of the professors of the University of Melbourne. In Australia, Mr. Pearson was known as a Radical politician, and as at one time minister of education; here he is remembered as professor of modern history at King's College, London, before Dr. Brewer. His return to England will be almost coincident with the publication of a new book of his on The Future of National Life and Character.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE October number of the Expository Times will contain a long article by Prof. Sayce on the bearing of recent archaeological discoveries on the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament; also a "Study of Milton's Primæval Man"; and articles by Prof. Candlish on "The Notion of Divine Covenants in the Bible"; by Prof. Symonds, of Toronto, on "Recent Biblical Study in Canada"; by Prof. Banks on "Our Debt to German Theology"; by Mr. David Eaton on "Wendt's Teaching of Jesus"; and a note by Prof. Margoliouth on the study of Syriac.

THE second year of the Bookman will begin with a new volume next month. Among the contents of the October number will be the first of a series of personal reminiscences of literary men who were prominent in the second quarter of the present century; a por-rait of Prof. Henry Drummond, on a special plate; some unpublished letters of George Eliot; an estimate of Mr. R. H. Hutton, of the Spectator, by Mr. William Watson; and a review, by Prof. W. M. Ramsay, of Mr. Gladstone's address at the Oriental Congress.

THE October number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain the following articles. Under the title of "Bam-i-Dunia" (= the Roof of the World), Mr. Robert Michell writes on the Pamirs, with full knowledge of what the Russians have both done and written; there will be two articles on Morocco, by Mr. Ion Perdicaris and Mr. W. B. Harris, from very different points of view; Dr. R. N. Cust will discuss the ethics of African exploration; Pandit S. E. Gopalachari, the question whether it is permissible for high-caste Hindus to cross the ocean; and Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji will advocate the holding of examinations for the Civil Service in India as well as in England.

THE first number of The Notts and Derbyshire Notes and Queries will be published, by Mr. Frank Murray, on October 15. Among the contents will be an Introduction by the Rev. Dr. J. C. Cox; and an article on Nottingham Stoneware, by Miss Edith Hodgkin.

MR. CLEMENT SCOTT'S reply to Mr. William Archer's article in the Fortnightly Review for August on "The Drama in the Doldrums," will appear in the October number of the Theatre.

MR. ARTHUR L. SALMON will contribute a paper entitled "A Literary Treasure-land" to a forthcoming issue of the Library Review. It contains reminiscences of experience among the cheap bookstalls.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A SONNET.

LET whoso will call half that is unclean,
And over men's backslidings sit and brood;
Yet I have found rich colours in the mud
And hints of beauty in the dreariest scene.
I have scant patience with that sober mood
That from the world impetuous youth would wean;
Rather be bold, and learn what all things mean,
Since scratches will but teach us hardihood.
Simple our knowledge is, howe'er we plod;
It may be we should love what most we hate,
Since none have wisdom this side of the sod;
And He who judges is compassionate,
For in my dusty soul I found of late
The indubitable footprints of the God.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co.'s List.

General.—"Akbar's Dream, and Other Poems," by Lord Tennyson; "Poetical and Dramatic Works of Lord Tennyson," miniature edition, printed at the Clarendon Press, on India Paper, in 8 volumes, in cloth box; "A Volume of Historical Essays," by Lord Acton; "Man in Art," by Philip G. Hamerton, illustrated with etchings and photogravures from pictures; "The Empty Purse, and other Poems," by George Meredith; "Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning," by Anne Thackeray Ritchie; "Scenes in Fairyland; or, Miss Mary's Visits to the Court of Fairy Realm," by Canon Atkinson, with about 40 illustrations by C. E. Broek; "Days with Sir Roger de Coverley," reprinted from The Spectator, with illustrations by Hugh Thomson; "The Library," by Andrew Lang, with a chapter on modern English illustrated books, by Austin Dobson, new edition; "The Makers of Venice," Doges, Conquerors, Painters, and Men of Letters, by Mrs. Oliphant, with illustrations by R. R. Holmes; "Old Christmas," by Washington Irving, with illustrations by Randolph Caldecott; "The Dream of Man," by William Watson; "The Poems of Wordsworth," chosen and edited by Matthew Arnold, with steel portrait engraved by C. H. Jeans, printed on India paper and mounted on title, the text printed on Dutch hand-made; "The Works of Coleridge," edited, with introduction, by J. Dykes Campbell, with portrait; "Interludes": being two essays, a story, and some verses, by Horace Smith; "The Purgatory of Dante Alighieri," an experiment in literal verse translation, by Charles Lancelot Shadwell, with an introduction by Walter Pater; "A Handbook to Dante," by Prof. Scartazzini, translated by A. J. Butler; "The History of Early English Literature," being the history of English poetry from its beginnings to the accession of King Alfred, by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, with a map, in 2 vols.; "English Prose Writers": passages of English prose selected on the plan of "The English Poets," by various writers, with short introductions, edited with a general introduction by Henry Craik, in 5 vols.; "Stray Studies from England and Italy," by J. R. Green, new edition; "Hæne Sabbaticæ," third series, by Sir James Stephen; two new volumes of the Golden Treasury series:—"Lyric Love: an Anthology," edited by William Watson, with a steel vignette after Stothard, engraved by W. Ridgway; and "The Art of Worldly Wisdom," by Balthasar Gracian, translated by Joseph Jacobs, with vignette; "The Beauties of Nature, and the Wonders of the World we live in," by Sir John Lubbock, with illustrations; "Amenophis and other Poems: Sacred and Secular," by Francis Turner Palgrave, with vignette after Raphael; "The Life of John Milton," Vol. II., new edition, also an index to the six volumes, by Prof. David Masson; "The Life of Cardinal Manning," by E. S. Purcell, in 2 vols., with portraits; "Memoirs of My Indian Career," by the late Sir George Campbell, in 2 vols., with portrait and map; "Boswell's Life of Johnson," edited by Mowbray Morris, being a new volume of "The Globe Library"; "Edward the First," by Prof. Tout, being a new volume of "Twelve English Statesmen"; "Lives of Eminent Persons," reprinted from The Times, in 4 vols.; "The Future of National Life and Character," by C. H. Pearson, late Minister of Education, Victoria; "History of Federal Government in Greece and Italy," by the late E. A. Freeman, with a general introduction, new edition, edited by J. B. Bury; "The English Town in the Fifteenth Century," by Alice Stopford Green, in 2 vols.; "Footprints of Statesmen during the Eighteenth Century in England," by the Hon. Reginald B. Brett; "Round London Down East and up West," by Montagu Williams, Q.C.; "Aristotle's Constitution of Athens," by J. E. Sandys, being a new volume of the Classical Library; "Life and Labour of the People in London," edited by Charles Booth, in four monthly volumes; "A Theory of Wages and its Application to the Eight Hours Question and the Labour Problems," by Herbert M. Thompson; "Tales from Tennyson's Idylls of the King," retold in prose by the Rev. Alfred Church; "The Girls and I," by Mrs. Molesworth, illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke; "An Old Woman's Outlook," by Charlotte M. Yonge; "Annals of an Old Manor House, Sutton Place, Guildford," by Frederic Harrison, illustrated from drawings by William Luker, jun., W. Niven, and C. Foster Hayward; "Life in Ancient Egypt," described by Adolf Erman, translated by H. M. Tirard, with illustrations and maps; "Beast and Man in India," a popular sketch of Indian animals in their relations with the people, by John Lockwood Kipling, with illustrations by the author, new edition; "France under the Regency," with a review of the administration of Louis XIV., by J. B. Perkins; "The City-State of Greek and Roman Antiquity," by W. Warde Fowler; "Atlas of Classical Antiquities," by Th. Schreiber, edited for English use by Prof. W. C. F. Anderson; a new edition of "The English Citizen Series," thoroughly revised, to be issued in monthly volumes from October, 1892.

Theological.—"The Central Teaching of Christ," being a study and exposition of St. John, Chapters XIII. to XVII. inclusive, by Canon Bernard; "Cathedral and University Sermons," by the late Dean Church; "Collected Works of Frederick Denison Maurice," in monthly volumes from October, 1892; "Restful Thoughts in Restless Times," by Dean Vaughan; "Counsel to English Churchmen Abroad," sermons by the Bishop of Gibraltar; "Warburtonian Lectures on the Minor Prophets," by Canon Kirkpatrick; two volumes of essays by Bishop Lightfoot: "Dissertations on the Apostolic Age," and "Biblical Miscellanies"; "The Early Narratives of Genesis," by Prof. Hyle; "Mothers and Sons," by the Hon. and Rev. Edward Lytton.

Science.—"Researches on the Propagation of Electrical Force," by Prof. Heinrich Hertz, of Bonn, translated by Prof. D. E. Jones, illustrated; "A Text-book of Pathology, Systematic and Practical," by Prof. D. J. Hamilton, Vol. II.; "Electrical Papers," by Oliver Heaviside, in 2 vols.; "Pioneers of Science," by Prof. Oliver Lodge, with portraits and other illustrations; "The Diseases of Modern Life," by B. W. Richardson, new and cheaper edition; "Finger Prints," by Francis Galton, with numerous illustrations; "Hereditary Genius: An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences," by Francis Galton, new edition; "Materials for the Study of Variation in Animals," Part I., Discontinuous Variation, by William Bateson, illustrated; "On Colour Blindness," by Thomas H. Bickerton, illustrated, Nature Series; "Hygiene": its Principles as applied to Public Health, adapted to the requirements of the elementary and advanced stages of the Science and Art Department, &c., by Edward F. Willoughby, new and enlarged edition; a uniform edition of Prof. Huxley's Essays, in 6 vols.; "A Defence of Philosophic Doubt," being an Essay on the Foundations of Belief, by A. J. Balfour, new edition; "Evolution and Man's Place in Nature," by Prof. Calderwood.

Fiction.—"Don Orsino," in 3 vols., "Children of the King," in 2 vols., and "Three Fates," new and cheaper edition, by F. Marion Crawford; "The Heir-Presumptive and the Heir-Apparent," in 3 vols., "The Railway Man and His Children," new and cheaper edition, and "The Marriage of Elinor," new and cheaper edition, by Mrs. Oliphant; "Under Pressure," by the Marchesa Theodoli, in 2 vols.; "Helen Treveryan; or, the Ruling Race," by John Roy, in 3 vols.; "That Stick," by Charlotte M. Yonge, illustrated by W. J. Hennessy, new and cheaper edition; The Novels of Charles Dickens, in Macmillans' 3s. 6d. series: "Domby and Son," fifty-two illustrations; "Christmas Books," sixty-five illustrations; "Sketches by Boz," forty-four illustrations; "American Notes and Pictures from Italy," four illustrations; also The Letters of Charles Dickens (uniform with the novels).

Educational.—"A School History of Rome," with maps and plans, by Evelyn S. Shackburgh; "A Special Vocabulary to Macmillans' Second Course of French Composition," with copious remarks on the order of words, synonyms, homonyms, &c., by G. E. Fasnaecht; "Teacher's Companion to Macmillans' Second Course of French Composition," by G. E. Fasnacht; "French Dialogues: a Systematic Introduction to the Grammar and Idiom of Spoken French," by John Storm, intermediate course, translated by G. Macdonald; "Guide to the Study of Political Economy," from the Italian of Dr. Luigi Cossa, new edition; "A Method of English, chiefly for Secondary Schools," by Dr. James Gow; "A Primer of English History," by Arabella Buckley; "A Primer of Chaucer," by Alfred W. Pollard; "A Primer of Domestic Economy," by Edith A. Barnett and H. C. O'Neill; "The Food of Plants," by A. P. Laurie; "A Primer of Practical Horticulture," by J. Wright; "A Text-Book of Tropical Agriculture," by Dr. H. A. Nicholls, with illustrations; "Metal Colouring and Bronzing," by Arthur H. Hiorns; "Arithmetic for the Standards"; "The Theory and Practice of Absolute Measurements in Electricity and Magnetism," by Andrew Gray, Vol. II.; "Differential Calculus for Schools," by Joseph Edwards; "Commercial Arithmetic," by S. Jackson; "Historical Lessons in English Syntax," by Dr. L. Kellner; "The Bacchae of Euripides," edited, with introduction and notes, by Prof. E. Y. Tyrrell; "Thucydides, Book VIII.," edited by Prof. T. G. Tucker; "Eutropius, Books I. and II.," with notes, exercises, and vocabularies, by W. Welch and C. G. Duffield; "Vergil, Aeneid I.," edited, with notes and vocabulary, by T. E. Page; "Elementary Latin Grammar," by H. J. Roby and Prof. A. S. Wilkins; "Selections from the Spectator," with introduction and notes by K. Deighton; "A Grammar of Woodwork," a graduated system of manual training for elementary, secondary, and technical schools, by Walter E. Degerdon; "Elementary Handicraft," by W. A. S. Benson, with illustrations; "A Drawing Book," containing examples from Leighton, Watts, Poynter, H. S. Marks, A. Parsons, Pennell, Hugh Thomson, &c., by G. W. C. Hutchinson.

THE CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Theology, &c.—"Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi," ad Codd. MSS. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, S.T.P., Episcopus Sarisburiensis, in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White, Partis I., Fasc. III.; "Euangelium secundum Lucam: a Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament," based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson, edited by Francis Brown, S. R. Driver, and C. A. Briggs, Part II.; "A Concordance to the Septuagint," by the late Edwin Hatch and H. A. Rodpath, Fasc. II.; "The Peshito Version of the Gospels," edited by G. H. Gwilliam, Part I.; "Legenda Angliae," edited by C. Herstmann, in 2 vols.

Greek and Latin.—"Plato, Republic," Greek text, edited, with Prolegomena, &c., by B. Jowett and Lewis Campbell; "The Dialects of Greece," by H. Weir Smyth; "Notes on the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle," by J. A. Stewart, in 2 vols.; "Herodotus, Books V. and VI.," edited by Evelyn Abbott; "Thucydides, Book I.," edited by W. H. Forbes; "Horace, Odes, Book I.," edited by E. C. Wickham; "Virgil, Georgics III. and IV.," edited by C. S. Jerram; "Cicero, Pro Marcello, Pro Ligario, and Pro Rege Deiotaro," edited by W. Y. Fausset; "Cicero, De Amicitia," edited by St. George Stock; "Latin Prose Composition," by G. G. Ramsay, Vols. II. and III.

Oriental.—"Thesaurus Syriacus," editit R. Payne Smith, Fasc. IX.; "A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindūstāni, and Pushtū MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by H. Ethé, Part II.; "A Catalogue of the Armenian MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by Dr. S. Baronian; "A Facsimile Reproduction of the Ancient MS. of the Yasna, with its Pahlavi Translation, A.D. 1323, in the possession of the Bodleian Library"; "The Four Hundred Quatrains," Tamil Text, with Translation, Concordance, &c., by G. U. Pope.

General Literature.—"The Table-Talk of John Selden," edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by S. H. Reynolds; "Wise Words and Quaint Counsels of Thomas Fuller," selected and arranged, with a short sketch of the author's life, by A. Jessopp; "Selections from Swift," by Henry Craik, Vol. II.; "Catalogue of Rawlinson MSS. (D) in the Bodleian Library," by W. D. Macray; "Hymns and Chorales for Colleges and Schools," selected and edited by John Farmer.

Modern Languages.—"A Practical Arabic Grammar," Parts I. and II., by Major A. O. Green, new edition; "A Primer of Italian Literature," by F. J. Snell; "A Grammar of the Dano-Norwegian Language," by J. Y. Sargent; "Schiller's Maria Stuart," edited by C. A. Buchheim.

History, Biography, Law, &c.—"The Universities of the Middle Ages," by Hastings Rashdall; "Memoirs of Lieutenant-General Edmund Ludlow," edited by C. H. Firth, in 2 vols.; "Wadham College, Oxford: its Foundation, Architecture, and History," by T. G. Jackson, with numerous illustrations; "The Landnámabók," edited by the late G. Vigfusson and F. York Powell; "A History of Sicily," by the late E. A. Freeman, Vol. IV.; "History of Agriculture and Prices," by the late J. E. Thorold Rogers, Vols. VII. and VIII.; "Italy and her Invaders," by Thomas Hodgkin, Vols. I. and II., new edition; "Latin Inscriptions illustrating the History of the Early Roman Empire," by G. McN. Rushforth; "Life and Letters of Sir Philip Sidney," by Ewald Flügel.

English Language and Literature.—"Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," Part IV., Section 2, edited by T. N. Toller; "The Gospel of St. Luke in Anglo-Saxon," edited by James W. Bright; "A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society," Part VII., edited by James A. H. Murray, and Vol. III., Part II., edited by H. Bradley; "A Short Historical English Grammar," by Henry Sweet; "A Manual of Current Shorthand," by Henry Sweet; The complete works of Chaucer, edited by W. W. Skeat, in 5 vols.

Philosophy, Mathematics, Physical Science, &c.—"The Logic of Hegel," translated by W. Wallace, new edition; "Mathematical Papers of the late Henry J. S. Smith, Savilian Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford," with Portrait and Memoir, in 2 vols., quarto; "Researches in Stellar Parallax by the Aid of Photography" ("Astronomical Observations made at the University Observatory, Oxford," Fasc. IV.), by C. Pritchard; a supplementary volume to Prof. Clerk Maxwell's "Treatise on Electricity and Magnetism," by J. J. Thomson; "A Manual of Crystallography," by M. H. N. Story-Maskelyne; "Elementary Mechanics," by A. L. Selby; "Analytical Geometry," by W. J. Johnston; "A Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases," by H. W. Watson, new edition; "Hydrostatics and Elementary Hydrokinetics," by G. M. Minchin; "A Text-book of Pure Geometry," by J. W. Russell; "A Catalogue of Eastern and Australian Lepidoptera Heterocera in the Collection of the Oxford University Museum," by Colonel C. Swinhoe; "Epidemic Influenza, a Study in Comparative Statistics," by F. A. Dixey.

Sacred Books of the East.—Vol. XXXVI., "Milinda," translated by T. W. Rhys Davids, Part II.; Vol. XXXVIII., "Vedānta-Sūtras," translated by G. Thibaut, Part II.; Vol. XLI., "The Satapatha Brāhmaṇa," translated by J. Eggeling, Part III.; Vol. XLII., "Ved Hymns," translated by F. Max Müller, Part I. Anecdota Series.—"A Collation with the Ancient Armenian Versions of the Greek Text of Aristotle's Categories, &c., and of Porphyry's Introduction," by F. C. Conybeare; "The Buddha-Karita," edited by E. B. Cowell; "Firdausi's Yāsauf and Zalikhā," edited by H. Ethé; "English Charters and Deeds recently acquired by the Bodleian Library," edited by A. S. Napier and W. H. Stevenson; "Fragments of an Old-Irish Treatise on the Psalms," edited by Kuno Meyer; "The Elucidarium," edited, from a dated Welsh MS. of the fourteenth century, by John Rhys and J. M. Jones; "Bale's Index Britanniae Scriptorum," edited by R. L. Poole.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

"Edward Burne-Jones," a record and review, by Malcolm Bell, with over one hundred illustrations, also twenty-five copies tal paper; "English Book-plates" (Ex Libris), by Egerton Castle, with 120 examples of early and recent plates, also a large paper edition on Japanese vellum; "French Book-plates," by Walter Hamilton, with over eighty reproductions of rare specimens, also a large paper edition on Japanese vellum; "Holbein's Dance of Death," in facsimile woodcuts, with introductory note by Austin Dobson, also a large paper edition on Japanese vellum; "Practical Designing," a handbook on the preparation of working drawings, showing the technical setting out employed in designs for book-bindings, carpets, floorcloths, metal-work, pottery, stained glass, tiles, wall paper and woven fabrics, with illustrated articles by specialists, edited by Gleeson White; "Plato's Dialogues relating to the Trial and Death of Socrates: Euthyphro, The Apology, Crito, and Phaedo," translated by William Whewell, printed on hand-made paper; "Montaigne's Essays," Cotton's translation, newly revised by W. C. Hazlitt, in 3 vols.; "Gray's Letters," newly edited by the Rev. E. C. Tovey; "The Story of My House," by G. H. Ellwanger, with headpieces by Alan Wright, printed on hand-made paper, at the Chiswick Press; "Legends and Lyrics," by Adelaide Proctor, new edition, printed on hand-made paper, at the Chiswick Press, in 2 vols.; "Shelley's Poetical Works," large paper, Aldine edition, with memoir, notes, &c., by H. Buxton Forman; "Prior's Poetical Works," Aldine edition, edited, with memoir, by R. Brimley Johnson, in 2 vols.; "Wordsworth's Poetical Works," Aldine edition, edited, with memoir, notes, &c., by Prof. Edward Dowden, in 7 vols., also a large paper edition; "Burns's Poetical Works," Aldine edition, edited by G. A. Aitken, in 3 vols.; "Holroyd's Collection of Yorkshire Ballads," with some remarks on ballad lore, by W. J. Kaye, edited by Charles F. Forshaw; "Select Historical Documents of Mediaeval Times," collected and translated from the Latin by Ernest F. Henderson, in Bohn's Antiquarian Library; "Arthur Young's Tour in Ireland," with general observations on the state of the country during the years 1776-9, edited by A. W. Hutton, in Bohn's Standard Library; "Dancing as an Art and Pastime," by Edward Scott, with forty illustrations from life; "Indian Clubs," by G. T. B. Cobbett and A. F. Jenkin; and "Canoeing with Sail and Paddle," by Dr. J. D. Hayward in the "All England" series; "The Student's Handbook of Physical Geology," by A. J. Jukes-Browne, with numerous diagrams and illustrations, second edition, revised and much enlarged, in Bohn's Scientific Library; "Sowerby English Botany," supplemented by N. C. Brown, of the Royal Herbarium, Kew, to be completed in eight or nine parts; "British Fungus-Flora," a classified text-book Mycology, by George Massee; "The Framework of Chemistry," Part I., by W. M. Williams; "Horae Evangelicae: or, the Internal Evidences of the Gospel History," being an enquiry into the structure and origin of the Four Gospels, by the Rev. J. R. Birks, edited by his son; "Sermon Notes," arranged in accordance with the Church's year, by Prebendary Sadler; "Predeville's Livy," newly edited by J. H. Freese, Books III., IV., and V.; "Arrian's Expedition of Alexander," a new prose translation, with memoir, introduction, maps, &c., in Bohn's Classical Library; "Vegetarian Cookery," soups, salad, savouries, stews, soufflés, and sauces, by Mrs. Bowdich; "Animals' Rights considered in relation to Social Progress," by H. S. Salt; "The Student's Guide to the University of Cambridge," fifth edition, re-written.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

An édition de luxe of Mr. J. M. Barrie's "A Window in Thrums," with etchings by William Hole; "The Church in the Roman Empire, A.D. 64-100," by Prof. W. M. Ramsay, with maps and illustrations; "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology," by Principal Fairbairn; the first two volumes of "The Bookman's Library," viz.: "The Poetry of the Dial," and "The Complete Works of Emily Brontë"; "George Gilfillan: a Biography," by Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Watson, of Dundee; "Irish Idylls," by Jane Barlow; "The Divine Unity of Scripture," by Dr. Adolph Saphir; "Characteristics and Characters of William Law," selected and arranged with an introductory lecture by Dr. Alexander Whyte; "The Story of John G. Paton told for the Young," with 45 full-page illustrations, by James Finemore; "Through Christ to God: A Study in Scientific Theology," by Prof. J. A. Beet; "Christ the Morning Star, and other Sermons," by the late Principal Cairns; "The Four Men," by the Rev. Dr. James Stalker; "Clews to Holy Writ, or the Chronological Scripture Cycle," by Mary L. G. Petrie; "The Key of the Grave," by W. Robertson Nicoll; "Expository Lectures and Sermons," by the late Prof. W. G. Elmalié; a presentation edition of the Rev. Dr. Stalker's "Imago Christi," elegantly bound; "Quest and Vision," by W. J. Dawson; "Memoranda Sacra," by Prof. J. Rendel Harris; six new volumes of "The Expositor's Bible," viz.:—"The Epistle to the Philippians," by Principal Rainy; "The First Book of Kings," by Archdeacon Farrar; "The Book of Joshua," by Prof. W. G. Blackie; "The Book of Psalms," Vol. II., by the Rev. Dr. Alexander MacLaren; "The Book of Daniel," by Prof. J. M. Fuller; and "Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther," by Prof. W. F. Adeney; "The Universal Bible Dictionary," based upon the latest authorities, by the Rev. John Macpherson; "The Pillar of Fire," by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Macduff; "Luther's Early Works and Catechism," edited by Principal Wace and Prof. C. A. Buchheim; a presentation edition, in one volume, of Dr. Robertson Nicoll's "Songs of Rest"; "Bible Studies," by George F. Pentecost, being the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1893; "Modern Anglican Preachers," by Hic et Ubique; "Bible Class Expositions," by the Rev. Dr. Alexander MacLaren, Vol. III., Luke; the first five volumes of "The Classical Translation Library," being a series of classical books most frequently prescribed in University and Local Examinations; "Bert Lloyd's Boyhood," a story from Nova Scotia, by J. M. Oxley; "Silent Times," a book to help in reading the Bible into life, by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller; "The Sermon Year Book" for 1892, and "Selected Sermons, Outlines, and Texts"; and the second volume of "The Bookman."

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

General Literature.—"The Speeches and Public Addresses of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.," with notes, edited by A. W. Hutton (Librarian of the Gladstone Library); and H. J. Cohen, with portraits, Vol. IX.; "John Ruskin: His Life and Work," by W. G. Collingwood, in 2 vols.; "The Tragedy of the Caesars: the Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines," with numerous illustrations from busts, gems, cameos, &c., by S. Baring Gould, in 2 vols.; "Survivals and Superstitions," with illustrations, by S. Baring Gould; "The History of Florence from the time of the Medicis to the Fall of the Republic," by P. T. Perrens, translated by Hannah Lynch, in 3 vols.; "A Book of English Prose," collected by W. E. Henley and Charles Whibley, a companion book to Mr. Henley's Lyra Heroica; "Green Bays: a Book of Verses," by "Q."; "Oxford and Oxford Life," by Members of the University, edited by J. Wells; "Old Testament Criticism: Sermons," by Canon Driver; "Cambridge Sermons," edited by C. H. Prior; "Charles Kingsley," by M. Kaufmann, a biography of Kingsley, especially dealing with his achievements in social reform; "The Life of John Keble," by Walter Lock, with portrait; "Cardinal Manning: a Biography," by A. W. Hutton, with portrait, new and cheaper edition; "The Mechanics of Daily Life," by V. P. Sells, illustrated; "The Chemistry of Life and Health," by C. W. Kimmins, illustrated; "Agricultural Botany," by M. C. Potter, illustrated; "Land Nationalisation," by Harold Cox; "A Shorter Working Day," by R. A. Hadfield and H. de B. Gibbins. Fiction.—"His Grace," by W. E. Norris, in 2 vols.; "Time and the Woman," by Richard Pryce, in 2 vols.; "Pierre and His People," by Gilbert Parker; "Diogenes in London, and other Sketches," by H. B. Marriott Watson; "In the Roar of the Sea," by S. Baring Gould, cheaper edition; "My Danish Sweetheart," by W. Clark Russell, with six illustrations by W. H. Overend; "Hovenden, V.C.," by F. Mabel Robinson, cheaper edition; "Out of the Fashion," by L. T. Meade, with six illustrations by W. Paget; "Only a Guardroom Dog," by Mrs. Cuthell, with sixteen illustrations by W. Parkinson; "The Doctor of the Juliet," by Harry Collingwood, illustrated by Gordon Browne.

Educational.—"The Compound Latin Sentence," Rules and Exercises, by A. M. M. Stedman; "A Text-Book of Electricity," by R. Elliott Steel, with illustrations; "Commercial Examination Papers," by H. de B. Gibbins.

Cheaper Editions.—"Old Country Life," by S. Baring Gould, with sixty-seven illustrations by W. Parkinson, F. D. Bedford, and F. Masey, third edition; "The Colleges of Oxford: their History and their Traditions," by Members of the University, edited by A. Clerk; "The Life of Admiral Lord Collingwood," by W. Clark Russell, with illustrations by F. Brangwyn.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co.'s LIST.

"The Coming of Father Christmas," a fine art gift-book, written in verse and illustrated by E. F. Manning, and printed in fourteen colours and gold; a new edition of "Shakespeare's Complete Works," in 6 vols., printed on the finest India paper; a thoroughly revised issue of "Abbeys and Castles and Ancient Halls of England and Wales: their Legendary Lore and Popular History," by John Timbs, in 3 vols., with twelve photogravures; Mr. Silas K. Hoeking's new volume, entitled, "Where Duty Lies," with illustrations by Harold Copping; an illustrated edition of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's tale, "Dolly: a Love Story"; "The Nonsense Birthday Book," a humorous volume of Edward Lear's rhymes and verses, illustrated from the author's designs, with interleaved diary; a new novel, by Mrs. J. H. Needell, under the title of "Passing the Love of Women"; "The Queen: Her Life and Reign," by L. Valentine, revised edition brought down to the present year, with nearly 100 illustrations; "Sport with Gun and Rod, in American Woods and Waters," edited by Alfred M. Mayer, with over 600 illustrations, and contributions by the Earl of Dunraven, Charles Dudley Warner, John Burroughs, &c.; a new edition of "A Dictionary of English Synonyms and Synonymous or Parallel Expressions," by Richard Soule, revised and much enlarged by Dr. G. H. Howison; a handy edition of English poetry under the title of "The Cabinet Poets"; also "Waverley," "Rienzi," and "Rob Roy" in the series of "National Novels."

Juvenile.—"Englishman's Haven: a Story of Louisbourg," by W. J. Gordon, with illustrations by W. S. Stacey; "The Prairie Bird" in the "Boys' Enterprise Library," and several volumes in the "Oakleaf Library" and "Prize Library"; a gift-book entitled "Merry Moments for Merry Little Folks," with rhymes by Rose E. May, and illustrations printed in twelve colours from designs by E. J. Harding; a new series of fairy tales under the title of "The Fairy Library," including "Grimm's Goblins," "Grimm's Fairy Tales," "Legends of Fairyland," &c., with new illustrations; "The Play-Hour Picture-Books," a new series of large-type reading-books in four volumes, entitled respectively "The Cat," "The Dog," "The Animal," and "The Bird Picture-Books," containing drawings by Louis Wain, Henrietta Ronner, Stanley Berkeley, and others; a new illustrated volume in the "Favourite Instruction Books," entitled "Aunt Louisa's Book of Nursery Rhymes," containing all the old rhymes, songs, jingles, &c., celebrated in nursery lore; among volumes for very little folk—"From Toy-Land," by Harold Copping, cut in the shape of a box; "Our Life-Boats: Pictures of Peril and Rescue"; "Our Playtime"; "Our Noah's Ark: a Movable Panorama"; "The Wonder Toy-Books," by Alfred Johnson; and "Texts for Illuminating," by Constance Haslewood.

MESSRS. J. S. VIRTUE & Co's. LIST.

"The Life and Work of Prof. Hubert Herkomer, R.A.," being the Art Annual for 1892, or Christmas number of the Art Journal, with an original etching by the artist, photogravure of "The Last Muster," and numerous reproductions of his pictures and portraits, together with illustrations of his new house at Bushey; "Cairo: Sketches of its History, Monuments and Social Life," by Stanley Lane-Poole, with numerous illustrations, by G. L. Seymour and others; "The Pilgrim's Way from Winchester to Canterbury," by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady), with forty-six illustrations by A. Quinton, and two maps of the route; "England's Sea Victories," by Charles Rathbone Low, with eight illustrations; "How the British won India," by W. Pimblett, with eight illustrations by Harry Payne and others; "Stories on the Collects for every Sunday and Holy Day throughout the Year," with questions and answers, by C. A. Jones and Rev. S. G. Lines, in 2 vols., new edition; "The Year's Art, 1893," a concise epitome of all matters relating to the arts of painting, sculpture, and architecture, which have occurred during the year 1892, together with information respecting the events of the year 1893, with portraits of prominent outsiders, compiled by Marcus B. Hish; "Shewell's Housekeeper's Account Book for 1893," containing summary of law relating to servants and mistresses, and tables of daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly expenditure.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS'S LIST.

The tenth and last volume of the new edition of "Chambers's Encyclopaedia," with Index to the whole work: "Robin Redbreast," a story by Mrs. Molesworth; "The Dingo Boys," a story of Australian adventure, by George Manville Fenn; "Four on an Island," by L. T. Meade; "The Paradise of the North," by D. Lawson Johnstone; "Cossack and Czar," by David Ker; "Imogen, or only Eighteen," by Mrs. Molesworth; "When we were Young," by Mrs. O'Reilly; "Through the Flood," by Esme Stuart; "Five Victims: a School-room Story," by M. Bramston; "Some Brave Boys and Girls," by E. C. Kenyon; "Through Storm and Stress," by J. S. Fletcher; "Railways and Railway Men" and "Baby John," by E. C. Kenyon; "The Story of Watt and Stephenson"; "The Story of Nelson and Wellington"; "John's Adventures: a Tale of Old England," by Thomas Miller.

MESSRS. WHITTAKER & Co.'s LIST.

A treatise on "Lightning Conductors and Lightning Guards," by Prof. Oliver Lodge; a comprehensive work on "Dynamos," by C. C. Hawkins and F. Wallis; Carl Hering's "Recent Progress in Electric Railways"; Merrill's "Electric Light Specifications"; "Practical Electric Light Fitting," by F. C. Allsop; "Electric Lighting and Power Distribution," by W. Perren Maycock; "Electrical Experiments," by G. E. Bonney; "Coal Pits and Pitmen," by R. Nelson Boyd; "The Principles of Pattern Making for Students and Apprentices," by a Foreman Pattern Maker; "The Principles of Fitting for Engineer Students," by the same author; "The Manufacture of Soap," by W. Lawrence Gadd; "Hammered Metal Work," by Charles G. Leland; in Whittaker's Library of Popular Science—"Electricity and Magnetism," by S. Bottone; "Chemistry," by T. Bolas; "Geology," by A. J. Jukes Browne; "Dissections Illustrated," a graphic handbook for students of human anatomy, with plates carefully drawn and put on the stone, by Percy Higley, from dissections made by C. Gordon Brodie, in four parts—Part I. with seventeen plates two thirds natural size, will be issued at once; "Pierrille," by Jules Claretie, edited by J. Boiëlle; "Madame Lambelle," by Tondouze, edited by J. Boiëlle; "Soll and Haben," by G. Freytag, edited by Hanby Crump; "The School Calendar," and other educational annuals; "Dod's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage."

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co.'s LIST.

"Assyrian and Babylonian Letters belonging to the K. Collection of the British Museum," by Dr. R. F. Harper, of the Chicago University; "Oriental Diplomacy," being the translated text of the conneiform despatches between the kings of Egypt and Western Asia in the fifteenth century B.C., discovered at Tel el-Amarna, with vocabulary, grammatical notes, &c., by C. Bezold; "Suh-ki-li-kin," the Suhrillekha, or "friendly letter," written by Lung Shu (Nagayuna), and addressed to King Sadheva, by the late Samuel Beal; "Useful Sanskrit Nouns and Verbs," by C. Johnston; "Buddhaghosa," a Historical Romance, by James Gray, Professor of Pali at Rangoon; "Indian Wisdom," by Sir M. Monier Williams, revised edition; "The Discovery of Secrets, attributed to Geber," Arabic and English by R. R. Steele; "The Great Sea-Serpent," by Dr. A. C. Oudemans.

MESSRS. JAMES CLARKE & Co.'s LIST.

"The Rosebud Annual, 1893," containing 300 illustrations by Wain, Mason, Elives, Stoddart, Shepherd, &c.; "Rosebud Songs," illustrated: a collection of songs with simple music, for children's voices, by T. Crampton and others; "Rosebud Rhymes," illustrated: a selection of nursery and other rhymes for children; "A Rose of a Hundred Leaves," illustrated, by Amelia E. Barr; "Gloria Patri: or, Our Talks about the Trinity," by James M. Whiton; "The Scriptures, Hebrew and Christian," Vol. III., completing the set; "On the Threshold: Talks to Young Men," by the Rev. T. T. Munger, new edition; "A History of Church and Chapel Building," by James Cubitt; "Gladys' Vow," by Mrs. Isabel Reaney; "A Morning Mist," by Sarah Tytler; "Queer Stories from Russia," by Capel Chernilo; "The Bishop and the Caterpillar, and Other Pieces," by Mary E. Manners; "In the Far Country," a Tale for Boys, by Albert E. Hooper, with illustrations by Ernold A. Mason; "Some Noble Sisters," by Edmund Lee; and "Sunday-School and Village Libraries," by Thomas Greenwood: hints for the management of village and Sunday-school libraries, with lists of suitable books.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary for September is a rather dull number. The notes, both English and foreign, are excellent, as they now always are; but after mentioning them our praise must cease. Mr. R. C. Hope continues discoursing about Holy Wells, but what he has given his readers this month seems to be the undigested memoranda from a pocket-book. Mr. Hilton writes once more on Chronograms, a subject of by no means universal interest. Mr. Ward deals with the Museum at Ludlow; it seems from his carefully prepared report to contain many objects of interest, which we imagine would be all the better for more scientific arrangement.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

GEROK, C. Karl Gerok. Ein Lebensbild, aus seinen Briefen u. Aufzeichnungen zusammengestellt. Stuttgart: Krabbe. 6 M.
MOULIÉNAS, Aug. Les Fourberies de Si Djeh'a: Contes babyles. Paris: Leroux. 3 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, ETC.

DARESTE, R., B. HAUSOULLIER et Th. REINACH. Recueil des Inscriptions juridiques grecques. 2e Fasc. Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.
HÉRELLE, La Réforme et la Ligue en Champagne. Paris: Champion. 24 fr.
LURTON, Roger de. Notice sur la Chambre des comptes de Dole. Paris: Champion. 7 fr. 50 c.
MÉLY, Fernand de, et Edm. Bishop. Bibliographie générale des Inventaires imprimés. T. I. France et Angleterre. Paris: Leroux. 12 fr.
PITON, C. Les Lombards en France et à Paris. Paris: Champion. 8 fr.
ROCHMONTEN, le Marquis de. Le Temple d'Edfou. 1re Partie. Paris: Leroux. 30 fr.
RÜGGER, J. J. Chronik der Stadt u. Landschaft Sebafthausen. 2. Hälfte. 2. Thl. Sebafthausen: Schoch. 14 M.
SAULOV, F. de. Recueil de documents relatifs à l'histoire des monnaies frappées par les rois de France depuis Philippe II. jusqu'à François Ier. Paris: Rollin. 150 fr.
SCHNELLEN, H. Die staatsrechtliche Stellung v. Boemien u. der Herzogtina. Leipzig: Wallmann. 3 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

BERN, R. Vergleichung der kantischen u. schopenhauerischen Lehre in Ansehung der Kausalität. Heidelberg: Gross. 1 M.
GAMALEIA, N. Les Poisons bactériens. Paris: Rueff. 3 fr. 50 c.
RUNGE, W. Das Ruhr-Steinkohlenbecken. Berlin: Moser. 30 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

MARCHOT, P. Phonologie détaillée d'un patois wallon. Paris: Bouillon. 3 fr.
MASPERO, G. Rapport à M. Jules Ferry sur une mission en Italie. Paris: Bouillon. 20 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE JUVENCUS CRYPTOGRAM.

Oxford: Sept. 17, 1892.

Since the publication by Dr. Stokes of the Juvenius cryptogram in the ACADEMY of September 10, Dr. Sweet has favoured me with the following note:

"I do not know whether it may help you in identifying Cemelliauc if I refer you to the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, anno 918, where it is said that the Danes sailed up to the mouth of the Severn, and ravaged Wales (Northwealas), and took prisoner Bishop Cameleac at Ireinga-feld, who was soon after ransomed by King Edward."

In my letter to Dr. Stokes I was rash in filling up the lacuna in the second verse of the stanza—"Hee (scripsit? scripsi?) leniter." Having due regard to the alliteration, I ought to have suggested some verb beginning with l, such as laboravit or lucubravat. In the case of the other lacuna, namely, in (pre)m[i]ter [rea (pre)m[i]t[er]e], he gives the first letter, and that is l. If we suppose it to have been followed by e, we have le, which would mean p, the consonant which had already been guessed. With regard to premiter, this would have to be treated as written for prebiter, which I believe is attested late or vulgar form of presbyter; from this prebiter, or premiter, comes the Old Welsh prenter "a priest" (recorded by Cormac), which appears in the Book of Taliessin as prifde (Skene's Four an. Books of Wales, ii. 137), and in Irish as crimthir. But there is a difficulty as to premiter in our verse, "Orate pro m premiter," as we ought to have premitero if the writer treated the word as Latin. If, then, we have to assume m for b, perhaps it would be more satisfactory to read promiter for probiter. The word was in any case not written in full, but it does not appear from the transcript whether it was pmitr, prmitr, or promtr: that is supposing the first vowel was an o.

JOHN RHYS.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

The Dietetic Value of Bread. By J. Good fellow. (Macmillans.) Those chapters of the book which deal with the technology of bread and with what the author calls "special breads," contain much instructive material, but the volume might be improved in several directions. The author does not seem to be acquainted with the more recent and more exact data as to the chemical composition and dynamic value of food-stuffs. For example, he accepts the early results of Frankland, Playfair, and Letheby; he ignores the presence of non-albuminoid nitrogen in vegetable food; his analytical figures demand considerable revision. There is a table on page 103 which may be taken as illustrating some of the points. Oatmeal does not contain so much as 15 per cent. of water, nor so little fat as 6 per cent.; potatoes contain, not 2 per cent. albuminoids, but 1½ or, at the most, 1 average butter does not contain 1½ per cent. of albuminoids nor 0.8 per cent. of milk-sugar. If the author of this treatise had used the term "nutrients" for the nutritious compounds present in foods, he would have been able to state his arguments more clearly. A few misprints such as cervisiae for cerevisiae, should have been corrected. It seems rather late in the day to announce (p. 12) that certain experiments "tend to support the theory that we may be largely the result of oxidation of carbon and hydrogen in our food."

Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry. Revised and entirely re-written by H. F. Morley and M. Pattison Muir. Vol. III. (Longmans.) T

third instalment concludes with an account of phenyl compounds; another volume will complete the Dictionary. The services of ten new contributors have been enlisted in the preparation of some of the more important articles in the book. An able paper on Isomerism is from the pen of Dr. H. E. Armstrong; Isomorphism is discussed by Dr. A. Hutchinson. Due credit is given to De Chancourtois and to Newlands in the article on the Periodic Law by Mr. D. Carnegie. The two pages on Lignone, by Mr. C. F. Cross, present, in a condensed form, the results of recent investigations into the relationships of this associate of cellulose. We wish that more space had been allotted to Mr. Lazarus Fletcher for his sketch of mineralogical chemistry. Other special contributions by well-known authorities are:—Muscle, by Dr. W. H. Halliburton; Rare Metals, by Mr. W. Crookes; Paraffin and Petroleum, by Dr. S. Rideal; Ozone, by Mr. W. A. Shenstone; Molecular Constitution, by Prof. J. J. Thomson. Many important articles are by the joint editors of the Dictionary, who have written, also, the bulk of the minor notices.

Handwörterbuch der Chemie. Von Dr. A. Ladenburg. 46, 47, 48, 49 und 50 Lief. (Breslau: Trewendt.) By the publication of these five parts the ninth volume of this monumental work is completed and the tenth volume begun. The index to the ninth volume occupies no less than twenty-one pages, and includes more than 3000 separate entries. The portion of the tenth volume now before us comprises articles on Pyrazins, Pyrrol, Pyrazol, Pylon, Quicksilver, Reten, Rhodium, Rubidium, Ruthenium, Polybasic Acids, Salicylic Acid, Samarium, Oxygen, and Scandium. The commencement of an elaborate discussion of sulphur appears on the last few pages of the 50th part. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the commendation we have given to this Dictionary in former notices, for there is no falling off in the thoroughness and accuracy of the work. And we may look forward with satisfaction to its speedy completion—perhaps early in the year 1893.

THE PETRIE PAPYRI.

WE quote from the Times the following report of a paper read by Prof. Mahaffy at the recent Oriental Congress, in the section of Egypt and Africa, upon "The Gain to Egyptology from the Petrie Papyri":

"He had carefully examined the papyri which had been placed in his hands by Mr. Flinders Petrie. The first part consisted of classical documents which had already been printed by the Royal Irish Academy in the Cunningham Memoirs. Of these a large volume had appeared, which was exciting vehement controversy in Germany. But in addition to these there was a great mass of private papers which had not yet been printed, but which had been deciphered partly by Prof. Sayce and partly by himself. These papers were in two languages—Greek and demotic, or the popular language of the Egyptians. These were in part hieroglyphs done into cursive. Of these demotic fragments a large quantity had been sent to the British Museum. The Greek papyri still remain in his own hands. Strange to say, only one of these texts is bilingual. These interesting documents might be divided into—(1) legal agreements, of which some were contracts, others receipts, others again taxing agreements; (2) correspondence, partly of a public and partly of a private character. In the former were official reports, petitions, complaints. The private correspondence was especially interesting in showing the condition of society at that date. A large number of Macedonians and Greeks were settled in the Fayum under the second Ptolemy, about 270 B.C. In addition there was a large number of prisoners from Asia, who must have been brought into Egypt after the great campaign of the third Ptolemy, about 246 B.C. This mixed body were the recipients of large grants of land in the Fayum. Much of this land had been reclaimed from the lake of which the fish were the perquisite of the Egyptian Queen. The Queen had thus to resign part of her property in order to give a title to the occupiers of the Arsinoite Nome, as it was called. It was interesting to find that many of these grants were so large as 100 acres, and the occupiers are thus called ἐκατοντάδρομοι. This might seem to be a large allowance, but analysis showed it was not so liberal as it seemed. The farms were divided into three classes of land. First, there was what was called the Royal land, probably fruitful land was meant; the second class was called ἀσπορος, or land still in need of irrigation; and the third ἀσπορος, or land which would bear nothing. This latter was also called ἐλαμυρί, or the salt marsh, which was still common in Egypt. These recipients or allottees of land were called by a name familiar to all readers of Greek history—κλήρουχοι. Prof. Mahaffy had found no native landowner mentioned in the papyri. But in many cases the natives had an interest in the crops on something like a metayer system. Among the crops grown were the vine, olives, wheat, barley, rye. There was evidence in the legal papers—an interesting point in view of current controversies—that alienation of these farms was not allowed. Among the contracts are many between Greeks and natives, and there was evidence of natives giving witness in Greek quarrels. He had found among the natives one who held the office of sub-architect or commissioner of the works, and also head-policeman; but the principal officers of the Nome were the Strategos, the Oeconomos, and the ἐπιμελητής, or overseer. The commissioner of works had charge of drainage and irrigation works, and many fragments existed showing the character of his duties. It was instructive to find that the complaints made by the native workmen were treated with consideration. Such complaints were—that they had not received a sufficient supply of iron for wedges; that they had not got food enough; that they were kept too long in desert places. There was also a series of receipts, contracts to feed horses, and so on. The grooms, it appears, were worse fed than the chariot riders, and had to be satisfied with wholemeal instead of wheaten bread. Many of the chariots were equipped with five horses. There was a receipt among them from a man called Horus, a donkey boy, who was not able to write himself, and got another to sign for him. It was amusing to find that two currencies were prevalent at that period, silver and copper (suggesting the bimetallic controversy of our own times). This discovery disposed of the current theory that the copper currency only came in under the late Ptolemies. The phrases for the rate of exchange had long been known—χαλκὸς οὐ ἀλλαγή, but he had now got hold of a later term, ισόνομος, which might be translated 'at par,' though he had not been able to discover the relation existing between silver and copper. But from the indications which he found in the papyri he came to the conclusion that silver was more valuable than had hitherto been supposed. These documents were also valuable, as being transcriptions from Egyptian into Greek, with respect to our knowledge of the Egyptian language. As the Egyptians did not write down their vowels, the vocalisation of the language was hardly yet known. But results of much importance were gained—first, of a palaeographical, and, secondly, of a linguistic character. We now know exactly how they wrote in the third century B.C., and we have also learnt what was the Greek used by the respectable classes of that epoch. The Greek was far purer and better than that of the Septuagint would lead us to expect. There was still a large number of papers to be deciphered, and a large addition to our knowledge might be expected."

CORRESPONDENCE.

"TEL," "TELL," OR "TALL."

Queen's College, Oxford: Sept. 18, 1892.

Prof. Robertson Smith's letter illustrates a question I have often put: Why is it that Semitic scholars, and more especially Arabists, do not take the trouble to study the methods and results of linguistic science? No one has maintained, so far as I know, that etymologically and classically the Arabic tel ought not to be written with a double l before a vowel. But it so happens that in Upper Egypt etymological and classical Arabic is not spoken; and where usage has not established a particular spelling of a local name, as in the case of "Luxor," we ought to preserve the distinctive pronunciation of the country when we write Egyptian geographical names in European letters. Tel with a single l is distinctive of Upper Egypt, just as much as the pronunciation of gaf as g.

Why Prof. Robertson Smith should invoke the authority of Spitta Bey I cannot imagine, since Spitta's dialect is that of Cairo. The pronunciation he gives, however, is not always correct, and is, in fact, somewhat artificial.

What Col. Ross says about the pronunciation of the article is very true. I would only add that, before a substantive beginning with a consonant, the vowel of the article is very frequently lost, especially in the Cairene dialect. Thus we have for is-sultān, 's-sultān,' and sometimes even 'sultān.' I have never heard the modern name of Bubastis pronounced except by a Cairene, who gave it as Tel el-Basta. Of course the e is not an exact representative of the vocalic sound, but it is the nearest equivalent to it which we have in the current alphabet. The revolutions of the phonograph in regard to the actual pronunciation of Arabic in Egypt would astonish European scholars who have acquired their ideas concerning it from printed books or the conversation of El-Azhar professors.

I cannot answer Prof. Robertson Smith's question about "Waterloo Place," as I do not know how "Place" is pronounced in Edinburgh. But if "Place" is its correct pronunciation in London, and the word were a geographical term newly written in European characters, to spell it otherwise than "Place" would be a philological blunder.

What I want to emphasise is the fact that to write "Tel el-Amarna" is not only a piece of pedantry, but, as usually happens in such cases, of incorrect pedantry.

A. H. SAYCE.

Brighton: Sept. 18, 1892.

With due respect to the learning of Prof. Robertson Smith and Col. J. C. Ross, I beg to dissent from their opinions expressed in the ACADEMY of last week as to the true pronunciation of the word tel in Arabic.

I must at the outset disclaim any connexion with the review of Prof. Sayce about the misspelling of the word in "Tel el-Amarna." The tel I alluded to was the one I wrote about to Mr. Renouf ten months ago, with reference to the account given in the Green Guide of the British Museum about Assyrian and Babylonian collections.

I am certainly very much surprised to notice the extraordinary way in which Prof. Robertson Smith spells "Tel-el-Amarna," especially as I presume from the way he writes that he is one of the "correct speakers of modern Arabic." All I can say is that the Arab who would pronounce tel, with the definite article el in conjunction with another substantive, with double l must have some impediment in his speech. If we are to follow the Professor's line of argument, the rendering of the meaning of the Arabic words Tel-el-Illal (the hill of infirmities) ought to be spelled with no less than six ls!

I do not know in what countries where Arabic is spoken Prof. Robertson Smith and Colonel Ross have travelled besides Egypt. All I can say is that I am acquainted with all the dialects of the Arabic-speaking peoples, namely, the three Arabias, Egypt, Northern Africa, Syria, the Holy Land, Mesopotamia, and Assyria; and I affirm that in none of those countries is the word tel (= "hill") pronounced like "tell" in English. If I were to be asked by an Arab to write for him the English word "tell" in Arabic letters, I should never dream of using the orthographical mark tashdīd, as Prof. Robertson Smith renders it, nor would I mislead him by using the Yorkshire or Wiltshire dialect in pronouncing certain English words. If I were to be very correct, and wished to make any change in the spelling of the word tel, I would certainly write it with an a instead of an e as the word is really pronounced like "tale" without the c.

I pity any Englishman who intends to travel among Arabic-speaking nationalities if he takes the Korān and the Arabic grammar as instructors in his intercourse with them. With all the respect and admiration I have for the learning and knowledge of English scholars touching Arabic classics and grammatical accuracy, nevertheless I have known, from long experience, that, unless an European scholar resides for some years in the country where Arabic is spoken, it is utterly impossible for him to pronounce some peculiar words accurately. Even Turks and Persians, who are bound to pray in Arabic, cannot pronounce certain words properly; and probably not one Musalman in ten can pronounce the name of his prophet Mohammed as he ought to do.

In conclusion, I beg to remark that in conversations about forty-two years ago with my friends the late Dr. Lee, formerly Professor of Arabic at the University of Cambridge, and Mr. Chinery, who were known to be two of the best Arabic scholars (the latter of whom had translated the difficult book called "Machāmat-el-Harreere" into English), they admitted that their pronunciation of Arabic words differed materially from the colloquial Arabic.

H. RASSAM.

Colonel Ross's interesting communication in your last number reminds me that tell in place-names was a subject of speculation to me some five years ago. Tall is found over the whole of Lower Egypt, excepting the western border where kôm supersedes it. Thus on the western edge we have Kôm abū Billā (Terenuthis, near Tarrāneh), Kôm Ga'ef (Naucratis, near Ovegrāsh), Kôm el Hisn (the ancient Amu), Kôm Afrin, &c., &c., as against Tall el Hesn (Heliopolis), Tall Fera'en (Buto, near Ubtū), &c., &c. The line of division is remarkably sharp. Syrian and Maghreby (?) influence may have been at work here.

Of Upper Egypt I have little experience. There kôm is normal, as witness Kôm Ombu (Ombos), and the ubiquitous Kôm (sic) el Ammar. Tall el Amarna as a name has long been historical, and no one would wish to improve it off the face of the guide book. But I doubt its genuineness. I came away from a day's visit to the place with the impression that the natives did not use the name. Wilkinson discovered the site; and one of his Arabs, who, if I remember right, came from the Helwān region, may have supplied the name. The village of Et Till (vocalised with i, but on some maps written Et Tell) at the south end of the ruins may have helped to perpetuate the error. Others may have been more fortunate than I in hearing the name from the mouths of natives of the place. Genuine and unsophisticated inhabitants of Haggé Kandil, Et Till, or other villages in the immediate neighbourhood, are of course the only authorities worth a rush—and no leading questions allowed.

Colonel Ross's remark as to the pronunciation of Fathah is valuable and absolutely true, but the e-sound is not entirely confined to foreigners. Pronunciation varies from village to village and from man to man; a real e is not unfrequently to be heard.

The following is a rough rule for the pronunciation of the ll in tall (cf. Egypt Exploration Fund, Onias, p. 56).

When followed by the article al, the ll becomes l, and the vowel of the article is often dropped out, so we have both Tal el Yahūdīyah and Tāl'l Yahūdīyah. In other cases before a vowel, ll remains double, before a consonant it is l. But with the two trochaic names that have come under my observation, namely, Tallē Bastah and Tallē Billah (near Samannūd), the ll is vigorously pronounced by some, while others say Tal Bastah.

F. L. G.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE current number of the Journal of Philology (Macmillans) is, as usual, mainly devoted to questions of textual criticism, and most of the contributors are Cambridge men. Mr. Walter Leaf has made a careful collation of the fragmentary MS. of the Iliad (British Museum Papyrus cxviii), with the object of showing every instance of peculiar spelling, together with a few specimens of the accentuation. He also discusses the new readings found in it, concluding that they afford no support to the belief that the criticism of Aristarchos and the other Alexandrines produced any effect upon the ordinary commercial text. Finally, he calls for the production of a complete facsimile of it, as well as of the equally important Bodleian papyrus. Mr. A. E. Housman prints the first instalment of an elaborate article on the manuscripts of Propertius, aiming to establish their relation to one another and to the lost archetype. The novelty of his theory is that he allows an independent and approximately equal value to each of the seven cardinal MSS. Mr. T. W. Allen, in continuation of former articles on Greek palaeography, now deals with a group of nine MSS. of the end of the ninth century, all philosophical, which can be assigned, on the evidence of handwriting, to the same time and place, and probably to the same scriptorium, though the number of different scribes is presumably five. Mr. W. R. Paton sends some notes on Plutarch's Ethica, tending to prove that the received text has suffered from the interpolations found in D (Paris, 1566). Dr. Henry Jackson discusses the famous line of Parmenides, of which he proposes a new reading:—

οὐ γὰρ μὴ ποτε τοῦτο δαμῶ ᾗ, εἶναι μὴ ἐόντα.

Taking μὴ with both ποτε and δαμῶ, and translating "for never anyway shall this be, that what is not, is." Mr. Arthur Platt examines the uses of μέλλω in Homer, in Attic, and in Plato. According to his view, the central idea of the word is simply "I am likely to do," whether in past, present, or future; hence flow naturally the other later meanings, "to intend," "to delay." Mr. Platt also writes upon Catullus xi. and Horace Odes II., vi., suggesting that both poets are imitating a common Greek original, presumably Alcaeus. Mr. Robinson Ellis submits a number of textual emendations in the Fragments of Aeschylus and in the Supplices. In Suppl. 827, he hazards the conjecture that δμ following ιοφ may be the mystic om of the Indians. Mr. Walter Headlam sends a large number of conjectural emendations, of which a whole series deals with the difficult passage in Eur. Bacch. 970—1012. Finally, Mr. E. G. Hardy criticises a view put forward by Prof. Pelham with regard to the proconsular imperium held by Augustus.

FINE ART.

SCOTTISH HERALDRY.

Alexander Nisbet's Heraldic Plates: originally intended for his "System of Heraldry." With Introduction and Notes, Genealogical and Heraldic, by Andrew Ross, Marchmont Herald, and Francis J. Grant, Carriek Pursuivant. (Edinburgh: Waterston.)

THE appearance of this handsome and scholarly volume is a welcome indication that that state of efficiency into which the late Dr. Burnett and his able coadjutor, Mr. Stoddart, brought the Lyon Office of Scotland is still being maintained by their successors, and that the Scottish College of Arms is likely, in the future, to continue to afford valuable aid in the elucidation of national biography and family history.

The basis of the book consists of a series of, in most cases, unique folio impressions of heraldic plates discovered some four years ago in the library of Mr. Elliott, of Cleghorn. An examination of these impressions by Mr. Ross disclosed the fact that they were evidently part of the series of plates intended by Nisbet for the illustration of his great work on Heraldry, which, however, was never published in the complete form which he originally designed—indeed, only one of its two volumes appeared during his lifetime. Diligent search was afterwards made in order to ascertain whether any additional impressions from these plates, or from other subjects of the same series, were known to exist; but with no further result than the discovery in a manuscript by Nisbet, preserved in the Advocates Library, of duplicates of five of the plates, along with an impression of one hitherto unknown, the achievement of the Countess of Winton.

It was considered that the publication of these plates would form a desirable addition to the literature of Scottish Heraldry; and the opportunity has been taken to raise a worthy memorial of the veteran Scottish herald, by an exhaustive and careful account of his family and of his own career, compiled by Mr. Ross.

The biography of Alexander Nisbet furnishes a curious example of life-long and unwearied devotion, in the face of much discouragement, and—as there seems too good reason for believing—under the pressure of poverty, to an unpopular, unremunerative, and, as many would hold it, uninviting department of historical research.

Born in Edinburgh in April, 1657, Nisbet was the landless representative of the ancient and honourable family of Nisbet of East Nisbet, Berwickshire, whose ancestors Mr. Ross traces back to the twelfth century. The history of the house is clearly marked from before the middle of the fifteenth century, when, in 1442, Adam Nisbet is designated of West Nisbet, in a charter granted to his son by Patrick Macdowall, of Logan. Early in the sixteenth century the family espoused the cause of the Red Douglasses against King James V., Philip Nisbet having wedded a niece of Archibald Bell-the-Cat, Earl of Angus. But in the succeeding century the family displayed that inflexible loyalty, which, later, finds an echo in the stout Jacobitism of the herald himself, Sir Philip Nisbet being captured at Philiphaugh and executed at Glasgow in 1645, and his brother, Colonel Robert Nisbet, suffering the same fate in Edinburgh in 1650, after having been captured with Montrose at Invercharron, while a fourth son, Major Alexander Nisbet, was slain at the siege of York in 1644. Their father, Sir Alexander, was a no less firm royalist; and there seems little doubt that the impoverishment of his estate, which led to his bankruptcy about 1612, was due to advances made by the worthy knight to Charles I. The record of his attitude towards his creditors forms a curious commentary on the lawless condition of Scotland at that time. For seven years after he had been put to the horn, firmly entrenched in his house at Nisbet, he was able to bid defiance to his creditors, to the courts, and to the various acts of parliament that were levelled against him, "leiding the teinds and reifing the tenants"; till at length, in 1649, the aid of the military was called in, and he was conveyed a prisoner, first to Jedburgh and then to Duns; and finally, but not till 1652, he was induced to execute a disposition of his property to his creditors, and he retired to Ireland, where, with the remnants of his property, he purchased some land and settled.

In time the wheel of fortune brought the Restoration, and again Sir Alexander appeared upon the scene in search of his lost estate. In 1660 he was in London, laying before Charles II. a statement of his sufferings, and those of his house, in the cause of loyalty, and petitioning for a warrant for the creation of a baronet. This honour was, however, by no means desired on his own behalf, but simply as a conveniently marketable commodity, not costly to the grantor. At the time, "warrants for the creation of title, adopted by Charles II. as an easy way of paying old debts, were issued blank and sold to any purchaser of decent family and certain income who would agree to the price demanded by the seller"; and Sir Alexander proposed promptly to dispose of the royal order, and with the funds realised to return to Scotland and attempt the recovery of his estate. A second application in the matter was successful; and "Robert Jocelin, of Hide Hall, county Hertford," who "has always been a loyal subject, is a justice of the peace for Essex, has £1,000 a year, and is of ancient family," was appointed "Sir Alexander Nesbitt's baronet"! Duly fortified with the fee of "his baronet," Nisbet returned to his native country and petitioned parliament to inquire into his case and restore his property; but he was never successful in recovering his lost patrimony. Sir Alexander was succeeded in the representation by Adam Nisbet, writer, Edinburgh, his youngest but only surviving son; and Alexander, the eldest son of the latter, in a family of ten, was the author of the System of Heraldry.

The youth matriculated in the Edinburgh University in 1675, attended the course of philosophy, and in 1682 was laureated. For some years he practiced as a writer or attorney in Edinburgh; but as he himself tells us, when he had barely completed his college course,

"I became happily acquainted with some who were no Strangers to the Science [of heraldry], and e'en then I stole as many Hours as possible from business till about fourteen or fifteen years ago [about 1687, at the age of thirty], having wholly laid aside the Employment of a Writer, I applied myself assiduously to this Study."

His means appear to have been narrow; and he is sometimes styled a "teacher of heraldrie," having instructed some of the nobility and gentry in the science, the fifth Earl of Carnwath among the rest, who is praised by Douglas as "a nobleman of good learning and well known in the science of heraldry." There are few records of his subsequent life, and all are connected with his chosen pursuit. In 1707, he was present at the depositing of the Scottish regalia in the crown room of Edinburgh Castle, and wrote an exhaustive account of its various items. The national archives and the charter chests of the great Scottish families were diligently examined; and he bent all his energies towards the production of his monumental work upon a subject which, in his country, had only been dealt with in a single volume—Sir George Mackenzie's excellent, but somewhat brief and elementary "Science of Heraldry treated as a part of Civil Law and Law of Nations," published in 1680.

In 1699 Nisbet circulated proposals for the issue, by subscription, of his great work; but only 119 copies were applied for. Next he solicited aid from the Scottish Parliament, publishing in 1702 his little volume on "Cadency," as an example of the whole, and stating that he had induced many of "the most ancient nobility and gentry" to have their arms engraved on plates, to be used in the volume, "and if I should not get one plate more added to the number already in my hands, yet ev'ry man will confess that Britain ne'er produc'd, before this time, anything on this science so splendid and so glorious." Parliament recommended that a sum of £218 6s. 8d. should be allowed him out of the tonnage imposed for five years from September 1, 1702, but the recommendation was disregarded. In 1703 he again petitioned, and a similar recommendation was made by committee; in 1705 the minutes of parliament record that "we find that Mr. Nisbett's work of Heraldry deserves very much to be encouraged, yet the fund of Tonnage is either exhausted or embazled . . . therefore we presume to recommend him to your Grace and Lordships that he may be assisted in his honourable undertaking"; but nothing further came of the matter, and presently the Union put an end to all hope of aid.

For thirteen years the herald kept silence; and then in 1718, at the age of sixty-one, he issued another chapter of his work, being "An Essay of the Ancient and Modern Use of Armories," which was so well received that the first volume of his "System" saw the light four years later, a work whose value has ever since received full recognition, and to whose care and accuracy Mr. Ross does ample justice.

The second volume, completing the work, was not issued till 1712, seventeen years after Nisbet's death; and this volume has always been regarded as of less authority than its predecessor, being far less systematic and correct. It has, however, been reserved for Mr. Ross to show clearly and in detail how flagrant were the liberties that were taken with the old herald's work, and how inaccurate were the changes introduced. In particular, Mr. Ross proves, by the conclusive method of giving a mechanical reproduction of a page of the published work, along with a similar one of the passage as it stands in Nisbet's still-existing MS., that the statement that "the family of [Nisbet of] Deam is the only Family of the Name in Scotland that has right, by consent, to represent the old original Family of the Name in Scotland; since the only lineal Male Representer [the author of this system] is like to go soon off the world, being an old Man, and without Issue Male or Female," is simply a grossly impudent interpolation, in which Nisbet the herald had no hand.

In his remarks upon the newly-discovered plates, Mr. Ross errs a little on the side of over-praise, when he vouchsafes an opinion of their artistic value, and expresses a hope that they "may do much to resuscitate the proper treatment of heraldry as a decorative art, especially when applied to such purposes as book-plates, monumental brasses, buildings, and carvings in stone and wood." Such "resuscitation" is indeed a thing eminently to be desired, but I fear these plates will hardly form the best models that the heraldic draughtsman could set before him. Done in the end of the seventeenth century, they are examples of a period of decidedly decadent decorative art. It is true that in certain parts they still show traces of the survival of better methods. The mantlings, for example, are good and spirited, rich and varied, yet with fine restraint in the involution of their curves. When, however, animals are introduced, and, still more definitely, when the human figure is portrayed, the treatment is feeble and puerile in the extreme, and shows none of the force, vigour, and selective use of telling, expressive lines, none of the noble conventionalism—always so closely reminiscent of nature, yet never a mere direct copy of it—which has been characteristic of the great periods of heraldic and other branches of decorative art. The treatment of the bearing and of the supporters in the arms of the Earl of Carnwath at p. 31, with the heavy, clumsy form of the shield there introduced, are sufficiently far removed from decorative excellence. For fine and truly artistic examples of heraldic art we must turn to the old Scottish seals so fully catalogued and portrayed in Henry Laing's two volumes, where the artist will find suggestions and models of the highest value.

The genealogies which accompany each plate have been compiled by Mr. Ross and Mr. Grant, the Carrick Pursuivant, who is already known as a worker in similar departments of historic research by his biographical notes on the Writers to the Signet in the recently published history of the society. In cases where the pedigrees have been repeatedly proved, and so are thoroughly ascertained, these have simply been embodied. Pedigrees that exist in the ordinary works of reference have been verified and amplified by independent research; while in the case of families of which no previous history exists, pedigrees have been compiled from the public records and other reliable sources. This portion of the work seems to have been executed with great care and accuracy, and no pains have been spared in research, the authorities used being in every case stated. The editors of the work appear to have received much aid from various owners of documents and antiquaries, from Dr. Dickson, of the Register House, downwards, as duly acknowledged in the preface. In only a single case has Mr. Ross been obliged to complain that materials which would have been of use to him—several letters and other documents by Nisbet—have been churlishly withheld. Mr. Ross, with perhaps too great consideration, has forborne to mention the name of the gentleman who seems to have gratuitously thrown obstacles in the way of his good work; but those who are familiar with genealogical research in Scotland, and the varying disposition of those engaged in it, will have little difficulty in supplying the missing name.

The volume reflects credit both upon its editors and its publisher; and we do not doubt that it will form a book of reference which will take its place on the shelves of all students of Scottish family history, and be frequently in their hands.

J. M. GRAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY."

Settrington Rectory, York: Sept. 17, 1892.

I am agreeably surprised to find that Prof. Ridgeway's objections to my article are so few and so slight. The law of coin degradation seems to me a general, but not a universal, law. Coins have occasionally been minted of superior weight or fineness, with the apparent object of securing for them an international commercial preference. Darius put to death one of his satraps for striking coins somewhat heavier than his own. Plainly the Attic and Macedonian staters of about 133 grains would be preferred to the Darics, the heaviest of which do not weigh more than 132 grains.

Plutarch's account of Solon's coinage is probably a mere legend, invented to account for the change from the Aeginetic to the Euboic standard. But even if the alleged appreciation of silver in Solon's time were an historical fact, it would have been in the ratio of 100 to 73, which would merely raise the value of the ox from 25.3 grains of gold to 34.7, which is still far below the 130 grains required by Prof. Ridgeway's theory.

It is true that Darics were not coined before 520 B.C.; but the Athenian gold staters of the same approximate weight were not struck before 430 B.C., and the Macedonian gold staters were still later. Moreover, the Darics were struck on the familiar Babylonian gold standard, which goes back to a very remote period.

I spoke of the Phœcean electron and silver standard as a slightly degraded form of the heavy Babylonian standard of 260 grains. This standard was undoubtedly used for electron; and electron being ten times the value of silver, it could be, and probably was, used for weighing silver, as seems to have been the case in the conterminous realm of Lydia. (See Head, Hist. Num., p. xxxiv.)

Roman metrology is not a subject with which I am acquainted, and therefore I did not venture to commend what seems to my un instructed mind Prof. Ridgeway's ingenious and probable explanation of the origin of the as and the uncia.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: Sept. 22, 1892.

In reply to Mr. Petrie's request for further information about the false-necked vase, numbered 22,821, in the Fourth Egyptian Room at the British Museum, I beg to state that I have made inquiries in the proper quarter, and received assurances that the vase really came from the tomb of a grandson of Pinetchem, as stated on the label.

In the inscription on the coffin in the tomb its owner's name was partly effaced; and, consequently, his name could not be given on the label. The inscription described him as — Rā, son of the first priest of Amen, Tchetchensu-af-ankh, son of the lord of the two lands, Pa-netchem-Amen-meri, first priest of Amen. The name Pa-netchem-Amen-meri was enclosed in a cartouche.

The following are the other objects from this tomb which have come to the British Museum. Nos. 22,872, large scarab of opaque blue glass, without inscription or device; 22,822, pilgrim-bottle of white glazed terra-cotta; 22,826, four-handled vase (with lid) of blue glazed Egyptian faience; 22,825, wooden box (without lid) in form of a hippopotamus. These are all in the Fourth Egyptian Room, and in table-case A, and wall-cases 110, 114, 149 respectively.

In his letter Mr. Petrie makes a statement which needs some explanation. Speaking of false-necked vases, he says:—"It may, perhaps, be proved that one vase was buried at a date four centuries later than the dating found with hundreds of others." In the first place he ignores the fact that false-necked vases are represented in the tomb of Ramessu III., and must therefore have been in use within about two centuries of the date when this particular vase was buried. In the second place he has hitherto spoken of less than a dozen vases of this class, and has not assigned all these to so early a period as four centuries before the date in question. Perhaps he will be good enough to tell us something more about those hundreds of others, and the "dating" found with them.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. WHISTLER has in preparation a new work, to be published under the title of Songs on Stone. It will be issued by Mr. Heinemann at intervals in portfolio, and each part will contain several plates. The first part is nearly ready.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW announce a memoir of Edward Calvert, the friend and disciple of William Blake, written by his third son, Mr. Samuel Calvert, and illustrated with thirty plates and other facsimile illustrations. Calvert was born at Appledore, in Devon, in 1799, and for a short time served as a midshipman in the navy. Settling in London about 1824 as a landscape painter, he became associated with Blake, who influenced all his future career. Though he lived till the age of eighty-four, he is only known for the engravings which he printed privately in his own house. The earlier of these show the religious and naturalistic sentiment of Blake: the later are suggested by classical subjects.

MR. P. G. HAMERTON's fine art book for this year will be Man in Art, to be published by Messrs. Macmillans. It will be illustrated with numerous etchings and photographs, after painters and sculptors, both ancient and modern, and of all schools.

THE new edition of Fairbairn's Book of Crests (1859), upon which Mr. A. C. Fox-Davies has been engaged for some time past, will be published by Messrs. Jack, of Edinburgh, in the course of next month. Like the original edition, it consists of two quarto volumes—the first containing the index to surnames and other matter, in nearly 700 pages; the second giving 250 plates of crests, now for the first time printed in correct heraldic fashion.

THE collections of sculpture, painting, faience, &c., which Mr. Flinders Petrie brought back from his excavations last winter at Tel el-Amarna, are now on view at 4 Oxford-mansion, Oxford-circus, W. Their special interest is that they reveal an hitherto unknown form of art, remarkable both for its originality and for its spirited rendering of natural objects, which seems to be the creation of the religious reformer, King Khuenaten, whose date is approximately 1400 B.C. The resemblance to some of the finest objects of Mycenaean work is very striking. The exhibition will remain open until October 15.

AN appeal is issued for the sum of £6000, in order to purchase the site outside the Damascus Gate of Jerusalem, known as the Garden Tomb, which some persons have thought may be identical with the Holy Sepulchre. The appeal has the support of Prof. R. Stuart Poole and Canon Tristram.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Woolhouse:

Quintet in C for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello. By Gerard F. Cobb. (Op. 22.) Already in many works the composer has shown a skilful hand, and we find here much excellent workmanship. The opening Allegro has some attractive material, especially the "cantabile" theme. The Scherzo is light and humorous, though of somewhat formal construction; the two Trios present excellent contrasts. The fine slow movement is, to our thinking, the most original number of the work; it has charm, though of a melancholy kind, and dignity. The Finale is lively; we meet in it reminiscences of previous moments.

The Winter it is past and Summer is a coming in. By Christiana Thompson. Two simple songs. The composer has feeling, and a certain taste, but not a practised pen. The little "cuckoo" phrase in the second is of good effect, but there are some weaknesses in the rest of the accompaniment.

Song of the Gondolier. By Martin Plüddemann. A very clever song. There is something winning in the simple melody, while the accompaniment, with its counter-themes, is as graceful as it is effective. The words are translated from the Italian by Albert B. Bach.

Parting Time. By J. Cliffe Forrester. A neat, unpretentious song.

Bright be the Place of thy Soul. By Noel Johnson. A quiet song; the rhythm and colouring of the pianoforte part recall Schumann.

Kéramos. By Clarisse Mallard. A weak song, with a commonplace accompaniment.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

BY THE LATE
PROF. FREE-
MAN.

THE NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

SICILY: PHœNICIAN, GREEK,
and ROMAN. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Maps, Illustrations, and Index.

NEW VOLUME
OF
"THE ADVEN-TURE SERIES."

Large crown 8vo, red cloth, gold lettered, 5s.

MISSING FRIENDS; or, the Adventures of a Danish Emigrant in Queensland.

NEW VOLUMES
OF
"THE PSEUDO-NYM LIBRARY."

24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

THE GENERAL'S DAUGHTER.
By the Author of "A Russian Priest."

THE SAGHALIEN CONVICT.
By VARIOUS AUTHORS.

"THE CAMEO SERIES."

Half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.

THE COUNTESS KATHLEEN:
a Dramatic Poem. By W. B. YEATS. Frontispiece by J. T. Nettleship.

BY AUTHOR OF
"AUNT ANNE."

Small 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

MR. KEITH'S CRIME. By Mrs.
W. K. CLIFFORD.
"Mrs. Clifford's remarkable tale."—Athenæum.

IN "THE INDEPENDENT LIBRARY."

Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SHIFTING of the FIRE.
By FORD H. HUEFFER, Author of "The Brown Owl."

Post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of MARK RUTHERFORD. Edited by his Friend,
REUBEN SHAPCOTT. Fifth Edition, Corrected, and with Additions. [Ready.]

Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DOWN in the FLATS; or, Party before Fitness. By CLEVEDEN KENN. [Ready.]

BY
H. H. BOYESEN.

Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

ESSAYS on GERMAN LITERA-TURE. By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

MRS. OLIPHANT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE CUCKOO in the NEST. In 3 vols.

SARAH DOUDNEY'S NEW NOVEL.

THROUGH PAIN to PEACE. In 3 vols.

DARLEY DALE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. In 3 vols.
'September 23.'

MAY CROMMELIN'S NEW NOVEL.

MR. and MRS. HERRIES. In 1 vol., buckram gilt, 6s.

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

LOVE for an HOUR is LOVE for EVER.
In cloth gilt, 5s.

BY DOUGLAS SLADEN.

THE JAPS at HOME. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s. With over 50 Full-Page and other Illustrations by Henry Savage Landor and other Artists. [In October.]

BY CANON POTTER, M.A.

THE GERM GROWERS: the Strange
Adventures of Robert Easterley and John Wilbraham. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

THE DICTIONARY of AUSTRALASIAN

BIOGRAPHY. Comprising Notices of Eminent Colonists from the Inauguration of Responsible Government down to the Present Time (1855-1892). Edited by PHILIP MENNELL, F.R.G.S., assisted by Eminent Colonists. In large crown 8vo, half-leather and cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

BY S. BAYARD DOD.

A HIGHLAND CHRONICLE. In crown
8vo, cloth, gilt top, 5s.

The ACADEMY says: "Certainly one of the best stories of its kind that we have ever had.... deals in a most fresh and charming way with the ordinary aspects of Highland life and character a century ago. Mr. Dod's men and women are broadly individualised and unmistakably alive."

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE FATE of FENELLA. By 24 well-known Authors. With 70 Illustrations and Authors' Autographs. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

ACADEMY.—"Entertaining and clever.....An ingenious success....."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"As a feat of collaboration, it exceeds by at least twenty collaborateurs any other masterpiece on record."

BY MRS. J. KENT SPENDER.

A WAKING. Cheap Edition. In buckram gilt,
3s. 6d., with Illustrations. [This day.]

ACADEMY.—"Zina Layton is one of the most remarkable women that have appeared in recent fiction.....Altogether, 'A Waking' is the best novel Mrs. Kent Spender has yet published."

BY H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON.

THE WEB of the SPIDER: a Tale of Adventure. With Frontispiece by Stanley Wood. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

The SPECTATOR says: "Not only vigorous fiction, but a work of art."

. The Second and Cheap Edition was immediately exhausted. A Third Edition next week.

FOURTH EDITION.

THE PRINCESS MAZAROFF. By JOSEPH
HATTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The GLOBE says: "There is not a skippable page in the whole of these exciting chapters."

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND RECENT BOOKS.

NEW BOOK BY MRS. THACKERAY RITCHIE.
Now ready, extra crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RECORDS of TENNYSON, RUSKIN, and BROWNING. By ANNE RITCHIE.

* Also a Large-Paper Edition, limited to 75 copies, 25s.

NEW BOOK BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, BART.
Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE BEAUTIES of NATURE; and the Wonders of the World we Live in. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. With Illustrations.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

Immediately, 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

HELEN TREVERYAN; or, the Ruling Race. By JOHN ROY.

2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

UNDER PRESSURE. By the Marchesa Theodoli.

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

THE RAILWAY MAN and his CHILDREN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

DOMBEY and SON. By Charles Dickens.
With 56 Illustrations.

BARNABY RUDGE. By Charles Dickens. With 76 Illustrations.

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, and MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK. By CHARLES DICKENS. With 97 Illustrations.

THE NEW ANTIGONE.

GUARDIAN.—"The book is very far removed from the plane of ordinary novels."
SPECTATOR.—"A story which steadily increases in interest and which leaves on the mind an impression of artistic power."

NEVERMORE. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author of "Robbery under Arms."

REVIEWER.—"Nevermore" is an exciting story of Ballarat in the fifties. Its hero, Lance Trevanion, is a character which for force of delineation has no equal in Rolf Boldrewood's previous novels."

ACADEMY.—"Is perhaps the best story of the Rolf Boldrewood series Must be allowed to be one of the best novels of the period."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE THREE FATES. By F. Marion Crawford,

Author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Khaleel," &c.
NATIONAL OBSERVER.—"A brilliant variation from Mr. F. Marion Crawford's wonted style Increases in strength and in interest even to the end."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The story, viewed as a picture of American manners, is both clever and entertaining."

GRAPHIC.—"Altogether it is 'novel' in conception and unusually suggestive and entertaining."

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—NEW VOLUME.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE. By John Nichol, LL.D., M.A., Emeritus Professor of English Literature in the University of Glasgow.

TIMES.—"A penetrating, well-ordered, and often brilliant analysis of Carlyle from every side—as a political philosopher, as a man of letters, as an historian, and as an ethical teacher."

THIRD EDITION, COMPLETELY REVISED.

Now ready, 2 vols., extra crown 8vo, 15s.

MARIUS the EPICUREAN: his Sensations and Ideas. By WALTER PATER, Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. Third Edition. Sixth Thousand, completely Revised. 2 vols.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Apart from philosophy and too curious considering, Mr. Pater's book is so full of dignified pictures of the old world, and so scholarly in the best sense, that it cannot fail to have many readers."

LILL MALL GAZETTE.—"A book to read and re-read Enough has been said to show those who are likely to appreciate the book what unusual matter for appreciation they have within reach."

SPECTATOR.—"A singularly attractive book."

THE LATE JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Uniform with Lowell's Collected Works, 7 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each.

THE COMPLETE WORKS of JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

UNIFORM WITH LOWELL'S COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS.

18mo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER. With Portrait.

NEW VOLUME OF MACMILLAN'S ENGLISH CLASSICS.

Now ready, globe 8vo.

TENNYSON—GARETH and LYNETTE. With Introduction and Notes by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Now ready, extra crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

BEAST and MAN in INDIA: a Popular Sketch of Indian Animals in their Relations with the People. By JOHN LOCKWOOD KIPLING, C.I.E. With many Illustrations by the Author.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A book which will give English readers a truer conception of the character of the natives than a whole library full of standard works. It was a happy idea to define the progress and limits of civilisation in India by describing the relations between man and beast Mr. Kipling is equally clever with pen and pencil. The result is a very charming volume, which is at once entertaining and instructive Of the admirable drawings we cannot speak too highly. Of the book itself, we can only repeat that it is one of the best about India we have seen for a long time."

BY THE LATE JOHN RICHARD GREEN.

Now ready, Second and Cheaper Edition, globe 8vo, cloth, 5s.

STRAY STUDIES from ENGLAND and ITALY.

By JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Second Edition.

ACADEMY.—"There are books which do not allow themselves to be read, books which may be read with a struggle, and books which it is impossible not to read. Mr. Green's 'Stray Studies,' like his 'Short History,' are of this last sort. They read themselves, as it were, and carry one down a clear and pleasant stream of style, within sight of places and events full of charm and interest."

BY JAMES B. PERKINS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

FRANCE UNDER the REGENCY. With a

Review of the Administration of Louis XIV. By JAMES BRECK PERKINS, Author of "France under Richelieu and Mazarin."

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE.

Now ready, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE WORKS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. In 9 vols. Vol. VIII.—Containing KING LEAR, OTHELLO, ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, CYMBELINE.

NEW BOOK BY MR. HORACE SMITH.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

INTERLUDES: being Two Essays, a Story, and some Verses. By HORACE SMITH.

BY THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

Now ready, 8vo, cloth, 14s.

DISSERTATIONS on the APOSTOLIC AGE.

Reprinted from edition of St. Paul's Epistles by the late J. H. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Lord Bishop of Durham. Published by the Trustees of the Lightfoot Fund.

NEW BOOK BY CANON BERNARD.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CENTRAL TEACHING of CHRIST.

Being a Study and Exposition of St. John, Chapters XIII. to XVII. inclusive. By T. D. BERNARD, M.A., Canon of Wells. Crown 8vo.

BY THE LATE FREDERIC DENISON MAURICE.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

CHRISTMAS DAY, and other Sermons. By the late FREDERIC DENISON MAURICE, M.A.

* Uniform with the "Lincoln's Inn Sermons" recently published.

CONCLUDING VOLUME OF THE CHEAPER EDITION OF ARCHDEACON FARRAR'S COLLECTED SERMONS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SERMONS and ADDRESSES delivered in AMERICA. By F. W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S., Archdeacon and Canon of Westminster and Rector of St. Margaret's. With an Introduction by Bishop PHILLIPS BROOKE, D.D.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE CHEAPER REISSUE OF THE "GOLDEN TREASURY" SERIES.

Now ready, 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

DEUTSCHE LYRIK. Selected and Arranged with Notes and a Literary Introduction by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil.Doc. F.O.P., Professor of German Literature in King's College, London.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE'S RELIGIO MEDICI.

Letter to a Friend, &c., and Christiana Morals. Edited by W. A. GREENHILL, M.D.

THE POETRY of BYRON. Chosen and Edited by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

TALES from SHAKESPEARE. By Charles and

MARY LAMB. Edited, with an Introduction, by the Rev. ALFRED AINGER, M.A.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS. By an Old Boy.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. Edited after the Original

Editions by J. W. CLARK, M.A.

LA LYRE FRANCAISE. Selected and Arranged, with Notes, by G. MASSON.

NEW VOLUME OF NATURE SERIES.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

EXPERIMENTAL EVOLUTION. Lectures delivered in the "Summer School of Science and Art," in Edinburgh, August, 1891. By HENRY DE VARIIGNY, D.Sc., Assistant in the Museum d'Histoire Naturelle, Member of the Société de Biologie.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1065.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S AUTUMN BOOKS.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph OURWALDER, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Helen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped with two Sisters of Mercy on Camels from the Sudan. By Major F. L. WINGATE, R.A., Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan." Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. 1 vol., 500 pp., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. By A. J. Mounteney Jephson. Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth. October.

ON SLEDGE and HORSEBACK to OUTCAST SIBERIAN LEPERS. By Miss Kate Marsden. Crown 8vo, with Portraits and Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings by Walter C. Horsley and others, cloth, 6s. Illustrated Prospectus post free on application.

AFLOAT and ASHORE on the MEDITERRANEAN. By Lee Meriwether, Author of "How to See Europe on Fifty Cents a Day," "A Tramp at Home," &c. 8vo, with 21 Full-Page Illustrations, 400 pages, cloth.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL in NORMANDY, BRITTANY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By Henry Blackburn. Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Ralph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

THROUGH the LAND of the AZTECS: Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico. By a "Gringo." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A TRAMP ACROSS the CONTINENT: from Ohio to California on Foot, 3,507 Miles. By Charles F. Lummis, Author of "A New Mexico David," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A RIDE THROUGH WONDERLAND. By Georgina M. Synge. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CORSICAN STUDIES. By John Warren Barry, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in MADEIRA. By A. E. W. Marsh. With many Full-Page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA. By James Douglas. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-Page Photographs, Collotype Reproductions from Old Documents, 1 Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, £2 2s. net.

TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES of TRAVEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Edited by Joseph Cundall. Illustrated with 20 Plates from "The Annals." Large post 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE GLACIAL NIGHTMARE. By Sir Henry H. Howorth, M.P., Author of "The Mammoth and the Flood," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth.

THE HISTORY of SOUTH AUSTRALIA: from its Foundation to the Year of its Jubilee. With a Chronological Summary of all the Principal Events of Interest up to Date. By EDWIN HODDER, Author of "Memories of New Zealand Life," "George Fife Angus, Father and Founder of South Australia," &c. With Maps. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. In the press.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. J. Abbey, Rector of Checkendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth.

THE EARL of ABERDEEN. By the Hon. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G. Being the New Volume in the "Queen's Prime Ministers Series." With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography. By Charles Willeby. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNIVERSALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being the Life of the Rev. James E. Smith, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photogravure Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth.

PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT in ENGLAND: its Origin, Development, and Practical Operation. By the late ALPHIEUS TODD, LL.D., C.M.G., Librarian of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada. New Edition, Abridged, Revised, and brought up to date by His Excellency SPENCER WALPOLE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

THE COLONIAL ERA in AMERICA. By Prof. George P. Fisher, of Yale. With 3 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ESSAYS by SIR MORELL MACKENZIE. Edited by his Brother, A. W. Mackenzie. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

WOLFENBERG. By William Black, Author of "A Daughter of Heth," "Sunrise," "A Princess of Thule," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d. November 15.

THE CLOCKS of RONDAINE, and other Stories. By Frank R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange." Illustrated by E. H. Bishfield and others. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus Hume, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "A Creature of the Night," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. October 4.

THE TERRIBLE OZAR: a Romance of the Times of Ivan the Terrible. By Count A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Capt. F. H. MORE, of the Black Watch. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. Second Edition in the press.

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. By Amelia E. Barr, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. October.

THE MYSTERY of ST. DUNSTAN'S: a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1721. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Author of "The Life of William Cowper," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

HYPOCRITES. By Hugh Coleman Davidson, Author of "The Old Adam," &c. Illustrated. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. KENNEDY, Author of "Blacks and Bushrangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

TWO IMPORTANT FINE-ART WORKS.

THE CAPITALS OF THE WORLD.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO. beg to state that, in co-operation with the well-known publishers, Messrs. Hachette & Co., of Paris, they have made arrangements for an important and superbly illustrated work in which "The Capitals of the World" are depicted with pen and pencil. The book has been for a considerable time in preparation, and neither care nor expense has been spared to render it in every sense worthy of its subject. The text has been written by the most celebrated writers of the present day; has been put into English by Mrs. Nancy Bell (N. D'Anvers); and Mr. H. D. Traill, B.C.L., has written an introduction to the work, in which the characteristic aspects of the life of the "Capitals of the World" are passed in brief but picturesque survey.

This very beautiful illustrated Art Work will be ready for publication in November in Two Volumes, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, leather back, with gilt lettering on back and sides, and gilt edges. Price THREE GUINEAS NET.

An Illustrated Prospectus sent post free on application.

HISTORY of ENGRAVING in ENGLAND. By

LOUIS FAGAN, Deputy Keeper of the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. Illustrated by 100 Typical Examples, reproduced from a Rare and Unique Prints in the British Museum, exemplifying the progress of the art from the end of the Sixteenth Century to the earlier years of Her Majesty's Reign.

Encouraged by the special response to the preliminary announcement of this work, the Publishers beg to state that it is proceeding, and that the plates are now being reproduced by the Autotype Company of London by their exquisite method of photogravure. The One Hundred Reproductions (size, half Columbia, 23½ by 17½ inches) with titles will be published in three portfolios at separate intervals.

The Edition will be strictly limited to ONE HUNDRED COPIES, and subscribers will receive their sections or complete copies according to priority of application. The text of Mr. Fagan's work will be issued as a separate volume. The price for the whole will be TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS NET.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

PAYNE'S HISTORY OF THE NEW WORLD, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	277
YEATS'S COUNTESS KATHLEEN, by LIONEL JOHNSON	278
DIARIES OF SIR DANIEL GOOCH, by J. A. NOBLE	27
STUDIES IN SECONDARY EDUCATION, by FOSTER WATSON	280
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	281
SOME BOOKS ABOUT INDIA	282
NOTES AND NEWS	284
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	285
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	285
ORIGINAL VERSE: SONG, by PERCY PINKERTON	285
OBITUARY	285
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	286
MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.'S LIST	286
MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S LIST	286
MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S LIST	286
MESSRS. GRIFITH, FARRAN & CO.'S LIST	287
MESSRS. ELKIN MATTHEWS AND JOHN LANE'S LIST	287
MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S LIST	287
MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S LIST	287
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	287
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Persecution of Economic History , by the Rev. Dr. W. Cunningham; Tenagys—Damasus , by W. St. Chad Boscawen	288
LOTZE'S PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION, by the Rev. J. OWEN	289
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Pronunciation and Spelling of Place-Names in Egypt , by F. L. ORFITH and Count R. d'Hulst	290
SCIENCE NOTES	290
PHILOLOGY NOTES	291
PERROT AND CHIFFEZ'S HISTORY OF ANCIENT ART, by Prof. SAYCE	291
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"The Origin of Metallic Currency," by Prof. Ridgeway; Aegypt Pottery in Egypt , by W. Flinders Petrie	292
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	292
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	293

EXCEEDINGLY quaint OLD OAK FURNITURE, viz., Corner Cupboard, Grandfather's Tall Case Clock (brass face), and Dower Chest. Each article is richly carved. 29 the lot; or separate. Particulars forwarded.—Apply LADY, Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

A LADY of much experience seeks an ENGAGEMENT as LITERARY ASSISTANT or SUB-EDITOR. Moderate salary. Excellent references.—K. H., 60, Hereford Road, Bayswater, W.

WANTED TO BUY: ATHENAEUM, a Set, 1828 to 1890.—ACADEMY, a Set, 1828 to 1890.—CHEMICAL NEWS, 1828 to 1891.—CONTEMPORARY REVIEW, 1896 to 1899.—FORTHNIGHTLY REVIEW, 1895 to 1899.—LITERARY CHRONICLE, 5 vols.—MIND, 1876-1890.—SATURDAY REVIEW, a Set.—SPECTATOR, a Set.
G. E. STECHERT, 30, Wellington Street, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description.—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

CATALOGUE

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANSTAEGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Land, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

New ready, at all Libraries, 1 vol., 6s.
NEW NOVEL.

A MYSTERIOUS FAMILY. By a NEW WRITER.
London: W. H. ALLEN & Co. Ltd., 10, Waterloo Place.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART.

ROYAL COLLEGE of SCIENCE,
STEPHEN'S GREEN, DUBLIN.

SESSION 1892-93.

The Royal College of Science supplies Courses of Instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed broadly under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

A Diploma of Associate of the College (As. R. C. Sc., I.) is granted at the end of the Three Years' Course, the required conditions being complied with.

Four Royal Scholarships, of the value of £50 yearly each, with free admission to the Lectures and Laboratories, are attached to the College. Two are offered for Competition each year to Associate Students not being Royal Exhibitioners, on the completion of their first year's course.

The Fees payable by Non-Associate Students are—£2 for each separate Course of Lectures, £1 for Half Course of Experimental Physics, or £10 for all the Lecture Courses of a Faculty, for the Session.

For ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month, £5 for Three Months, £9 for Six Months, £12 for the entire Session.

For PHYSICAL LABORATORY—£1 per Month (one hour a day), £2 for a Special Course of One Month, £3 per Month for six hours a day, or £6 for the Session (one hour per day).

For ASSAYING—£5 for Three Months, £9 for Six Months, £12 for the entire Session.

For ZOOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month, £3 for 1st Medical or 2nd Arts Course Royal University of Ireland, or £5 for a Special Course of Three Months.

For BOTANICAL LABORATORY—Same as Zoological Laboratory.

For GEOLOGICAL LABORATORY—£2 for a Special Course of One Month.

For DRAWING SCHOOL—£3 for the Session, £2 for One Term. The Chemical and Physical Laboratories and the Drawing Schools are Open Daily for Practical Instruction.

Mathematics, Mechanics, and Professor W. McF. ORR, M.A.

Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Engineering, and Surveying Professor JAMES LYON, M.A.

Chemistry (Theoretical and Practical) Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S.

Physics (Theoretical and Practical) Professor W. F. BARRETT, F.R.S.E.

Geology Professor G. A. J. COLE, F.R.S., Dean of Faculty for the Session.

Mining and Mineralogy Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E.

Botany Professor T. JOHNSON, D.Sc.

Zoology Professor A. C. HADDON, M.A., F.Z.S., M.R.I.A.

The Courses of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, Zoology, Geology, and Mineralogy are recognized by the Royal University of Ireland, and Certificates of Attendance are granted to Medical and other Students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The FIRST TERM of the Session will commence on MONDAY, the 3rd OCTOBER, 1892.

NOTE.—Intending Associate Students will be required to pass an Entrance Examination in Elementary Mathematics and Elementary Practical Geometry, as indicated on page 5 of Programme, copies of which may be had on application from the Secretary.

Professor J. P. O'REILLY, Secretary.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The SIXTY-SECOND SESSION of the MEDICAL DEPARTMENT opens OCTOBER 2nd. The NINETEENTH SESSION of the DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS begins OCTOBER 10th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Veterinary School, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be Open Daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Registrar:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

The Hall of Residence in connection with the College is now open.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of Lectures on Zoology by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., commences on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th at 1 p.m. These Lectures are intended to meet the requirements of Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London.

A Special Course of Lectures on ANIMAL VARIATION, addressed to Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology will be given in the Lent Term.

J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, LONDON

(FOR LADIES), 43 and 45, HARLEY STREET, W.

Founded 1848. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1853.

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

III. ART AND MUSIC DEPARTMENT.

Drawing and Figure Painting—J. B. BEDFORD; Miss ELLA BEDFORD. Landscape Painting, Oil and Water Colour—J. H. LEONARD.

Harmony and Part Singing—HENRY GADSBY.

Pianoforte—Sir W. G. GOSNOLD (Master of the Music to the Queen).

H. GADSBY; J. GADSBY.

Vocal Music—W. SHAKESPEARE, and Assistants.

Violin—Messrs. WIESEN and A. E. ROWARTH.

Violoncello—Mr. HILL.

Dancing and Calisthenics—Mrs. MARSHALL BURCH.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins OCTOBER 3rd.

For particulars apply to Miss CROFTON, Lady Resident.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

NEXT WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY and SATURDAY.

CONDUCTOR—SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

PRINCIPALS.—Mme. Albani, Miss Macintyre, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Miss Marian McKenzie, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Norman Salmon, Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. Phil. Net Greene.

CHIEF VOICES.—Elliott, Schumann's Pilgrimage, Requin, Mendelssohn's Psalm 114th, Wagner's Mastersingers, Brahms's Song of Destiny, Bach's Mass in B Minor, Alan Gray's Arctura, Sullivan's Tempest Music, Dvorak's Spectre's Bride, Parry's De Profundis, Handel Selection, Hymns of Praise, F. Cliffe's New Symphony, &c.

Tickets 21s. 18s. 10s. 6d. 3s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.
English First and Second Seats all Sold.

Full particulars in programmes, which may be had on application. Morning Concerts begin at 11.30. Evening Concerts at 7.30. Ticket Office Open from 10 to 5.

FRED. R. SPARK, Hon. Sec.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

JUST READY, Fifth Edition.

WHAT MUST I DO TO GET WELL?
and HOW CAN I KEEP SO? a clear explanation of the Salisbury Treatment. 72 pp. By ELMIA STUART, Kenilworth, With Portrait. 1888. Price net, post free, 3s. 3d. Will be sent at once on receipt of remittance.

ON the MODIFICATION of ORGANISMS

A CRITICISM ON DARWIN. By DAVID SYME. "Rot?" Dr. A. R. WALLACE. "A Shrewd Critic."—Dr. HOSKINS. "A vigorous criticism."—Times. "No earnest student can afford to neglect so firm and clear and strong a criticism of Darwin."—Aberdeen Free Press. Price 3s. 6d.

SIMPSON, MARSHALL & Co., Limited, London.

8vo, cloth, 297 pages, with Map and 12 Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

THE BIRDS OF LANCASHIRE.

By F. S. MITCHELL.

Second Edition, Revised and Annotated by

HOWARD SANDERS, F.L.S., &c.

With Additions by R. J. HOWARD and other Local Authorities.

GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row.

(Mr. VAN VOORST'S Successor.)

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

NEWEST BOOKS.

JENNY'S CASE. By Ellen F. Pinsent
2 vols.

FIRST REVIEW (SCOTSMAN): "Treated with a becoming reticence and dignity. Touches of real portraiture."

SECOND REVIEW (GLASGOW HERALD): "A work of remarkable power. Without passion, declamation, digression, or striving after effect, the story is allowed to unfold itself step by step. It is the result of close observation and sympathetic study. It is doubtful if any writer, save George Eliot and Thomas Hardy, has so well caught the idiosyncrasies of rustic character."

THIRD REVIEW (DAILY CHRONICLE): "'Jenny's case' was similar to that of 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles,' and in one respect the author's treatment of it is more original than Mr. Hardy's. The story is told with extreme directness and simplicity, and with quite unaffected and unmanufactured pathos."

FOURTH REVIEW (DAILY GRAPHIC): "The book cannot fail of a hearing, when its merits are so obvious."

FIFTH REVIEW (LITERARY WORLD): "Displays tender sympathy with a true appreciation of the shrewd and hard, yet easily love-led nature of the English peasant. The lesson of self-respect and prudence which is so well taught in this sad story of temptation and weakness, should be widely circulated amongst the class to which the heart-broken little heroine and her betrayer belong."

SIXTH REVIEW (NATIONAL OBSERVER): "An honest and satisfactory piece of work. From the first page to the last the plot develops as a revelation of destiny. Pitiful to read, interesting for its sincerity and simplicity of design, not savage, but hard in its observation, human to the last degree, 'Jenny's Case' is a scholarly novel."

SEVENTH REVIEW (ATHENÆUM): "Of more than average value. Admirable portraits. Will reward the reader."

EIGHTH REVIEW (ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE): "A story of uncommon merit. Mrs. Pinsent is not afraid of hard realities, but her realism is not ugly, and the sadder details of her tale are introduced with a sympathetic reticence which makes these simple annals infinitely pathetic. It is a very remarkable story in every way."

NINTH REVIEW (MORNING POST): "Shows a thorough knowledge of the ways and manners of the rural classes."

WITH A PREFACE BY EDNA LYALL.

HAD I BUT KNOWN. By Ella Fordyce.
3s. 6d. "Miss Fordyce tells her story well."—ATHENÆUM.

AN UNBIASSED CHURCH HISTORY.

HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH:

A.D. 1-600. By Dr. W. MOELLER. Translated by ANDREW RUTHERFURD, B.D. 558 pp., 8vo, 15s. "It is a distinct gain to the study of Church history. To the teacher who wants references, to the priest or minister who wants to keep up his theological library, to the public librarian who wants to be able to send his inquirers to a practical and scientific authority, and to be himself directed to the choice of the best books on the subject, as well as to the student, this book may be heartily commended."—MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED INTEREST;

Customs, Laws, Agriculture. By RUSSELL M. GARNIER, B.A. (Oxon.). 421 pp., 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Full of careful and far-reaching erudition, and falls into line with the works of Prof. Rogers, Mr. Protheroe, and Mr. Ashley."—SCOTSMAN. "Eminently readable. An important contribution to economic history."—GLASGOW HERALD.

THE STORY of KASPAR HAUSER. By ELIZABETH E. EVANS. With a Portrait. 4s. 6d.BOOK COLLECTING: a Guide for Amateurs.

By J. H. SLATER, Editor of "Book Prices Current," &c. With numerous Facsimile Marks of the Early Presses. 5s. "This admirable little guide should be purchased by every discreet learner in the school of book collecting."—YORKSHIRE POST.

NEWEST ADDITIONS TO SERIES.

THE DILETTANTE LIBRARY.—Each 2s. 6d.

9. WALT WHITMAN. By William Clarke, M.A.
With Portrait.

"A plain and straightforward exposition of a difficult subject, written without subtlety, and without anything of the unusual intemperance in praise or blame shown by Whitman's critics."—PALL MALL.

10. BROWNING'S CRITICISM of LIFE. By WILLIAM F. REVELL. With Portrait.

"Written with intellectual modesty as well as considerable literary grace."—SPEAKER.

ANTIQUARIAN LIBRARY.—Each 3s. 6d.

THE STONE, BRONZE, and IRON AGES: a Popular Treatise on Early Archaeology. By J. HUNTER-DUCAR. Fully Illustrated.

"Mr. Hunter-Ducar's volume, with its plethora of illustrations, will enable any one to put himself abreast of all the main facts."—DAILY CHRONICLE. "The result of long and patient research."—LITERARY WORLD.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.—Each 2s. 6d.

57. LAND NATIONALISATION. By Dr. Alfred RUSSEL WALLACE.56. SOCIALISM, SCIENTIFIC and UTOPIAN. By FREDERICK ENGELS.55. The SOCIAL HORIZON. By the "Daily News" COMMISSIONER.54. EFFECTS of MACHINERY on WAGES. By Professor J. S. NICHOLSON. "A model of luminous exposition."—SCOTSMAN.

PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.

Edited by Professor E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.).

GREEK ACCIDENCE. By the Editor. 2s.SECOND FRENCH READER and WRITER. By Professor PAUL BARNIER. 1s. 6d.SPANISH GRAMMAR. By H. B. Clarke, B.A. (Oxon.) 4s. 6d.FIRST SPANISH READER and WRITER. By the SAME. 2s.

LIBRARY OF PHILOSOPHY.

A HISTORY of ÆSTHETIC. By Bernard BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon.), Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow), formerly Fellow of University College, Oxford. 510 pp., large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Bosanquet is a scholar, a thinker, and a man with genuine knowledge and love of art. The book is comprehensive in its reviews, and often suggestive in its criticism."—NATIONAL OBSERVER. "Full of attractive matter."—TIMES. "A valuable contribution."—SCOTSMAN.

LIBRARY EDITIONS OF STANDARD AUTHORS.

LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Index, by JOHN BRADSHAW, LL.D. 3 vols., 1,500 pages, 8vo, 12s. per Set net.

"This article would be incomplete if we did not express our appreciation of the skill and discretion with which Dr. Bradshaw has fulfilled his editorial duties. We have only to add that these volumes, though inexpensive, are extremely well got up, and we must express our gratitude to the publishers for issuing them without any inferior prints or photographs."—ATHENÆUM.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE. THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

for OCTOBER, 1892, contains, among other articles of interest:—GOD'S FOOL. By MAARTEN MAARTENS. Chaps. XLII.—XLIV.—A TWILIGHT GOSSIP with the PAST. By Mrs. ANDREW CROSSE.—PAUL LOUIS COURIER. By W. FRANK RAE.—PARIS: PRINTEMPS. By WALTER FAITH.—MRS. BLIGH. By RHONA BROUGHTON. Chaps. V.—VIII., &c.

NOW READY.

STRAY RECORDS;

Or, Personal and Professional Notes.

By CLIFFORD HARRISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"Mr. Harrison has much that is interesting to say, and he writes with a skill and a facility that would themselves be sufficient to ensure him a respectful hearing. He chats genially about the many eminent men he has met; he has a pretty knack of describing the places he has visited; and his critical remarks are shrewd and suggestive."

Full Mail Gazette.

"Two very pleasant and readable volumes."—Times.

NOW READY.

THE STILL LIFE OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE,

With some of its Table Talk, preceded by
Fifty Years' Reminiscences.

By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A.,

A Barrister of the Society.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

"Westbury, Campbell, Stephen, Huddleston, and a host of other judicial lights appear in these pages as the heroes of a number of funny stories, the whole making up a wonderfully entertaining book."—Observer.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

Sir GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS

By ROSA N. CAREY,

Author of "Not Like Other Girls."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA.

By Mrs. ALICK MACLEOD.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author has unmistakable literary faculty, dramatic insight, a quick eye for character, a wide and generous sympathy, and above all, a really charming faculty of humour."—Academy.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN FOOL'S PARADISE."

A GIRL WITH A TEMPER.

By H. B. FINLAY KNIGHT.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A worthy book, written by a thorough man of the world who knows his fellows. And the story is told in good English, in admirable taste, with many a touch of shrewd humour."—Vanity Fair.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. KEITH'S CRIME."

AUNT ANNE.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD.

Third Edition.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

"One of the most memorable creations of modern fiction. The character of Aunt Anne is not a mere tour de force. It is one of those—one is almost tempted to say immortal—creations whose truth mingles so insistently with its charm in every touch that it is hard to say whether it is its truth which makes the charm or the charm which persuades you into believing in its truth."—Sunday Sun.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES."

IN SPIKE OF HERSELF. By

LESLIE KEITH. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES of LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, P.C., G.C.B., 1837-1862

With Portrait. 2 vols. 32s. [Second Edition just ready.]

KING HENRY VIII. With a Series of Magnificent Photogravures from Original Drawings

by Sir JAMES LINTON, P.R.I. The Text luxuriously printed in red and black on hand-made paper. With Introduction by Prof. DOWDEN.

The Edition of "King Henry VIII." will be strictly limited to 250 numbered copies. Price on application. [Ready shortly.]

AN EDITION DE LUXE OF

A VISION of SAINTS. By Lewis

MORRIS. With 20 Full-Page Illustrations. 21s.

THE CAREER of COLUMBUS. By

CHARLES ELTON, F.S.A. With Map. 10s. 6d.

NEW LIGHT on the BIBLE and the HOLY LAND. By B. T. A. EVETTS. Illustrated.

21s. [Ready shortly.]

CASSELL'S NEW BIOGRAPHICAL

DICTIONARY. Containing Memoirs of the Most Eminent Men and Women of all Ages and Countries.
7s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

THE MEDICINE LADY. By L. T.

MEADE, Author of "A World of Girls." 3 vols.
31s. 6d. [Just ready.]

THE SNARE of the FOWLER. By

Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "The Wooing o't," 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

OUT of the JAWS of DEATH. By FRANK BARRETT. 3 vols. 31s. 6d.

THE NEW OHIO: a Story of East and West. By EDWARD EVERETT HALE. 6s.

LEONA. By Mrs. Molesworth. 6s.

A BLOT of INK. Translated from the French of RENE BAZIN by Q. and PAUL M.

FRANCKE. 5s. [Ready shortly.]

O'DRISCOLL'S WEIRD, and other

Stories. By A. WERNER. 5s.

THE REPUTATION of GEORGE

SAXON, and other Stories. By NORLEY ROBERTS.
5s.

MAGGIE STEELE'S DIARY. By E. A.

DILLWYN, Author of "Jill," &c. 2s. 6d.

THE LADY'S DRESSING-ROOM.

Translated from the French of BARONESS STAFFE by LADY COLIN CAMPBELL. 3s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

THE SUCCESSFUL LIFE: a Book for

Young Men commencing Business. By AN ELDER
BROTHER. 3s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

FOOTBALL. The Rugby Union Game.

Edited by Rev. F. MARSHALL, assisted by the chief Authorities on the Game. With numerous Illustrations.
7s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

BETTER, BUTTERFLIES, MOTHS,

and other INSECTS. A Brief Introduction to their Collection and Preservation. By A. W. KAPPEL,
F.L.S., F.E.S., and W. EGMONT KIRBY. With 12
Coloured Plates. 3s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

CASSELL'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Giving Definitions of more than 100,000 Words and Phrases. CHEAP EDITION. 3s. 6d.

CASSELL'S NEW LATIN DICTION-

ARY (LATIN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-LATIN).
Thoroughly Revised and Corrected, and in part Rewritten by J. R. V. MARCHANT, M.A., and J. F.
CHARLES, B.A. CHEAP EDITION. 3s. 6d.

* * A Copy of Cassell & Company's NEW BOOKS
LIST will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

CLARENDON PRESS.

NEW BOOKS.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

WISE WORDS and QUAIN

COUNSELS of THOMAS FULLER. Selected and Arranged, with a Short Sketch of the Author's Life, by AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D., Rector of Scarning, Norfolk.

NEW VOLUME OF "RULERS OF INDIA."

Just published, crown 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ALBUQUERQUE, and the EARLY

PORTUGUESE SETTLEMENTS in INDIA. By H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Author of "The French Revolution," "The Story of Portugal," &c.

Just published, New Edition, Revised, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

PRINCIPLES of ENGLISH ETY-

MOLOGY. First Series. The Native Element. By the Rev.
WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., LL.D., Edin., M.A. Oxon., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Cambridge.

"The best guide to English etymology that has yet appeared."
Academy.

Just published, Second Edition, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

SECOND MIDDLE ENGLISH

PRIMER. (Extracts from Chaucer.) With Grammar and Glossary, by HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D.

A NEW HEBREW LEXICON.

Just published, Part I. (ALEPH), small 4to, paper covers, 2s. 6d.

A HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON of the OLD TESTAMENT. With an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic. Based on the Lexicon of WILLIAM GENSENIUS, as translated by EDWARD ROBINSON. Edited by FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., with the co-operation of S. R. DRIVER, D.D., and CHARLES A. BRUGES.

"A worthy companion to the two other great lexical enterprises which the Oxford University Press has also in hand."—Academy.

"An indispensable work."—Jewish Chronicle.

"The care and accuracy with which the work has been pursued are evident on every page."—Tablet.

BOOKS ON THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

EARLE.—A Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon. By JOHN EARLE, M.A. Third Edition. Extra

fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The Philology of the English Tongue.

Fifth Edition, newly Revised. Extra fcap. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

MAYHEW.—Synopsis of Old English

Philology. By A. L. MAYHEW, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, bevelled boards, 8s. 6d.

MAYHEW and SKEAT.—A Concise Dictionary of Middle English, from A.D. 1150 to 1550. By A. L.

MAYHEW, M.A., and W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Crown 8vo, halfroan, 7s. 6d.

SKEAT.—An Etymological Dictionary of the English Language, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Second Edition. 4to, 42 4s.

A Supplement to the First Edition of the above. 4to, 2s. 6d.

A Concise Etymological Dictionary of the English Language. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

Principles of English Etymology.

First Series. The Native Element. New Edition, Revised.
Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Just published. See above.]

Principles of English Etymology.

Second Series. The Foreign Element. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A Primer of English Etymology.

Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

Twelve Facsimiles of Old English

Manuscripts, with Transcriptions and an Introduction. 4to, paper covers, 7s. 6d.

STRATMANN.—A Middle English Dictionary, containing words used by English Writers from the Twelfth to the Fifteenth Century. By FRANCIS HENRY

STRATMANN. A New Edition, re-arranged, Revised, and Enlarged by HENRY BRADLEY, M.A. Small 4to, 21 11s. 6d.

SWEET.—An Anglo-Saxon Primer, with

Grammar, Notes, and Glossary. By HENRY SWEET, M.A.,
Ph.D. Sixth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

An Anglo-Saxon Reader. In Prose and Verse. With Grammatical Introduction, Notes, and Glossary.

Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Extra fcap. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

A Second Anglo-Saxon Reader.

Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Old English Reading Primers. I.

Selected Homilies of Elfric. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d. II. Extracts from Alfred's Orosius. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

First Middle English Primer, with

Grammar and Glossary. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s.

Second Middle English Primer.

Extracts from Chaucer, with Grammar and Glossary. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Just published. See above.]

History of English Sounds from the Earliest Period. With full Word Lists. 8vo, 14s.

A Primer of Spoken English. Extra

fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A New English Grammar. Logical and Historical. Part I., Introduction, Phonology, and Accidence.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A Primer of Phonetics. Extra fcap.

8vo, 3s. 6d.

Full Catalogues sent on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1892.

No. 1065, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

History of the New World called America.
By Edward John Payne. Vol. I.
(Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

It is difficult to estimate the extent of the work, of which this is the first volume, if continued on its present scale. We have here some 550 closely packed octavo pages, in which only the voyages of Columbus and of his immediate successors are sketched out, together with an account of the mythology of Peru, Central America, and Mexico. The bulk is made up of a detailed statement, in which the author's views with regard to the origin of history, of civilisation, and of religion, are illustrated or substantiated by what we know of history, civilisation, and religion in America. The writer follows the same general conception of history of which Buckle is the chief exponent, but he purposes apparently to enter more into continuous historical detail and concrete fact than did Buckle in his History of Civilisation in England.

To write history in this fashion demands not only vast reading and untiring industry, but also almost encyclopædic knowledge. The writer not only touches, but generalises upon, almost every side of human learning: language, ethnology, archaeology, geology, geography in all its branches, botany, zoology, navigation, art, architecture, and agriculture must be known to him, as well as all the facts, documents, and materials of history proper. It is impossible that any one person can attain the exactness of a specialist on all these points, and Mr. Payne has done well to protest beforehand against any such claim. He writes on p. 5:

"In constructing this record it is natural that some errors should be made. But such errors will in time be amended; and it is better to have a living history, at the expense of some mistaken conclusions, than a dead narrative containing nothing that can be challenged or disproved. Such a living history it is the aim of this work to supply. If it fails to do so, it may at least facilitate the task in the hands of others."

If, then, in the course of this short notice, I venture to point out a few errors of detail, it will be chiefly with the view of rendering the task of future amendment more easy.

But, before dealing with such matters, a few words should be said on the general principles on which the work is based. The two bases of history and of civilisation the author considers to be: first, the food supply, whether animal, vegetable, or artificial, meaning the herding and domestication of cattle, and the use of their products, such as milk, cheese, butter, &c.;

in agriculture, the use and storage first of roots, then of the cereals, with their manufacture. The other basis is that of religion, and of the conceptions and practices of religion.

There is certainly some general truth in the thesis maintained by Mr. Payne, that the degree and the character of civilisation depend almost wholly on the food-supply; but it is one of those sweeping generalisations, or quasi-laws, to which every student knows exceptions. The really artistic cuttings and carvings on bone by some of the prehistoric races are a proof that they lived in the hunter stage of civilisation; but they are no less a proof of artistic taste and aptitude greater than that of some of the races who succeeded them, and who lived mainly on cereals. Like many another writer, Mr. Payne seems to forget how very little animal food entered into the consumption of the agricultural labourer, i.e., the bulk of the population, in most parts of Europe until the present century. The Indians of the Gran Chaco, and some of the Pampas Indians, from being vegetable feeders at the time of the Conquest, have become exclusively animal feeders since the introduction of cattle and horses. By their feeding on man's flesh, and the consequent rapidity of their inroads and retreats, they were winning back many a league of territory, until Rosas, the tyrant of Buenos Aires, discovered that an ox could gallop for a day or two as fast as a body of cavalry, and so beat them by this living commissariat. But it is most difficult to say whether these Indians have advanced or retrograded in civilisation by this total change in their habits and in their food supply. It seems to be far more plain that the now states in America have followed the progress or the degradation of the parent European states, than that the advance in civilisation has depended on the change in the food supply alone. The use of one American plant, tobacco, has become almost universal; is its use an ally and a mark of greater civilisation, or the reverse?

In considering the early accounts of the discoverers as to their exaggeration of the civilisation of Mexico, Central America, and Peru, we must remember that these writers knew only the civilisation of Europe in the sixteenth century, not that of France or England in the nineteenth. Mr. Payne lays stress upon the horrors of human sacrifices, and of the economic waste in the worship of religion; but was the spectacle of these sacrifices so startling, or so cruel, to men familiar with the legal tortures, the pillories, gibbets, galleys, the burnings, and the treatment of criminals, witches, and heretics, in that age in Europe? The victims in Peru and Mexico were generally well treated, even petted, before sacrifice; and such an end, in its physical aspects, might not seem at all so deplorable to Portuguese and Spaniards of the sixteenth century. There is no evidence at all that the economic waste in other respects in the maintenance of this worship was at all greater in Mexico and Peru than in Spain and Portugal, with the vast amount of landed property and of unproductive wealth belonging to the monasteries and to the clergy, with their immunity from taxation. Generalities such as this, "Of the two great factors in advancement, herdsman'ship has most largely contributed to wealth, agriculture, to science" are only half truths. Take mathematical science: stellar astronomy most probably began with herdsmen, or with the nomad races; geometry with the agricultural, the agrimensores. The reasoning as to intoxicating liquors on pp. 366-7 seems to be vitiated by the fact that the vine-growing countries are almost always the most sober.

There is much of very great interest in the discussion of the ethnology of America, which we have not space to dwell upon. Mr. Payne connects unreservedly the peoples of America with the Mongol or Tartar, as he prefers to call them, Turanian races of the old continent. In opposition to Dr. Stephen Peet and others, he considers the mound-builders a recent race, and that mound-building has been practised by the Indians even since the discovery. But when he says (p. 78):

"The Northmen were apparently the first (986), among people of historic name, to arrive in America. They were long anterior to the Aztecs, who only appeared on the plain of the Anahuac in 1190," he is comparing two different things: the first arrival of a new race on the coast with the appearance of a people on an inland plateau. We do not know when or whence the Aztecs first touched the shores of America. It seems almost like pedantry to give (p. 384) an entire paragraph to the Chian plant in Mexico, now unused for food, and to relegate to a note the maté of Paraguay, which is still a considerable article of commerce. The writer seems sometimes to forget that a work of this size can never be read by schoolboys, and will be avoided by the mere general reader. Some degree of knowledge, of practised memory, and of intelligence, may be presupposed in those who attack such a work as this. A matter once clearly stated and explained might be left there. Yet on p. 32 we have a sentence beginning: "Had the fortune of war put Carthage instead of Rome," &c.; on p. 33 we have the same statement: "Had Carthage won in the struggle with Rome," &c. So on pp. 305 and 320 much is repeated. A subject or person previously spoken of is often subsequently introduced as if he had never been mentioned; thus, after frequent mention, Columbus appears on p. 106 as "a young Genoese navigator called Christopher Columbus." "The office was made descendible to his heirs" (p. 124). In what does the last phrase differ in meaning from the common word "hereditary"? These are perhaps mere slips in style. The bibliographical references are not always sufficiently full, and sometimes omit the information which the student most needs, e.g. (Preface ix.) the Mexican MS. of Sahagun is in the library of the Academy of History in Madrid. A description of it is given in the Boletín of the Academy, Tomo VI. (1885). P. 77 note, Count de Gobelin should be Court de Gobelin; Court was his father's, Gobelin his maternal name. It shows how soon second-rate poetry is forgotten to find no mention of Southey's Madoc, with its elaborate notes, in the section on Madoc, p. 124. The enigma of Columbus's signature is unexplained; but a note (p. 173) says: "It was well that there was no one to explain to him that St. Christopher was a merely etymological saint, the name being the ancient German name of Good Friday (Christ-opfer), used in the Middle Ages as a Christian name." It is odd that Mr. Payne did not reflect that in Greek and Latin it was early applied in a feminine form as an epithet of the B. V. M., and was borne by men long before the festival of Good Friday was celebrated in Germany. Is it a fact (note p. 248) that the silver mines of Upper Peru could be directly approached by the Plate River from Europe? Thirty years ago, mines in the Eastern Cordilleras, much nearer La Plata, were considered valueless at Buenos Aires and Montevideo, on account of the difficulties of approval and transport.

I fear that this dwelling on defects, which are, after all, in many cases but exaggerations of merit, may seem invidious. But however many faults of this kind may be discovered in it, this work will remain one of the most important, if not the most important, on the history of the New World yet published on this side of the Atlantic. It will delight all those who take an interest in the origins of history and of civilisation; it cannot be neglected by any student of American history. That its theory, or its conclusions on history and civilisation, should be admitted without discussion is more than we can expect. Large deductions will probably have to be made; yet few, I think, will regret the time given to its perusal. It is eminently a book worth reading.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

The Countess Kathleen and Various Legends and Lyrics. By W. B. Yeats. (Fisher Unwin.)

DRAYTON, in one of his great sonnets, laments that English is not understood all the world over, so that his mistress might be celebrated everywhere; but at least her praises may be known beyond England: there are the Orcaides and there is Ireland:

"And let the Bards within that Irish isle,
To whom my Muse with ferie Wings shall pass,
Call back the stiffe-necked Rebels from Exile,
And mollifie the slaught'ring Galliglasce."

Let me amuse my fancy by thinking those lines prophetic, by finding in them a prophecy of Ireland's regeneration through the discipline of culture, education, thought. "Young Ireland" did much to create and to foster the imaginative and spiritual wealth of Irish minds; and now the Irish Literary Society has begun its work, with Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, returned "from Exile," for its president; and with more than one "Bard," in England and in Ireland, to charm a distressful country. In all seriousness, the Renaissance of literature in Ireland seems to have begun: of literature, in the wide sense, implying all that is disciplinary and severe in the acquisition of knowledge, yet without injuring that delicate, dreamy, Celtic spirit which Celtic races never wholly lose. It is the Irish bards, says Drayton, who are to work upon the mind and sentiment of their countrymen, but urged and prompted to use their own powers, in their own way, by the example of another Muse. In other words, Irish writers, eager for the cultivation of Irish arts and letters, should themselves have caught the spirit of true culture, real learning, disciplined taste, from all that is best in the genius of other lands and of other times.

Mr. Yeats has published two volumes of verse: The Wanderings of Oisín and The Countess Kathleen. Doubtless it is difficult to speak with perfect security about the first books of a living writer; but I feel little diffidence in speaking of these two volumes. In the last two or three years much charming verse has been published by many writers who may make themselves distinguished names; but nothing which seems to me, in the most critical and dispassionate state of mind, equal in value to the poems of Mr. Yeats. Irish of the Irish, in the themes and sentiments of his verse, he has also no lack of that wider sympathy with the world, without which the finest national verse must remain provincial. Yet, for all his interests of a general sort, his poetry has not lost one Irish grace, one Celtic delicacy, one native charm. It is easy to be fantastic, mystical, quaint, full of old-world delight in myths and legends, devoted to dreams and sentiments of a fairy antiquity; but writers of this kind are commonly successful by fits and starts, their charm is elusive and fugitive. They have the vague imagination of Welsh and Irish folk: that perpetual vision of things under enchanted lights, which makes the thought and speech of many an old peasant woman so graceful, so "poetical." But when they approach the art of literature, they are unequal to its demands; they cannot so master the art as to make it convey the imagination. Many and many an Irish poem, by writers quite obscure, startles us by the felicity of lines and phrases here, and by the poverty of lines and phrases there. The poet has cared more for his inward vision than for its outward expression: so something of what he feels he expressed, he is content. Others, again, have so cultivated a technical excellence as to lose the intrinsic beauty of their themes or thoughts: their work is polite and dull.

The distinction of Mr. Yeats, as an Irish poet, is his ability to write Celtic poetry, with all the Celtic notes of style and imagination, in a classical manner. Like all men of the true poetical spirit, he is not overcome by the apparent antagonism of the classical and the romantic in art. Like the fine Greeks or Romans, he treats his subject according to its nature. Simple as that sounds, it is a praise not often to be bestowed. Consider the "Attis" of Catullus: how the monstrous, barbaric frenzy of the theme is realised in verse of the strictest beauty. It is not a Latin theme, congenial to a Latin nature: it is Asiatic, insane, grotesque; its passion is abnormal and harsh. Yet the poem, while terrible in its intensity of life, is a masterpiece of severe art. It is in this spirit, if I may dare so great a comparison, that Mr. Yeats has written: his poetry has plenty of imperfections, but it is not based upon a fundamental mistake; he sees very clearly where success may be found. When he takes a Celtic theme, some vast and epic legend, or some sad and lyrical fancy, he does not reflect the mere confused vastness of the one, the mere flying vagueness of the other: his art is full of reason. So he produces poems, rational and thoughtful, yet beautiful with the beauty that comes of thought about imagination. It is not the subjects alone, nor the musical skill alone, nor the dominant mood alone, but all these together that make these poems so satisfying and so haunting. They have that natural felicity which belongs to beautiful things in nature, but a felicity under the control of art.

"The Countess Kathleen" is a play in five scenes. The story is of an Irish lady in the sixteenth century. A famine is in the land, and death is busy; the people are mad with suffering. Two evil spirits, in the guise of merchants, come to buy the souls of the people for gold; the traffic goes briskly forward. The efforts of the Countess to save her people are frustrated by the spirits. One hope remains; she will sell her soul, very precious in God's sight, and therefore in the devil's, in exchange for the souls already bought, and for money enough to get the people food. It is done; the people's souls are redeemed from eternal death, their bodies from the pangs of hunger. She dies, her heart broken; and angels descend from God to take her soul to heaven, in just reward for so supreme a sacrifice. The five scenes are admirably simple; the whole play moves with direct impulse, here humorous, here ghostly, here tragic, here homely, just as occasion demands, towards its end. It is not dramatic, in the accepted sense: that is, there is no complexity of facts and motives, no central crisis, and inevitable determination. It is merely a dramatic narrative: a form which allows the writer ease and freedom of presentation. This very absence of all complexity strengthens the power of the poem; it has the moving appeal of nature. We are not shown Kathleen's spiritual struggle: merely her love for the people, a love so strong that she accepts the loss of her own soul, as a simple, sad act of self-surrender; the entanglement, the estimate of motives, the casuistry, unasserted in the play, are present, as it were, in the minds of God and of His angels. It is the quite obvious simple facts that the words of the play set before us: the peasants speak in lines, whose very metre seems to show the stark reality of famine. There are homely details, quaint concrete touches, an air of perfect reality; the Countess is not etherialised, she is always womanly and human. Yet we never lose sight of the spiritual side of things: the dark, gross vapours of the woods and marshes, poisonous and pestilent, are as the fumes and clouds of sin and evil; the purity and beauty of Kathleen are as the spiritual brightness of grace and faith. Mr. Yeats has kept the golden mean between the two aspects: his scenes give never the mere oddities of peasant superstition, nor the mere unearthliness of spiritual things: but he makes felt the double nature of life, without unreality of any kind. His play is a poem of Irish characteristic beliefs, in which spirits, fairies, powers of the elements are living things. And again, it is a poem of wider truth and beauty, in which the whole drama of good and bad, life and death, is reflected. Now we have a bit of Irish character in regard to spiritual forces; now a lighting up of the universal thought about such matters. To have kept the balance between the two sides: to have avoided all pretensions too large for the play's scope, while making it vigorous, and rich, and living—these are notable excellences. Let me give one short passage of a singular power, in which the Countess speaks with the merchants, in ignorance of their true characters.

"Kathleen. And heard you of the demons who buy souls?"

"First Merchant. There are some men who hold they have wolves' heads,

And say their limbs, dried by the infinite flame,
Have all the speed of storms; others again
Say they are gross and little; while a few
Will have it they seem much as mortals are,
But tall and brown and travelled, like us, lady.
Yet all agree there's power in their looks
That makes men bow, and flings a casting net
About their souls, and that all men would go
And barter those poor flames—their spirits—only
You bribe them with the safety of your gold.

"Kathleen. Praise be to God, to Mary, and the angels

That I am wealthy. Wherefore do they sell?
Is the green grave so terrible?"

"First Merchant. Some sell
Because they will not see their neighbours die,
And some because their neighbours sold before,
And some because there is a kind of joy
In casting hope away, in losing joy,
In ceasing all resistance, in at last
Opening one's arms to the eternal flames,
In casting out all sails upon the wind:
To this—full of the gaiety of the lost—
Would all folk hurry if your gold were gone.

"Kathleen. There is a something, Merchant, in your voice

That makes me fear. When you were telling how
A man may lose his soul and lose his God
Your eyes lighted, and the strange weariness
That hangs about you vanished."

A scene of great beauty is that in which the spirits summon the lesser spirits to work for them: the "sheogues of the tide,"

"Come hither, hither, water folk;
Come all you elemental populace";

and the "teriskies,"

"Who mourn among the slavery of your sins,
Turning to animal and reptile forms—
The visages of passions. Hither, sowiths:
Leave marshes and the reed-encumbered pools,
You shapeless fires, that once were souls of men,
And are a fading wretchedness."

The play, while not dramatic in the ordinary sense, as regards evolution of design, shows a dramatic directness and severity, for which Mr. Yeats's other poems hardly led us to look. "The Countess Kathleen" is far more than a lyrical episode thrown into dramatic form: the spirit of drama is strongly felt, in the concrete, practical handling of the scenes.

The Legends and Lyrics of this volume are very various. There are stories from the old Irish cycles, ballads founded upon more modern incidents, mystical love poems, and poems of imaginative beauty upon other things than love. They conclude with a poem, in which Mr. Yeats makes his profession of faith and loyalty towards Ireland, and justifies the tone of his poems, their "druid" quality, their care for an ideal beauty of love and an ideal wisdom of truth: because in singing of these he is singing of Ireland and for Ireland.

"Ah, fairies, dancing under the moon,
A druid land, a druid time!"

In these poems, the immediate charm is their haunting music, which depends not upon any rich wealth of words, but upon a subtle strain of music in their whole quality of thoughts and images, some incommunicable beauty, felt in the simplest words and verses. Collins, Blake, Coleridge, had the secret of such music; Mr. Yeats sings somewhat in their various ways, but with a certain instinct of his own, definitely Irish. The verse is stately and solemn, without any elaboration; the thought falls into a lofty rhythm. Or the verse is wistful and melancholy, an aerial murmur of sad things without any affectation.

"Who dreams that beauty passes like a dream?
For these red lips with all their mournful pride,
Mournful that no new wonder may betide,
Troy passed away in one high funeral gleam,
And Usna's children died."

From verse so stately turn to this quite humble, simple poem, the "Lamentation of the Old Pensioner," merely versified from the old man's own words.

"I had a chair at every hearth,
When no one turned to see,
With 'Look at that old fellow there,
And who may he be?'
And therefore do I wander on,
And the fret lies on me."

The road-side trees keep murmuring.
Ah, wherefore murmur ye,
As in the old days long gone by,
Green oak and poplar tree?
The well-known faces are all gone,
And the fret lies on me."

In all the poems, even the most mystical in thought, there is a deep tone of sympathy with the world's fortunes, or with the natures of living things: a curiously tender gladness at the thought of it all. The poet finds

"In all poor foolish things that live a day, Eternal beauty wandering on her way."

His ballads are full of this natural sentiment, shown rather in their simple mention of facts and things, as an old poet might mention them, than in any artificial simplicity. There is humour in this verse: a sense of the human soul in all things, a fearless treatment of facts, a gentleness towards life, because it is all wonderful and nothing is despicable. And through the poems there pierces that spiritual cry, which is too rare and fine to reach ears satisfied with the gross richness of a material Muse. "Le génie celtique," says Michelet, "sympathise profondément avec le génie grec." Neither Greek nor Celtic poetry has that gravitas, that auctoritas, which belongs to the poetry of Rome and of England. In place of it, the Greeks and Celts have the gift of simple spirituality, a quickness and adroitness in seizing the spiritual relations of things, a beautiful childlikeness and freshness. There is much to distress some readers in Mr. Yeats's poems. Cuchullin, to them, is less familiar than King Arthur, and they know nothing about the Irish symbolism of the Rose, and much fearless simplicity seems to them but odd and foolish. All writers of distinction, who have a personal vision of life, and thoughts of their own, and a music of unfamiliar beauty, must lay their account with ridicule or misapprehension. But a very little patience will overcome all difficulties. It is impossible to read these poems without falling under their fascination and taking them home to heart. With Drayton I began: with Drayton let me end. He sings about the various lands and kinds of poetry:

"The Irish I admire,
And still cleave to that Lyre,
As our Muscilla's Moll er,
And thinke, till I expire,
Apollo's such another."

LIONEL JOHNSON.

Diaries of Sir Daniel Gooch, Bart. With an Introductory Notice by Sir Theodore Martin. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

This interesting volume is an addition to the literature of enterprise rather than to the literature of biography. Sir Daniel Gooch, who was one of the most modest and least egotistic of men, has in these autobiographical pages produced the very effect at which he probably aimed: he has diverted attention from his own personality, and has succeeded in concentrating it upon the great undertakings with which his name will be associated—the consolidation and development of the Great Western Railway, and the laying of the cable which, for the first time, established telegraphic communication between England and America. In spite, however, of the reticence which characterises nearly all the personal entries in these pages, Sir Daniel Gooch unconsciously drew the outlines of his own character and temperament, and provided evidence, all the more impressive because unwittingly given, of the truthfulness of the estimate given in the final sentence of Sir Theodore Martin's introductory sketch:

"By those who knew him well, his kindness of heart, his sincerity in friendship, his high sense of duty, and the strong element of enthusiasm for what was beautiful or grand in nature, in art, or in character, he was loved, and his loss was recognised, as he himself would have wished it to be, by all whom he had himself loved or held in esteem."

In a preceding sentence Sir Theodore Martin remarks that "his general demeanour was marked by that reserve of manner which is often mistaken for coldness," and this was doubtless true of his purely social intercourse; but in his business relations with colleagues and subordinates he manifested a certain magnetism of personality which inspired boundless confidence and enthusiasm. The writer of this review happened to be making a prolonged stay in the neighbourhood of Swindon in the summer of 1865, when Mr. Gooch was elected M.P. for the rural borough of Cricklade, of which both Old and New Swindon formed a part. Mr. Gooch came forward as a Conservative, and the artisans in the New Swindon Railway Works were Liberal, indeed Radical, to a man; but the personality and character of their manager had so profoundly impressed them that, though then absent on the first of the cable-laying, and therefore unable to plead his cause in person, Mr. Gooch was returned by a triumphant majority.

Sir Daniel Gooch's work for the Great Western Railway, first as manager and afterwards as chairman, was of such importance and value that the company may be said, without exaggeration, to owe more to him than to any other single man. As manager, his most onerous labours were those undertaken in defence of the broad gauge against its numerous and powerful opponents; and there is no doubt whatever that, during the period in which the result of the controversy depended upon argument and demonstration, he proved himself more than a match for the forces arrayed against him. The narrow gauge had, however, the advantage of priority: it had established itself over by far the larger portion of the railway field, and, as its advocates long foresaw, achieved a final and complete triumph, not on its own merits—though for a certain class of traffic these were incontestible—but in virtue of the absolute necessity for uniformity of gauge throughout the railway system of Great Britain. Sir Daniel's services as chairman of the company had a success of a more obvious and appreciable kind. When elected in 1866, the condition of the Great Western was deplorable; but by a steady carrying out of his three principles of action—the avoidance of further obligations with new lines and extensions, the establishment of amicable relations with adjoining companies, and the cutting down to a safe minimum of all capital expenditure—he started the company on a career of prosperity which has known no important interruptions. In the March of 1869 he was able to announce to the proprietors a dividend at the rate of 3½ per cent., the highest that had been earned for more than eighteen years; and in April, 1872, it reached 5½ per cent., the price of the shares, which had been £90 when he first took the chair, having risen to £120.

The most deeply interesting pages of this volume are naturally those devoted to the enterprise which earned for Daniel Gooch the honour of a baronetcy—the laying of the Atlantic cable. Even in the imaginative literature of adventure, which deals so largely in sudden alternations of hope and fear, it would be difficult to find more thrilling passages than those that find a place in the hastily-written diary records of the expeditions of 1865 and 1866—the first a brilliant failure, the second a magnificently satisfying success. The racking anxieties and final collapse of the earlier undertaking would have cowed and prostrated a man not possessed of that wonderful elasticity of temperament, which must be reckoned among the most remarkable and valuable of Sir Daniel Gooch's natural endowments. Considering the issues staked upon the success of the undertaking, few experiences could be more trying to a man of even average nervous sensibility than the sudden stoppage of communication, which positively proclaimed that something had gone wrong, and hinted at extreme possibilities of disaster. Then, when the first faulty piece of cable had been recovered from the ocean bed into which it had been paid out, the nature of the injury was such as to suggest that it might be the result of wilful malice—an anxious thought, as in this case the directors of the expedition knew not whom to suspect or how to avert a repetition of the disaster. Happily it was discovered that the injury had been in all probability of purely accidental origin; but still the same accident might recur in circumstances which would render it fatal to the success of the enterprise. As a matter of fact, this actually happened. The first fault was discovered in shallow water; when the last made itself manifest, the cable had been lowered to a depth of 2000 fathoms, and after repeated endeavours to bring the fault on board, the cable broke on August 3, 1865, all attempts to recover it being fruitless. There is a characteristic entry in Sir Daniel Gooch's diary for August 15, just four days after the last hope of immediate success had vanished. He wrote:

"How time softens all disappointment! I begin to look back upon our broken cable as a matter to be regretted, but not one to discourage me in the ultimate success of our work. . . . No doubt we were cast down by the fracture, it was very unexpected; but seeing as we did from the first the possibility of restoring it, why should we have made ourselves so miserable? The human mind, thank God, is very elastic, and soon recovers from any shock. We now feel to have only one thought—viz., the best way of completing our work, nothing doubting, to success."

These are the words of a brave man, and the whole record of Sir Daniel Gooch's career is a record of unassuming but undaunted courage. Sir Theodore Martin's introductory sketch is pleasantly written, and the volume is illustrated with two portraits and with a photograph of the steamship Great Eastern.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Studies in Secondary Education. Edited by Arthur H. D. Acland and H. Llewellyn Smith. With an Introduction by James Bryce. (Percival.)

THREE names appear on the title-page; but to complete the list of writers to this volume there must be added those of Miss Clara E. Collet, Mr. Henry Hobhouse, Mr. A. P. Laurie, and Mr. G. R. Benson. The object of this many-headed book is to approach the difficult problem of secondary education in England from different points of view. By the concentration of each writer on his own aspect of the case, forces are got ready from every quarter, for marching order, in a direct line, towards the organisation and co-ordination of our secondary education.

The main positions occupied, with impressive unanimity, almost to the very words, by all these writers are: (1) That secondary education in England needs organising. (2) That this can best be done by local authorities, with power of recourse, when necessary, to the rates of the district. The argument is that we have free library rates, elementary education rates, and the government grant in accordance with the Local Taxation and Technical Instruction

Acts. On the same lines, and with an equal call of urgency, secondary education needs rate-support.

Parliamentary Commissions of Inquiry, particularly that of 1864, pointed out the desirability of investigating the condition of endowed schools in this country. The Endowed Schools Act of 1869 appointed an executive Commission, who established to the "dullest comprehension," with a fulness of illustration amounting to an embarras de richesses for the scoffer at England's greatness, that the secondary schools of this country were, as Mr. Bryce puts it, "deficient in quantity, unsatisfactory in quality, without organic relation either to the higher education on the one hand, or to elementary education on the other." These Commissioners, with determined and unflagging efforts, have made the secondary schools of this country available for double the number of scholars since 1868. Still the fact remains—and this book is devoted to manifold and striking illustrations of it—that the accommodation and resources for secondary education are not satisfactory in any single district of England.

Though each of the writers takes up one special aspect or more, the whole of the essays may be divided into two sections. One section describes what has been done, especially recently, to improve secondary education; the other division makes descriptive surveys of the field of secondary education, so sparsely covered by the present schools in London (boys and girls), Liverpool, Birmingham, and Reading.

As to this second division of the essays, I should say at once there is no book before the public in which the present state of secondary education is described so ably, so fully, and with details so recently collected. They give the statistics of accommodation, of boys and girls in attendance, of fees, of curricula, of scholarships, and of continuation schools, besides any special features calling for notice. In every essay it is made clear that the existing provision for secondary education is inadequate; and the suggestion is forcibly advanced that some public authority, knowing the needs of the district, must eventually receive powers to intervene.

Turning back to the writers who treat of recent legislation, Mr. Henry Hobhouse chooses as his subject "The Working of the Technical Instruction Acts in Somerset," and Mr. Arthur Acland on the era-making "Intermediate Education Act (Wales)" of 1889. Mr. Hobhouse reasonably claims that it is clear from his examination of the Technical Instruction Act in Somerset that technical instruction, to be efficient, must be preceded by a sound secondary education. It is characteristic, one is bound to admit, of the utilitarian English nature that the necessity of technical instruction has forced itself upon us almost against our traditions by its evident practical advantages. It will be important and interesting to even a greater degree if the desirability of technical instruction presses forward to a solution the problem of secondary education—not because it has shown itself good in itself (it has done so for the last fifty years, not to go back to the days of Comenius)—but because the national commercial intuition sees that it is necessary as a foundation for efficient technical instruction. Mr. Hobhouse boldly suggests, following the example of the legislation for Wales, the imposition of a rate in England, and says that, with a halfpenny rate and the endowments and grants from Government which are available, "Somerset will be able to build up an excellent system of cheap secondary schools suited to the needs of the country in its various parts."

Nothing could be more interesting from the point of view of educational politics than Mr. Arthur Acland's sketch of the "Working of the Intermediate Education Act in Wales." Indeed, now that Mr. Acland has become Vice-President of the Council of Education, it is possible this essay may serve to indicate more or less markedly the direction of the course which legislation and national effort are destined to take not only in Wales, but also in England. This Act is a most interesting example of what the late Prof. Stanley Jevons so earnestly recommended—experimental legislation on a small scale, before trying it irrevocably on a larger scale. The main principle of the Welsh Intermediate Education Act is partial centralisation. Secondary schools do not lend themselves well to a system of school boards for separate parishes, but rather to district councils. In Wales these are each made up of three county councillors and two members chosen by the Lord President of the Council, preference to be given to residents. These district councils have to investigate the proportion of the funds at the disposal of the district to the educational needs, and to arrange a local rate accordingly. Conferences have been held of all the district councils, in which certain charities common to Wales were distributed on an accepted basis. Among the subjects discussed at different conferences have been: curricula, fees, age of entrance, examinations, qualifications for membership of governing bodies, scholarships, training of teachers, &c. It seems probable that there will be a central board established for Wales to undertake the direction of "the inspection and examination of schools, the regulation of scholarships and exhibitions, the organisation of a system of training, and of pensions for teachers, and the provision, when necessary, of books, apparatus, maps, &c., for the special use of Welsh schools."

Here, then, is an experiment, such as would have delighted Prof. Jevons, of a system of locally administered education, with separate district councils organising themselves voluntarily into a provincial intermediate education board. The suggestion of Mr. Acland and those working with him is the extension of this so far highly promising experiment into England. This would mean that, throughout the length and breadth of the land, there should arise secondary schools grouped suitably into districts, administered locally as far as buildings, materials, apparatus, &c., i.e., the concrete and practical side, are concerned, but probably directed by provincial boards for the internal arrangements. The body of the school, so to say, belongs to the district. The soul, however, is not its own; it must at least receive inspiration from a more centralised power.

As to the composition of any proposed provincial or directing council, I wish to speak strongly. No set of men are more unpractical than schoolmasters: or else such interesting personal matters as lowness of salaries, and disproportions between the salaries of head masters and assistants, would not have been allowed to remain where they now are. They are not perhaps, as a class, therefore, suited for district councils. But, if there is to be real education directed by the provincial councils, predominant representation must not be given to local magnates who speak excellent dialect, or local tradesmen whose honesty is a household word in the district or province, or local clergymen who are sound or unsound in their particular creeds, but to schoolmasters and educationists. The general aim of building up strong, gentle, cultured men, is more important than merely fitting human material for the local handicrafts. For however unpractical teachers may be, however incapable of dealing with builders' mortar and bricks, or even of protecting their own commercial interests, they understand at least the administrative aspect of affairs in the schoolroom; they understand the possibilities and difficulties of subjects, and the methods of dealing with them. They understand something of the nature of the child, and they have convictions as to the best ways of making a man of him. They are not without ideals. They know how to give a soul to the school. Even if they did not, it were hopeless to put the "successful" cheesemonger or the publican to direct their best efforts.

The editors of the volume have some important words to say about what we may call the new pedagogy:

"It is essential, in the interest of the new schools that will come into existence, as well as of the older endowed schools, that in future those who undertake the profession of teaching in these schools shall show that they are in some degree qualified for the work. The 'great need of teachers who have more knowledge than certificated masters, and more skill than graduates,' was enforced by the Schools Inquiry Commissioners twenty years ago."

These Studies, undertaken on the political side, are here undoubtedly in perfect agreement with the opinions of some of the best teachers. Nothing is more imperatively required in secondary education at the present time, as a first step forward, than the registration of efficient teachers; while for those who intend to become secondary teachers nothing less will be permanently satisfactory than training, thorough and comprehensive as that which is now given in the best Training Colleges for elementary teachers, in addition to general education of a more liberal academic type.

It is the teachers who make or mar schools. District councils, county councils, provincial councils, are but preludes to the play. They may blow the trumpets and wave the flags, but the brunt of the battle of education is with the teachers. Provide schools, train efficient teachers, and then: better have no councils at all than cripple the teachers' "freedom to teach!"

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Girl with a Temper. By H. B. Finlay Knight. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Jenny's Case. By Ellen F. Pinsent. In 2 vols. (Sonnenschein.)

Mr. and Mrs. Herries. By May Crommelin. (Hutchinson.)

A Soldier's Children. By John Strange Winter. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Fascinating Miss Lamarche. By C. C. Fernival. (Trischler.)

My Cousin's Wife. By Ray Merton. (Digby, Long & Co.)

SUBJECT to certain qualifying remarks, A Girl with a Temper deserves commendation. It is a powerfully dramatic story, the action is well sustained throughout, the style is scholarlike and practically faultless. Yet the book would be a much better one if it did not betray on every page the individuality of the author. If internal evidence goes for anything, the novel is written by a barrister, whose views of life do not stray very comfortably beyond those aspects which his social and professional opportunities have directly presented to him, and whose ideas of women as a sex—not perhaps with regard to one or two particular classes—may be regarded as taken at second hand. And again, one feels almost certain, on reading the book, that it is the work of a journalist, accustomed to getting up special articles, polemical, descriptive, or what not, and unable, when he comes to writing fiction, to conceal the journalist method, as, for instance, in his account of the Monksford Fancy Dress Ball, the Sessions Mess at Hammerford, and the gaming tables at Monte Carlo. The assumptions we have made readily furnish an explanation of the familiarity with legal technicalities exhibited by the writer, and of the ease with which he threads his way through the intricacies of a plot which from first to last depends upon the interpretation of certain points of law relative to testamentary dispositions. It must be admitted that Mr. Knight uses his knowledge to good purpose and with a masterly hand. Thus, a chapter descriptive of an interview between Mr. Prince, the family lawyer of the Peytos, and Mr. Gabbittas, a chevalier d'industrie, who is endeavouring to levy blackmail on the present titular holder of the baronetcy, and who—having been originally a solicitor's clerk—is a match for the old gentleman with his own weapons, is a remarkably effective piece of writing. Scarcely inferior, in point of sensational description, is the scene where Miss Celia Peyto, the "girl with a temper," engages, in a moment of rage and pique, to marry, and does eventually marry, a wandering tramp, ostensibly an aged man on the brink of the grave, but in reality a sturdy rascal of thirty, who for certain dishonest purposes has been dressed up by "the Rev." Mr. Gabbittas, and is accompanying the latter on a speculative tour through the rural districts. On the whole, however, the romantic element of the book is scarcely its most attractive feature, and probably it will find less favour as a story with women than with men. The author is at his best when he describes the tracking of criminals and the exposure of conspiracies to defraud. His acquaintance with the vernacular of the lower classes, and its distinctive idioms, seems to be the fruit of genuinely earned experience, unaided by any recourse to the Slang Dictionary; and his topographical knowledge of London is fairly accurate, though it might puzzle explorers to discover the district which he describes as "bounded on the east by Regent's Park, and on the west by Cumberland Market."

There is a class of readers with gloomily morbid appetites, who revel in narratives of human sin and sorrow; and in strict accordance with the laws of supply and demand, we find plenty of writers forthcoming, prepared to minister to their wants. It may be doubted whether it is strictly within the province of a reviewer to go behind his author's motif, and, as it were, "raise the previous question" whether such and such a novel ought to have been written at all; but with all the ghastly and painful realities of life forcing themselves upon our notice at every turn, it does seem strange that an author should be found who has nothing more edifying or entertaining to offer us than a set of realistic details concerning a vulgar seduction, ending in betrayal, misery, and death. In Jenny's Case there is a lazy, poaching young scamp, named Martin Frith, who gets odd jobs occasionally at Mr. Donner's farm. Here he falls a victim to the attractions of Jenny Hornby, the farmer's maid-of-all-work; and the genuine passion she arouses in him has a wholesome effect, and might have led to his complete reformation. Unfortunately Jenny is also courted by the local policeman, named Carr, who seduces her—details of her lapse from virtue being given with Zolaesque directness and fidelity—under promise of marriage; and after the birth of her child in a distant town, whither she has fled in order to escape exposure in her native village, she is apparently driven for a time upon the streets for a livelihood. Martin Frith, after enlisting in desperation, deserts from his regiment and returns home, where, having resumed his poaching and drinking habits, he finally dies, after murdering his rival Carr. This is all the story. It is from end to end a succession of gloomy scenes, unrelieved by the smallest gleam of sunshine; and, as if to make matters worse, the conversations are all spelt to represent the Lincolnshire dialect, with marks of long and short quantity placed over the vowels in many cases, e.g., "He'll be gittin' his teä jüst now, an' I'll be aable for to carry these 'ere paails to the yard gaate wi'out him seein' us." In justice to Miss Pinsent it must, however, be said that, though her characters are practically colourless—as is, perhaps, a necessity of the case, for Hodge at his best is rather a colourless hero—there is no lack of force in her work. If she has not shown a wise discretion in her choice of a subject, she has by no means done anything foolish in her treatment of it; and if in her next venture she selects something more savoury and congenial than bucolic immorality she may produce something we can unreservedly commend.

Besides perplexities of the kind just mentioned, which sometimes embarrass a reviewer, the question of intrinsic probability or improbability constantly presents itself, and claims its share of consideration in one's estimate of the merits of a story. Thus, we hear a good deal in novels about jilted lovers being "caught on the rebound" and carried away captive by somebody else; and possibly this sort of thing happens with more or less frequency in actual life. Still, it is rather difficult to imagine how Stephen Herries, the hero of Mr. and Mrs. Herries, after being rejected by Miss Adelaide Ferrars, could be "overmastered" by such a "sudden impulse" as to make an offer of marriage to Miss Mysie Cobb, the granddaughter of a man who had formerly been a servant on his estate, upon the first occasion of his meeting with her. To be sure, the girl was inheriting eighty thousand pounds from her grandfather—who had made a fortune in America—while Stephen's property was heavily mortgaged and in danger of passing out of his possession; but for all that, the transaction strikes one as being eminently unsuited to the character of the master of Wykhurst as described in the course of the volume. However, if we can bring ourselves to accept the situation, and can further accommodate ourselves to the spectacle of a married couple, who are really fond of one another, playing at cross purposes for a twelvemonth or so, until they accidentally betray their mutual adoration, we shall be able to appreciate and enjoy May Crommelin's latest work. For, admitting the incidents as probable, there is no lack of vivid and entertaining description; and though the author never rises to any great heights either of humour or pathos, her narrative is always lively.

Like most of John Strange Winter's works, A Soldier's Children is pleasantly written, and here and there exceedingly touching. Perhaps one would have preferred children a trifle less precocious, and less entirely exempt from all outward manifestations of original sin. But on the whole it is a very charming story; and as the author announces in a postscript that the proceeds of the book are to be devoted to the Victoria Hospital for children, there is no one who will not wish for it a widespread success.

It would be difficult to find a novel more highly charged with disreputable incident and vulgar knavery than The Fascinating Miss Lamarche. Undoubtedly the writer exhibits a certain talent in the construction of his plot, but he can hardly be congratulated upon its nature. Miss Lamarche, an actress, is married to Captain Lackin, whose income is derived from speculations on the turf, which—as may easily be imagined—eventually land him in pecuniary difficulties. Then there appear on the scene Major Peregrine Mordaunt, of the Albany and Tattersall's, a superannuated gentleman-rider, who lived principally on billiards, whist, and "chopping" horses; Mr. Vanshel, a Hebrew capitalist; and Mr. Tampling, a horse-trainer of exceptionally unscrupulous rascality. These three, together with Captain Lackin, who is a mere tool in their hands, unite to form a racing confederacy; and throughout the greater part of the volume we are constantly kept informed of the process by which this or that favourite was "milked" or "nobbled," or how, on one occasion, the confederacy lost heavily in consequence of their horse—which had been meant to lose—winning an important race, its jockey having been "squared" by the opposition bookmaker, who stood to win largely upon the success of the horse. There are also card-parties at Captain Lackin's villa in St. John's Wood, where a happily adjusted mirror materially assists the play of the confederates. Amid all this fraud and rascality, the wife of Captain Lackin preserves her fair fame unsullied. She excites the admiration of Lord Doverdale, a young "pigeon" lately caught in the toils of the quartette; but, beyond arousing jealousy on the part of her husband, this episode ends harmlessly. Far more dangerous are the attentions paid to her by Vanshel, who, under pretence of disinterested friendship, persuades her to accept a considerable loan with a view of ultimately compromising her. It is scarcely necessary to pursue the narrative any further. The constantly repeated story of swindling in its various phases speedily becomes monotonous. Every character in the book, with one or two exceptions, is "horsey," and little besides; and it contains a great many portraits of the shady side of racing life that might much better have been left unsketched.

My Cousin's Wife is a prettily written, but rather short, novel. The "cousin's wife" of the story was the subject of an early attachment on the part of the man who here relates his history. Before he could afford to marry, his wealthier cousin stepped in and robbed him of the prize. Twenty years afterwards he consoles himself by marrying her daughter.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

SOME BOOKS ABOUT INDIA.

Bombay, 1885 to 1890: a Study in Indian Administration. By Sir William Wilson Hunter. (Henry Frowde.) Some seventeen years ago, Sir William Hunter wrote an authoritative Life of Lord Mayo, in which he took occasion to explain the composition and inner mode of working of the Supreme Government. In the present volume, which is in some sense a companion to that, he describes the administrative system of a typical Presidency. When we add to this his first work, The Annals of Rural Bengal, in which he sets forth the labours and the interests of a District Officer, he may be said to have surveyed the entire field of British rule in India. In order to make a dry subject less deterrent to the ordinary reader, he has judiciously added the element of personal interest, by making his study coincident with the Governorship of Lord Reay, the predecessor of Lord Harris. We thus have a sufficient period in which to watch the development of the country during five years, and the fruit of administrative changes. Perhaps the most effective chapter is that in which are sketched the characters of Lord Reay himself, and of the Council and Secretariat by whom he was surrounded. Biography, even in miniature, always exercises the same attraction as portrait-painting; and Sir W. W. Hunter has often shown a master touch in this department of literature. It is also of importance for his object that we should be enabled thus to see from within what manner of men they are who touch the springs of the great Indian bureaucracy. Another chapter which all can peruse with interest is that describing the Native States. Even if Baroda be excluded, one of the distinguishing features of the Bombay Presidency is the extent to which native jurisdictions have been preserved. And, as these petty states for the most part lie scattered among British territory, we have an opportunity of studying the two systems side by side much better than in the great principalities of Central India. There are, of course, exceptions; but, on the whole, it is pleasing to find that the Native States of Bombay stand the ordeal well. In particular, the peninsula of Kathiawar, which not many years ago was given up to internal anarchy, can now show half a dozen enlightened rulers, and a smiling country, studded with sea-ports, railways, and schools. The bulk of the book, however, is of necessity devoted to the practical work of administration—land, forests, excise, police, jails, public works, district boards, &c.—in which, we fear, it is hopeless to expect that Englishmen will ever take much interest. Here, again, the author has displayed his wisdom by placing education in the front rank; for education is one of the staple commodities of Bombay, and that one in which most fruitful reforms were introduced under Lord Reay's Government. Other measures may affect, more or less, the material welfare of the people; but English schools and colleges are the means by which their moral character is being slowly but surely modified. There is an old, bitter saying that, if the English were turned out of India, no trace of their presence would survive except heaps of empty beer bottles. Now, it may be affirmed, without boasting, that, if ever that event does happen, they will leave power in the hands of a class who have learned, from their own study of English literature, and from the example of their teachers and rulers, the value of private character and of patriotism. New India, the India of the future, will be the creation of English schools. For the rest, it need only be said that Sir W. W. Hunter has gone as near as may be to achieving the impossible, in his attempt to render palatable the disgusting details about provincial finance, survey numbers, local funds, and the central distillery system. Following the example of Macaulay, he has carefully avoided the mention of native names and words; and he makes no assumption of previous knowledge on the part of his readers. But the subject itself refuses to be made interesting. How many Englishmen know anything about corresponding administrative details in their own country? Which of us would care to answer offhand questions upon Mr. Gosehen's local finance, upon copyhold tenures, or upon the abolition of the malt duty? It is enough that Sir W. W. Hunter has given us the opportunity, in a sort of glorified Administration Report, of taking our medicine, if need should arise, in sugared capsules.

The Land System of British India. By B. H. Baden-Powell. In 3 vols. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) There is a story told of Holt Mackenzie, son of the Man of Feeling, of which the point is missed by our author on the first page of his Introduction. Holt Mackenzie was the great authority on the land revenue of Northern India during the first quarter of the present century. Even in those days there were globe-trotters, one of whom came to him and asked if he could spare half-an-hour, to explain the land system. The reply was: "You want me to explain in half-an-hour what I have spent a life-time in trying to understand." Holt Mackenzie spoke only of part of Northern India: that is to say, of Bengal proper and of the Ceded and Conquered Provinces. Mr. Baden-Powell here undertakes to explain to the general reader, in three massive volumes, the land tenures and the systems of revenue administration in all the several provinces which make up British India, with Burma thrown in. We must be permitted to doubt whether such a project was altogether well advised. Taking India as a whole, the complications of the land system are so excessive—arising partly from the variations of ancient custom, and partly from the refinements of modern legislation—that no single mind is capable of comprehending all the myriad details. Nor, to tell the truth, need any one try to do so, except perhaps the over-burdened Secretary in the Revenue Department at the India Office. About once in a generation, some civil servant may be found who really knows his own provincial system; but he will be the first to acknowledge his ignorance of all the other systems. Even while we write, a good example comes to us from India of the hopelessness of attempting to interfere with local prejudices on this subject. Some time ago the Supreme Government appointed a Commission to inquire into the indebtedness of the peasants in the Deccan districts of Bombay. This commission, which included representatives from other provinces, has just issued its report, and has dared to recommend some fundamental changes in the system of land revenue administration. To the Bombay mind, this is like laying hands upon the Shekinah; and forthwith the Bombay Government has sent a protest to the Supreme Government, arguing that the Commissioners did not, and could not, know anything about the subject. We do not envy those high-placed personages whose business it is tantas componere lites. But we fear that Mr. Baden-Powell's book will not avail to prevent such difficulties from arising in the future. The truth is, that there are two ways of studying the subject. One is to deliberately shut one's eyes to details, and to confine one's attention solely to the principles that emerge in the systems of the different provinces. The other is to take up some one province by itself, and try to explain the anomalies that will there be found, without help from outside analogy. Our author has attempted to do both at the same time, and, in addition, has indulged in abundant theorising. The highest praise we can give him is, that he has brought together a vast quantity of matter in a comparatively manageable form, and that he has shown to stay-at-home Englishmen, as by an experiment, how complicated is the structure which their race has raised in India. Is there any other country in the world where the land system could not be explained—we do not say in half-an-hour—but in one volume of moderate dimensions?

Some Records of Crime. By General Charles Herve. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.) The portentous character of this work, which contains the diary of a police officer for twelve months in just one thousand pages, suggests an answer to the question we have often asked ourselves: why the literature of England has gained so little from the conquest of India? It is assuredly not through lack either of experiences to record, or of practice in writing. The genius of Mr. Rudyard Kipling has recently flashed upon us, as with a lime-light, some of the romance that underlies all life in the East; while Macaulay long ago pointed out that Indian officials are as fluent with the pen as English politicians with the tongue.

And yet Anglo-Indians have produced no novel of the first class, nor any poem that has won its way into anthologies. In history, with the doubtful exception of Elphinstone, no author is read besides Macaulay—despite his critics; and the only heroes of the great epopee really known to us are Clive and Hastings, who live in his pages. Remembering the alien nationality of late Latin writers, one is sometimes tempted to think that the despised Babu may succeed where his masters have failed, and give us hereafter a silver age, to rank with Claudian and Ausonius. General Harvey, to do him justice, does not pretend to write literature; but none the less on that account is his book a fearful example of the class to which it belongs. We may assume that he was selected by reason of administrative ability to fill the honourable post of General Superintendent of the Operations for the Suppression of Thuggee and Dacoitie, in which he succeeded (we believe) to Sleeman, of Ondh fame. And he tells us himself that he used to be consulted by brother officers as possessing special skill in drafting reports and memorials. But, when he sits down in the leisure of retirement to publish a book, he can do nothing better than print verbatim a daily journal, where unfinished narratives of crime jostle together with descriptions of dinner parties and Simla gossip—and this, we repeat, to the extent of one thousand pages. The art of story-telling, the sense of proportion, natural reticence—all are alike lost in this ocean of miscellaneous anecdote, which might be tolerable if administered in small doses in a club smoking-room, though even there we are disposed to ask, with Charles Lamb, whether "these [Anglo-Indians] do not sometimes bore one another." We do not mean to say that some plums may not be picked out of the pudding by a bold investigator. It is curious to learn that the Begum of Sir David Ochterlony was still living in 1867. Many interesting details are given about the manners and customs of criminal tribes and wandering mendicants, and about the etiquette and modes of travelling in native states. Here is a good example of the author's style:

"I am in a camel team: four fine camels in pairs, upon each camel a wild, long-haired individual, and a roomy, hooded English phaeton, forming my lordly equipage. Sixty horsemen under a Rissaldar form my bodyguard; and I am attended on camel-back by a special Vakil, acting as my Mahmundar or guest-keeper, who purveys all supplies, and by other outriders similarly mounted. . . . I can smoke, lie at full length, sleep, read, and even write, though in hieroglyphics from the constant motion; but the camels step softly, the movement is noiseless and not unpleasant, being through sand with never a stone, and jolting seldom."

Thus he accomplished 170 miles through the desert of Bikanir, in three nights and two and a half days, beguiling the tedium with records of Sati. One is astonished to learn how quickly and universally dhatura poisoning took the place of old-fashioned thagi, when the latter was stamped out by the employment of approvers. Finally, it is right to add that each volume is furnished with an exceptionally copious index.

Arakan: Past, Present, Future. By John Ogilvy Hay. (Blackwoods.) Here again we have the Anglo-Indian of another type. Mr. Ogilvy Hay is a private merchant, who lived for many years at Akyab, a seaport in the Arakan division of Burma, with a considerable export of rice. His grievance is that Arakan is neglected by the Government, and that Akyab, in particular, would have become, with more encouragement, not only the terminus of a railway across the hills into China, but also the principal naval station in the Bay of Bengal. These views he has been pressing upon the public, in season and out of season, during the past twenty years; and he now reprints, in a volume of two hundred pages, all his communications to newspapers, letters to officials, &c., together with the numerous rebuffs that he has received. Needless to say, it is a book that it is impossible to read through; for not even a reviewer can be expected to peruse the same statements repeated on fifty different occasions. As an advocate for Akyab, we have the greatest admiration for Mr. Hay's persistency: but as an author, the less said about him the better.

The Mutual Influence of Muhammadans and Hindus: being the Le Bas Prize Essay for 1891. By F. W. Thomas. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.) Last year (ACADEMY, June 20, 1891), we commended the essay on British Education in India, with which Mr. Thomas won the same prize for 1890. The present seems to us no less worthy of praise, as showing both wide reading and intelligent appreciation. If the object of the Le Bas foundation was to encourage the serious study of Indian problems in at least one undergraduate at Cambridge, this has certainly been fulfilled in the person of Mr. Thomas, who must by this time know a great deal more than many Anglo-Indians. But we doubt whether the examiners were this time well advised in their choice of subject. Not only is it excessively wide in its scope, but it is also of such a nature that it cannot be adequately treated merely from books. Sir Alfred Lyall has taught us, in his Asiatic Studies, that India is a hot-bed of religious beliefs, perpetually springing up in endless variety under the influence of a congenial soil and atmosphere. That they refuse to be classified under the two headings of Islam and Brahmanism may be seen from the case of the Sikhs, whom our author practically ignores. He also commits a curious blunder in assimilating the pindaris to the thugs, and in saying that the former were suppressed "much more recently" than the latter. The pindaris were, of course, military freebooters, not secret assassins like the thugs, nor professional thieves like the dakaitis; and they ceased to exist after the Third Mahratta War of 1818. But, on the whole, Mr. Thomas's essay is singularly free from such mistakes. It shows throughout an extraordinarily minute acquaintance with the facts, as they have been disclosed by the most recent authorities.

Longmans' School History of India. By the Rev. G. U. Pope, D.D. (Longmans.) It should be said at once that this book is intended for Indian, not for English, schools. Even so, we cannot but think that the author has impaired its value by overburdening the story with unimportant facts and bewildering proper names. For example, on p. 125 we read:

"Treaties were also made with the Rajput chiefs of Jeypur, Jodhpur, Bundi, and Macheri; the Jat Raja of Bhartpur, the Rana of Gohud, and Ambaji Ingliia."

None of these treaties was of the slightest moment; nor will the student ever again find himself troubled with the names of Ambaji Ingliia or the chief of Macheri (better known as the Raja of Alwar). In short, Dr. Pope has reduced history to a skeleton, by stripping from the narrative all the details that give it life, and alone make it worth reading. Nor is he always absolutely accurate. On three occasions (pp. 129, 208, and 223), it is either implied or expressly stated that Elphinstone reached Kabul during his embassy of 1808; whereas, as a matter of fact, he never got further than Peshawar. And again (on p. 130), we are told of Trimbakji's imprisonment, and then of his again organising insurrection; but nowhere of the romantic circumstances of his escape. Many years ago we remember using Dr. Pope's Text-Book of Indian History as the most convenient compendium of facts accessible. It was crowded with notes, tables, and indexes, and was furnished with several maps. The present condensation, we regret to say, preserves the defects of the larger work, without its advantages.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. have in the press a new volume of essays by Mr. Leslie Stephen, to be entitled An Agnostic's Apology.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON announce a Memoir of Edward Adolphus, twelfth Duke of Somerset, and some time First Lord of the Admiralty, with selections from his diaries and correspondence, by Mr. W. H. Mallock; Reminiscences of Dr. T. Gordon Hake, the veteran poet and friend of Rossetti, to be entitled Eighty Years of My Life; and a Memoir of Charles Knight, by his granddaughter, Miss Alice A. Clowes.

MR. HARRY QUILTER is about to publish, in a somewhat unusual form, a poem of thirty-six stanzas, by Mr. George Meredith, entitled "Jump to Glory Jane," which originally appeared in the Universal Review. Each verse has not only a separate drawing, but the text also is designed by the artist, the pages being arranged so that at each opening the illustrations and the letterpress make, so to speak, a single composition. A critical essay on Meredith accompanies the poem, which is being printed at the Chiswick Press, and will appear early in October with Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. in England, and Messrs. Macmillan & Co. in America.

The Racing Life of Lord George Bentinck will be published by Messrs. Blackwoods next week. This volume, which has been edited by the Hon. Francis Lawley from materials supplied by the trainer to the Goodwood stable, gives a complete history of the turf during the time when Lord George was connected with it, together with anecdotes of owners of horses, trainers, jockeys, and members of the ring. It will be illustrated with twenty-three full-page plates and a facsimile letter.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN has in the press an account of the European military adventurers in Hindustan from 1784 to 1803, compiled by Mr. Herbert Compton, with a map and illustrations.

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish next week Mr. Joseph Jacobs's Indian Fairy Tales, with illustrations by Mr. J. G. Batten, uniform with the two previous volumes of English and Celtic Fairy Tales.

MR. A. J. CHURCH's classical volume for this Christmas will be Stories from the Greek Comedians, with sixteen coloured illustrations.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE have in the press, to be ready this month, a reproduction in type of the Book of Common Prayer, which was annexed, as the authoritative record, to the Act of 1662. The text has been reproduced verbatim et literatim; and wherever an erasure or correction occurs in the MS., the passage is printed as it was finally left. The same publishers issued a facsimile of the entire MS. last year.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS have in preparation an edition of the Works of Thomas Paine, by Mr. Moncreuf D. Conway, author of the recent Life of Paine. It will consist of two or three volumes, the first division being devoted to the political and sociological writings, and the second to the religious and literary papers. The first division, which will be published shortly, includes The Crisis, The Rights of Man, Common Sense, &c. The most important essay in the second part will be The Age of Reason. They will be printed from the original editions, without any omission or alteration; and each will be accompanied by notes explanatory of the circumstances under which it was written.

MRS. L. T. MEADE's new novel, The Medicine Lady, will be published next week by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

MR. DOUGLAS SLADEN has just completed a volume, entitled The Japs at Home, which will be published soon by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. The work, which will be dedicated by permission to the Duke of Connaught, will contain a good deal about the Duke's visit to Japan, together with a description of Sir Edwin Arnold's Japanese home. Mr. Henry Savage Landor, grandson of Walter Savage Landor, will contribute many of the illustrations.

MR. STANLEY LANE-POOLE has himself drawn a plan, showing the positions of the principal mosques and the plan of the city, for his forthcoming work on Cairo: Sketches of its History, Monuments, and Social Life, as he found there was no authentic map of the city giving the information he wished for.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK, & BOWDEN will shortly bring out a series of biographical sketches by Miss C. J. Hamilton, entitled Women Writers, their Works and Ways. The first volume contains short lives of authoresses of former times:—Mrs. Inchbald, Lady Morgan, Lady Blessington, &c., illustrated with portraits. A second volume will contain notices of authoresses of the present day.

Revelation by Character: a Series of Essays on Old Testament Teachers, by Mr. Robert Tuck, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. will publish in a few days Syringa, by Arthur Nestorien.

MESSRS. EASON & SON, of Dublin, will publish next week a popular work on Inspiration, by the Rev. J. Paterson Smyth, entitled How God inspired the Bible: Thoughts for the Present Disquiet.

IN Mr. Phil May's Illustrated Winter Annual, which is now in preparation, Mr. George Augustus Sala will continue his "Reminiscences of Charles Dickens," and Mr. Archibald Forbes will give some "Personal Recollections of Prince Bismarck." Among the authors who will contribute short stories are Dr. Conan Doyle, Mr. F. C. Phillips, Mr. I. Zangwill, Mr. Eden Philpotts, Mr. Morley Roberts, Mr. Hume Nisbet, Mr. Raymond Blathwayt, and the editor, Mr. Francis Gribble.

UNDER the title of Cottage Gardening, Messrs. Cassell & Co. are about to publish a new half-penny weekly journal, which is specially intended to help the occupiers of small gardens, poultry and bee-keepers, allotment holders, and housewives. It will be edited by Mr. W. Robinson, and will be fully illustrated.

MR. R. MENZIES FERGUSON'S Our Trip North, recently published by Messrs. Digby, Long & Co., has just gone into a second edition.

M. H. DUHAMEL, one of the authors of The Central Alps of the Dauphiny, in the series of "Climber's Guides," has received a medal from the Association Française pour l'Avancement des Sciences, in connexion with the recent exhibition at Grenoble. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has had an honourable mention for Alpine publications.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

MR. MONCURE D. CONWAY will resume his Sunday morning discourses at the South Place Chapel, Finsbury, on October 2, when his subject will be "Utopia: or, The Search for New Worlds, 1492 to 1892." The musical arrangements are under the direction of Mr. J. S. Shodlock. The committee of the South Place Ethical Society have issued invitations for a conversazione on the following day, "to welcome Mr. and Mrs. D. Moncure Conway." We understand that Mr. Moncure Conway has promised to continue his services for six months. The afternoon free lectures on National Life and Thought will also begin on Sunday, October 2, at 4 p.m., with a lecture by Mr. Herbert Ward on "The Congo Savages"; and the seventh season of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts will begin on the same evening at 7 p.m. A course of nine popular lectures on "Architecture," illustrated with photographic slides, will be delivered at the South Place Institute by Mr. G. A. T. Middleton, secretary of the Society of Architects, beginning on Thursday, October 20, at 8 p.m.

THE West London Ethical Society will be inaugurated with a course of five lectures by Dr. Stanton Coit, to be delivered at Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, on Sundays during October, at 11.15 a.m. Each lecture will be preceded by instrumental music. A general meeting of members will be held at Essex Hall, on October 12, to consider a scheme for amalgamation with the London Ethical Society. The following are the principles of the society:—

"(1) The good life has a claim upon us in virtue of its supreme worth to humanity.

"(2) It therefore rests for its justification on no external authority, and on no system of supernatural rewards and punishments, but on the nature of man as a rational and social being.

"(3) In practice it is to be realised by accepting and acting in the spirit of such common obligations as are enjoined by the relationships of family and society, in so far as these are a means to a fuller human development."

THE monthly meetings of the Elizabethan Society will recommence on Wednesday next, October 5, when Mr. William Poel will read a paper on John Webster, dealing chiefly with "The Duchess of Malfi," and giving some particulars of his arrangement of the play, which will shortly be produced by the Independent Theatre. The following papers will be read during the session: "Samuel Daniel," by Mr. Edmund K. Chambers; "The Shakspearean Reconciliation," by Clelia; "Sir Thomas Browne," by Mr. James Ernest Baker; "Troilus and Cressida," by Miss Grace Latham; "William Chamberlayne," by Mr. Richard Le Gallienne; "Thomas Shadwell," by Mr. George Saintsbury; "Robert Greene," by Mr. F. J. Payne; "Robert Southwell," by Mr. Frederick Rogers; "Edmund Spenser," by Mr. W. H. Cowham; and "Thomas Heywood," by Mr. John Addington Symonds.

THE opening meeting of the winter session of the Carlyle Society will be held on Monday next, October 3, at 8 p.m., at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, when recent Carlyle literature will be discussed, and Mr. West will read a paper on the first volume of the Reminiscences.

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON will deliver a series of lectures upon "The Practice of Positive Morals," at Newton Hall on Sunday evenings during October, at 7 p.m.

THE seventieth session of the Birkbeck Scientific and Literary Institution will open on Monday next, October 3. More than two hundred classes are arranged in languages, literature, mathematics, science, art, and commercial and technical subjects. During the vacation, new biological and physical laboratories have been fitted up, and a large art room has been erected. Among those who have undertaken to deliver the Wednesday evening lectures are the following: Sir Robert S. Ball, the Rev. Dr. Dallinger, Dr. Andrew Wilson, Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, Mr. Churton Collins, Mr. Charles Dickens, Mr. H. A. Jones, Mr. Samuel Brandram, Dr. J. F. Bridge, and Mr. J. T. Carrodus.

AN Institute of Commercial Education has been founded by a limited company at Stratham-common, with the object of training boys and young men for a business life. The principal is M. H. de Larmoy, formerly instructor in French at the Crystal Palace, and author of A Practical French Grammar. Special attention will be paid to modern languages; and there will be evening classes for the teaching of Russian, Spanish, Portuguese, Persian, and Hindustani.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IT is with much regret that we record the death of Prof. Croom Robertson, which took place on September 20. It is only a few months since he was compelled by illness to resign the chair of philosophy at University College, now filled by Mr. James Sully; and last year he suffered a severe loss in the death of his wife. He was born at Aberdeen in 1842, and educated at the university of his native city, under Prof. Alexander Bain, who survives him. His first literary work was to assist Prof. Bain in editing Grote's posthumous book on Aristotle (1872); and he wrote an admirable monograph on Hobbes for the series of "Philosophical Classics for English Readers" (1886). He also contributed to the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. But his greatest service to English philosophy, through which his name will long be held in honour, was his connexion with Mind. He was the editor of this review from its foundation in 1876 down to the close of last year, and he also wrote much in its pages. Besides encouraging young English students, he took special pleasure in introducing to England the writings on English subjects of German thinkers. In the ACADEMY of January 30, 1892, will be found a letter from him, summarising the researches of Prof. Freudenthal, of Breslau, upon two little-known predecessors of Bacon—Everard Digby and William Temple. It is to be regretted that Prof. Croom Robertson's sympathy with the work of others, combined with excessive diffidence, prevented him from leaving behind a larger quantity of original work of his own.

A WAYNFLETE professorship of pure mathematics will be founded next term at Oxford. The annual value of the chair is £800, inclusive of a fellowship at Magdalen College.

THE Michaelmas term of the ladies department of King's College will be opened with an address by Prof. J. W. Hales, to be delivered at 13, Kensington-square, on Monday, October 10, at 3 p.m. The lecture is open to all students and their friends.

THE following courses will be delivered at University Hall, Gordon-square, during the Michaelmas term:—Ten lectures by the warden, Mr. Philip H. Wicksteed, on "The Growth of a Nation's Religion," beginning on October 9; ten lectures by the warden, on "Dante's Purgatorio," beginning on October 10; eight addresses by Dr. Brooke Herford, on "Liberal Religion in America," beginning on October 18; and ten lectures by Mr. Graham Wallas, on "The English Citizen—Past and Present," beginning on October 13.

THE session's work of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching will be opened with an inaugural lecture of a course on "The History and Principles of Biology," by Prof. Patrick Geddes, at Gresham College, on Monday, October 10, at 8 p.m., when Sir James Paget, Bart., will take the chair, and deliver a short address. On the following evening, at the same hour, Mr. H. H. Asquith will preside at the first lecture of a course on "The Beginnings of English Literature," by Mr. J. Churton Collins. In addition to these central courses, arranged specially to meet the needs of picked students from the various local centres, over sixty courses in literature, history, economics, science, and art, have been arranged in different parts of London.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SONG.

GOLDEN face that human sorrow
May not touch nor make less fair,
Lustre from you let me borrow,
Sunbeams that shall banish care:
All the grief of all my years
In your presence disappears.
Dear, delightful, dark blue eyes!
Life seemed like an autumn day,
Hope was as a flame that dies,
Till you shone across my way:
But when your great glory broke
O'er my life, this love awoke:—

Love of you now conquers grief,
Love of you makes life a gain;
As a fading woodland leaf
Shines in sunlight after rain,
So the realm of my distress
Wears a new and radiant dress.

Ah! but shall I keep the boon?
Will you always be to me
Stars of morning, suns of noon,
Lamps to bid the darkness flee?
Dearest eyes, I know your light
Will content me till the night.

PERCY PINKERTON.

OBITUARY.

THE staff of voluntary workers of the New English Dictionary has lost one of its most eminent members by the death of Mr. John Pete, of Ravenswood, Alleyne-park, S.E., which recently took place very suddenly at his son's house at Exeter. Mr. Pete was in his eighty-second year, but had retained his faculties to the last, and had for several years devoted himself to the service of the Dictionary with the zest and energy of a young man. In 1879 he was one of those who responded to Dr. Murray's appeal to the English-speaking world, to supply a million more quotations for the Dictionary, in compliance with which he read and sent in quotations from about twenty important books. In 1885 he acceded to Dr. Murray's invitation to try his hand at sub-editing, i.e., the arrangement of material, subdivision of senses, and general rough-hewing of the treatment of the words, so far as this could be done outside the Scriptorium. At this he has steadily laboured for seven years with signal success, and has been one of the most effective of the band of volunteers who have so honourably associated themselves with the work of the Dictionary; he has sub-edited a considerable section of H, and revised and completed the sub-editing of large parts of C and F in advance of the Scriptorium staff. He received a new section of CUR at the end of July, asking to have it to take away with him when he went from home in August, as at his age he could not hope to continue his labours very much longer; and at this he was working almost to the moment of his sudden and painless decease. He leaves a gap in the ranks of the Dictionary workers, which its promoters will be very glad to have filled by some new volunteers. Mr. Pete had during his long life made a large circle of literary acquaintances, including many much younger than himself, who will hear with regret of the loss of their aged friend, whose Christian serenity and sweetness of temper were equal to the freshness and vigour of his intellectual faculties.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

WE were not wrong in thinking that M. Uzanne would soon compensate the readers of L'Art et l'Idée for the comparative dullness of his August number. That for September, though still in the dull season, is open to no such reproach. The editor opens it with a long, a very good, and a most bountifully illustrated notice of M. Albert Robida, the most opulent and unhackneyed caricaturist—or rather extravaganist in design—of France. To those who have followed M. Robida's work for many years, as we may modestly boast of having done, the article will have of course little positive revelation. But Robida is anything but well known in England, and deserves to be very well known indeed. We venture to think that his Rabelais is a little open to a reproach which M. Uzanne, justly deprecating that of charge, does not guard against. It is not too exaggerated, but it is a little too monotonous in its exaggeration. Just as the late M. Garnier saw in Rabelais nothing but an endless opportunity for drawing and combining the curves of the female form, so M. Robida has seen in him, if not nothing, yet quite not enough, besides an opportunity for fantastic zigzags and huge magnifications. He is excellent as far as he goes, but does not go quite far enough. The true Rabelais illustrator, to our thinking, should vary his style infinitely, and should sometimes, like the master himself, abandon caricature as well as grivoiserie altogether. Let us note also an article on masculine dress, not by Mr. Oscar Wilde, but by M. Alphonse Germain; and another on "Working during Holidays in the Country," a practice which the author, M. de Saint Heraye, visits with deserved and ingenious disapproval.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.'S LIST.

"Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews, 1865-1890," Vol. II., by the Rev. A. K. H. Boyd; "Fifty Years in the Making of Australian History," by Sir Henry Parkes, Prime Minister of New South Wales, 1872-75, 1877, 1878-79, with portraits, in 2 vols.; "The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland: being a Record of Excavations and Explorations, 1891-92," by J. Theodore Bent, with numerous illustrations and maps; "The Toilers of the Fields," by Richard Jefferies, with portrait from the bust in Salisbury Cathedral; "A Selection from the Letters of Geraldine Jewsbury to Jane Welsh Carlyle," edited by Mrs. Alexander Ireland; "King Poppy: a Fantasia," by Owen Meredith (The Earl of Lytton); "The Green Fairy Book," edited by Andrew Lang, with eleven plates and eighty-eight illustrations in the text by H. J. Ford; "The Life of the Right Honourable Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke," with a brief prefatory memoir of his kinsman, Sir John Coape Sherbrooke, sometime Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, afterwards Governor-General of Canada, and Commander-in-Chief of British North America, by A. Patchett Martin, with two portraits (Robert Lowe in Sydney, 1847, and Viscount Sherbrooke, 1883), in 2 vols.; "The Light of the World; or, The Great Consummation," by Sir Edwin Arnold, new edition, with 22 illustrations by W. Holman Hunt;

"Indian Polity: a View of the System of Administration in India," by Lieut.-General Sir George Chesney, new edition, revised and enlarged; "Letters to Young Shooters," by Sir Ralph Payne-Gallwey, Bart. (second series), with illustrations; "The New Eden: a Story," by C. J. Hyne, with frontispiece and vignette; "After Twenty Years: a Collection of Reprinted Pieces," by Julian Sturgis; "English Economic History and Theory, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time," Part II., by Prof. W. J. Ashley; "Lay Down Your Arms" (Die Waffen Nieder), by Baroness von Suttner, translated by T. Holmes; "Steam and the Steam Engine," by W. Ripper; "Chemical Lecture Experiments," by G. S. Newth; "Voices from Flower-Land: a Birthday Book and Language of Flowers," by Emily E. Reader, new edition, illustrated by Ada Brooke.

Theological.—"Lectures and Essays" and "The Epistle to the Romans," by the late Canon Liddon; "Buddhism—Primitive and Present, in Magadha and in Ceylon," by Bishop Copleston; "Pleas and Claims for Christ," by Canon Scott Holland; "Light of Science on the Faith: being the Bampton Lectures for 1892," by Bishop Barry; "Morality in Doctrine," sermons by Canon Bright; "The Church in Relation to Sceptics: a Conversational Guide to Evidential Work," by the Rev. Alex. J. Harrison; "The Lord's Day and the Holy Eucharist, treated in a Series of Essays by Various Writers," with a preface by the Rev. Robert Linklater; "Practical Reflections upon Every Verse of the Book of Genesis," with a preface by Bishop King; "Plain Sermons," by Bishop Oxenden, to which is prefixed a memoir with portrait; "Nicholas Ferrar," with a Preface by Canon Carter; "The Schism between the Oriental and Western Churches," with special reference to the addition of the "Filioque" to the Creed, by G. B. Howard; "An Advent with Jesus: a Plain Guide for Churchmen," by Anthony Bathe; "The Peep of Day: or, a Series of the Earliest Religious Instruction," with coloured illustrations.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S LIST.

Biography.—"Victoria, Queen and Empress," by John Cordy Jeaffreson, in 2 vols.; "Reminiscences of Count Leo Nicolaevitch Tolstoi," translated by Prof. C. E. Turner; "Stray Memories," by Ellen Terry, with many portraits and illustrations; "Alcuin, and the Rise of the Christian Schools," by Prof. Andrew F. West; "Abelard, and the Origin and Early History of Universities," by Jules Gabriel Compayre; "Rousseau, or Education according to Nature"; "Herbart, or Modern German Education"; "Pestalozzi, or the Friend and Student of Children"; "Froebel," by H. Courthope Bowen; "Horace Mann, and Public Education in the United States," by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler; "Bell, Lancaster, and Arnold, or the English Education of To-day," by J. G. Fitch, being new volumes of the "Great Educators"; "The Life of Heinrich Heine," by Richard Garnett; "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies," by James McNeill Whistler, a new and enlarged edition; "Twenty-five Years in the Secret Service: the Recollections of a Spy," by Major Henri Le Caron, with portraits and facsimiles.

History, &c.—"The Great War of 189—: A Forecast," by Rear-Admiral Colomb, Col. Maurice, Major Henderson, Captain Maude, Archibald Forbes, Charles Lowe, D. Christie Murray, F. Scudamore, and Sir Charles Dilke, with illustrations; "The New Exodus: a Study of Israel in Russia," by Harold Frederic, illustrated; "The Jew at home: Impressions of a Summer and Autumn spent in Russia," by Joseph Pennell; "The Realm of the Habsburgs," by Sidney Whitman.

Drama.—A new play, in three acts, by Henrik Ibsen; a new play, by Bjornstjerne Bjornson; the following plays by Arthur W. Pinero: "Dandy Dick," "The Schoolmistress," "The Weaker Sex," "Lords and Commons," "The Squire," and "Sweet Lavender."

General Literature.—"The Works of Heinrich Heine," translated by C. G. Leland, Vol. IV., "The Book of Songs," VII. and VIII. "French Affairs," IX. "The Salon"; "The Posthumous Works of Thomas De Quincey," edited by Alexander H. Japp, Vol. II. "Conversation and Coleridge"; "Addresses," by Henry Irving, with a portrait by James McNeill Whistler; "Little Johannes," by Frederick Van Eeden, translated from the Dutch by Clara Bell, with an introduction by Andrew Lang, illustrated; "The Canadian Guide Book," Part II., "Western Canada," by Ernest Ingersoll, with maps and many illustrations; "A Manual of Bacteriology," by A. B. Griffiths, being Vol. V. of Heinemann's Scientific Handbooks.

Fiction.—In three volumes: "Children of the Ghetto," by I. Zangwill; "The Tower of Taddeo," by Ouida; "Kitty's Father," by Frank Barrett; "The Last Sentence," by Maxwell Gray; "The Countess Radnor," by W. E. Norris; "Criole's Daughter," by Jessie Fothergill; in two volumes: "Woman and the Man," by Robert Buchanan; "A Knight of the White Feather," by Tasma; "A Little Minx," by Ada Cambridge; in one volume: "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon," by Hall Caine; "The Secret of Narcisse," by Edmund Gosse; "The O'Connors of Ballinahinch," by Mrs. Hungerford; "A Battle and a Boy," by Blanche Willis Howard; "Vanitas," by Vernon Lee; "Tween Snow and Fire," by Bertram Mitford; new volumes of Heinemann's International Library: "Lou," from the German of Baron von Roberts; "Dona Luz," from the Spanish of Juan Valera; "Without Dogma," from the Polish of Sienkiewicz; "Dust," from the Norwegian of Bjornstjerne Bjornson; cheap editions of "Not All in Vain," by Ada Cambridge; and "Nor Wife Nor Maid," by Mrs. Hungerford.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S LIST.

"The Great Barrier Reef of Australia: its Products and Potentialities," containing an account, with copious coloured and photographic illustrations (the latter here produced for the first time), of the coral and coral reefs, pearl and pearl-shell, bêche-de-mer, other fishing industries, and the marine fauna of the Australian Great Barrier region, by W. Saville-Kent; "Sir Morell Mackenzie," physician and operator, a memoir, compiled and edited, by request of the family, from private papers and personal reminiscences, by the Rev. H. R. Haweis; "A Short History of China," being an account for the general reader of an ancient empire and people, by Demetrius C. Boulger; "The Steam Navy of England, Past, Present, and Future," by Harry Williams, R.N.; "India's Princes," short life sketches of the native rulers of India, with 22 portraits and other illustrations, by Mrs. Griffith; "Morocco as it is," with an account of the recent mission of Sir Charles Euan Smith, by Stephen Bonsal; "Through Connemara in a Governess Cart," illustrated, by the authors of "An Irish Cousin"; "In the Vine Country," by the same authors, illustrated; "The Churches of Paris," historical and archaeological, by Sophia Beale, illustrated with sketches by the author; "A Comprehensive Persian-English Dictionary," comprising such Arabic words and phrases as are to be met with in Persian literature, being Johnson and Richardson's Persian, Arabic, and English Dictionary, minutely revised, enlarged from fresh and the latest sources, and entirely reconstructed on original lines, by Dr. F. Steingass; "Myamma," a retrospect of life and travel in Lower Burmah, by Dept.-Surgeon Gen. C. T. Paske and F. G. Affalo; "The Land Revenue of Bombay," a history of its administration, rise, and progress, by Alexander Rogers; "A Bengali Manual," by Prof. F. G. Nicholl; "Anglo-Indian and Oriental Cookery," by Mrs. Grace Johnson; "Absolutely True," a novel, by Irving Montague; "Mixed Humanity," a realistic novel of South African life, by J. R. Couper, with 8 illustrations by Irving Montague; "An American Monte Cristo," a romance, by Julian Hawthorne; "A Mysterious Family," a novel, by Fergus Hume.

New Editions.—"The Church Under Queen Elizabeth," an historical sketch, by the Rev. Dr. F. G. Lee; "Addresses for a Retreat of Four or Six Days," by Dean Randall; "Cyril," a romantic novel, by Geoffrey Drago; "Wanderings of a War Artist," by Irving Montague; "Camp and Studio," by the same author; "Encounters with Wild Beasts," by Colonel Parker Gillmore; "Prairie and Forest," a guide to the field sports of North America, by the same author; "Scripture Portraits and other Miscellanies," collected from the published writings of the late Dean Stanley; "Words of Truth and Wisdom," by Archdeacon Farrar; "The Illustrated Horse Doctor," being an account of the various diseases incident to the equine race, with the latest mode of treatment and requisite prescriptions, 400 illustrations, by Edward Mayhew, revised and improved by James Irvine Lupton; "The Royal Kalendar for 1893, and Court and City Register for England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Colonies."

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co.'s LIST.

General Literature.—"Eton of Old, 1811 to 1822," by an Old Colleger, illustrated; "Tales from the Dramatists," by Charles Morris, with an introduction by Henry Irving, in 3 vols., in fancy box. "The Newbery Classics," a new edition of the poets, each in one volume—the following are in preparation: Byron, Campbell, Wordsworth, and Shakspeare. "The Bijou Byron, Complete," in 12 vols., small oblong; "The Shakspeare Birthday Book," compiled by E. W. H., with portrait. "The Prison Series," new uniform edition, by F. W. Robinson: "Female Life in Prison," "Prison Characters," "The Memoirs of Jane Cameron, Female Convict." In "The Entertainment Series," "Duologues," by Ina Leon Cassilis, "Short Comedies for Amateur Players," adapted and arranged by Mrs. Burton Harrison.

Novels.—In three volumes: "Whither?" by M. E. Francis; "Asenath of the Ford," a romance of Red Earth Country, by Rita; "How Like a Woman," by Florence Marryat. In one volume: "An Evil Reputation," by Dora Russell; "The Duchess," by Mrs. Hungerford; "A Fatal Silence," by Florence Marryat; "A Defender of the Faith," by Tivole. New editions: "Eagle Joe," a Wild West romance, by Henry Herman; "Misogyny and the Maiden," by Paul Cushing; "A Stiff-Necked Generation," "The History of a Week," by Mrs. L. B. Walford.

Theological.—"The Great Discourse of Jesus Christ the Son of God," a topical arrangement and analysis of all His words recorded in the New Testament, separated from the context; "Mamma's Bible Stories for her Little Boys and Girls," a series of reading lessons taken from the Bible, and adapted to the capacities of very young children, first series, fully illustrated, new and cheaper edition; "Church Folk-Lore," by the Rev. J. E. Vaux; "The Sacrifice of Praise"; or, The Holy Eucharist, according to the use of the Church of England, interleaved with instructions and devotions for the use of communicants, together with the Litany, or General Supplication appointed by the Church to be used at Communion on certain days, and a brief introduction concerning the meaning of the Christian sacrifice and the ritual accessories of the service; "Asdrufel: A Soul's Episode," by T. J. Hardy; "An Epitome of Anglican Church History," from the earliest ages to the present time, by Ellen Wobley-Parry, new and cheaper edition; in the Westminster Library—"The First Century of Christianity," by Homersham Cox, in 2 vols.; "Landon's Manual of Councils," in 2 vols.

Books for the Young.—"Short Stories about Animals," by Gertrude Sellon, illustrated with 16 coloured and numerous black-and-white pictures by W. Weekes; "Told after Tea," by M. and C. Lee, illustrated with 8 pictures in colour by Edith Hume and Etheline E. Dell, and 50 black-and-white pictures by H. Ford; "Some Sweet Stories of Old," boys of Bible story, second series, by the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, with 8 coloured illustrations by Henry Ryland, and numerous black-and-white by Lucien Davies; "Chronicles of Fairy-Land," fantastic fables for old and young, by Fergus Hume, illustrated by Miss Wallace Dunlop; "Dollikins and the Miser," by Frances Eaton, illustrated by W. L. Taylor; "The Old Corner Annual: a Picture and a Story for every Day in the Year;" "The Queen's Navee," by Commander Robinson, R.N., and J. Leyland, illustrated by Walter W. May; "The Weathercock: being the Adventures of a Boy with a Bias," by George Manville Fenn; "Rose Raymond's Wards," and "Ways and Means," by Margaret Vandergrift; "A Sage of Sixteen," by L. B. Walford, with numerous illustrations by J. E. Goodall; "The Wide Wide World," by E. Wetherell, illustrated by F. Dielman; "Triumphs of Steam," by Henry Frith; "Fair Women and Brave Men," by Barbara Hutton (Mrs. Alexander), illustrated; "Uncle Bill's Children," by Helen Milman; "Flower-Folk," and "Bread-and-Butter Stories," by E. Carrington; "True Stories from Roman History," by Mrs. A. Pollard, illustrated; "An Affair of Honour," by Alice Weber, illustrated by Emily J. Harding; "The Young Governess," a tale for girls, illustrated; "Only a Child," by E. M. Green, illustrated by Emily J. Harding; "Boy: Word Pictures of Child Life," by Helen Milman, illustrated; "The Clock on the Stairs," by Alice Weber; "Little Joan Maitland," by E. C. Phillips (Mrs. Looker); "The House of Sweet Memories," by Georgina M. Craik, author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," with numerous illustrations; "For the Little Ones," a volume of stories and pictures for boys and girls, with coloured frontispiece.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS AND JOHN LANE'S LIST.

"English Poems," by Richard Le Gallienne; "Silhouettes, a Book of Verses," by Arthur Symonds; "Excursions in Criticism, being some Prose Recreations of a Rhymers," by William Watson; "The Art of Thomas Hardy, Six Essays," by Lionel Johnson, with a portrait etched from life by William Strang, and a bibliography by John Lane; "The Sonnet in England and other Essays," by James Ashcroft Noble; "The Rhythm of Life" (Essays), by Alice Meynell (née A. C. Thompson); "Poems," by Mrs. Meynell; "Liber Amoris, or the New Pygmalion," by William Hazlitt, with an introduction by Richard Le Gallienne; "Silver-points Poems," by John Gray; "A Poet's Harvest Home, with an Aftermath," by the late William Bell Scott; "Stephania," a drama in three acts, by Michael Field; "Poems," by Selwyn Image; "In the Key of Blue, and other Essays," by John Addington Symonds;

"Dante, Six Sermons," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Warden of University Hall, a third and improved edition.

MESSRS. ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & Co.'s LIST.

"Letters from a Mahratta Camp," by Thos. Drew Broughton, a new edition, with an introduction by Sir M. E. Grant Duff, with notes, coloured and other illustrations, and a map; "Ancient India," its Invasion by Alexander the Great as described by Arrian, Q. Curtius, Diodoros, Plutarch, and Justin, by J. W. McCrindle, with copious notes, illustrations, and a map; "Indian Field Sports," a series of coloured plates after the illustrations by Captain Thos. Williamson, published in 1807, with an introduction and a description of each plate; "The Present Situation in Central Asia," authorised translation of the work "Antagonismus der Englischen und Russischen Interessen in Asien" (Wien: 1890), brought up to date, with a map embodying the latest information; "The Migration of Symbols," by Count Goblet d'Alviella, authorised English translation, edited by Sir G. Birdwood, with 144 illustrations; "Some Memories of Books, Authors, and Events," by the late J. G. Bertram, with portrait of Sir Walter Scott, from an engraving by Lewis after the drawing by Geddes; "English Settlements in Indo-China," by J. Chailly-Bert, authorised English translation, with maps and notes; "Memorials of the Disruption in the Scottish Church," historical, financial, and pictorial.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & Co.'s LIST.

A new series of quarto volumes, to be called "The Dainty Books," commencing with "For Grown up Children," by Mrs. Walford, with illustrations by T. Pym; to be followed by "Mum Fidgets," by Constance Milman, with illustrations by Edith Ellison; and "Master Bartlemy," by Frances E. Crompton, with illustrations by T. Pym. In a half-crown series for elder girls: "Mademoiselle," by F. M. Peard; "Twilight," by Helen Shipton; "The Makers of Mulling," by C. R. Coleridge; "In the Springtime," by Alice Weber; "Raffan's Folk," by M. E. Gellie; "Colonel Russell's Baby," by E. Davenport Adams; and "In Hiding," by M. Bramston. The following Christmas books: "Brownies and Rose-leaves," by Roma White; and "A Ring of Rubies," by Mrs. S. T. Meade—both with illustrations by L. Leslie Brooke; and "Dear," by the author of "Tip-cat." In the "Tip-cat" series: "Little Princess Angel," by Stella Austin; "Leal Souvenir," by Alice Weber; and "Lilian and Lili," by the author of "Mademoiselle Mori." Also new editions of "Mr. Witt's Widow," by Anthony Hope; "Amethyst," by C. R. Coleridge; "Shreds and Patches," by E. N. Leigh Fry; "Paul's Friend," by Stella Austin; "Nature and Woodcraft," by John Watson, with illustrations by G. E. Lodge; "Church Lore Gleanings," by T. F. Thiselton Dyer; and "The Dawn of History," by C. F. Keary.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

BAUMER, S. Johannes Mabillon. Ein Lebens- u. Literaturbild aus dem 17. u. 18. Jahrh. Augsburg: Huttler. 3 M. 50 Pf.
BOUCHOT, H. Le Luxe français: l'Empire. Paris: Lib. illustrée. 40 fr.
FENACALLI, G. Bibliografia Etiopica. Catalogo degli scritti pubblicati dalla invenzione della stampa fino a tutto il 1891 intorno alla Etiopia e regioni limitrofe. Milan: Hoepli. 10 fr.
HOUSSEY, Arsène. Blanche et Marguerite. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
JUSTI, C. Murillo. Leipzig: Seemann. 6 M.
NORMAND, Ch. J. B. Greuze. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 4 fr. 50 c.
PIERRE, E. Essai d'une Bibliographie historique de la Bibliothèque Nationale. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.

SAV, Léon, et Joseph CHAILLEY. Nouveau Dictionnaire d'Economie politique. Paris: Guillaumin. 55 fr.
VOLKMAN, L. Bildliche Darstellungen zu Dante's Divina Commedia bis zum Ausgang der Renaissance. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

BEKKER, E. J. Ernst u. Scherz üb. unsere Wissenschaft. Festgabe an R. v. Ihering. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 3 M.
BUSCH, W. England unter den Tudors. 1. Bd. König Heinrich VII. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
GRANLIER, L. Mémoires de l'Adjudant-Général Jean Landrieux, chef d'état major de la cavalerie de l'armée d'Italie 1795-1797. Paris: Savine. 15 fr.
HÖFLER, C. R. v. Die Katastrophe d. herzogl. Hauses der Borja's v. Gandia. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M.
MAURENBRECHER, W. Gründung d. Deutschen Reiches 1859-1871. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M.
NSUBURG, C. Goslar's Berghau bis 1552. Beitrag zur Wirtschafts- u. Verfassungsgeschichte d. Mittelalters. Hannover: Hahn. 6 M.
OTTINO, G. Il Mappamondo di Torino, riprodotto e descritto. Turin: Loescher. 10 fr.
URKUNDBUCH der Prov. Sachsen. 26. Bd. Urkundenbuch der Stadt Magdeburg. 1. Bd. Bis 1403. Bearb. v. G. Hertel. Halle: Hendel. 14 M.
VAULT, E. E. de. Guerre de la Succession d'Autriche (1742-1748). Mémoire, revu par P. Arvers. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 30 fr.
WELZHOFF, H. Allgemeine Geschichte d. Altertums. 3. Bd. Geschichte d. Orients u. Griechenlands im 6. Jahrh. v. Chr. Berlin: Seehagen. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

HANN, J. Weitere Untersuchungen üb. die tägliche Oscillation d. Barometers. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 40 Pf.
HAUBER, F. Ritter v. Beiträge zur Kenntniss der Cephalopoden aus der Trias v. Bosnien. I. Leipzig: Freytag: 8 M. 60 Pf.
WAGNER, A. Zur Kenntniss d. Blattbaues der Alpenpflanzen u. dessen biologischer Bedeutung. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 50 Pf.
WENDLAND, P. Philos. Schrift üb. die Vorsehung. Beitrag zur Geschichte der nacharistotel. Philosophie. Berlin: Gaertner. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

GENOVI, W. Die Realien bei Horaz. Berlin: Gaertner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
PLANNER, J. Untersuchungen üb. den syntaktischen Gebrauch d. Verbums in dem angelsächsischen Gedichte vom Phoenix. Leipzig: Grise. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PERVERSION OF ECONOMIC HISTORY.

Trinity College, Cambridge: Sept. 27, 1892.

As the opener of a discussion on "The Perversion of Economic History" in the current number of the Economic Journal, I desire to exercise my right of final reply on the main question at issue—the applicability of Ricardo's theory of rent to Tudor times in England. I trust you will allow me space in the ACADEMY for this purpose, so that the matter need not drag on for another quarter, in the organ of the British Economic Association.

The issue between Prof. Marshall and myself is simple. Prof. Marshall regards Ricardo's teaching as "containing a living principle applicable, with proper modifications, to the income derived from almost every differential advantage for production, and applicable also under almost every variety of rights as to property, dues, and freedom of action, whether those rights be upheld by law or by custom" (Economic Journal, ii., p. 512).

On the other hand, I contend that, whether as stated by Ricardo or his followers, it is not applicable to the alleged rise of rents in Tudor times; and I further urge that those who attempt to apply it are in danger of deducing statements about facts from their principle, instead of studying the actual facts as they existed. It is, of course, true that Ricardo's theory would hold good for the Tudor period, if there was more intensive farming and an increased application of capital to land, and if there was a rise in the value of corn. But neither of these changes occurred at that time; the introduction of convertible husbandry required less capital rather than more; as Prof. Thorold Rogers maintains, the art of agriculture remained stationary (Agriculture and Prices iv. 39, 56), and the rise of the price of corn before the latter years of the sixteenth century was not a real rise, but was merely due to an adjustment to new monetary conditions (ib. iv. 715, v. 788). These facts are so well known that I did not think it necessary to state them explicitly in my note; but it seems that Prof. Marshall was not aware of them. He says "the particular cause which was most prominent at the time . . . would necessitate more intensive cultivation and . . . raise the value of each quarter of corn" (Economic Journal, ii., p. 513). He relies on Ricardo's principle, and tells us what must have happened, but his statement conflicts with the evidence as to what actually did occur. Ricardo's principle appears to be saved, but it is so much the worse for the facts. This may serve to show why I record Prof. Marshall's attitude and influence, despite his real interest in and appeals to history, as antagonistic to the serious study of history. Le mieux est l'ennemi du bien.

I do not think it necessary to point out how completely Prof. Marshall's reply, where it touches on Roman and mediæval history, confirms my allegation that he merely goes to history to look for the illustration of preconceived theories, and not in a spirit of genuine research; but as his defence practically resolves itself into a countercharge that I have garbled my quotations from his writings, I do desire to show on what insufficient grounds this serious accusation rests.

Prof. Marshall writes (Economic Journal, ii., p. 516):—"Dr. Cunningham's criticism turns mainly on the word sheep, which he introduced into his citation of a sentence of mine." But in the passage in question (ib. 496) I did not cite a sentence; I gave, without inverted commas, the substance of a paragraph. Moreover, I did not introduce the word sheep; it is Prof. Marshall's own, for he speaks in the same context of the "concentration of many holdings into large sheep runs" (Principles, p. 34). In trying to establish his charge here, he commits himself to two inaccuracies I do not cite, and he himself uses the word which he accuses me of introducing. In similar fashion, when I represented him in Lippincott's as holding that the part of economic theory which deals with rent would help to produce a solvent, I was making an honest attempt to give a fair paraphrase of his statement that "economic theory, working on these facts [i.e., of modern India], will gradually produce a solvent."

Since Prof. Marshall rests his defence on this counter indictment, it surely was incumbent on him to see that his charges of misquotation are well founded, and also that, in cases where I only profess to give the substance of his remarks, there is not merely a verbal discrepancy but a substantial change of meaning. He has not been careful in either respect.

I have, in various lectures and addresses during the last few years, occasionally alluded to Prof. Marshall, as I have to other economists, sometimes to express agreement and sometimes to express dissent. It would be strange if I had passed over in silence the acknowledged head of the dominant school of English economics. But I have never professed to be his authorised interpreter; indeed, as president of the Economic Section of the British Association at Cardiff, I was careful to point out that I was afraid I might be misrepresenting him and his school, because, "despite my best endeavours, I may not always succeed in reconciling their apparent inconsistencies" (Report, 1891, p. 733). I cannot but feel it is a pity, when Prof. Marshall has broken silence, that he should content himself with insisting on some verbal trivialities, instead of dealing with the real difficulties in regard to his writings which many of us have felt and which I have ventured to point out.

W. CUNNINGHAM.

TEMASGI=DAMASCUS.

London: Sept. 24, 1892.

In the ACADEMY of September 3, Prof. Sayce speaks of the identification of the Te-mas-gi of the letter of Akizzi of Katna as being one totally "in defiance of philology and geography." It is with regret that I find myself unable to agree with one who has so long been my master; for I, on my own part, consider the identification as absolutely certain. In the last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (August, 1892) and in the current number I have translated these letters of Akizzi, and have commented upon the important geographical information they contain.

I will give first the rendering I propose for the paragraphs of the letter in which the names of Temasgi and Ubi occur. The writer says:

"My lord now Arzanya of the city of Ruknisi and Teuwati of the city of Lapana in the land of Ubi dwell, and Dasha in the land of Am-ma dwell, and they are allies (tu-idi-su-mi). My lord now the land of Ubi is not for my lord (sa-la eni ya). During each day to Audhugama they are sending, and thus they speak, come and (take) the land of Ubi all of it (gappama). My lord, in like manner the city of Timaski in the land of Ubi to thy feet raises its hands (nis katti ku)."

In another portion of the tablet geographical details rendering us assistance are given.

"My lord, news I to the king, my lord, send and in this manner (Kiyam). The king of Nukhasi, the king of Ni, the king of Zinzar, and the king of Kinanat and these kings all to my lord are servants."

In the last extract we have two places with which we are familiar in Egyptian geography, Ni and Zinzar. These are evidently the Nii and Senzar of the inscription of Amen-em-het, the warrior of Thothmes III. Now from this inscription we know that all of these places, together with Khalbu (Aleppo) and Carchemish, were in the district of Naharin, the Mitanni of the Tel el-Amarna tablets. Although the capital of Dusratta was probably east of the Euphrates and in the region between the Euphrates and Khabour, the rule of this province seems to have extended across the river. In another letter (B.M. 41, 25) Ni is associated with Tunib or Tennib, and so also with Nukhasse. So that we have here our northern geographical horizon stretching from Ni on the Euphrates, probably a little north of Carchemish, to Aleppo, Tennib, and Nukhasse, the Egyptian Anagas, which I take to be in the upper portion of the Orontes valley. The city of Katna, of which Akizzi was ruler, was in close contact with these regions, and therefore, I take it, lay south of Aleppo, west of Carchemish.

I come now to more southern identifications. Katna is associated with Am, written mat Am-ma, Am-ki. This region can be none other than the Am or Ammo—"the land of the Beni Ammo," not the land of the children of his people of Numb. xxii. 5. Here then it is directly associated with Pethor, the City of Balaam—and "the river," that is Euphrates. Now the Annals of Shalmanesar show us that Pethor, the Pitru of the Assyrians, was northward of the Sajur or Sangara river and south of Carchemish. I visited this region in 1880, and then came to the conclusion that the large mound of Tashatan, which commands the entrance to the plain south of Carchemish from the Sajur valley, was the site of this city. The land of Am was then the watershed and basin of the Sajur, extending to the frontier of the North Syrian desert. In a fragmentary tablet in the Museum at Berlin (No. 163) we find these localities mentioned in order—Mitanni, the land of Am and the kings of the Hittites, Mitane being directly opposite Pethor or Pitru. From the letter of Akizzi it is evident that between the land of Am and the city of Temasgi there lay the land of Ubi. Now, from the valuable passage in Genesis xiv. 15, we know that Hobab, to which Ubi corresponds exactly, was on the left hand of Damascus—that is, north of it—so that there is no other place that can suit for Temasgi, evidently a city of importance, than Damascus, which was in or on the range of Hobab. If these identifications hold good, and they seem to me to be sound geographical deductions, Ubi or Hobab was the region of Aram Zobah, and the route of the army of Kedorlaomer and of Balaam was the eastern caravan route passing Damascus.

I now come to the philological objections to Temasgi. If Prof. Sayce had transliterated the tablets of Akizzi, I hardly think he would have made these objections. It is true that in BM. 43, 21 it is written Di-mas-ka, but this is a South Syria or Palestine letter, not the Egyptian Thamaskoo; and it is a peculiarity of the writing of Akizzi that he turns both s and d into g and t. A man who wrote iltegi for ilteki and isagyan for issakkan, or li it-ti-nunum for liddinnunum (note t and d), would most probably mean Dimaska by Temasgi.

W. ST. CHAD BOSCAWEN.

SCIENCE.

Outlines of a Philosophy of Religion. By Herman Lotze. Edited by F. C. Conybeare. (London: Sonnenschein.)

PROBABLY no German thinker exercises a greater influence on the English philosophical culture of our time than Herman Lotze, and this none the less because it is to a great extent unobtrusive and unavowed. With its conservative and strongly theistic tendencies, and with its primary qualities of spirituality, moderation, and optimism, Lotze's thought has ever been able to claim a condition of "pre-established harmony" with the peculiar needs and idiosyncrasies of English speculation. Its very defects as a system—its skeptical caution in respect of dogmatism, its avowed eclecticism, its glaring inconsistencies—all conspire to commend it to a people in whom ideal and theoretical excellencies are always subordinated to practical needs. For, as a rule, the English intellect, at its best, is suspicious of, if not averse to, any scheme of systematised thought which claims complete homogeneity as an essential feature of its construction. Its very excellence, its profession of ideal perfection, stamps it as being "too good

For human nature's daily food."

It is out of all probable relation to a universe so complex and multiform as this of ours, while its destiny seems forecasted by the fate of every philosophy in history, each of which in its turn may be said to have fallen a prey to the "instability of the homogeneous." A welcome of rare cordiality must therefore be given to this admirable translation of Lotze's posthumous lectures on the philosophy of religion by Mr. and Mrs. Conybeare. Indeed, the mention of these names suggests another interest pertaining to the book, of a somewhat pathetic kind. The translation was begun in 1882 by Mrs. Conybeare (a daughter of Prof. Max Müller), but she relinquished her task in order to give her whole time to the translation of Scherer's History of German Literature. This work she accomplished by the end of 1885, and I may be permitted to add, in such a manner that it stands forth conspicuously as one of the most successful achievements of recent translations from the German. Unfortunately she died in the following year; and the completion of this translation of Lotze's Lectures and its editing by her husband may hence be regarded as a tribute of reverential affection to a noble-minded and highly-cultured wife.

Turning now to the Lectures, their chief value consists not so much in their content as in their form. The student of the "Microcosmus" will find little here that he has not already met in the larger work, but it is a masterly compendium of the author's most characteristic speculations and conclusions. It manifests, in a remarkable manner, Lotze's powers of compression, united with his rare faculty for lucid exposition. From his accustomed metaphysico-theological standpoint, he surveys once more those problems of the universe and humanity around which his thought has always converged. Thus, his chapter on "The Existence of God" leads him to pass in review the best approved arguments which have been adduced in proof of this thesis—e.g., the ontological proof, the cosmological proof, and the teleological proof; while the defects and difficulties in each class of proof suggest some of the profoundest remarks to be found in the whole volume as to "the nature of the highest principle." Thence he proceeds to consider, in a chapter of much interest entitled "On the Notion of Creation," such questions as "In what sense creation is a development of the divine nature," "God is no empty abstraction but the all in all of qualities and attributes," "Can God do what is impossible, or what only is possible?" &c. Further sections treat of the Divine government and actual course of the world, and the work concludes with two chapters on "Religion and Morality" and "Dogmas and Confessions." But this "outline of an outline," though indicating the scope of the Lectures, conveys a very inadequate notion of their richness and suggestiveness. Scarce a page of the book can be opened which does not awaken, even in students of Lotze's larger works, sentiments of admiration for his almost unequalled powers of philosophical grasp and lucid exposition. Thus in section 3, headed by the profound remarks that "Religious faith grows out of primitive feelings more akin to first impressions of sense than to rationalised experience of a cosmos," and that "Primitive religious feeling implies a supersensuous world," we have the instructive comment:

"This inward experience may be termed the faith with which we believe, and through which we believe, the fides qua creditur, by which I mean that upon nothing short of these spiritual emotions can we base our confidence in the significance and truth of that supersensuous agency which we presupposed. But the matter and content of such faith as this cannot assume the definite form of articles of religion communicable by one person to another, until reason has set to work upon it and has investigated the problem—how the causes and import of these inward emotions of the soul cohere with the rest of experience. This is none the less necessary because articles of faith already formulated by tradition or scholastic revelation are offered to us for acceptance. For the conviction of their truth in turn can only be called forth in us by proof of their rational connexion with our other intellectual postulates. Hence our first task must be to show that our intelligence is driven by its theoretical, aesthetic, and moral demands to furnish a certain supplement to its view of the world of experience in the shape of an assumption of a supersensuous world. The human mind has endeavoured to supply such supplementary hypotheses one after another in a certain order, and to them will correspond the successive chapters of the Philosophy of Religion" (p. 7).

It would be difficult in my judgment to render with greater accuracy and happiness the causes and ordinary methods of philosophical theology; and Lotze's exposition, both here and in his remaining works, has a peculiar value at a time when the philosophical and rationalistic re-statement of truth may be described as the most imperious need of theological science. But the book is full of pregnant suggestions and remarks of a similar kind. Most apposite, e.g., are the following observations on the teleological argument for the existence of deity, though they only reproduce the fuller arguments of Lotze's other works on the same point.

"The argument from design really rests on the strange and unaccountable belief that what is without purpose, perverse, and irrational, has a better title in itself to exist, or is more likely as such to be real than what is not so. If we are possessed by such a belief, we must needs suppose a particular and peculiar purpose to have been at work, in order that anything which is rational and thus fulfils an end should be real. There is, however, nothing to prevent our making just the opposite assumption. For we must, in any case, recognise in reality something which is final and absolute, and cannot be derived from anything else; and since we must recognise and admit such an ultimate reality, why not suppose that in its original character it is entitled to those predicates of harmony—inner agreement and adjustment of means to an end?" (pp. 22, 23).

As an argument based upon probability, and, therefore—like most other religious truths—requiring faith for its initial force and perpetual sustaining power, this seems to me practically unanswerable. It illustrates also Lotze's general caution and his determination not to extort more from an argument than its fair and unforced content readily yields. Of this caution and scrupulous fairness we have repeated illustrations. Thus, though disapproving the pessimism which is so marked a feature of our present-day speculation, he is not afraid to avow that it has in theory a legitimate locus standi (p. 148).

"Lastly, it may be true that the general consciousness of what is right and wrong, recognised morality as we call it, has grown more perfect with the lapse of time; but the moral character of the living man has not made any demonstrable progress, nor does any unprejudiced person think it likely that the future will bring about any essential change therein."

"At the same time our increasing control over nature, and the greater security it provides against natural evils, leads to no end which we can discern. It cannot indefinitely increase the productivity of the earth; and therefore our belief in the continuance of the race rests on the secret assumption that the evils which now act as a check on population will also continue, without, however, increasing to such an extent as to imperil the existence of those who remain; . . . it must be allowed that, on purely theoretical grounds, there is as much to be said for the pessimistic as for the optimistic view, and that the latter rests only on our conception of God" (p. 149).

One advantage of possessing Lotze's thought, as we here have it, in outline, is that—like the skeleton form in the science of anatomy—we discern the more readily its fundamental principles, and are enabled with less danger of mistake to compare his speculation with that of other thinkers and schools.

Thus it is impossible for any one gifted with philosophical insight not to perceive that the genuine character of his method is essentially sceptical. This, no doubt, may be affirmed of most eclectic thinkers, but the fact is by no means so obvious as it is made to appear in this outline of his religious philosophy. What I mean is, not that Lotze's ultimate conclusions are altogether suspensive or doubtful, but that they are based upon impartial and suspensive enquiry, and are mostly asserted finally, not as the legitimate outcome of his principles, but as "categorical imperatives." Sometimes, indeed, he seems to me to overlook the necessarily defective character—from the standpoint of logic and demonstration—of religious truth, and hence not to give its utmost scope and energy to the spiritual principle of faith. Thus, he tells us in terms which to be acceptable need considerable qualification:

"The axioms of science are general judgments and are hypothetical. . . . But the first principles of religion and those which constitute its essence, from which we must, of course, exclude moral principles, are assertorial judgments, dogmatic statements, which assert the reality of particular single facts such as the existence of God."

It might almost be said that this distinction goes far in the direction of inverting the real facts of the case. It is science that can best claim to be dogmatic, and religion whose truths are largely based upon hypothesis. More consonant with the profoundest truth is the first quotation I have given above, as well as what he tells us in a subsequent paragraph (p. 150):

"If we, therefore, after and in view of our entire renunciation of theoretic proof, are still convinced of the necessity and truth of religious faith, we must consider this faith as an attitude of moral character. And religion really begins for us with this feeling, theoretically unprovable, yet still recognised by us, a feeling of duty, or of being bound by this Infinite whose truth we cannot theoretically demonstrate" (p. 150).

The extract thus made serves, moreover, to indicate one tendency of Lotze's thought which, in the naked outline of this treatise, seems to be somewhat excessive—I mean his stress on alleged needs, defects, and cravings of the cultured religious man. That these needs exist, that they ought to be recognised, and should be provided with suitable aliment, I should be the first to concede; but Lotze seems to make it a point of special insistence to connect their objects, &c., with traditional creeds and beliefs. A philosophy of religion in this and all other respects ought not to be hampered by over-much regard for the religious traditions of the past. It ought, so far as possible, to start afresh and lay its own independent foundations—not purposely deviating in the direction of foregone conclusions, nor on the other hand evincing a prejudice against them. Indeed, the wide and long-enduring acceptance of a religious truth will always constitute to the genuine philosopher an imperative reason for a special examination of its alleged claims.

A final word must be added on the opportuneness and value of this thoughtful treatise. For the religious thinker, whether Theist or Christian, it suggests those lines and directions of least resistance in which we may expect, in the near future, conspicuous fissures and gaps in our traditional and ecclesiastical Christianity. That it is "caviare to the vulgar" will be self-evident from what I have said of it; indeed, I have expended some speculation in endeavouring to form a popular creed which would include the most important of Lotze's truths and positions. Perhaps it is needless to say that I have completely failed. After all, the creed of the genuine thinker and philosopher has always differed, and must always differ, from that of the unideaed crowd. But to the thinker, of whatever creed or school he may chance to be, who is anxious to bring into a more or less homogeneous body of belief those religious and scientific truths which in our time are pressing most vehemently for acceptance, I have no hesitation in commending this work as one of the most suggestive and enlightening that our age has been privileged to welcome.

JOHN OWEN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PRONUNCIATION AND SPELLING OF PLACE-NAMES IN EGYPT.

London: Sept. 26, 1892.

Allow me to correct one or two mistakes in my letter in the ACADEMY of last week (p. 268). The first is due to the printer, Ovegrāsh for NEQRĀSH (Naucratis).

For the sake of consistency, it would have been better to write the article as al instead of el; and Ga'ef, Fera'en should be Ga'ef, Fara'en, though I am not sure that this spelling correctly represents these two most difficult names. They sound to the novice Gaif, Farain, and even a practised ear might be deceived in consequence of the weakening of the 'Ayyin in modern Arabic.

In one of the letters it is asserted that q pronounced as g is distinctive of Upper Egypt. This shows how little is known of Lower Egypt beyond the great towns, and how difficult it is for a traveller to shake himself free of the cockneyfied railway and boat officials, donkey-boys, and guides. The dialect of Cairo represents Qāf by a sort of gasp, and Alexandria is as proficient in the affectation(?) as Cairo. Officialdom also smiles upon it, and every little brown-capped, white-capped, and red-capped urchin (yā salām!) who thinks he knows something of the world is proud to imitate it.

But let the traveller wander among the villages, listen to the haggling in the markets and the free and easy talk of labourers at their work, and he will soon perceive that the "gasp" is not only rare, but absolutely non-existent, in the mother-tongue throughout almost the whole of the country regions. At Naucratis, indeed, where representatives of almost every family in the neighbourhood worked at the excavations, two families settled in a newly founded 'Azbah gasped the q; but these, if what they told me was true, came from (gasp)-alyūb, and (as that supposition is hardly probable) were very likely, for some good reason, from Cairo itself. The busy modern town of Za-āzi-(Zaqāziq) is of course strongly tinged with Cairene. The above remarks apply only to the country fallāhīn (and to the Arabs). In their speech the Qāf is g, and the Gim is English j.

In Lower Egypt the hard Gim goes only with the gasped Qāf; but for some parts of Upper Egypt I have a vague recollection of hard Gim (formed in the front of the mouth), with hard Qāf (far back).

I should be glad to know whether this is a mistake. There must be hundreds of travellers who can decide the question at once; but probably no one is so well qualified to pronounce an opinion as Col. Ross. What is his verdict as to the spelling of Ga'ef? Should it be Ga'if?

F. L. GRIFFITH.

Bolehall Manor House, Tamworth: Sept. 27, 1892.

Will you permit me to add a few words to the correspondence now going on in the ACADEMY?

It seems to be admitted that the etymological and classical spelling of the word tell ought to be with a double l; why then spell it with a single l?

The word tell having a meaning of its own, and a very common one, too, in Egypt, it seems to me that it ought to be spelled in the same way, whether it refers to a place in Upper or Lower Egypt. I admit, however, that in other cases where the signification of a name is not known, or not obvious, we ought to follow as strictly as possible the pronunciation of the natives.

Prof. Sayce says that he has heard the modern name of Bubastis given by a Cairene as Tell el-Basta; the natives around the place call it Tell Basta without el. Likewise we have Tell Monkdām, Tell Baglich, but Tell el-Yahudieh, Tell el-Battih.

My experience is that in the Delta the natives use indiscriminately the words tell or kôm when speaking of a hillock; nor is the word kôm absent from names in the eastern part of the delta, as, for instance, Kôm shenit, near Herbeit, Kômes-sekh, &c.

R. D'HULST.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE annual Harveian Oration will be delivered by Dr. J. H. Bridges, at the Royal College of Physicians, on Tuesday, October 18, at 4 p.m.

PROF. H. ALLEYNE NICHOLSON has been appointed to deliver a course of twelve lectures, on the Swiney foundation, at the Natural History Museum, Cromwell-road, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays during October, at 3 p.m. The subject chosen is "The Great Periods of Geological History." Admission to the lectures is free.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON will publish shortly a treatise on The Microscope: Its Construction and Management, by Dr. Henri van Heurck, director of the Antwerp Botanical Gardens, translated from the French by Mr. Wynne E. Baxter. The volume will comprise full descriptions of the various instruments in use on the continent and in this country for microscopical work, and will be freely illustrated. It will deal also with technical microscopy in general, photo-micrography, the past and future of the microscope, &c.

THE Scientific Press announces: The Art of Feeding the Invalid, by a Medical Practitioner and a Lady Professor of Cookery; The Art of Massage, by A. Creighton Hale, illustrated; How to Become a Nurse and How to Succeed, by Honor Mortem; Surgical Ward Work, by Dr. Alex. Miles.

We learn from Nature that a native gentleman has undertaken to found a biological laboratory at Calcutta, in connexion with the Zoological Gardens, with the special object of investigating the action of snake-poison, and of discovering, if possible, an antidote.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AN edition of the Coptic MSS. brought from the Fayum by Mr. Flinders Petrie is being prepared, with commentaries, indices, and facsimiles, by Mr. W. E. Crum. It will shortly be published by Mr. Nutt.

MESSRS. GILBERT & RIVINGTON have purchased the oriental founts formerly the property of Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., including seven founts of Punjabi type specially designed and cut, and a very beautiful fount of Tamil. They have recently, also, to meet the growing demand on the part of Egyptologists and Assyriologists, very largely augmented their founts of hieroglyphs and cuneiform type.

MR. A. F. CHAMBERLAIN, of Toronto, has sent us a pamphlet entitled The Language of the Mississaga Indians (Philadelphia: McCalla), which was approved as his thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at Clark University, Worcester, Massachusetts. It is pleasing to find a Canadian thus studying the aboriginal linguistics of his own country, even though he has to pass into the States in order to graduate in anthropology, and there print his researches. The Mississaga Indians are a branch of the great Algonkian family, which can be traced back to 1648. Since 1844, a small colony of them has been settled on Lake Skugog, in the province and county of Ontario. These were visited by the author in 1888, when he took down from the mouths of the most intelligent of them a vocabulary, together with some short myths and songs. The language closely resembles the two better known languages of the Algonkian stock, Nipissing and Ojibwe (for so the familiar Ojibway is here spelt). That it has changed but little in the course of a century is shown by a comparison with the vocabulary given in Barton's New Views of the Origin of the Tribes and Nations of America (Philadelphia, 1797). Still more interesting is a detailed comparison with a MS. vocabulary in the Toronto public library, which was apparently compiled by a French trader circa 1801. Mr. Chamberlain has treated his subject in a very scholarly way, discussing incidentally questions of syntax, etymology, and mythology; and he has added a bibliography, based upon Pilling's monumental Bibliography of the Algonquian Languages, which was noticed in the ACADEMY of August 20.

Vocalismus der Oskischen Sprache. By C. D. Buck. (Leipzig: Koehler.) Since Bruppacher, whose work, excellent for the time at which he wrote (1869), is now necessarily antiquated, no connected attempt has been made to reduce to order the complex sound-laws of the Oscan dialect. Mr. Buck, who, as we learn from his preface, is an American, though he writes from Leipzig, has now accomplished half the task, the treatment of the vowel-laws, and has done the work well, with all the exactness that we should expect from a pupil of Brugmann's. He writes in a style which, like his master's, is always clear and readable, and his judgment on most moot points may be trusted implicitly. In dealing with dialects which are preserved only in inscriptions, the great difficulty is to distinguish between the words about which we really know something and those at whose origin we can only guess; and the chief danger lies in basing phonetic laws on forms which we may after all have misinterpreted. Thus the connexion of Lat. aedēs (p. 143) with aedw, though universally accepted, is very forced—"fire-place" is a curious designation for either a temple or a house—and if the d is original, as it well may be, though we must then give up attempting to derive the word, there is no need either to think that Oscan aidil is borrowed from Latin, or to reject Schulze's explanation of Osc. aidlafed as a miswriting of aidfakel* (not, as Mr. Buck prints it, aidkafed*), answering to a Latin perfect aedi-facit* from a vulgar form aedi-faciō*. So (p. 172), Bücheler now makes Umbrian sihitu = Lat. cinctōs, and if this is true Lat. cingō can no longer go with κῶμβος; but his earlier view that the word = Lat. citōs is equally defensible. Osc. embratur (p. 192) need not stand for em-parator*; it is more likely that it goes with Osc. bratcis, imperit, Gaulish bratruide (p. 25), and that Lat. imperator is merely due to a popular connexion with parō. Bücheler's explanation of Osc. slauqid as = Lat. locō (p. 28) is phonetically quite untenable. A few other points in comparative etymology may be noticed. Sanskrit har, "take" (p. 66), as Mr. Buck might have learnt from Prof. Whitney, is a by-form of bhar ("bear"), and so cannot go with χελρ; Vergil's "omnia fert aetas" shows how easily the idea of carrying may pass into that of abstracting. The Latin word which (p. 67) Mr. Buck, like everyone else, puts with πῆος and Sk. pastes meant originally "tail," and so cannot go with those words. Bohemian pjř (p. 111) Miklosich puts with other Slavonic words meaning "red," not with př*. Latin terra (p. 176) points to an original form tēra* (cf. narrō for gnārō*), not to tersa*. But it is easy to accumulate minute criticisms. Mr. Buck's book will prove an indispensable help to every student of the ancient Italian dialects, and we may well hope that he will ere long complete his task by a similar analysis of Oscan consonant-laws.

FINE ART.

THE HISTORY OF ANCIENT ART.

The History of Art in Phrygia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia. From the French of Georges Perrot and Charles Chipiez.

The History of Art in Persia. From the same. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE monumental work which bears the names of Perrot and Chipiez no longer needs an introduction to the English reader. It is at once the most exhaustive and the most important work of the kind that has ever been produced. The credit of it mainly belongs to M. Perrot: to M. Chipiez we owe the architectural drawings and designs which were indispensable to his colleague's labours. But the actual historian of ancient art is the eminent member of the French Institute whose name stands first on the title-page of the work. It is accordingly with M. Perrot that the present reviewer has to do. I am no architect: archaeology, and not architecture, is the subject on which alone I have a right to speak. It is only as brother archaeologists that M. Perrot and myself can meet on common ground.

The first thing that strikes the reviewer in reading what M. Perrot has to tell us is the minute care which he has bestowed upon his work. Nothing seems to have escaped his notice. He is as well acquainted with the latest discoveries as with the time-honoured theories of a former generation. He has made himself master of materials which are scattered through a multitude of periodicals written in the various languages of modern Europe. In honourable contrast to so many scholars of to-day, he has not confined himself to the literature of his own country: his references to English and German writers are as numerous as his references to French authorities.

But M. Perrot's History of Ancient Art is not merely a monument of industry and learning. M. Perrot has marshalled his materials with consummate skill and brought to bear upon them the judgment of a trained critic. Nothing is more remarkable than the way in which he has conscientiously worked out each small detail, not shrinking, where it has been necessary, from all the vexatiousness of a lengthened correspondence with those from whose publications he has derived his facts.

In his account of Phrygia and its art he has of course been largely indebted to the explorations and discoveries of Prof. Ramsay. In fact, those who wish for a thoroughly satisfactory account of what these have been cannot do better than study the pages of M. Perrot's volume. They will thus form some idea of the gains to archaeological science which Prof. Ramsay's journeys in Asia Minor have produced.

Next to Phrygia more is known about the art of Lycia than about that of any other part of Asia Minor. Thanks to the explorations of Fellows, Bonndorf, and others, the monuments of Lycia have been fairly well described. Caria and Lydia are in a less fortunate position. Mr. Paton's excavations have lately thrown light on the early pottery of Caria, and I have done my best to make known to epigraphists the Carian inscriptions which have been found in Egypt. But we are still very far from possessing even a rudimentary knowledge of ancient Carian art. Caria still needs its Fellows and its Schliemann.

Lydia is even worse off. Apart from a few coins, on certain of which the keen-sightedness of M. Six has detected the name of Alyattes in Greek characters, we are reduced to a very meagre list of monuments for any knowledge of ancient Lydian art. Foremost among these is the famous tumulus of Alyattes, near Sardes, the magnificent stone chamber in the centre of which was excavated by Dr. Spiegelthal. To this must be added the tumuli in its immediate neighbourhood, opened by Dr. Dennis—but, alas, already desecrated and rifled in the Roman age; as well as the blocks of stone sent by Croesus to the temple of Ephesus, upon one of which is an inscription in what are apparently letters of the Lydian alphabet. When we add to these an inscription in similar characters on a piece of stone found at Sardes and now in the Ashmolean Museum, a mould of serpentine now in the Louvre, the figures on which remind us somewhat distantly of Babylonian art, and some very interesting ornaments of gold discovered near Aidin, we have practically exhausted the remains at present known to us of native Lydian art. The fragment of an Egyptian alabastron, found by Spiegelthal in the mortuary chamber of Alyattes, and figured by M. Perrot, came of course from Egypt, like the upper part of a similar vase from the same place, which is now in my possession. I may add that I also possess other evidences of intercourse between Lydia and foreign countries in the days of its independence, in the shape of a large Egyptian scarab and a finely-engraved chalcedony of Assyrian workmanship, which were found in the lower or Lydian stratum at Sardes. Along with the seal of chalcedony two others were discovered of identical shape, but so rudely carved as to betray their native origin, together with an amulet of polished stone, which has been cut into the form of an animal.

What makes our comparative ignorance of ancient Lydian art the more remarkable is the fact that Lydia is just that part of Western Asia Minor which is at present the most accessible to visitors. A railway runs past the site of Sardes, while Smyrna is the resort of numberless tourists. It was to Smyrna, too, that the University of Oxford once sent an archaeological student, with the intention of eventually establishing there an archaeological school.

I have left myself but little space in which to do justice to the volume on the ancient art of Persia. Suffice it to say, therefore, that it is well worthy of the work of which it forms a portion, and that it is indispensable to every student of the art of Akhaemenian Persia. The illustrations which have been lavished on it will be found particularly serviceable. I am fully at one with M. Perrot in believing that the famous winged figure at Murghab could not have been executed in the life-time of Cyrus. The inscriptions on the adjoining buildings go to show that it was intended to represent the supposed founder of the Persian Empire; but, if so, a sufficient time must have elapsed between the death of Cyrus and the erection of the monument for a cult of the king to have grown up. The figure represents not a human being, but a winged divinity. Moreover, above the head is a head-dress, the conception of which has been derived from the art of Egypt. It thus shows not only that Egypt had been conquered, but that the conquerors had returned to Persia and introduced into it the religious art of the conquered province. We are consequently referred to a later date than the reign of Kambyzes. The same testimony is borne by the use of the Persian cuneiform alphabet on the walls of the Murghab monuments. Cyrus served himself with the old syllabary of Babylon and with the Babylonian language; a Persian cuneiform alphabet had not as yet been invented. Of Kambyzes we have no official record whatever in cuneiform characters. It would seem, therefore, that the invention of a peculiar Persian script formed part of that national movement of which Darius was at once the representative and the organiser.

The shortcomings of the English translation of the Histoire de l'Art dans l'Antiquité had better remain unnoticed. The translator is evidently not an archaeologist, and his work seems to have been done in haste. At all events it is difficult otherwise to account for such oversights as "right" instead of "left" in the description of a Lydian object, of which a drawing is given (p. 293). The translation reads smoothly, however, and those who are unfamiliar with French will doubtless find it welcome.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY."

Fen Ditton, Cambridge: Sept. 27, 1892.

Canon Taylor says he is agreeably surprised to find I have so few objections to his article. The reason is that the criticisms in his review were so few and so slight. I dealt with almost all of them in my first letter. I shall treat of the few I omitted then in my present letter.

Let me first note a few things in his letter of last week. He admits that the law of progressive degradation is not universal. A law which is not universal, but only applies to particular cases, is not a law at all. As Canon Taylor's remarks on my treatment of the Alemannic, Gaulish, and British coins were based on the assumption of a well-established law without exceptions, the criticism, of course, falls to the ground.

If Canon Taylor looks at Herodotus iv. 166, he will find that he is inaccurate in saying that Darius put a Satrap (Aryandes) to death for issuing coins heavier than his own. It was because the silver was finer in quality.

Canon Taylor evidently is in despair over Plutarch's passage about Solon's currency. He talks wildly about a change from the Aeginetan to the Euboic standard at Athens. Because the coins of Aegina circulated at Athens before Athens had a coinage of her own, it does not follow that Athenians weighed gold and silver on the Aeginetan standard. The newly-found Polity of Athens shows that there was an old Attic weight standard in use before Solon's time quite different from the Aeginetan. Canon Taylor has the old notion about Solon reducing the weight of the coinage in order to relieve the debtors. The Polity has dispelled this phantom effectually.

As regards the Daric being the archetype of the Greek coinages, I want Canon Taylor to say how he accounts for the fact that we find the standard of 130 grains in use in Greece, supposing that with him we take it as borrowed. The Phoenicians were the intermediaries between Greece and Asia; but as they used the 260 grain unit, we ought to find the Greeks using that. Again, the Euboians traded with the great cities of Ionia; so if we suppose them to have got their standard thence, they ought likewise to have their standards of about 260 grains, for that was the one in use in Ionia (cf. my Metallic Currency, 221-2).

Canon Taylor seems to me rather rash in speaking of a Phocæan silver standard, before there is any proof of silver being weighed on any such standard by the Phocæans. He speaks as if the old assumption, that electrum was to silver as 10 is to 1, held everywhere and eternally. If anything is certain, it is that electrum varied greatly in its relation to silver and pure gold. At Cyzicus, for instance, it seems to have been only about one half gold.

Canon Taylor, by his silence, admits the force of my criticisms in his objection to the price of the ox in Delos, Rome, and Egypt.

Now for the few objections and inaccuracies which I left unnoticed. He says my first great heresy is my objection to Brandis' fifteen-stater theory. I would have naturally supposed that my attack on the Babylonian origin of the weight standards, about which Canon Taylor says nothing, was a great heresy—it certainly comes earlier in my book; and likewise that my attack on Schrader's principles of "Linguistic Palaeontology" in my third chapter was a still greater one in Canon Taylor's eyes, as he has been one of Schrader's chief exponents in this country. About this heresy he is also silent. Has he embraced it as the true faith?

If he is not at home in Roman currency, Canon Taylor could certainly criticise this part of my book with a knowledge of the subject. He says that I confess "all this to be purely conjectural" (p. 291), referring to certain facts relating to the excavations at Hissarlik and Mycenæ, &c. I confess nothing of the sort; but Canon Taylor will find my words only refer to the monetary system of Carthage, Gades, and Emporise.

Canon Taylor asks me to account for gold being to silver as 17 : 1 in Asia Minor 1000 B.C., and being as 15 : 1 in Greece in the seventh century B.C. If he had even asked me to account for such a disparity existing at the same moment, I could at once answer it. Marco Polo (ii. 6270 of Yule's translation—cf. Metallic Currency 146) says that in Carajan gold was to silver as 6 : 1, while in the province of Zardandan, five days west of Carajan, it was 5 : 1. I have proved that there were constant fluctuations in the ratio between gold and silver in ancient times (ib. pp. 338, 339).

WILLIAM RIDGEWAY.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: Sept. 24, 1892.

So far, so good. But we know nothing yet on three out of the five links of the evidence about the vase which Mr. Torr quotes. (1) Who brought the vase to England? and on whose authority is all this account? (2) Who took it out of the tomb? (3) Was the tomb intact. So far as we yet know, the whole history of this vase may rest on the mistakes or the fancies of an Arab tomb-grabber or a Luxor dealer. Anonymous statements of this kind are not the sort of proofs required in historical questions, and I should have least expected to have to remind Mr. Torr of this.

WM. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE autumn exhibition of pictures, sculpture, and designs will open at the New Gallery next week. The exhibition of works by living animal painters, of which mention has already been made in the ACADEMY, will also open next week at Birmingham.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON announce a Life of John Linnell, written by Mr. Alfred T. Story. It will be in two volumes, with numerous illustrations from pictures and sketches.

MESSRS. SEELEY will publish shortly The Inns of Court, by the Rev. W. J. Loffie, with twelve copper-plates and many smaller illustrations by Mr. Herbert Railton and other artists.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have in the press a translation of Adolf Erman's Life in Ancient Egypt, by Mrs. H. M. Tirard (Miss Helen Beloe), with maps and numerous illustrations.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, will publish by subscription Monumental Brasces of Lancashire and Cheshire, by Mr. James L. Thornely. The work will contain twenty-six full-page engravings, after drawings made by the author from heel-ball rubbings of the original brasses, each accompanied by a short article describing the brass, its position, the vicissitudes it has undergone, and the persons it commemorates. There will also be an introductory essay upon monumental brasses generally, with references to local examples.

THE first edition of Mr. Frederick Litchfield's Illustrated History of Furniture is exhausted; and the publishers (Messrs. Truslove & Shirley) hope to have a second edition ready early in November. This will include a few additional illustrations.

A LOAN exhibition, illustrating the history of the city, is to be held at Dundee during the present winter. Among the objects to be shown are—portraits, views, locally printed books, coins and medals, plate, municipal insignia, and mechanical models, &c., showing industrial development and trade processes.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. J. Menant exhibited the rubbing of a Hittite bas-relief, found at Angora, which is now at Constantinople. It shows two personages, with an inscription in Hittite characters by the side of each. One of them is the god Sandu, to whom a king (with a name not yet deciphered) is making an offering. M. Menant took the opportunity to express his views about the Hittites generally. He would confine the name "Hittite" (Hétéen) to the people called Kheta by the Egyptians and Khatti by the Assyrians, to whom he attributes the peculiar sculpture and hieroglyphic writing found in Northern Syria and Asia Minor, probably dating from the sixth century B.C. But he distinguishes altogether from them the Hittim of the Old Testament.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Cocks & Co.: My Fairest Child, The City of Night, Crossing the Bar, I had a Flower, and Oh! Beautiful Star. Songs by Lawrence Kellie. The first, to Kingsley's well-known lines, is one of the composer's best songs; there is something quaint and dreamy about both melody and accompaniment. The second is of a lower, a melodramatic order. The "Tennyson" and the last two are simple, attractive compositions.

Age and With Early Horn. Songs arranged by Mary Carmichael. The first is from Boyce's "Anacreon." The pianoforte accompaniment is clever, although there are one or two places in which the harmonies do not agree well with the old melody. The second, a quaint and vigorous song by John Ernest Galliard, who was a contemporary of the great Bach, has a most effective accompaniment.

An Eastern Lament and The Arena. By Joseph L. Roeckel. The first is a sentimental song, but is well written, and, in its way, taking. The second is more commonplace. The "Come to me" major section begins in a very Gounod-esque strain.

The Light of thy Love. By Georges Pfeiffer. This is not very original in melody, while the pianoforte accompaniment is jerky. There is a pleasing cadence on page 4 from a minor key to its relative major.

The Silent Chimes. By Frederic H. Cowen. This ballad commences in a simple, pleasing manner, but afterwards falls into a somewhat ordinary groove. The consecutive fifths in the accompaniment are effective, and, moreover, can easily be justified.

The Silent Ferry. By Henri Logé. This is not a very elaborate song, but it has a graceful pianoforte accompaniment.

My Love and Delight. By Ernest Lake. A quaint and exceedingly pleasing song.

In Years to Come. By Madge E. Courvy. A simple ballad, but the end is not as good as the beginning.

Twelfth Night. Cantata for female voices by Alfred Redhead. This is a clever little composition. The music is bright and effectively written for the voices. There are in all only ten numbers; the Trio and Chorus, "Merrily, O Merrily," is one of the best. Brevity is the soul of music of this kind.

He Stoops to Win. Operetta written by Cunningham Bridgman, composed by Wilfred Bendall. Lively, and full of humour. Some of the sentimental ballads of the present day are caricatured in an amusing manner.

The Organist's Library. Book I. By Dr. W. J. Westbrook. This is an excellent number. It contains an Overture, "Lazarus," by J. H. Rolfe, which is unmistakably eighteenth-century music, but full of vigour and interest; a graceful "Andante" by Joseph Woelfl; a "Larghetto" by Spohr; and an "Andante" by Haydn. All four pieces are well transcribed, and not one of them is hackneyed.

Quatre Morceaux de Salon. For violin and pianoforte. Nos. 1 and 2. By Emile Sauret. No. 1, "Vision," has an attractive theme, somewhat Wagnerish in character; the middle section of the piece is in genuine "salon" style. No. 2, "Capricciotto," is light and lively.

Walter Macfarren's Pianoforte Method. The author has written all the musical examples himself; they are pleasing little pieces, but some of the positions are difficult for beginners. The "Toccata" is a useful study. The elements of harmony are also given; the importance of understanding what is played is now fully recognised.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons.

By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.
"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.
"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 and 22, FERNIVAL STREET, E.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW BOOK BY MRS. THACKERAY RITCHIE.

Extra crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

RECORDS of TENNYSON, RUSKIN and BROWNING

By ANNE RITCHIE.

Also a Large-Paper Edition, limited to 75 copies, 25s.

THE TIMES.—"The papers are delightful from beginning to end, full of genial reminiscence, and inspired by a generous and without discriminating appreciation. If we were once to begin to quote from them we should find it difficult to make an end."

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

The RAILWAY MAN and his CHILDREN.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

Ready.

DOMBY and SON.

By Charles Dickens.

Ready.

With 56 Illustrations.

Other Volumes to follow.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Now ready, extra crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

BEAST and MAN in INDIA: a Popular Sketch of Indian Animals in their Relations with the People. By JOHN LOCKWOOD KILPIN, C.I.E. With many Illustrations by the Author.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A very charming volume, at once entertaining and instructive....one of the best about India we have seen for a long time."

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE

No. 396, OCTOBER, 1892, price 1s., contains—

1. DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. 23-25.
2. A FRENCH PROVINCE in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By D. BARNES.
3. "CORSIKA" BOSWELL. By E. S. Suckburgh.
4. LITERARY TRAMPS.
5. THREE CENTURIES of OXFORD.
6. SOME NEW ENGLAND ARCHITECTURE. By A. G. HYDE.
7. THE WHITE WEAVER. By GILBERT PARKER.
8. ON an IRISH SNIPE-BOG. By A. G. BRADLEY.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

For OCTOBER, 1892, price Sixpence, contains—

1. SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Engraved by W. BISCORDE GABONIA, from a Photograph by WALTER, 161, Regent Street, W. (Front.)
2. SOME MUSICAL CONDUCTORS. JOSEPH BENNETT. Illustrated by Portraits from Photographs.
3. THE SOLITARY GIRL. ARCHIE FAIRBAIN.
4. SALLY DOWS. Prologue, Chap. I. (To be continued.)
5. BEARDS and NO BEARDS. J. CUTHBERT HADDEN. Illustrated by Joseph Grego.
6. CLIPPER SHIPS. HERBERT RUSSELL. Illustrated by H. R. MILLAR.
7. A SUMMER among the DOVECOOTES. ALFRED WATKINS. Illustrated by C. M. Gere and E. H. New, from Photographs.
8. OOLF and GOLFING. HORACE HUTCHINSON. Illustrated.
9. A FRIEND of the COMMUNE. GILBERT PARKER.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

DAVID NUTT,

270, 271, STRAND, LONDON.

Now ready.

THE DOCUMENTS of the HEXATEUCH. Newly Translated and Chronologically Arranged by W. E. ADDIS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Vol. I. THE OLDEST BOOK of HEBREW HISTORY. With Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo, 350 pages, cloth, 10s. 6d.

 The only work in English which gives the documents of the Pentateuch and Book of Joshua in chronological order as determined by modern critics.

FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

INDIAN FAIRY TALES. Selected and Edited by J. JACOBS. Illustrated by J. D. Batten. Crown 8vo, uniform in fane cloth with "English Fairy Tales" and "Celtic Fairy Tales." 6s.

One Hundred and Fifty Large-Paper copies have been printed on Japanese vellum. Subscription price, 31s. 6d. net. [October 5.]

*Prospectus on application.THREE PLAYS (Deacon

BRODIE, BEAU AUSTIN, ADMIRAL GUINEA). By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY and ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. 16mo. Printed by Constable on Hand-made Paper, 7s. 6d. net.

Thirty Large-paper copies are printed on Japanese vellum at £2 2s. net, and One Hundred copies on Dutch Hand-made Paper at 18s. net for the first fifty copies.

 After publication the price of the ordinary Edition will be raised. [November.]

*Prospectus on application.THE TUDOR TRANSLATIONS.

Edited by W. E. HENLEY. First Issue FLORIO'S MONTAIGNE. Reprinted from the Original Edition, with an Estimate of Florio's Place in English Literature, by Mr. G. SAINTSBURY. To be published in 3 vols. of upwards of 150 pages each, printed by Constable on Hand-made Paper, with rough edges and bound in half-buckram.

Price to Subscribers, 12s. 6d. net per Volume before publication.

Twelve copies will be printed on Japanese vellum at £3 3s. net per Volume.

Prospectus of the Tudor Translation Series on application.

[Vol. I., November.]

AISSLING MEIC CONGLINNE.

(The Vision of MacConglinne.) A Twelfth Century Irish Tale. Edited by Prof. KUNO MEYER. With page for page English Version, Glossary of the Rarer Words, Critical and Exegetical Notes, and Index of Person and Place Names. Accompanied by an Introduction on the Composition, Date, and Origin of the Tale by Prof. W. WOLLNER. Crown 8vo, upwards of 350 pages, cloth. Subscription price before publication, 7s. 6d. net. To be raised upon publication. [October 15.]

*Prospectus on application.FOLK-LORE.—III. 3, SEPTEMBER.

Demy 8vo, 150 pp., 3s. 6d. net.

CONTENTS.

QUERIES as to DR. TYLOR'S VIEWS on ANIMISM. J. S. STUART-OLLENIE.

AN ANALYSIS of certain FINNISH ORIGINS. Hon. J. ABERCROMBY.

BANTU CUSTOMS and LEGENDS. Rev. J. MACDONALD. IMPORTANCE du FOLK-LORE pour les ETUDES de l'ANCIEN FRANCAIS. M. WILMOTTE.

FOLK-LORE MISCELLANEA. Prof. J. RHYNS.

CELTIC MYTH and SAGA: the Progress of Research during the past two years. ALFRED NUTT.

REVIEWS—CORRESPONDENCE—BIBLIOGRAPHY.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A WOMAN'S AMBITION. By Henry CRESSWELL, Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine," "A Willy Widow," &c. 3 vols.

SIR ANTHONY. By Adeline Sergeant, Author of "Caspar Brooke's Daughter," "An East London Mystery," &c. 3 vols.
"Sir Anthony" possesses the most uncommon merit of a well-constructed, well-balanced plot. The story is told in a perfectly straightforward way, with no unnecessary digressions; no useless characters are introduced, and the whole effect is that of a well-finished production."—Manchester Examiner.

BENT ON CONQUEST. By Edith MAUD NICHOLSON. 3 vols.

"Evidently this is a story in which sentimental readers will rejoice. Plot, characters, incidents, and diversions are all one woof of optimism."—Athenaeum.

QUIXOTE, the WEAVER. By C. G. FURLEY SMITH. 3 vols.

"This is a story of many merits. No less conscientiously than cordially do we recommend 'Quixote, the Weaver' to the novel-reading public."—Daily Telegraph.

THE FINGER of SCORN. By Reginald E. SALWEY, Author of "Wildwater Terrace." 2 vols.

"All the chapters are drawn with remarkable skill and sympathy, the style of writing is spontaneous and interesting, and in a quite unobtrusive manner a very high tone pervades the whole book. We can heartily recommend it to all novel-readers."—Manchester Examiner.

BELHAVEN. By Max Beresford, Author of "Bonnie Dundee." 2 vols.

HURST & BLACKETT'STHREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

PART of the PROPERTY.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

THE AWAKENING of MARY FEN-

WICK. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS.

By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE.

By M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE.

By the AUTHOR of "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

A CROOKED PATH.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

ONE REASON WHY.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MAHME NOUSIE.

By G. MANVILLE FENN.

THE IDES of MARCH.

By G. M. ROBINS.

A SELECTION FROM HURST & BLACKETT'SSTANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

NOTHING NEW.

MISTRESS and MAID.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

A NOBLE LIFE.

HANNAH.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A BRAVE LADY.

STUDIES from LIFE.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.

WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.

THE OLD JUDGE; or, Life in a Colony.

TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.

The AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ROBERT FALCONER.

ALEC FORBES.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LAIRD of NORLAW.

AGNES.

LIFE of IRVING.

A ROSE in JUNE.

PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER and HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

THE

LINOTYPEComposing MachineIS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.Extract from the "Printers' Register,"December 7th, 1891.*

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,

30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN begs to announce that the NEW NOVEL by I. ZANG WILL, entitled, "CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO," is ready this day, in Three Volumes, and may be obtained at any Library.

LONDON: 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

A MODERN ROMANCE.

MESSRS. METHUEN & CO. beg to announce that they have this day published A MODERN ROMANCE, by LAWRENCE BLISS, with an Etching by CHARLES P. SAINTON. Price in paper, 2s. 6d.; and in buckram, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, LONDON, W.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 924.—OCTOBER, 1892.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.—MANNERS, MORALS, AND FEMALE EMANCIPATION. (Being a Familiar Letter from a Woman of Quality.)—LOWLAND SCOTLAND IN THE LAST CENTURY, by James Colville, D.Sc.—THE RAT-CATCHER OF HAMELS, by Gustav Hartwig, translated by Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B.—TASHANIA AND ITS SILVER-FIELDS, by Sir E. Braddon, K.C.M.G.—IN LURID LIGHT, by Esme Stuart.—SNAPE AND TIGER.—SINGULARLY DELUDED, chaps. xii.-xv.—THE TYPICAL AMERICAN EMPLOYER: MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE.—THE OLD SALOON.—INDIA'S DEMAND FOR A GOLD CURRENCY, by Clarmont Daniell.—THE PERSIAN PROBLEM.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE IMPERIAL AND ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW

ORIENTAL and COLONIAL RECORD. OCTOBER, 1892.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.
ASIA.—ROBERT MICHELL: "BAM-I-DUNIA" (THE PAMIRS).
SIR W. MOORE: "THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF HOSPITALS IN INDIA".
FUNDIT GOPALACHARLU: "SEA VOYAGES BY HINDUS".
DADABHAI NAOROJI, M.P.: "ENGLAND'S HONOUR TOWARD INDIA".
A. MICHE: "KOREA".
AFRICA.—JOHN PERDICARIS: "THE CONDITION OF MOROCCO: THE ANGERS REBELLION".
W. B. HARRIS: "BRITISH SUBJECTS IN MOROCCO".
DR. R. N. CUST: "THE ETHICS OF AFRICAN EXPLORATION".
COLONIES.—LAWRENCE IRWELL: "THE PRESENT POSITION OF CANADA".
ORIENTALIA.—J. OFFORD, Jun.: "THE MYTHOLOGY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS".
GENERAL.—THE CHOLERA QUESTION, by SHASTRI, Surg.-Gen. Sir W. MOORE, The Hon. KOLLO RUSSELL, and Sir J. FAYLER.
"ORIENTAL AND PSEUDO-ORIENTAL CREMATION".
"A MEMBER": "SIDE-LIGHTS ON THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1892".
DR. G. W. LEITNER: "LEGENDS, SONGS, AND CUSTOMS OF PAKISTAN".
SUMMARY OF THE ORIENTAL CONGRESSES OF 1891 AND 1892.
CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE INDIA AND FOREIGN OFFICES.
ABANDONMENT OF THE NUMBER "NINTH" BY THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1892.
THE LISBON ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1892.
CORRESPONDENCE, NOTES, &c.—An Anglo-Swedish-Oriental Parca, Act II.—Professor J. Bryce, M.P., on the Japan Constitution.—Letter from Persia.—Letter from Tientsin: General Tchong-Kitong.—Misuse of an Oriental Congress for Political Purposes, by C. D. COLLET.
SUMMARY OF EVENTS IN ASIA, AFRICA, AND THE COLONIES.
REVIEWS AND NOTICES.
 (29 Articles, about 300 pp., royal 8vo, price 2s.)

PUBLISHING DEPARTMENT:

ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WOKING.

Quarterly, Sixpence.

A PHONETIC HINDUSTANEE VOCABULARY—with Sentences, Hints on Grammar, &c.—is contained in the SUPPLEMENT to the HERETIC, for OCTOBER, 1892.

CHARLTON TUCKER, Beauchamp Avenue, Leamington.

THE MONTHLY PACKET.

OCTOBER, 1892.—Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

MARRIAGE, By MOIRA O'NEILL.
THE RISE OF UNIVERSITIES AND THEIR LATEST DEVELOPMENT, By J. D. MONTGOMERY.
MASTER BARTLEMY, Chaps. VIII.—XI, By F. E. CROMPTON.
REVOLVING SUNS, By J. E. GORE, F.R.A.S.
AN OLD WOMAN'S OUTLOOK, By C. M. VOSGE.
SERIAL STORIES.
SIX STUDIES IN ITALIAN LITERATURE—I, By F. J. SNELL.
THE CHINA CUPBOARD.
COMPETITIONS AND RULES.

LONDON: A. D. INNES & CO.

Now Ready.—OCTOBER, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 41.

ARE THE IRISH EVICTED TENANTS KNAVES? By WILLIAM O'BRIEN, M.P.
WAS IT RIGHT?—WAS IT WRONG? By OLIVE SCHREINER.
COUNTY CRICKET IN 1892, By W. G. GRAVE.
LONDON IMPROVEMENTS, By FREDERICK HARRISON.
SPEECHES AND SPEAKERS OF TO-DAY, By "M.P."
OUR SIKH AUXILIARIES, By Colonel the Hon. N. G. LYTTELTON.
JIM THE ORANG AND HIS COUSINS, By Professor R. L. GARNER.
LIBERALISM—NEW STYLE? By H. W. MASSINGHAM.
THE DEGENERATION OF HUMAN TEETH; ITS CAUSE AND ITS CURE, By J. LEON WILLIAMS.
MY PARIS NOTEBOOK, By ALBERT D. VANDAM.
LABOUR COLONIES ABROAD, By D. M. STEVENSON.
THE TRIUMPH OF THE VARIETY ENTERTAINMENT, By A. B. WALKLEY.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.

THE POLICY OF THE POPE.
THE RECENT "HEAT-WAVE", By Sir R. S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S.
McKINLEYISM AND THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION, By ROBERT DONALD.
IRISH LITERATURE: its Origin, Environment, and Influence, By GEORGE STIGLSON, M.P.
LESSONS OF AMERICAN HISTORY: a Reply, By Prof. T. RALEIGH ARCHBISHOP MAGEE.
THE COERCION OF TRADE UNIONS, By CLEMENTINE BLACK.
OF NUTS AND NUT-CRACKERS, By PHIL ROBINSON.
EQUALITY, By DAVID G. RICHIE.
THE RISE OF THE COAL TRADE, By ROBERT L. GALLOWAY.
THE MESSAGE OF ISRAEL, By JULIA WEDGWOOD.
THE ENGLISH CHARACTER OF CANADIAN INSTITUTIONS, By J. G. BOLTON, C.M.G., LL.D., D.C.L. (Clerk of the Canadian House of Commons).
 LEISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

Now ready, for OCTOBER, price Sixpence.

(Being Part I. of Volume 4.)

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Editor—Rev. JAS. HASTINGS, M.A.

Annual Subscription (prepaid), post free, Six Shillings.

Now ready, bound in cloth.

VOLUME III., price 7s. 6d.

"The third yearly issue of 'The Expository Times' makes a large and handsome volume, rich in matter... Amid such wealth and variety it is impossible to particularise. The busy pastor, who is left with little time for continuous study, has large and wholesome provision made for him here, and others who, having little leisure, wish to keep themselves abreast as far as possible of what is being done in Biblical studies, will find here very much what they want."

Prof. SALMON, D.D., in 'The Critical Review'.

Subscribers' Names received by all Booksellers.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 28, George Street.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 279, for OCTOBER.

THE INFLUENCE OF SCHOOL LIFE AND WORK ON CHARACTER (continued).

THE MARIA GREY TRAINING COLLEGE: a Retrospect.

THE CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE AND COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

ON THE TRUE LEVER OF EDUCATION.

OLD WRITING MASTERS: an Educational Cause.

FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.

DIVISION SIMPLIFIED.

OCCASIONAL NOTES: Notes on Elementary Schools.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

FOREIGN NOTES:—France, Germany, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece.

CORRESPONDENCE: Schools and Universities.

REVIEWS AND MINOR NOTICES.

TRANSLATION PRIZES.

Price 6d., per post, 7d.

Office: 95, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

OCTOBER.

MR. HENLEY'S CONTROVERSIES, By FREDERICK HARRISON.
AERIAL NAVIGATION, By HIRSH S. MAXIM.
THE TRADES UNION CONGRESS, By H. W. MASSINGHAM.
RAPHAEL, By WALTER PATER.
THE UNIVERSITY OF FEZ (With Map), By STEPHEN BONVAL.
VICTOR HUGO: NOTES OF TRAVEL, By A. U. SWINBURNE.
RUSSIA AND CHINA, By R. S. GOSSET.
OUR WEEKLY REVIEWS, By W. EARL HODGSON.
THE SETTLEMENT OF WALES, By Prof. W. ROYD DAWKINS, F.R.S.

THE CHARACTERISTIC OF FRENCH LITERATURE, By FERDINAND BRUNETIERE.

THE BARKEN GROUND OF NORTHERN CANADA, By W. BASIL WORSFOLD.

SILVER AND INDIAN FINANCE, By SAMUEL MONTAGU, M.P.
 CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR

FOR THE SESSION 1892-93.

MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CORNING, Manchester.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. GERARD FORD.

Now ready, post 8vo, price 6s.

I, TOO: a Novel in Two Books.

By MRS. GERARD FORD.

With an Illustration by Florence M. Cooper.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, AND ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

PROF. LOISETTE'S DISCOVERIES: THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike numerous Lost memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better—see book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A teaching method for all subjects. Invaluable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains

MEMORY AND SUCCESS

ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS FOR PROSPERITY'S POST FREE. With opinions of MR. B. A. HICOTT, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.

Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in NEVER FORGETTING and CURE FOR MIND WANDERING. Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.

PROF. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

NEW BOOKS.

SKETCHES from EASTERN HISTORY. By Theodor Nöldeke, Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Strassburg, Translated by JOHN SUTHERLAND BLACK, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE MEMORABILIA of JESUS, commonly called the GOSPEL of ST. JOHN. By WILLIAM WYNNE PEYTON, Minister of Free St. Luke's, Broughty Ferry, N.B. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

HYMNS; their History and Development in the Greek and Latin Churches, Germany and Great Britain. By ROUNDELL, Earl of Selborne. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

DRAWING and ENGRAVING. A Brief Exposition of Technical Principles and Practice. By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, R.P.E. With numerous Illustrations selected or commissioned by the Author. Fcap. 4to, cloth. [In the press.]

A HISTORY of SOCIALISM. By Thomas Kirkup. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

JUKES' SCHOOL MANUAL of GEOLOGY. Sixth and Cheaper Edition. Edited by A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S. Illustrated, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

MARRIAGE and FAMILY RELATIONS: a Manual of Practical Law. By NEVILL GEARY. Large crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

RAILWAYS: a Manual of Practical Law. By F. M. Preston. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

A STRING of BEADS: Verses for Children. By Lady Lindsay. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

NEW NOVELS.

THE LAST TOUCHES, and other Stories. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. [Ready on 24th.]

A TANGLED WEB. By Lady Lindsay. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 21s. [In the press.]

ALADDIN in LONDON: a Romance. By Fergus Hume. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. [In the press.]

THE DIVERS: a Romance of Oceania. By Hume Nisbet. Illustrated with Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

STORIES. By Ascott R. Hope. Illustrated with Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

NEW GUIDES.

O'SHEA'S GUIDE to SPAIN and PORTUGAL. Ninth Edition. Completely Revised by JOHN LOMAS. Illustrated with Maps, Plans, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1.5s.

APPLETON'S GENERAL GUIDE to the UNITED STATES and CANADA. Illustrated. 1892 Edition. Crown 8vo, leather, price 10s. 6d.

LONDON AND EDINBURGH: A. & C. BLACK.

THE

Dryburgh Edition

OF THE

WAVERLEY NOVELS.

To be completed in Twenty-five Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, and published Monthly, commencing 1st November, 1892.

Price 5s.

EACH VOLUME CONTAINING A COMPLETE NOVEL.

This Edition will contain the latest Revised Text, with ample Glossaries and Indices, and will be illustrated with 250 Wood Engravings, specially drawn by the following Artists:—

CHARLES GREEN.	JOHN WILLIAMSON.
GORDON BROWNE.	GODFREY C. HINDLEY.
PAUL HARDY.	WILLIAM HOLE, R.S.A.
WALTER PAGET.	LOCKHART BOOLE.
FRANK DADD.	GEORGE HAY, R.S.A.
HUGH THOMSON.	C. M. HARDIE, A.R.S.A.
H. M. PAGET.	W. H. OVEREND.

STANLEY BERKELEY.

There will be a Large-Paper Edition, strictly limited to 300 Copies for England and America, specially printed on Hand-made Paper, price 15s. net each volume.

Prospectuses, Handbills, Showcards, &c., may be had on application to the Publishers.

IN spite of the numerous issues and re-issues of the Waverley Novels that have been brought before the public, it has been for a long time a cherished intention of the Publishers to produce a STANDARD EDITION of the character and form now embodied in the Dryburgh Edition.

The Novels having been so frequently reprinted, it is not surprising that in previous editions errors have crept in unobserved; and that in passing through many hands (both of Editors and Printers) certain supposed improvements and alterations have been made upon the text. To produce in perfect correctness SCOTT'S own authorised text has been the object aimed at in the present edition, involving in its execution the most careful collation—in fact, word for word—with the INTERLEAVED COPY on which SCOTT made his last corrections. This copy, in twenty-five large octavo volumes was acquired along with the Copyright in 1851, and is now in the Publishers' possession.

The ILLUSTRATIONS form a special feature of this edition, each Novel having been entrusted to one Artist, in order to secure that harmony and continuity of expression so essential to successful illustration. They are all engraved on wood under the superintendence of Mr. J. D. COOPER.

As regards TYPOGRAPHY, the printing is from the well-known press of Messrs. R. & R. CLARK, of Edinburgh, and a clear and legible type has been specially cast for this edition.

Each volume will contain all the AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES, and the Additional NOTES, which are copyright, contributed by the late DAVID LAING, LL.D., a friend of the Author and a well-known antiquary.

Besides these, a GLOSSARY AND INDEX will be appended to each volume. The former has been prepared with great care, and with much valued help from several eminent literary men, and will be found to throw much light on the Scottish Idioms, and old and bygone phrases, frequently used by the Author of Waverley.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1066.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.—New Volumes.

SICILY: Phœnician, Greek, and Roman. By the late EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

TIMES.—"It is Prof. Freeman's own work throughout. It is, therefore, unnecessary to commend it."

THE TUSCAN REPUBLICS and GENOA. By BELLA DUFFY. Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Nearly ready.]

MR. R. F. HORTON'S NEW WORK.

REVELATION and the BIBLE. By R. F. HORTON, M.A., Author of "Inspiration and the Bible," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

WITH PREFACE BY MISS JANE HARRISON.

THE GODS of OLYMPOS; or, Mythology of the Greeks and Romans. Translated and Edited from the Twentieth Edition of A. H. PETISCUS by KATHERINE A. RALEIGH. With Preface by JANE E. HARRISON. 8 Full-Page and numerous smaller Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [October 10.]

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.—New Volume.

MISSING FRIENDS; or, The Adventures of a Danish Emigrant in Queensland. Large crown 8vo, red cloth, gold lettered, 5s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"His account of how he roughed it in various capacities and places is instinct with the charm which accompanies the vivid presentment of real facts.... Many incidents are told with a power and directness which are strikingly effective."

BY H. H. BOYESEN.

ESSAYS on GERMAN LITERATURE.

By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
SCOTSMAN.—"Will be welcomed and diligently read by any thoughtful reader."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

WRITERS and READERS: Educational Essays. By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED."

THE FIVE TALENTS of WOMAN: a Book for Girls and Young Women. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married," &c. Fifth and Cheaper Edition. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CAMEO SERIES.—New Volume.

THE LOVE SONGS of ROBERT BURNS. Edited by Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS, Bart. With Frontispiece Portrait of Burns. Half bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.
GLOBE.—"Will be found altogether to be learned."

NEW VOLUME OF "THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY."

THE SAGHALIEN CONVICT. By PA KOPOAENKA. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.
SPEAKER.—"Vivid and exciting."

NOW READY.

HALF-YEARLY VOLUMES

OF

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

Beautifully bound in red cloth, gilt, price 8s.

VOLUME I. OF THE INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES.

THE SHIFTING of the FIRE. By FORD H. HUEFFER, Author of the "Brown Owl," "The Feather," &c. 1 tiny 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A NOVEL OF TO-DAY.

DOWN in the FLATS: or, Party before Fitness. By CLEVELAND KENN. Demy 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE CHILDREN'S LIBRARY.—New Volumes.

Illustrated, post 8vo, pinafore cloth binding, floral edges, 2s. 6d. each.

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE: the Story of an Old Boat and her Crew. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. Illustrated by Montegut.

GLOBE.—"A charming little work. Most people know how simple and refreshing is this story."

THE FEATHER. By Ford H. Hueffer, Author of "The Brown Owl." Frontispiece by MADON BROWN.

POEMS BY A NEW WRITER.

YEAR by YEAR: Poems. By Mary L. HANKIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY THE LATE REV. ROWLAND WILLIAMS.

PSALMS and LITANIES: Counsels and Collects for Devout Persons. By ROWLAND WILLIAMS, D.D. Edited by his WIDOW. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—"Expressed in language such as only a subtle and highly trained intellect could have used."

STRAY THOUGHTS from the NOTE-BOOKS of ROWLAND WILLIAMS, D.D. Edited by his WIDOW. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

'93: or, the Revolution among the Flowers. By FLORENCE BYNG. Profusely illustrated by Hilda Fairbairn and others. Small 4to, paper boards, 2s.

DADDY JAKE, the RUNAWAY, and other Stories told after Dark. By JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS ("Uncle Remus"). New Edition. Medium 4to, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ÆSOP'S FABLES for LITTLE READERS. By Mrs. ARTHUR BROOKFIELD. 25 Illustrations by Henry J. Ford. New Edition. Small 4to, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE FOLKS o' CARGLEN: a Story. By ALEXANDER GORDON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

HALF-YEARLY VOLUMES

OF

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Elegantly and strongly bound in green cloth, gold lettered, price 15s. 6d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

HOOPER'S ABRAHAM FABERT, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	303
DICKENS'S LETTERS TO WILKIE COLLINS, by F. T. MARZIALS	304
BLACK'S MEMOIR ON INDIAN SURVEYS, by STEPHEN WHEELER	305
W. M. ROSSETTI'S EDITION OF THE ADONAI, by F. RYLAND	306
BOOKS ABOUT INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE, by Miss TOULMIN SMITH	306
HIGGINSON'S THE OLD WORLD AND THE NEW BOOK, by WALTER LEWIN	307
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	308
CURRENT THEOLOGY	309
NOTES AND NEWS	310
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	311
ORIGINAL VERSE: "IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF R. S. HAWKER," by GRAHAM R. TOMSON	311
ORITARY: ERNEST RENAN, by JOSEPH JACOBS; DR. BEINSLEY NICHOLSON, by L. T. S.; &c.	311
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	313
MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S LIST	313
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNIONS LIST	313
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	313
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Pseudo-Smollett, by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew; "The Japs at Home," by Douglas Sladen	313
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	314
DIXON'S MIGRATION OF BIRDS, by the Rev. M. O. WATKINS	314
CORRESPONDENCE:— Notes on some Jaina-Prakrit and Pali Words, by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; The Tell el-Amarna Tablets, by Prof. Sayce; The Pronunciation and Spelling of Place Names in Egypt, by Col. Ross and Cope Whitehouse	315
SCIENCE NOTES	316
PHILOLOGY NOTES	316
MUNRO'S LAKE DWELLINGS OF EUROPE, by H. BRADLEY	316
CORRESPONDENCE:— "The Origin of Metallic Currency," by Canon Isaac Taylor; Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr	317
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	317
STAGE NOTES	318
DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS, by CECIL NICHOLSON	318
THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	318

TO PROVINCIAL EDITORS—Advertiser
Is prepared to CONTRIBUTE Weekly to a Provincial Paper a LITERARY COLUMN, comprising Notes and Reviews of all the latest books. Specimens sent. Moderate remuneration.—B. W. 109, Ebury Street, London.

MEDICAL MAN, with spare time, living in thriving Moorland district (Yorkshire), will take a backward PUPIL to educate; good care and supervision; riding and driving.—Address Mr. Mervin, Mrs. Darling's, 39, Highfield, Falsgrave, Scarborough.

MR. FRANCIS BATE will RE-OPEN his STUDIO for INSTRUCTION in the FINE ART of PAINTING, &c., on OCTOBER 12th.—Apply to JAMES JOHNSON, Sec., Applethorpe Studio, Brook Green, W.

CATALOGUES
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

NEW CLEARANCE CATALOGUE
(No. 78) of SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS
now offered at Greatly Reduced Prices
(62 pages, sent gratis and post free to any address, includes many important Works in Travel, History, Geography, &c.,
Theology, Angling, Sport, and Natural History,
Magazines, and over 1,400 Cheap Novels.
A SPECIAL CATALOGUE of Ancient and Modern Books, including
Rare and Curious Works in various Classes of Literature, post free.
DUGLAS & POTTER, Booksellers, 9, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

TYPE-WRITING.
TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ERNEST RENAN'S WORKS.

RECOLLECTIONS of MY YOUTH. Translated from the French, and Revised by Madame RENAN. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE FUTURE of SCIENCE: Ideas of 1848. Demy 8vo, 18s.
HISTORY of the PEOPLE of ISRAEL.

FIRST DIVISION.—Till the Time of King David. Demy 8vo, 14s.

SECOND DIVISION.—From the Reign of David up to the Capture of Samaria.
Demy 8vo, 14s.

THIRD DIVISION.—From the Time of Hezekiah till the Return from Babylon.
Demy 8vo, 14s.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD, LONDON.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SOCIETY.

CHELSEA CENTRE.

President—THE MARQUIS of RIPON, K.G.

LECTURES FOR MICHAELMAS TERM, 1892,
At CHELSEA TOWN HALL.

I. EUROPEAN HISTORY in the PERIOD of the RENAISSANCE and the REFORMATION.

Ten Lectures by S. R. GARDINER, LL.D. (Fellow of All Souls College), on TUESDAYS, at 3 p.m., commencing OCTOBER 11th.

II. PLATO (with the REPUBLIC).

Ten Lectures by BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A. Oxon, LL.D.
Chaz. (late Fellow of University College, Oxford), on MONDAYS, at 5.15 p.m., commencing OCTOBER 17th.

Fees for each Course, 21s. Teachers, 10s. Single Lecture, 3s. First Lecture Free. Tickets may be obtained at the end of the First Lecture.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES (BANGOR).

APPLICATIONS are invited by the Council for the POST of ASSISTANT LECTURER in MATHEMATICS now vacant.
Salary £120.

Applications (with testimonials) should be received not later than SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15th, by the undersigned, from whom also further particulars may be obtained.

September 29th, 1892.

JOHN EDWARD LLOYD,
Secretary and Registrar.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

THE SIXTY-SECOND SESSION of the MEDICAL DEPARTMENT opens OCTOBER 3rd. THE NINETEENTH SESSION of the DEPART-MENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS begins OCTOBER 10th.
The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University
Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for practical work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Registrar:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. For Medical Students.

The Hall of Residence in connection with the College is now open.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Belfast, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork,
Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool,
London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley,
Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

741, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS of HOME.
Messrs. Charles Dutton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn,
W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and
W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell,
Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.
Mr. W. S. Penley, Mr. W. Wyes, Mr. Robb Harwood, Mr.
Sam Southern, Mr. Cecil Thornbury, Mr. W. Aysom, Mr. G.
Tomkins; Miss Nina Boucicault, Miss Violet Ambroster, Miss C. Ewell, Miss Alice Yorke, Miss Caroline Elton. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE NEW SUB. At 9.10,
FAITHFUL JAMES. And, at 9.50, A PANTOMIME RE-
HEARSAL. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, W. Draycott, C. P.
Little, S. Warden, Vaughan, Bertram, and Weedon Gros-smith; Misses G. Kingston, Edith Briant, Sybil Grey, Berridge, Palfrey, and Ellaline Terriss.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE QUEEN of MANOA.
Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, Herbert Flemming,
Charles Collette, Rudge Harding, E. Maurice, W. Cheesman, &c.; Misses Marie Linden, Henrietta Lindley, Emily Cross,
Francis Ingleby, Tyndal, Harding, and Mrs. Langtry.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CIGARETTE. At 7.40, A
PAIR of LUNATICS. Messrs. Cairns James, Oswald
Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Lyons, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Florence Bankhardt,
Hannah Jones, Marion Erie, May Laurie, Helen Vicary,
J. Bradford, C. Loseby, and Albu.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, A ROYAL DIVORCE. Messrs.
Murray Carson, T. W. Percival, H. Beatty, W. Brunton, jun., H. Gray Dalby, B. Whitcomb, H. Ludlow, Alker, Hennessy, Griffith; Mesdames Lesley Bell, M. Watson, P.
Wyatt, L. Wyatt, Maude St. John, Ormesby, Herrick, Patrick, and Grace Hawthorne.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.
SATURDAY EVENING at eight p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, NIOBE (ALL SMILES).
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George
Hawtre, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Ellison, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbin. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtre, &c.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Messrs.
E. W. Garden, C. M. Lowne, Cecil Ramsey, Seymour Hicks, and George Shelton; Misses Eliza Johnstone, Mary Ansell, Liston, Brough, and Irene Vanbrugh. At 8, DAISY'S
ESCAPE. Messrs. Lawrence Irving, Harry Westland, Lowne, Arlton; Misses Cora Poole and Loveday.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames
D. Cima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Rapey, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James,
Mr. William Farre, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith,
Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore,
Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

THIS DAY, at 12 to 5, and 6 to 11, Mme. Kiralfy's superb Dramatic, Operatic Spectacle, VENICE, THE BRIDE OF
THE SEA. Spectacle at 2.30 and 8.30. Charming Music.
Ballet of 400 Dancers. Chorus of 500 voices. Band of 100, and over 1,400 performers in the Grand Aquatic Pageant and Storming of Chioggia.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF FORTHCOMING WORKS.

A NEW WORK BY THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.

THE UNSEEN FOUNDATIONS of SOCIETY:

AN EXAMINATION OF THE FALLACIES AND FAILURES OF ECONOMIC SCIENCE DUE TO NEGLECTED ELEMENTS. By the DUKE of ARGYLL, K.G., K.T. 8vo.

THE MISSION of the CHURCH. Four Lectures

DELIVERED IN THE CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF ST. ASAPH. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Principal of Pusey House, Oxford, Editor of "Lux Mundi." Crown 8vo.

SIR HENRY MAINE: a Brief Memoir of his LIFE. By the Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I. With some of his INDIAN SPEECHES and MINUTES. Selected and Edited by WHITLEY STOKES, D.C.L., Member of the Institute of France, and formerly Law Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India. With Portrait. 8vo.

CHARLES DARWIN: his Life told in an Auto-

BIOGRAPHICAL CHAPTER, AND IN SELECTIONS FROM HIS LETTERS. By his Son FRANCIS DARWIN, F.R.S., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. With a Portrait. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

THE GREAT ENIGMA. By W. S. Lilly, Author of "On Right and Wrong," "On Shibboleths," &c. 8vo.

THE DIARY of an IDLE WOMAN in CON-

STANTINOPLE. By Mrs. MINTO ELLIOT, Author of "The Diary of an Idle Woman in Italy," "In Sicily," &c. Crown 8vo.

ARCHITECTURE, a PROFESSION or an ART:

THIRTEEN SHORT ESSAYS ON THE QUALIFICATIONS AND TRAINING OF ARCHITECTS. Edited by R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., and T. G. JACKSON, A.R.A. 8vo. [Ready.]

EXPLOSIVES and their POWERS. Translated and Condensed from the French of M. BERTHELOT. By C. NAPIER HAKE, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, Inspector of Explosives to the Government of Victoria, and WILLIAM MACNAB, F.I.C.E. With Preface by Lt.-Colonel J. P. CUNDILL, R.A., H.M. Inspector of Explosives. With Illustrations. 8vo.

. The Translation of this well-known work of the celebrated French Chemist M. BERTHELOT, President of the COMMISSION DES SUBSTANCES EXPLOSIVES, is published with his sanction. [Next week.]

NOTES by a NATURALIST on H.M.S. "CHAL-LENGER." A Record of Observation made during the voyage of H.M.S. "Challenger" round the World in the years 1872-76. By H. N. MOSELEY, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of Exeter, College Oxford. A New and Cheaper Edition. With Portrait, Map, and numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo. [Next week.]

JENNY LIND the ARTIST. A New and Popular

Edition of the MEMOIR of MADAME JENNY LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT, 1820-51. By H. SCOTT-HOLLAND, Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, and W. S. ROCKSTRO, Author of "The Life of Mendelssohn." With Portraits. Crown 8vo.

RECORDS of a NATURALIST on the AMAZONS during ELEVEN YEARS' ADVENTURE and TRAVEL. By HENRY WALTER BATES, late Assistant-Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society. A New Edition of the Unabridged Work. With a Memoir of the Author by EDWARD CLODD. With Portrait, Coloured Plates, Illustrations, and Map. Medium 8vo.

THE ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN: Design,

VIEWS, AND PLANTS. By W. ROBINSON, F.L.S. Third Edition, entirely Revised. With many new additional Engravings.

OUTLINES of EGYPTIAN HISTORY: Based on

THE WORK of MARIETTE BEY. Translated and Edited by MARY BRODRICK. A New and Revised Edition. With Maps. Crown 8vo.

Extract from a Letter of M. MASPERO to the Translator:—

"Je pense que vous avez rendu un véritable service à ceux de vos compatriotes qui veulent savoir un peu de ce que c'est que l'Égypte sans pour cela s'imposer la fatigue de lire les ouvrages souvent très arides des Égyptologues."

OLD FRENCH PLATE: its Makers and Marks.

By WILFRED J. CHILDS, F.S.A., Author of "Old English Plate." A New and Revised Edition. With Tables of Makers' Marks, in addition to the Plate Marks. 8vo.

A NEW VOLUME OF MURRAY'S STUDENT'S MANUALS.

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY of the ROMAN

EMPIRE: FROM THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE EMPIRE TO THE DEATH OF COMMODUS, A.D. 190. By J. B. BURY, Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Dublin. With Illustrations. Post 8vo.

. This Work will take up the History at the point at which Dean Liddell leaves off, and carry it down to the period at which Gibbon begins.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION OF FERGUSSON'S HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE IN ALL COUNTRIES.

ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL ARCHITECTURE.

Edited by R. PHENE SPIERS, F.S.A. With 1000 Illustrations. 2 vols. Medium 8vo.

. The Volumes on Indian and Eastern and on Modern Architecture are already published.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE UNIVERSITY EXTENSION SERIES.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR KNIGHT.

STUDIES in MODERN OUTLINES of MODERN

GEOLOGY. By Dr. R. D. ROBERTS, Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, Secretary to the Cambridge and London University Extension Syndicates. With Coloured Maps and Illustrations.

BOTANY. By Professor PATRICK GEDDES, University College, Dundee. With Illustrations.

THE FRENCH REVOLU-

TION. By C. E. Mallet, Balliol College, Oxford.

OUTLINES of ENGLISH

LITERATURE. By WILLIAM RENTON, Author of "Logic of Style," &c. With Illustrative Diagrams.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of the SENSES. By Professor McKENDRICK, the University of Glasgow, and Dr. SNODGRASS, Physiological Laboratory, Glasgow. With Illustrations.

A POCKET DICTIONARY of the MODERN

GREEK and ENGLISH LANGUAGES: AS ACTUALLY WRITTEN AND SPOKEN. Including all words and expressions current in ordinary reading and in everyday talk, with especial illustration, by means of distinctive signs, of the colloquial and popular Greek language, for the guidance of students and travellers through Greece and the East. By A. N. JANNARIS, Ph.D. (Germany), Assistant Professor of Greek Literature in the National University of Greece. Square fcap. 8vo.

THE PSALTER of 1539: a Landmark of English

LITERATURE. Comprising the Text, in Black Letter Type. Edited, with Notes, by JOHN EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. Square 8vo.

ST. JOHN'S WILD SPORTS and NATURAL

HISTORY of the HIGHLANDS of SCOTLAND. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised. With hitherto unpublished Notes by the Author. Edited, with a Memoir of the Author, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS. With Portrait of Mr. St. John, and several new Illustrations. Medium 8vo.

The RISE of the BRITISH DOMINION in INDIA

By Sir ALFRED LYALL, K.C.C., K.C.S.I. FROM THE EARLY DAYS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY. Forming a Volume in the University Extension Series. Post 8vo.

HANDBOOK to the RIVIERA. From Marseilles

TO PISA, AND THE ROUTES THITHER. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised, and in a great measure re-written on the spot. With numerous Maps engraved expressly on a large scale. Crown 8vo.

THE LINO TYPE Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

*Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.*

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED,
30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, using well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF DR. BOYD'S "REMINISCENCES." (Now Ready.) TWENTY-FIVE YEARS of ST. ANDREWS, 1865—1890.

By the Very Rev. A. K. H. BOYD, D.D., LL.D.,
First Minister of St. Andrews, Author of "The Recreations of a Country Parson."
2 vols., 8vo. Vol. I., 12s.; Vol. II., 15s.

* * In the Second Volume Dr. Boyd carries on his Reminiscences from 1879 to 1890. Among the many notable persons mentioned are the following:—

ARCHBISHOP BENSON
ARCHBISHOP MAGEE
ARCHBISHOP MACLAGAN
BISHOP MOBERLY
BISHOP THOROLD
BISHOP WORDSWORTH

BISHOP RYLE
BISHOP HAROLD BROWNE
BISHOP TEMPLE
BISHOP WHITTLE
DR. VAUGHAN
DEAN STANLEY

DEAN PLUMPTRE
DEAN WELLESLEY
PRINCIPAL SHALF
PRINCIPAL TULLOCH
LORD SELBORNE
LORD ROSEBURY

LORD REAY
SIR THEODORE MARTIN
MATTHEW ARNOLD
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES
MR. JUSTICE DENMAN
MR. A. J. BALFOUR

No Portion of these Volumes has appeared in Periodicals.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

THE PEYTON ROMANCE. A New Novel, in three volumes, by Mrs. LEITH ADAMS, Author of "Aunt Hepsy's Foundling," is ready this day, and may be had at all Libraries.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO., LIMITED, PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCING CROSS ROAD.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891.

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."

Mr. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS writes:—"It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."

Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS.

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S ' S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON,
186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

to

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. . .	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d
Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. GERARD FORD.

Now ready, post 8vo, price 6s.

I, TOO: a Novel in Two Books.

By MRS. GERARD FORD.

With an Illustration by Florence M. Cooper.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Ltd.

IN TENNYSON LAND:

Being a Brief Account of the Home and Early Surroundings of the Poet Laureate. By JOHN CUMING WALTERS. With 12 Plates. Demy 8vo, white cloth, gilt, 5s.

KIDAN PAUL, THESCH, THURNER & Co., Ltd., Paternoster House, Charing Cross Road.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR

FOR THE SESSION 1892-93.

MACMILLAN & Co., London. J. E. CONNELL, Manchester.

New Edition, pp. 324, cloth, 1s., post free.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY IN-

STRUCTOR. By Drs. R. and W. ERSS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases.

London: JAMES ERSS & Co., 48, Threadneedle Street, and 170, Piccadilly.

LOISEITE'S System of Memory Training is the ONLY one by which the Natural Memory can be so much improved that the System, as a Device, will be no more needed.

MARK TWAIN (Mr. S. L. Clemens) says of Professor Loiseite: "He showed me how to LIGHT UP the dark cellar of my Memory." Languages learned rapidly.

Prospectus (containing opinions of pupils who have PASSED EXAMINATIONS and of members of the Medical, Scholastic, Clerical, Military, and other professions).

post free from Professor LOISEITE, 37, New Oxford-st., London.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balance when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums or deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES, Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

Digby, Long & Co.'s New Books.

LEADING WOMEN of the RESTORATION.

By GRACE JOHNSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. with Portraits. The National Observer says: "The book is written carefully and after much research. The memoirs contain many valuable anecdotes. The writing is very well." Public Opinion says: "Essentially a book of historic value." The Guardian says: "Written with considerable sympathy and feeling. The portraits are excellent." The Bookman says: "They are ably written, and show considerable knowledge of the history and literature of the time."

WHERE HONOUR SITS. By W. B. Home-

(ALL cloth extra, 6s. The Academy says: "The war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole 'Where Honour Sits' may certainly be pronounced readable." The Manchester Courier says: "Much true and manly feeling, much real humanity, and decided ability in this volume....The book is eminently readable."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN SIN OR FOLLY." SYRINGA. By Arthur Nestorian. Cloth extra, 6s. [Just out.]

TRUE to the PRINCE: a Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By GERTRUDE BELL. Cloth extra, 6s. The Manchester Courier says: "This work deals ably with a period in history which can never be forgotten....Her book will often be read when even such a masterly work as Moly's 'Kiss of the Dutch Republic,' from which she takes her facts, might fail to attract." The Saturday Review says: "She can relate well and clearly, and carries her readers along easily and pleasantly."

SECOND EDITION.

OUR TRIP NORTH. By R. Menzies

FERGUSON, M.A., Author of "Rambles in the Far North," "Quiet Folk," &c. Full-page Illustrations. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. The Saturday Review says: "It is pleasantly written and well illustrated by Messrs. Denman, Adam and Austin Brown." The Globe says: "An agreeable narrative, written in familiar style. The illustrations are much above the average." The Manchester Guardian says: "His descriptions are so well written."

FOR HAL'S SAKE. By Amy Manifold.

In beautiful pictorial binding, 3s. 6d. The Athenaeum says: "A pretty story. The story of Hal and his sister is decidedly pathetic." The Scotsman says: "It is full of life and interest, and will be read with pleasure."

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read with promptitude, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. New Catalogue of Books post free.

Address—DIGBY, LONG & CO.

Publishers of "THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL," 5s. (5th Edition) 18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

OCTOBER, 1892.

2s. 6d. NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW. 2s. 6d.

VINDICATION of HOME RULE. By Mr. GLANVILLE.

LONDON SOCIETY. Reply by LADY JESSE.

ENGLAND'S FOREIGN POLICY. By H. LABOUCHERE, M.P.

2s. 6d. THE ARENA. 2s. 6d.

HAS ISLAM a FUTURE? By Rev. T. R. HUGHES, D.D.

BACON & SHAKESPEARE. By EDWIN REED.

THE CHURCH and the WORLD. By P. CAMERON, B.C.L.

DRESS REFORM. By LADY HARBERTON.

BRENTANO'S, 5, Agar Street, Strand, W.C.

ROYAL STATISTICAL SOCIETY'S JOURNAL.

Now ready, Part III., Vol. LV., SEPTEMBER, 1892, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

REPORT of the COUNCIL to the 55th ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the SOCIETY, held on the 25th June, 1892, with PROCEEDINGS.

STATE EXPERIMENTS in NEW ZEALAND. By Sir ROBERT STODD, K.C.M.G.

THE ADDRESS of the PRESIDENT of the ECONOMIC SCIENCE and STATISTICS SECTION of the BRITISH ASSOCIATION, held at Edinburgh, 1892. By the Hon. Sir CHARLES W. FREEMANTLE, K.C.B.

AN INQUIRY into the TRUSTWORTHINESS of the OLD ELLS of MORTALITY. By Dr. WILLIAM DOLE, M.D., F.R.C.P.

MISCELLANEA—(1) Proceedings of Section F. of the British Association. (2) On the Probable Effect of the Limitation of the Number of Ordinary Fellows elected into the Royal Society to Fifteen in each year on the eventual total number of Fellows. By Lieut. Gen. R. STRACHAN, R.E., F.R.S. (3) Homicide in the United States in 1890. (4) A Census of Inland Navigation in France. (5) Female Labour in New South Wales. (6) Notes on Economical and Statistical Works. (7) Quarterly List of Additions to the Library.

London: E. STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross, S.W.

THE OPPOSITION of JUPITER, October 12th, 1892.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUPITER AND HIS SYSTEM.

By ELLEN MARY CLERKE.

Demy 8vo, wrapper, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 1d.

A Compendious Monograph giving the results of the most recent Observations of the Planet, which for some weeks subsequent to October 12th will be in a specially favourable position for observation. London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST.

"The general idea of the series is excellent."

Guardian.

"The scheme excites our interest."

Saturday Review.

THE NATIONAL CHURCHES.

Edited by P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s. each.

IV. THE CHURCH IN THE NETHERLANDS.

By P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A.,

Rector of Barkham, Wokingham.

V. THE CHURCH IN SCOTLAND.

By H. M. LUCKOCK, D.D.,

Canon of Ely. Shortly.

The Preceding Volumes in this Series are:—

I. GERMANY.

By S. BARING-GOULD, M.A.,

Author of "Mehalah," "Germany Past and Present," &c. With Maps.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's contribution is excellent....one of the best accounts in English of the German Reformation, its real meaning and real effects, that we have ever come across." Guardian.

II. SPAIN.

By FREDERICK MEYRICK, M.A.,

Prebendary of Lincoln. Editor of "The Foreign Church Chronicle."

With Map.

"It is a really valuable work."—Manchester Examiner.

III. IRELAND.

By THOMAS OLDEN, M.A.,

Vicar of Ballyelough.

With Maps.

"In dealing with the early ecclesiastical history of Ireland he has studied the original authorities himself, and thrown much valuable light on many points hitherto obscure in themselves."—Times.

"For seldom has the student of Irish history the good fortune to encounter work so learned and so simple, so instructive and so entertaining, as this brilliant epitome of the history of the early Irish Church."—Athenaeum.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK ON RUSSIA.

WITH RUSSIAN PILGRIMS,

Being an Account of a Sojourn in the White Sea Monastery, and a Journey by the Old Trade Route from the Arctic Sea to Moscow.

By ALEXANDER A. BODDY,

Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of England, Member of the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia, and Author of "To Kairwan the Holy: Scenes in Mohammedan Africa."

Also an Appendix by the Venerable ARCHIMANDRITE MELITIUS, giving a full History of the Famous Monastery of the Solovetsk.

New Maps and Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

[In preparation.]

FARTHING'S.

By Mrs. MOLESWORTH,

Author of "Carrots," "Cuckoo Clock," "Grandmother Dear," &c., &c.

Handsomely bound in cloth, with first-class Illustrations, by G. M. Bradley, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.,

2, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.; and 11, VICTORIA STREET, S.W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

STRAY RECORDS; Or, Personal and Professional Notes.

By CLIFFORD HARRISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"Mr. Harrison has much that is interesting to say, and he writes with a skill and a facility that would themselves be sufficient to ensure him a respectful hearing. He chats genially about the many eminent men he has met; he has a pretty knack of describing the places he has visited; and his critical remarks are shrewd and suggestive."

Full Mall Gazette."Two very pleasant and readable volumes."—Times.

NOW READY.

THE STILL LIFE OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE,

With some of its Table Talk, preceded by
Fifty Years' Reminiscences.

By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A.,
A Barrister of the Society.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

"Westbury, Campbell, Stephen, Huddleston, and a host of other judicial lights appear in these pages as the heroes of a number of funny stories, the whole making up a wonderfully entertaining book."—Observer.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

Sir GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS

By ROSA N. CAREY,

Author of "Not Like Other Girls."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA.

By Mrs. ALICK MACLEOD.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author has unmistakable literary faculty, dramatic insight, a quick eye for character, a wide and generous sympathy, and above all, a really charming faculty of humour."—Academy.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. KEITH'S CRIME."

AUNT ANNE.

By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD.

Third Edition.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

A GIRL WITH A TEMPER.

By H. B. FINLAY KNIGHT.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A worthy book, written by a thorough man of the world who knows his fellows. And the story is told in good English, in admirable taste, with many a touch of shrewd humour."—Vanity Fair.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES."

IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

By LESLIE KEITH.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

Sale over One Million and a quarter Copies.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.

THE NEW EDITION.

Thirty-four Novels have now been issued.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 3s. 6d.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

L. REEVE & CO.'S NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of the INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.) F.C.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations, 15s. net.

THE HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Part VII. With 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. Prospectus and form for Subscribers may be had on application.

THE LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Part V. With 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. Prospectus and form for Subscribers may be had on application.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.E., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. Fitch, F.L.S., and W. G. Smith, F.L.S. 1315 Wood Engravings. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 10s. 6d.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. Moore, F.Z.S., F.E.S. Part XI. 15s. Coloured.

THE COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Large Edition, complete in 5 vols., with 150 Coloured Plates, £14. Small Edition, complete in 5 vols., with 2 Structural Plates, £4.

THE BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, £3 18s.

FLORA of BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I., C.B., F.R.S., &c.; assisted by various Botanists. Part I. to XIII., 10s. 6d. each; XIV. to XVIII., 9s. each. Vols. I. to IV., cloth, 3s. each; Vol. V., 38s.

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES and USTILAGINEÆ. By GEORGE MASSEE (Lecturer on Botany to the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching). Crown 8vo, with 8 Plates, 7s. 6d.

BRITISH FUNGICOLOGY. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. Reissue. With a Supplement of nearly 400 pages by WORTHINGTON G. SMITH, F.L.S. 2 vols., 24 Coloured Plates, 36s.

A few Copies of the Supplement may be had separately, post free, by remitting 12s. to the Publishers.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the FLORA of MENTONE, and to a Winter Flora of the Riviera, including the Coast from Marseilles to Genoa. By T. MOGGIDGE, F.L.S. Royal 8vo, with 99 Coloured Plates, 63s.

British Insects. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates, 14s.

British Beetles. By E. C. RYE. New Edition. Revised and in part Rewritten by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Butterflies and Moths. By H. T. STANTON. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Bees. By W. E. SLUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Spiders. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

The Edible Mollusca of Great Britain and IRELAND. With Recipes for Cooking them. By M. S. LOVELL. Second Edition. 12 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Zoophytes. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Wild Flowers. Familiarly Described in the Four Seasons. By THOMAS MOORE, F.L.S. 24 Coloured Plates, 16s.

British Grasses. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Ferns. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Seaweeds. By S. O. GRAY. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

Synopsis of British Mosses. By C. P. HOBKIRK, F.L.S. Revised Edition, 7s. 6d.

THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series. Vols. I. to XLVII., each 42s. Published monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d. Coloured. Annual Subscription, 42s.

L. REEVE & CO.,

6, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's AUTUMN BOOKS.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father JOSEPH OHRWALDER, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped with two Sisters of Mercy on Camels from the Sudan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Medism and the Egyptian Sudan." Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 500 pp., cloth extra, 21s.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN OF AFRICA. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Backley. 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d. [Oct. 1892.]

ON SLEDGE and HORSEBACK to OUTCAST SIBERIAN LEPERS. By Miss KATE MARSDEN. Crown 8vo, with Portraits and Illustrations from Photographs and Drawings by Walter C. Horsley and others, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Early in Oct. 1892.]

ARTISTIC TRAVEL in NORMANDY, BRITANY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes." Author of "The Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

THROUGH the LAND of the AZTECS. Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico. By a "GRINGO." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A RIDE THROUGH WONDERLAND. By GEORGINA M. SYNGE. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CORSICAN STUDIES. By John Warren BARRY, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in MADEIRA. By A. E. W. MARSH. With many Full-Page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA. By JAMES DOUGLAS. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-Page Photographs, Colotype Reproductions from Old Documents, 1 Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 42s. net.

TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES of THE REEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Edited by JOSEPH CUNDALE. Illustrated with 29 Plates from "The Annuals." Large post 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. J. ABBEY, Rector of Checkendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE EARL of ABERDEEN. By the Hon. Sir ARTHUR GORDON, G.C.M.G. Being the New Volume in the "Queen's Prime Ministers' Series." With Photographic Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography. By CHARLES WILLEBY. With Photographic Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 20s. 6d. [Ready.]

"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNIVER-SALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being the Life of the Rev. James E. Smith, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photographic Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth.

PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT in ENGLAND: its Origin, Development, and Practical Operation. By the late ALPHRUS TODD, LL.D., C.M.G., Librarian of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada. New Edition, Abridged, Revised, and brought up to Date by His Excellency SPENCER WALPOLE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

THE COLONIAL ERA in AMERICA. By Prof. GEORGE P. FISHER, of Yale. With 3 Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ESSAYS by SIR MOREL MACKENZIE. Edited by his Brother, A. W. MACKENZIE. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

THE TERRIBLE CZAR: a Romance of the Times of Ivan the Terrible. By Count A. K. TOLSTOI. Translated by Capt. FILMORE, of the "Black Watch." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Count Tolstoi makes no appeal to the emotions or the imagination by any tricks of rhetoric; but the most studiously pictorial work could not well be equally impressive. The novel, while rich in broad, strong portraits, is pre-eminently a story of action, and there is not a chapter in which the movement ceases, or even drags. Some of the situations bite themselves into the memory, and it is a long time since we have read a more admirable and powerful historical romance." Spectator, Sept. 24.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus Hume, Author of "The Mystery of Hansom Cab," "A Creature of the Night," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. [Ready.]

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

HYPOCRITES. By Hugh Coleman Davidson, Author of "The Old Adam," &c. Illustrated. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. KENNEDY, Author of "Blacks and Bush-rangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1892.

No. 1066, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the Editor.

LITERATURE.

Abraham Fabert. By George Hooper. (Longmans.)

THIS, we regret to say, is the posthumous work of a learned, experienced, and conscientious writer. The late Mr. Hooper's Waterloo is a repetition of the Wellingtonian legend in stereotyped form, dressed up with the usual homage to national vanity. His Sedan is a less pretentious book; but it draws its inspiration from the Prussian staff, by no means a trustworthy source; and it is very unjust to France and her army. Yet, though neither work is of high authority, Mr. Hooper had read much of the history of war; and if, as a military critic, he must rank low, he was a careful and laborious military student. This volume is a sketch of the career of Fabert; and Mr. Hooper need not have made a kind of apology for describing the life of a great soldier, renowned in the age of Guébriant, Condé, and Turenne, conspicuous in the art of war and of peace, at the time when France produced her most illustrious men, and remarkable for this, that he was the first roturier who won the marshal's staff—a distinction hitherto confined to the noblesse of the sword. Mr. Hooper's book will be read with interest; it displays the author's characteristic merits, intelligent research and painstaking industry. It is deficient, however, in artistic skill, and in the peculiar gift of a true biographer: the faculty of placing his subject before us, and of bringing it out in proper relief from amidst a mass of surrounding details. The background of Mr. Hooper's portrait of Fabert is too large and too crowded; the strong personality of the rugged warrior, endowed with parts which approached genius, is not made sufficiently distinct; and his life is almost lost in a maze of history. Nevertheless there is much to be learned from this work; and we would specially commend Mr. Hooper's estimate of Louis XIII. as a ruler of France, for he has been made a mere foil to Richelieu by too many writers. It may appear ungracious to point out defects in a book which had not been finally revised by its author, and had not received his last touches, especially as a daughter's pious care has endeavoured to do this work for a parent. But the errors in the text of this volume are many; and they will disappear, we hope, in a second edition. It probably was a mistake of the press that Amanvilliers, famous since Gravelotte, figures as Armanvilliers in these pages, and that Don Juan of Austria, an adversary of Turenne, is confounded with the Don John of Lopanto, a hero of immortal memory, and of another age. But "tireless" and "strongish" are not English words; and how can "offensive comparisons" be said to "go to water"?

Abraham Fabert was born in 1599, a few years after the Peace of Vervins, which had placed Henry IV. in power on the throne. His family was of Alsatian origin, but it had been settled for some time at Metz, where it was prominent among the city burghers, several of the name having been master printers. The Faberts, to judge from their Christian names, must have been of the Reformed faith; but Fabert himself was brought up a Catholic, though he retained through life strong Huguenot sympathies. As is usually the case with strong natures, the boy showed the bent of his disposition at an early age, and, greatly against the will of his father, he entered the French army in his first teens under the auspices of the great Duc D'Epemon, the royal governor of the tract of the Messin. The promotion of the son of the plebeian was slow, as, indeed, was that of the princely Turenne, a contemporary, though some years younger. Fabert was kept down by the jealousy of the noblesse, and, perhaps, by a reputation for being learned; though Mr. Hooper, we think, underrates the esteem in which knowledge was held by that generation in the French army, many of the chiefs of which were most accomplished men. We need not follow his ascent through many grades in "the Guards," "Piedmont," "Rambures," and other corps; nor have we space to notice his exploits in detail. Fabert was in active service for about thirty years before he rose to eminent rank and took part in the long series of wars directed by the genius of Richelieu, which quelled Huguenot rebellion at home, and ultimately sent the armies of France to the Rhine, and across the Alps and the Pyrenees. Fabert gradually made a name for himself as a soldier; his personal courage was remarkable, even among the gallant men of his day; he was more than once conspicuous in the deadly breach of fortresses stormed after furious assaults, and it was said of him, even at an early age, that he would win the glorious bâton by his sword. He showed, too, on more than one occasion, that he could rise to the higher parts of war. He skillfully turned a hostile position in one of the raids of the French into Piedmont; he co-operated with Turenne in covering the retreat of the French army in 1635, an exploit long remembered in those days; and—a most significant fact—he won the esteem of that great captain as a really able man. Yet the capacity of Fabert was chiefly seen in military administration, and all that pertains to it. He had considerable skill in mechanical arts, and the eye of a real engineer; he could organise, direct, and rule men; and, forestalling more than one of the reforms fully developed by Louvois and Vauban afterwards—the invention of siege parallels has been ascribed to him—he greatly improved the mechanism of the French army, at this time in a most imperfect state, and inferior to that of the armies of Spain, still glorious with the traditions of Parma, and formidable in the renowned Tercios. The burgher warrior, too, gave proof of qualities always prized in the noble profession of arms. He was true as steel to his superiors in rank—an excellence far from common in that age; and his loyalty to the house of Epemon, the patrons of his youth, continued through life. The independence, too, and the strength of his character were remarkable, and conspicuously shown. The son of a townsman of Metz actually refused promotion at the hands of the king because this violated established usage; he defied the powers of a marshal of France, in a dispute in which he knew he was in the right; he honourably declined advancement which he felt belonged to an older companion in arms. The spirit of Bayard informed the rough soldier; and despite the scoffs and gibes of dandies of the noblesse, Fabert was rated at his true worth by his military chiefs.

Towards the close of the reign of Louis XIII., Fabert, a veteran, though in the prime of manhood, was made Governor of the Fortress of Sedan. He had been admitted, for some time, into the inner military councils of the king; had attracted the notice of the great cardinal; and had projected more than one successful campaign. His new post was one of the highest trust. Sedan was a border stronghold lying between Lorraine and the Spanish Low Countries; it had been an appanage of the great house of Bouillon, which had lately conspired against the Crown of France; it was a place of refuge for Huguenot plotters; and it required the hand of a strong ruler. Fabert held this command for many years; and it deserves notice that his friend Turenne, though a near kinsman of the despoiled Bouillon, almost congratulated him on his well-deserved promotion. The governor gave proof of remarkable powers in the administration of Sedan and the neighbourhood; he sent succour to Condé after the great day of Rocroy; fitted out a regiment which made its worth felt in the campaigns of Fribourg and Nordlingen, and admirably organised his district for war. He also encouraged the rising manufactures of the town; made its trade thrive by his strict discipline, and especially distinguished himself in holding the scales of justice even between the Catholic and Huguenot townsmen, and in establishing toleration and religious freedom. Sedan became a place of the first importance, when the war of the Spanish Fronde broke out; and the commandant proved equal to his arduous task. Fabert took the side of the Queen and Mazarin, and tenaciously adhered to it through the vicissitudes of a contest of ever changing fortunes—conduct very different from that of many other governors, who sold themselves to the highest bidder, and not sufficiently praised in this book. When Turenne raised the standard of revolt—the one great fault in this warrior's life—Sedan was made a thorn in the marshal's side. Fabert resolutely held it against every attack, and kept the garrison ready to take the field; and the fortress proved of the greatest value in checking the progress of invasion on the Meuse. Fabert, too, more than once received Mazarin during the cardinal's flittings to and fro in exile; and, in short, was a tower of strength for the royal authority along the endangered northern frontier. After Turenne had returned to his duty, and, placed at the head of the Regent's forces, was conducting his admirable campaigns on the Marne and the Oise, Fabert directed the siege of Stenay, a place of the highest value in the wars of that age, and his skill in the operations became a by-word. The fortress had no sooner fallen than he detached a considerable body of troops to support Turenne, then intent on the relief of Arras; and this important assistance proved of the greatest use in a passage of arms which, in the result, was a turning point in the contest with Spain. Fabert continued at his post at Sedan until after the end of the war of the Fronde. He received the staff of a marshal in 1658, after Turenne's memorable victory of the Dunes, an honour promised for years by Mazarin, but withheld from a plebeian by the jealousy of the noblesse, and, as we have said, the first promotion of the kind. His administration of the district entrusted to his care had been so admirable and marked with such forethought that it attracted the attention of the cardinal in power; and Fabert drew up several schemes of reform—political, financial, commercial, social—which remain evidences of his superior parts, and were far in advance of the ideas of his time. He proposed different plans for relieving the provinces which had been harried by the late protracted war; and, really anticipating the designs of Turgot, projected measures of equal and just taxation for a system of general internal free trade, and for a great survey of France for fiscal purposes, measures not accomplished until after 1789. His reputation as an administrator was so great that he was thought of for the high post of financial minister; and it would be curious to speculate how, had he obtained the office, the course of affairs would have run in France.

The health of the old soldier, injured by wounds and hard work, began to fail soon after the peace of the Pyrenees; and Condé and Turenne, it is said, watched by his bedside during one of his illnesses when he was in attendance on the court in Paris. He died in harness in 1662; and his rule of Sedan was long remembered as that of an able and most righteous governor. The last scene of his administration was characteristic: the dying man called the leading citizens, of both faiths, to listen to his parting words; and in language worthy of L'Hôpital and Sully he adjured Catholic and Huguenot to cease from angry strife, to find a common ground for goodwill in the Gospel, to think on the points of resemblance, and not on the points of difference, in the forms of Christianity they alike professed. Strange that sentiments like these should have been uttered a few years before the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes and the infamous persecution of Protestantism in France! Fabert, however, in this resembled most of his illustrious companions in arms: Turenne and Villars, many years afterwards, befriended the wronged and oppressed Huguenots; just as in another age every great French soldier abhorred the foul crimes of the Reign of Terror. It was characteristic of the Revolution and its deeds that Jacobin bands, in the frenzy of 1793, tore the remains of Fabert from the grave, as they tore those of Turenne and their kings.

Fabert is best known, perhaps, as the first man of low birth who attained the rank of Marshal of France, an honour denied to Chevert in the next century, and from which, not to speak of Masséna, Ney, and Soult, Napoleon himself would have been excluded under the military administration of the old régime, before the Revolution swept it away. But Fabert was more than an illustration of new ideas; he was a great soldier, and really a great man.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

Letters of Charles Dickens to Wilkie Collins, 1851-70. Selected by Miss Georgina Hogarth. Edited by Laurence Hutton. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

IN view of the many letters from Dickens to Wilkie Collins published in the Dickens Correspondence, and of the extended references to Wilkie Collins in Forster's Life, one is scarcely in a position to say that the letters composing this volume throw much additional light on the relations which existed between the two authors. We all know that they acted together, travelled together, foregathered together, wrote together—Collins being about the only writer whom Dickens admitted to the honours of "collaboration"—and that Dickens entertained an enthusiastic admiration for Collins's work. The present correspondence cannot, therefore, in any sense, be regarded as a revelation. But to the true lovers of Dickens, and their name is legion, his company always affords pleasure, refreshment, profit. They are glad to get any new utterance from him even on an old theme. In brief, this little collection of letters, exhumed tardily from among Collins's papers, is in every way welcome.

The work of all novelists, except those perhaps in the very first rank, has a tendency to age; and the author of The Woman in White, No Name, Armadale, does certainly not now hold in the world's esteem the place that he held twenty-five or thirty years ago. Ingenious plot-puzzles were his forte; and though a good mystery still has its charm for the modern reader, yet to produce its full effect the mystery must be surrounded by something of exotic circumstance—the scene must be laid in the South Seas, India, America. Then Collins's characters have no permanent vitality, and his general reflections on men and things can hardly be called valuable. At first sight, therefore, such utterances on the part of Dickens as the following may seem a little excessive:

"I cannot tell you with what a strange dash of pride as well as pleasure I read the great results of your hard work. Because, as you know, I was certain from the Basil days that you were the Writer who would come ahead of all the field—being the only one who combined invention and power, both humorous and pathetic, with that profound conviction that nothing of worth is to be done without work, of which triflers and feigners have no conception."

Dickens, however, it must be remembered, was not pre-eminently a critic; and in the case of Collins it is fairly open to conjecture that he was biassed in his admiration by the fact that Collins possessed a gift which he himself did not possess, much as he strained to obtain it—the gift, namely, of constructing coherent and well-ordered plots. But if the praise may, from the strict critical standpoint, seem a trifle too glowing, yet how hearty and generous it is, how greatly superior to all suspicion of rivalry! And how kindly and helpful, how full of the true spirit of friendship, such an offer as the following, made at a time when Collins was out of health in the midst of his work:

"... Simply to say what follows, which I hope may save you some mental uneasiness—for I was stricken ill when I was doing Bleak House, and I shall not easily forget what I suffered under the fear of not being able to come up to time. Dismiss that fear (if you have it) altogether from your mind. Write to me at Paris at any moment, and say you are unequal to your work, and want me, and I will come to London straight, and do your work. I am quite confident that with your notes, and a few words of explanation, I could take it up at any time and do it. Absurdly unnecessary to say that it would be a makeshift! But I could do it, at a pinch, so like you as that no one should find out the difference. Don't make much of this offer in your mind; it is nothing except to ease it. If you should want help, I am as safe as the Bank. The trouble will be nothing to me, and the triumph of overcoming a difficulty great. Think it a Christmas number, an Idle Apprentice, a Lighthouse, or Frozen Deep. I am as ready as in any of these cases to strike in and hammer this iron out. You won't want me. You will be well (and thankless) in no time. But there I am; and I hope that the knowledge may be a comfort to you. Call me and I come."

Hero speaks out the true Dickens—"every inch of him an honest man"—and when Wilkie Collins's art has paled even more than it has done, the fact that he could inspire such affection in his great contemporary will always be a title to honour.

Apart from what is strictly personal to the two men, the most interesting letters in this correspondence are—one in which Dickens defends A Tale of Two Cities against Collins, who had evidently wanted to make it more a novel of surprise; and another in which Dickens discusses Charles Reade's Griffith Gwilt from the moral standpoint, supposing his own answers to a cross-examination on the subject in a court of law.

"Asked as editor," so he imagines it, "whether I would have passed those passages whether written by the plaintiff or anybody else, I should be obliged to reply, No. Asked why? I should say that what was pure to an artist might be impurely suggestive to inferior minds (of which there must necessarily be many among a large mass of readers), and that I should have called the writer's attention to the likelihood of those passages being perverted in such quarters."

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

A Memoir on the Indian Surveys, 1875-90.
By Charles E. D. Black. (Published by order of the Secretary of State for India in Council.)

SEEKERS after Eastern wisdom, when not engaged in the editing of original texts, might often find occupation for their leisure hours in the records and blue-books of the Indian Government. The vast stores of undiscovered or forgotten material for the historian, the ethnologist, and the geographer secreted in official book-cases, would repay a long and laborious investigation. Instances are constantly happening where this source of information has been overlooked. The other day the translator and editor of an Arabic chronicle remarked, in his preface, that the only book treating in a European language of the Mahomedan history of Yemen was a small work published at Bonn in 1828. Yet a history of Yemen, from the commencement of the Christian era, will be found in the printed records of the Bombay Government. A guide to researches in one branch of Indian official literature has now been supplied by Mr. Black, who, continuing the work so admirably begun by Mr. Clements Markham, has prepared a summary of papers and reports relating to Indian surveys from 1875 to 1890. It is possible that, in regard to both surveys and other administrative work, all the essential information could have been given in conciser and more convenient shape—something in the nature of a bibliography would answer most purposes; while a critical and exhaustive digest wherein results were exhibited in their natural proportions, and inferences were drawn with scientific precision, would demand a wider knowledge of geography in general and of Asiatic geography in particular, than the compiler of the present "Memoir" has acquired. Nevertheless, this rather bulky volume is in its way a standard work of reference; and so wide is its scope that there are few Orientalists of exalted or humble pretensions who will not acknowledge its usefulness, more especially since, by the munificence of the Secretary of State for India in Council, ample space may be found on the generous margin of the pages for emendations and additions.

These, it must be admitted, will frequently occur to the industrious apprentice in Oriental research. Perhaps, too, he will see fit to reduce the weight of the volume by tearing out an appendix showing the nature and value of the government stores sent out to India. Surely there was no need to record in this place that the Indian Government has been supplied of late years with a telegraphic fault-finder at a cost of £57, and a tell-tale apparatus; £228 worth of urinometers, and over a thousand pounds' worth of various rules and rulers—not of the kind, I presume, biographed by Sir William Hunter and his collaborators. In these and other redundancies the trail of the official is plainly visible. It is high time that something should be done both in India and at the India Office to abate the incontinence of official printing. Other and more serious faults in the "Memoir" have been pointed out in a Note published in the Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society. Assuredly it is a mistake to issue "by authority" a work dealing with the geography of India and Central Asia, without having it carefully revised by some competent hand. However, one can scarcely complain of Mr. Black's slips when the leading English newspapers habitually display the most curious ignorance of these questions: when a journal like the Times publishes a map of the Pamirs which can only be described as mythical; and when the Daily Telegraph, confusing Jandula in Waziriland with Jandol in Yaghistan, announces in an article two columns long that Lord Lansdowne, following its advice, has sent a force to annex Bajaur.

But it must be admitted that if a book like Mr. Black's "Memoir" suggests nothing but a search more or less successful for minor inaccuracies, the reader is as much to blame as the compiler. The baldest record of survey work in and around India is a history of great achievements, no less deserving the most honourable mention than the exploits of Bruce and Stanley. During the decade and a half under review, an enormous addition was made to our knowledge of the countries beyond the Indian border; and that by the courage and devotion of Englishmen whose names, most likely, the general reader has never heard of. In particular, the Indian Government has obtained trustworthy intelligence regarding a part of high Asia which has of late attracted almost as much attention as the innermost lakes of Central Africa or the further shores of the Behring Sea. For the first time an attempt has been made to exhibit all this information in something like a comprehensive shape; and had he done no more than this, Mr. Black would have earned our gratitude. The references and the index are especially useful; while that part of the text which is original will at least serve to show how much has been effected since Mr. Markham's summary was published. It is true that the reports of the Mahomedan traveller, M—S—, as to the hydrography of the Upper Oxus, turned out to be misleading—a circumstance which Mr. Black should have mentioned in a footnote; but we can now rely on something more than the statements of Asiatic explorers. The work started by General T. Gordon, when attached to the Yarkund Mission, has been ably continued by a succession of highly qualified English geographers. Mr. Black rightly praises Colonel John Biddulph's book on The Tribes of the Hindu Kush; though it is going a little too far to say that "the summit of the notable Tirich Mir, north of Chitral, was first brought into prominence by its author." Tirich Mir, 26,425 feet above the sea, was prominent, one would imagine, long before our politicals appeared on the scene. Colonel Biddulph's geographical researches in the country round Gilgit were supplemented by Colonel Tanner; and a little later Mr. McNair, disguised as a Mahomedan physician, carried out an adventurous reconnaissance to the frontiers of Kafiristan. In 1885 Mr. Ney Elias, now Consul General at Meshed, travelled from Yarkund, over the Pamirs, to Badakshan, and thence to the camp of the Afghan Boundary Commission, near Maruchak; the result of his arduous labours being a most valuable report on the Upper Oxus States, which, however, has never yet seen the light. A brief account of his journey will be found in Mr. Black's book; but it may be added that the mystery of the Dragon Lake in the Pamirs has since been cleared up by Capt. Younghusband, who found that the light supposed to flash from a great diamond set in the dragon's forehead is only a ray of sunlight entering the cave through an orifice at the further end. Mr. Black tells us about an isolated peak to which Mr. Elias "had to give" the name of Tagharma; and in a footnote he quotes a text from the prophecy of Ezekiel—"They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses and horsemen and mules." It is difficult to see what inference one is expected to draw from this. Mr. Elias did not name the peak. A reference to Tagharma will be found in Shaw's book, if not in earlier authorities. Tagh, as in Mustagh, Taghdumbash, and other geographical names, is the Turki for "head" or "summit." There is nothing to show that Ezekiel's Togarmah was in the Pamirs. Returning from Maruchak, Mr. Elias joined Sir William Lockhart's mission. Mr. Black makes no mention of the Lockhart mission, which is the more to be regretted as very little is known about that interesting and important undertaking.

To rightly estimate the value of a book of this kind one must take account of the materials on which it is based, and of the manner in which they have been utilised. A single example of Mr. Black's method may suffice. The following extracts are from Colonel Holdich's Report and Mr. Black's Memoir:

MAJOR HOLDICH'S REPORT
(1883).

"The object of this survey expedition was to explore the Takht-i-Suliman mountain, and complete as much of the topography as possible of the Sherani country, keeping up a continuous border survey with that already completed to the north, which terminated about the line of the Gomul Valley; and to fix, if possible, a certain number of points in the country west of the Takht-i-Suliman . . . The innumerable lines of hills traversing the central Afghan plateau were very much dwarfed to the observer, there being absolutely no peaks or points in that direction which appeared to have any special prominence. . . . Many important geographical features in the Birmal Hills, the Gomul and Zhob valleys, and the Musa Khel country of the Upper Vihowa (recently explored by the Hakim and Bozdar) were easily identified, and the general correctness of

MR. BLACK'S MEMOIR
(1891).

"The object of the survey expedition was to explore the Takht-i-Suliman mountain and complete as much of the topography as possible of the Sherani country, keeping up a continuous border survey with that already completed to the north, which terminated about the line of the Gomul valley, and to fix points to the west. These objects were generally secured, though the innumerable lines of hills traversing the central Afghan plateau were much dwarfed when seen from the lofty elevation of the Kuisargurh, and no peaks appeared specially prominent. Many important geographical features in the Birmal hills, the Gumal and Zhob valleys, and the Musa Khel country of the Upper Vihowa (recently explored by the Hakim and Bozdar) were easily identified, and the general correctness of the geography certified. Yusuf Sharif's survey of the Gumal pass connects their geography certified. Esuf Sharif's survey of the Gomul pass connects the work with Waziristan on the north, and a subsequent exploration on his part... has filled in still further details in continuation of the Bozdar's topography. Thus, with the exception of the head of the Dabua pass, the topography of the frontier is continuous and complete from Kohat to the Reminuk."

MAJOR HOLDICH'S REPORT
(1883).

MR. BLACK'S MEMOIR
(1891).

the work with Waziristan on the north, and a subsequent exploration of his filled in further details in continuation of the Bozdar's topography; so with the exception of the Dabua pass the topography of the country was continuous and complete from Kohat to the Reminuk Pass."

The comparison is not altogether satisfactory. How much of the "Memoir" is constructed merely in this paste and scissors style I am not prepared to say; but it would probably be found that not more than a tenth of the whole is original. A series of verbatim extracts, accompanied in every case with references to chapter and verse, and indexed, would have been equally useful.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

"CLARENDON PRESS SERIES." — Shelley's Adonais. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by William Michael Rossetti. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THAT the "Adonais" of Shelley should receive the honour of inclusion in the Clarendon Press Series is not to be wondered at. It is rather a matter for astonishment that, while the works of all Shelley's great contemporaries have been drawn on for educational purposes, and treated with the respect due to literary classics, Shelley—the one poet of the first rank that Oxford has produced—should have been so long neglected.

Mr. W. M. Rossetti cannot be accused of taking his task too lightly. His work is, indeed, a striking example of editorial thoroughness. The fifty-five Spenserian stanzas of the "Adonais" are imbedded in the midst of 120 pages of introduction, elucidation, and comment. There are memoirs of Shelley and Keats. There are detailed accounts of the composition and bibliography of the poem, followed by an Argument, which contains a full discussion of the difficult question, "Who is Urania?" Then come a general exposition and an account of Shelley's indebtedness to Bion and Moschus, before we are at length permitted to approach the elegy itself. Then there is an appendix of cancelled passages. After this come over fifty pages of notes, in which even the cancelled passages receive detailed exposition, something like four lines of comment to every line of poetry.

Whether quite all this was necessary may be open to doubt. The memoir of Shelley might have been shorter; and, I may add, fairer to Harriet Westbrook. The brief characterisations appended to the list of Shelley's works would have been better away; for what is gained by informing the student that "Queen Mab" is "didactic and subversive," or that "Epipsychidion" is "a poem of ideal love under a human personation"? The notes are often unnecessary, as it seems to me, and sometimes absurd. Mr. Rossetti gravely tells his readers that in the lines

"His fate and fame shall be An echo and a light to all eternity," we are to understand,

"not absolute eternity as contra-distinguished from time, but an indefinite space of time, the years and the centuries. His fate and fame shall be echoed on from age to age and shall be a light thereto."

His comment on the words "nameless worm" is almost equally ridiculous in its needlessness and futility: "A worm, as being one of the lowest forms of life, is constantly used as a term implying contempt"; and so on and so on for several lines more.

Nor is the beautiful stanza (52) in which Shelley perhaps comes nearer to Pantheism than anywhere else in his writings made more intelligible by such an elucidation as Mr. Rossetti's.

Shelley writes:

"The One remains, the many change and pass,
Heaven's light for ever shines, earth's shadows fly;
Life, like a dome of many-coloured glass,
Stains the white radiance of eternity,
Until Death tramples it to fragments."

His editor expounds after this fashion:

"Eternity is figured as white light—light in its quintessence. Life, mundane life, is as a dome of glass which becomes many coloured by its prismatic diffraction of the white light; its various prisms reflect eternity at different angles."

It would be difficult to find an exposition by any modern editor which showed more extraordinary misapprehension of the text it professed to explain or more curious ignorance of the simplest facts of elementary science.

Mr. Rossetti does not call attention to what may possibly be a reminiscence of Wordsworth in each of the last three verses of the elegy. There seems to be a faint echo of a well-known passage of the "Ode on the Intimations of Immortality" in Shelley's words—"A light is past from the revolving year"; and "the eclipsing curse of birth" recalls another passage in the same Ode; while the line, "The soul of Adonais, like a star," suggests the strongest line in Wordsworth's sonnet on Milton.

Although the veteran Shelleyan may have magnified his office, and have thrown himself into the rôle of editor with a zeal which is not always according to knowledge, he has produced a useful edition of what Shelley called "the least imperfect of his compositions," and all young students of Shelley must rest his debtors. They would probably be still more grateful if he would in a future edition reduce the book to half its present size.

It only remains to say that there is an excellent index, and that a few misprints have escaped notice.

F. RYLAND.

SOME BOOKS ABOUT INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE.

Two Thousand Years of Gild Life. With a full account of the Gilds and Trading Companies of Kingston-upon-Hull, from the Fourteenth to the Eighteenth Century. By the Rev. J. M. Lambert. (Hull.)

The Influence and Development of English Gilds, as illustrated by the History of the Craft Gilds of Shrewsbury. By F. A. Hibbert. Thirlwall Dissertation, 1891. (Cambridge: University Press.)

The History of Commerce in Europe. By H. de B. Gibbins. (Macmillans.)

AMID the increased attention that has been paid of late years to the growth and constitution of gilds, but little has been hitherto bestowed on the craft gilds outside of London. Towards the history of the London Companies, great and small, half a dozen works exist, as those of Herbert, Riley, and the Reports of the Livery Companies' Commission. But the peculiar position of the metropolis early gave an advanced development to her inner organisation. The history of craft gilds needs fuller study in the towns all over England to elucidate their origin and relation to the older institutions, manorial and municipal. Dr. Gross's important work on the Gild-Merchant has done much to clear up confusion, and to invite a separate investigation of local craft-organisations. We therefore should welcome the first volume on our list as a contribution towards this end. Its value chiefly consists in the publication of original documents, although it claims to do more than this. Many collections of the ordinances of trade companies or crafts of various towns are known to exist, some few have been printed in scattered works, topographical and other; those of the marshals, bakers, and barber-surgeons of York have recently been put forth. Dr. Lambert's claim that his book on Hull is "the most complete publication of the records of mediæval craft gilds" yet made for any provincial town in England may well be true; but it is disappointing to find that, with the exception of those relating to the weavers and glovers, these records date only from the middle of the sixteenth century, some even later. Fragmentary notices and extracts are, however, gathered together, which carry back the existence of many of the gilds to an earlier period, e.g., in the case of the brewers and the tailors. The documents upon which the volume is based are the "Compositions" or Ordinances of fifteen companies (which include thirty-one trades), ranging in date from 1490 to 1714, which are preserved in the archives of the Corporation of Hull; but whether they are taken from the official books of the Corporation as entered after the mayor's approval, or from the books kept by each individual craft, is not clearly stated. In the chapter on the fraternity of bricklayers, however, separate mention is made of the "Composition" in the Town Hall, and of the book of ordinances of the gild, and that these only occur for one other—viz., the coopers' gild; whence it may be concluded that we have here the Corporation copies. The point is one of some interest, and the omission is the more singular that the municipal control exercised over the crafts is recognised in the introductory sketch of craft life in chap. 18.

Several interesting details are given relating to the different trades, for which the author has travelled farther afield than Hull; but local incidents and illustrations are more important in a work of this kind. Two pictorial reproductions deserve notice—the tables of symbols denoting the assize of bread, similar to that used at York, and no doubt by all bakers' crafts; and curious representations of late fifteenth-century ships incised on stone in the church of Holy Trinity. As a great trading port, Hull boasted a shipwrights' gild—of which record exists only from 1682—as well as the shipman's gild, founded in 1369, which worshipped in Trinity Church, and grew to be famous as the Trinity House, still existing. Hull was also one of the Staple ports, and here were established, as might be expected, several companies of merchants, of which some new and interesting accounts are given. The religious gilds also receive due notice, including some unprinted ordinances. But there does not seem to have been a minstrels' gild, and it is therefore confusing to find inserted a chapter on the minstrels of Beverley and of the Pui (erroneously spelt throughout "Pin"). The "outline of the history and development of the gild system from early times, with special reference to its application to trade and industry," which occupies the first part of the book, unfortunately has little scientific value; and it must here suffice to say that Dr. Lambert favours the Roman theory of gild origin.

Names mis-spelt may pass, but it is astonishing to find "the editor" of English Gilds quoted as supporting the Celtic derivation of the word gild; assuredly he had no such idea. Dr. Lambert has here wrongly ascribed a quotation from Mr. Hensleigh Wedgwood in a note at the beginning of Dr. Brentano's essay. Again, in the chapter on "Incorporation of Gilds," he states that the Introduction to English Gilds "lays it down broadly that the gild was certainly a corporation," thus quite misreading the paper referred to, which, it is there clearly stated, was inserted as touching municipal bodies, not gilds.

Mr. Hibbert's essay, notwithstanding a tendency to conjecture, bears signs of careful reading and digest of material. In regard to the gild merchant, he has hold of the right idea, the duality of gild and municipality; he explains the rise of the craft gilds out of the gild merchants under the continuous control of the municipal authority. There is unfortunately little to learn of the merchant gild in Shrewsbury beyond a curious list of the trades and handicrafts comprised among its members here printed, for which neither date nor authority is given. Among these the "walker" was a fuller, not a builder; a "teynterer" was a tenter, one who stretched cloth after it was dyed; and a "palmer" one who had made his pilgrimage. The short description of craft gilds is drawn up from the records of the Shrewsbury gilds, original or printed, in the Transactions of the Shropshire Archaeological Society. The writer has wisely limited his chief purview to the history of the local gilds, as the more useful contribution to the history of the institution, Shrewsbury having a special interest on account of its position near the Welsh border. He carries the narrative through the "re-organisation of the gild system" in the industrial movement of the Elizabethan period, showing how the spirit and methods were taken up and re-enforced anew; and he traces the causes of the degeneracy and final decay of the companies. Mr. Hibbert touches his subject with a sympathetic pen, he searches for contemporary motives and ideals; and though some of his conclusions may not prove tenable, owing to insufficient knowledge, his book is a suggestive study on distinct lines. We may mention that the returns at the Public Record Office do include one from a gild at Shrewsbury, which has escaped notice for want of a Calendar to those documents.

The subject of Mr. Gibbins's book is vast: he attempts to give "some idea of the historical course of commercial development" in England and Europe "from antiquity to the present time," modestly calling it "a rough outline." More than this can hardly be expected within the compass of 230 small octavo pages; but it has the virtues of method and clear arrangement, which will render it valuable as a text book. The three sections into which the book is divided treat of Ancient, Mediaeval, and Modern Commerce; within these the matter falls into broad historical lines, care being taken to show how politics and trade have acted and re-acted on each other. The forces of commerce displayed in the Mediterranean ports and the Italian cities of the South, and in the Hansa towns of the North, are more striking when their salient features are thus grouped together, and the facts that surrounded the growth of these powerful organisations pointed out. The imagination is impressed by the mapping out of the great routes which trade opened up for itself in the middle ages, from North to South Europe, and from the East into Europe through Venice; and by the descriptions of the famous fairs, English and foreign, which in those ages kept up a periodical movement of commerce and civilisation, and of the manufacturing centres which furnished them. Coming to modern times, the Eastern and the Western commercial empires, the later revival of European industries, the effects of the French Revolution, are treated on the same broad distinct lines. It is inevitable that facts so compressed should sometimes tell but half-truths. Thus, the sketch given of villeinage and feudalism is too little cognisant of agricultural facts and the real state of the people; "cruel extortion" and "abject serfs" are the characteristics of feudalism, while the judgment passed on the Hansa is that it "had done a noble work . . . ; it had helped the improvement of mediaeval society, the march of civilisation, and the growth of industry." Surely the silent agrarian work of patient ages had done as much for civilisation as this more showy activity. The truth is that the Hansa itself must have owed much to the stability induced by the feudal and pre-feudal systems.

The book is packed with information, special notes on coinage, currency, lists of fairs, the Jews, banks, &c., being appended to many of the chapters, while a comparative table of British trade in the last fifty years, and a list of the colonies of European countries, are found at the end of the volume. Questions for the use of teachers are added.

LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

The New World and the New Book. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. (Boston: Lee & Shepard.)

IN the writings of Mr. Higginson we are accustomed to look for vivacity and wit united with common sense; and accordingly, a fresh volume of essays from his pen, whatever the topics, is always welcome. On the present occasion, however, he is not fully up to his reputation. He is vivacious, indeed, but something has vexed him and the book is an expression of his annoyance. The trouble is that certain British authors (Mr. Higginson lays himself open to censure from some of his fellow countrymen by calling them "English") have spoken less respectfully of America and American literature than Mr. Higginson likes. Mr. Goldwin Smith, for instance, has described the American nation itself as "but a schism"; Mr. Gosse has been enquiring doubtfully into the merits of American poets; Mr. Matthew Arnold smiled at the existence of a "Primer of American Literature." "What is criticised in us," says Mr. Higginson, "is not so much that our social life is inadequate as that we find it worth studying; not so much that our literature is insufficient as that we think it, in Matthew Arnold's disdainful phrase, 'important.'" In short, he adds, Americans are denied "not merely the pleasure of being attractive to other people, which can easily be spared," but the privilege "that is usually conceded to the humblest" of being of some interest to themselves. Mr. Higginson has discovered that a theory "which seems to be largely flavoured with cant" prevails somewhere—he does not say where—that Americans "must accept with the utmost humility all foreign criticism, because it represents a remoter tribunal" than their own.

He is himself not disposed to accept foreign criticism, and certainly not British criticism, with humility. He refuses to believe in the accuracy of the critics; and is evidently still more dissatisfied with their tone and their supposed motives. They do not wish to improve his country, but to laugh at her. And it would seem that, loudly as Mr. Higginson sounds his confidence in her greatness, he does not think she can afford to be laughed at. He takes pains to show how excellent she is. "How magnificent," he says, "is the work constantly done among us, by private and public munificence, in the support of our libraries and schools." He expresses the opinion that "a hundred years hence the wonder will be, not that we Americans attached so much importance at this stage to these efforts of ours, but that even we appreciated them so little." The bulk of his argument is, however, to be summed up in the familiar "You're another." The obnoxious critics are brought to judgment. Their loose and vulgar phrases particularly offend the delicate literary sensibilities of Mr. Higginson. Mr. Matthew Arnold, referring to Emerson, has said we should "pull ourselves together" to examine him. When Mr. Gosse answers an objection with "a fiddlestick's end for such a theory," it does not give to Mr. Higginson "an impression of vigour." To the grosser British ear these phrases and others which disgust Mr. Higginson do not seem very objectionable; not worse than "I have had men come" and "the immortality is often still to seek," and "experimentalised" for experimented, to be found in Mr. Higginson's own book. Mr. Higginson draws comparisons between the two countries to show the superiority of his own. Thus Mr. Rider Haggard's romances, about which he fancies England displays wild enthusiasm, are, in his eyes, a "crop of weeds" which, in America, would rank only as "dime novels."

Mr. Higginson labours under a misapprehension, or several misapprehensions. No such ill-will is felt by British critics as he supposes. Their criticism when unfavourable is not unfriendly; and the fact that it is offered shows at least that America is considered to be worth criticising. Words of empty commendation are given when a subject is not valuable enough to be examined for its defects. Had British critics really despised America and her literature they would not have said the things which have so vexed Mr. Higginson, and then there would have been a better reason for his vexation. By quick appreciation of merit, as well as by honest condemnation of fault, British writers and readers have been of real service to America. On more than one occasion they have revealed to her who her great men were. This was partly so in the case of Holmes, Emerson and Thoreau, and almost entirely so in the case of Whitman. Imperfect understanding of England and her criticism leads Mr. Higginson into another misapprehension. He confounds London with England, and he has a most confused idea of the actual and relative importance of British writers. Thus, in reference to Hawthorne, instead of considering what such a critic as Mr. R. H. Hutton has said about him, he complains that to Mr. Andrew Lang—who is a humourist more than a critic—"that profound imaginative creation, Arthur Dimmesdale in the Scarlet Letter," is simply "a dissenting minister caught in a shabby intrigue." For the rest, his notion of British criticism is almost wholly derived from the irresponsible remarks of a few popular journalists and magazine writers of the day.

We have great respect for Mr. Higginson. He has done some good writing and some good fighting, and, we believe, some good preaching in his time; and, esteeming him as we do, we think this latest book, where he fails to take a large view, and shows such anger over trifles, is unworthy of him. It hurts not himself alone; for such a defence as this casts more ridicule on America than anything British critics, great or small, wise or unwise, friendly or unfriendly, have said about her. All American geese are not swans, and England is honest enough and interested enough to say so. But they have not thought so meanly of her as to suppose she and her literature needed such a petty defence as Mr. Higginson offers. His book is a mistake.

WALTER LEWIN.

NEW NOVELS.

Bent on Conquest. By Edith Maud Nicholson. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Big Stake. By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn. In 3 vols. (White.)

Ben Clough, and other Stories. By William Westall. (Ward & Downey.)

Tricks and Tricksters: Tales Founded on Fact. By Joseph Forster. (The Leadenhall Press.)

Maid Marian and Robin Hood. By J. E. Muddock. (Chatto & Windus.)

Zohrah, and other Tales. By Isabel Don. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Love for an Hour is Love for Ever. By Amelia E. Barr. (Hutchinson.)

MISS NICHOLSON'S Bent on Conquest is tantalising. First, we do not quite see the appropriateness of the title if it refers to the love affairs of the hero; for, instead of finding any difficulty, he was in the position of Caesar—"he came and saw and conquered." There is, perhaps, a little more appropriateness in his moral struggles; but if we are to accept the narrative implicitly, Harry March was far more fascinating when wicked than when striving to be virtuous. Secondly, the author herself tries us. After a page or two of unusually good writing, she will suddenly become trifling and jejune. The story, as a story, is interesting. Lord March, a confirmed invalid, takes into his service, as companion and steward, a handsome young fellow. His lordship is moved entirely by his good looks and fascinating manners, and when remonstrated with for not demanding testimonials he replies, "Anybody would give a man a good testimonial if he wanted to get rid of him. Then, again, as to his moral character, few people would damage a young fellow to the extent of saying he was 'respectable.'" So "Mr. Hastings" stays. He seems to make everybody idolise him in the course of about twenty-four hours, while he plays sad havoc with the heart of beautiful Meg, Lord March's granddaughter. But troubles ensue. Hastings is summoned to the bedside of a young French Count, who has been done to death by Capt. Hartwell, gambler and roué; and he promises his friend to marry his sister Marie, after the Count's death. He does not love her; while Marie herself loves Sir Horace Courtney, Meg's cousin. There is a good deal of playing at cross purposes; but just before the time fixed for Hastings's wedding, the latter discovers Marie's affection for Courtney, who has twice saved her life. All the tangled love affairs are satisfactorily adjusted; while Lord March is furnished with a genuine surprise in the fact that "Mr. Hastings," whom he cannot bear out of his sight, is his own heir, being the child of a scapegrace son whom the old nobleman had cast off long years before with bitter recriminations. The rapid familiarity of the principal characters with each other in the outset strikes us as unnatural; but, on the whole, the narrative has the merit of carrying the reader along with it, and of creating a desire within him to know the end.

Mrs. Jocelyn is a bright and vivacious writer; but the ending of A Big Stake is rather tame. After the wily widow, Mrs. Warren, has been plotting and planning all through the three volumes, and metaphorically sitting on the edge of a volcano, the whole thing goes off with a fizzle. She weeps and sobs piteously on the shoulder of the young heiress, Valda, whom she has been zealously striving to supplant and deceive, and repents of her transgressions—chiefly because she has been found out. Now, while a state of penitence is becoming and desirable in the wicked schemer—whether male or female—we take leave to doubt whether the real Mrs. Warren was of a nature thus to permit herself to be snuffed out. Such people have generally a trump card up their sleeve. Her little tricks with the pompous old lawyer, Mr. Percival, are very amusing, but there seems to be a lack of grip in the characters generally. However, with the exception of this one drawback, the novel is really interesting, and the hunting scenes, of course, are as attractive as usual.

There is a good deal of rough power in Mr. Westall's sketches of Lancashire life. "Ben Clough" especially shows his skill in grasping personal character, though the narrative itself is rather gruesome. A number of individuals—one of them a widow who has got rid of three husbands—form a conspiracy together for insuring "bad" lives in various offices, and dividing handsome profits when the persons insured have prematurely died. After some exciting episodes, Clough, the leader of the ghoulish band, meets with a tragic death. "Briggs from Bolton" details the European experiences of a dealer in cotton waste who has suddenly become wealthy, and must, of course, make the "grand tour" with his vulgar wife. It was the legitimate boast of Briggs that he was always lucky; but he had a narrow shave of losing that Northern characteristic at the hands of certain adventurers in Prague and Vienna. "Deadly Nightshade" and "A Flash of Lightning" are stories of a wholly different order; and some readers will, no doubt, prefer them to those dealing with Lancashire people. But in all his sketches Mr. Westall is entertaining.

The tales from a lawyer's note-book, to which Mr. Joseph Forster has given the title of Tricks and Tricksters, form a comprehensive indictment against the swindling rascals who infest all classes of society. The dark and devious ways of the city promoter are exposed in the sketch of "A Financial Genius"; "Shylocks of To-day" deals with those hardy perennials the money-lenders; "Will Tricks" demonstrates how the fountain of justice may be poisoned at its source; "Bad and Worse" details the frauds practised upon insurance companies; and "Sword-fish versus Jelly-fish" lifts a corner of the curtain on the "investment-combined-with-occupation" swindle. Every person who reads Mr. Forster's little book will not only be entertained while doing so, but will be picking up wrinkles to enable him to defy the hydra-headed rogue and all his works.

The ever old and yet ever new story of Robin Hood receives a fresh setting at the hands of Mr. Muddock. In this romance of Sherwood Forest the bold outlaw stands out strongly, dominating the whole narrative. The author has well displayed the traditional characteristics of Robin—his unrivalled skill as an archer, his dash and courage, his frank, fearless nature, his contempt for the rich and his sympathy with the poor. The chapters describing the death of Marian and the passing of Robin are very pathetic.

Zohrah is a tale of the Saharas. The title is taken from the young and beautiful wife of the old chief Belcasson. He is a monster of jealousy; and, on account of an innocent passage with a French officer, he casts Zohrah out upon the world. Her succeeding adventures are of a romantic character, and well worth tracing. "A Workhouse Waif" is a very natural and pathetic sketch, calculated to linger in the memory. "At the Shrine" relates the affection of a high-born Italian lady for a fisherman, and the vicissitudes through which they are called upon to pass.

Mrs. Barr is at her best in Love for an Hour is Love for Ever. The proud old Squire Atherton and his fascinating daughter Francesca, Lancelot Leigh and his father the millowner, are all very distinctive characters, cleverly drawn, and invested with a life-like air. There is something uncanny and a little unreal in Mrs. Leigh, who lives more with the dead than the living, and prefers the death of her husband to the sale of Leigh Farm. The love passages between Lancelot and Francesca, with the wonderful devotion of the latter to her lover, are tenderly delineated. The whole story will delight the reader.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

The Witness of Hermas to the Four Gospels. By C. Taylor, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge. (Cambridge: University Press.) Dr. Taylor has made what seems to be really a very interesting discovery. It is that Hermas, in a passage never before explained, not only makes allusion to the Four Gospels, but furnished the hint to Irenaeus for his famous argument, drawn from the constitution of the world, that they could not be either more or fewer than precisely four in number. The passage will be found at the end of the third Vision. Hermas has seen the woman (Ecclesia) seated on a bench, and the meaning of this is thus explained to him: καὶ ὅτι ἐπὶ συμπέλλου εἶδες καθήμενην, ἰσχυρὰ ἢ θύσις· ὅτι τέσσαρας πόδας ἔχει τὸ συμπέλλου καὶ ἰσχυρὰς ἔστηκεν· καὶ γὰρ ὁ κόσμος διὰ τεσσάρων στοιχείων κρατεῖται (Vis. iii. 13, 3). That the bench with four feet, on which the church is firmly supported, is nothing less than "the holy quaternation of the Gospels," is surely a very probable conjecture, if not a good deal more; and, indeed, when the passage is seen in the light of Irenaeus, it can hardly be doubted that this is the correct interpretation. If it be accepted, there will be the less inclination to take exception to the many references, sometimes in the shape of allegorical allusions, sometimes by the use of a single striking word or phrase, not only to the Synoptics, but to the Fourth Gospel, which Dr. Taylor points out in the sequel of his volume. It may be that in some cases he has pushed his ingenuity too far; but his essay is the result of an original and minute study of the style of the Pastor, and it certainly deserves and will receive the attention of scholars.

Our Lord's Signs in St. John's Gospel. Discussions chiefly Exegetical and Doctrinal on the Eight Miracles in the Fourth Gospel. By John Hutchison, D.D. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.) The nature of this book is sufficiently indicated by its title. Dr. Hutchison accepts the Fourth Gospel as the authentic work of the Apostle John; he accepts the miracles recorded in it as authentic facts, but he does not regard their historical reality as their most important aspect, but seeks in each some spiritual truth which it was intended to emphasise or teach. That this is the correct view is evident from the very word "signs" (σημεῖα), which John uses to the exclusion of the usual word for miracle (δυνάμεις), as well as from the general character of the Gospel. We cannot, however, always agree with Dr. Hutchison's exegesis. His explanation of the enigmatical "Mine hour is not yet come," for instance, as referring to the time when in human weakness, on the cross, Jesus would again acknowledge His mother's authority, seems to us far-fetched and fanciful, even though the authority of St. Augustine be claimed for it. His discrimination of John's noblemen from the centurion of Matthew and Luke is, perhaps, inevitable, and certainly justifiable from a harmonistic point of view. Dr. Hutchison also distinguishes, as many do, the post-resurrection miracle of the draught of fishes from the very similar event recorded by Luke as having taken place at the commencement of the Galilean ministry; but he is right at least in his references to the Gospel text, and in holding that the same lesson is taught here as in the parable in which the kingdom of heaven is likened to a net cast into the sea (Matt. xiii. 47-48). The book, which is marked by refined thought and scholarship, is a careful study of the Gospel signs in the light of the best ancient and modern exegesis.

The second volume of Prof. Marcus Dods's Exposition of the Gospel of St. John has been published, completing the work (Hodder & Stoughton). It is the latest addition to the "Expositor's Bible."

The Apostle Paul. By A. Sabatier. Translated by A. M. Hellier. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Every reader of Prof. Sabatier's well-known sketch of the development of St. Paul's doctrine will welcome this translation. It is edited by Mr. G. G. Findlay, who adds to it an able and careful essay on the Pastoral Epistles and a few footnotes, which express "with reluctance," occasional dissent from Prof. Sabatier's positions. The translation is thoroughly well done; but it is not a work of genius, and does not therefore succeed in giving us in English the grace and clearness—the "singular charm of treatment"—of the original French. Prof. Sabatier has written for "the English edition" of his work an eloquent and interesting preface, in which, after asking whether "English Christians are not in a very special sense St. Paul's spiritual children," he shortly indicates the scope and intention of his "sketch." He also contributes some "notes of the author written for this edition." Two of these notes contain important modifications of his previous conclusions. The first, on p. 120, states that "a renewed examination" of 2 Thess. ii. "renders us less confident of the Jewish character of the Antichrist spoken of"; but the professor still holds that the κατέχω of verse 7 is the Roman Emperor, the empire being looked upon by the Apostle as τὸ κατέχω. St. Paul "abides by the prediction of Daniel, and leaves the personality of Antichrist indefinite, precisely because this personality did not as yet present a distinct form to his eyes." The second note, on p. 171, modifies the writer's original view of the circumstances attending the composition of 1 and 2 Corinthians. He now contends for a lost epistle before the extant 1 Cor., and a lost epistle before the extant 2 Cor., and an unrecorded visit by the Apostle to Corinth between the sending of 1 Cor. and of the second lost epistle. This complicated theory is explained at some length clearly and forcibly, and deserves the careful attention of all scholars of St. Paul's Epistles. We have indicated the special value of this translation as almost a new edition of Prof. Sabatier's book. But we more particularly welcome the translation because it will enable English readers to realise the value of a study of St. Paul's teaching which does not, in deference to orthodox English ideas of inspiration, ignore the marks of growth and development, and even change, in the Apostle's doctrines. Prof. Sabatier's sketch of the history of St. Paul's mind is as vivid and readable as Canon Farrar's history of his life.

The Greek Devotions of Lancelot Andrewes, Bishop of Winchester, from the Manuscript given by him to William Laud, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, and recently discovered. Edited by P. G. Medd. (S.P.C.K.) The manuscript of Bishop Andrewes' Devotions in Greek (and in part in Hebrew), recently acquired by the Rev. R. G. Livingstone, and supposed to be an autograph of the author, or perhaps we should say compiler, has been edited with loving and scholarly care by Canon Medd. It is evident, from numerous errors, that the Bishop's acquaintance with Hebrew was much less close than his acquaintance with Greek; and it seems to us that the Bishop himself, and not Samuel Wright, may have in other copies substituted the Septuagint Greek for the passages he had cited in Hebrew in the copy here reproduced in print. The use of a language imperfectly understood might have been found not very helpful to devotion. Similarly, it is scarcely fair to Wright (since it is admitted that other recensions of these Devotions may have come from the author's hand) to accuse him without hesitation of "conscious suppression" of the prayers for the departed which appear in this manuscript, given as a parting gift to Laud shortly before the death of Andrewes. It is, indeed, likely enough that Andrewes, steeped as he was in the liturgical lore of the ancient Church, might make use of such prayers; but the fair copy made by Wright may have been from another and even a later recension. But however this may be, it may now be regarded as certain that Andrewes at one time (like several other Anglican divines) did not scruple to ask in his private prayers for "light and refreshment" for the departed. The book is nicely printed; but it will not make Pickering's edition of 1828 less an object of desire to the lover of books, and, as may be inferred from the title, it does not, like Pickering, contain the Latin Preces.

The Prymer: or Prayer Book of the Lay People in the Middle Ages. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Henry Littlehales. Part II. (Longmans.) A year or two ago, Mr. Littlehales published the text of an English Prymer preserved in a MS. in the library of St. John's College, Cambridge, which is probably the oldest known, for the Calendar shows that it dates from the fourteenth century. He now prints a careful collation of this with twelve other MS. Prymers, in the British Museum, the Bodleian, and elsewhere, which all seem to be slightly later in date. The normal contents of a Prymer are thus shown to be: The Hours of the Blessed Virgin, the Seven Penitential Psalms, the Fifteen Gradual Psalms, the Litany, the Office for the Dead, the Commendations. Additional matter is often found, but not uniformly. In an Appendix is given the opening of Psalm xlii. in twelve slightly varying versions; and there are two facsimile plates. In a third volume Mr. Littlehales proposes to deal with the history of the Prymer generally, its relation to the service-books proper, and the use of the book both in church and at home—subjects upon which he has already touched in the Antiquary.

Missale ad Usus Ecclesie Westmonasteriensis. Edited by John Wickham Legg. Fasciculus I. (Harrison & Sons.) This is the first volume of the publications of the Henry Bradshaw Society, which was founded just two years ago, at a meeting held in the Jerusalem Chamber, for the editing of rare liturgical texts. The text chosen to open the series is a Missal, which was given to Westminster by Abbot Lytlington (1362-1386), and which still remains in the possession of the Dean and Chapter. Among the interesting features in this Missal are the coronation service, in a form evidently intended for use; and directions for a royal funeral. The Midsummer and Christmas offices for St. Thomas of Canterbury have been carefully erased; but almost the whole can be recovered by means of chemicals. The address inviting to prayer on behalf of the Pope has also been restored. The present fasciculus contains only one volume out of two, stopping short just before the ordinary of the mass begins. It is an accurate reprint of the original, showing the size of the letters and the colouring by corresponding typographical devices. The spelling has been followed, even where it is manifestly corrupt; but contractions have uniformly been expanded. Seven colotype facsimile plates are given, representing the illuminations of initial letters.

ABOUT eighteen months ago Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode published a photo-lithographic facsimile of the Annexed Prayer-Book; that is to say, of the MS. copy which was attached in 1662 to the Act of Uniformity. This possesses a double interest—as being the absolute first-hand evidence of the existing source, and also as having long been supposed to be lost. The facsimile was brought out in an edition so limited as to be practically unattainable. But the same publishers have now followed it up with a reproduction in type, which will serve all the needs of the liturgical student. By means of simple typographical devices all the main features of the MS. can be seen; while the orthography and punctuation are preserved down to the minutest detail. The original, of course, has erasures and corrections; in such cases the plan adopted is to follow the final version left by the scribe. We have compared the facsimile and the reproduction somewhat carefully; and we have found only a very few unimportant discrepancies, which are not worth mentioning. But there is one matter that seems unfortunate. The pagination of the two does not correspond; and it would appear that this might have been avoided by a little ingenuity, when we state that the one contains 554 pages and the other 547. The printing, paper, and binding—by which we do not mean only the cover—are alike excellent.

THE volume of the Holbein Society for this year happens to be a liturgical work. It is a facsimile reproduction of a copy of Luther's Catechism, printed at Frankfort in 1553, and illustrated with a series of woodcuts by Hans Beham. The original, which is in the possession of Mr. Quaritch, is believed to be unique. Together with the Catechism proper is printed two abbreviated forms of the marriage and baptismal service, intended for ignorant ministers. About the theological interest of the book we need say nothing now, but it is impossible to pass over in silence the extraordinary ignorance displayed by the editor, which extends from title page to colophon. The former runs in the original, "Catechismus für die gemeine Pfarrer und Prediger," which is (apparently) translated as "A Catechism for the People, Pastor, and Preacher." The latter concludes, "in den Schnurgassen zum Krug," which is rendered, "of the Schnurgassen-zum-Krug." After this it is hardly surprising to find "Traubiichlin" taken to mean "small book on marriage," and other similar blunders in the Introduction, which lead us to doubt the editor's knowledge of German as well as of bibliography. The facsimile has been admirably executed by Mr. A. Brothers, of Manchester, who is also the treasurer of the Society.

Dissertations on the Apostolic Age. By the late J. B. Lightfoot. (Macmillans.) Like a former volume issued by the trustees of the Lightfoot Fund, The Apostolic Fathers (see ACADEMY, June 25, 1891), this represents some of the ripest fruits of the great bishop's learning, in a form adapted for those who are not professional students of theology. It contains five dissertations, reprinted from his editions of St. Paul's Epistles—on "The Brethren of the Lord," "St. Paul and the Three," "The Christian Ministry," "St. Paul and Seneca," and "The Essenes." At the end of the third essay are added two short appendices, one of which gives Dr. Lightfoot's final opinion upon the genuineness of the seven Greek Ignatian Epistles. In the exercise of their discretion, the editors have decided to omit the dissertation entitled "Were the Galatians Celts or Teutons?" which some will regret. The Index is enriched by the pictas of Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, who has supplied precise references to all the numerous quotations from Seneca. While we yield to none in our dislike for the practice of encumbering a book with publishers' advertisements, we could have wished to see somewhere a full list of the other publications of the Lightfoot Fund.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PREBENDARY STEPHENS, of Chichester—the biographer of Dean Hook and of Lord Hatherley—has undertaken, at the request of the family, to write a memoir of the late Prof. E. A. Freeman. Those who may be able to supply letters, reminiscences, or other biographical material, are invited to communicate with Mr. Stephens, Woolheding Rectory, near Midhurst.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK have in the press a volume by Lord Selborne, to be entitled Hymns: their History and Development.

THE Dean of Rochester has been writing his Memories of Archers, Artists, Authors, Cricketers, Ecclesiastics, Gamblers, Gardeners, Hunters and Shooters, Oxonians, Preachers, and Working Men. The book is full of anecdotes and good stories, and contains several illustrations from original drawings by Leech and Thackeray. It will be published by Mr. Edward Arnold very shortly.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. announce a work in two volumes, by Mrs. Oliphant and Mr. F. R. Oliphant, entitled The Victorian Age of English Literature. Besides giving an account of the various departments of letters (including journalism) during the last half century, an introductory chapter will deal with those writers whose work was already finished at the Queen's accession, and a final chapter will give an estimate of the present condition of literature.

MESSRS. GEORGE BENTLEY & SON announce a translation of the Conversations of Dr. Ignatius Dollinger, recorded by Louise von Kobell, who was admitted to his intimacy during the last ten years of his life.

WE hear that Michael Field will publish, about the middle of this month, a new poem, entitled Stephanie: a Trialogue. It deals with the relations of the Emperor Otho III. and the famous Pope Gerbert with the woman who gives its title to the volume. Mr. Image has designed the title-page. The book is printed by Messrs. Folkard, in an edition of only 250 copies.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD will publish next month an important work by Mr. Alfred Milner, late Under Secretary of State for Finance to the Khedive, entitled England in Egypt. As a work of reference, the book will be valuable to all who are concerned with Egyptian affairs; while as a history of one of the most remarkable enterprises ever undertaken by this country abroad, it presents a record of events rarely paralleled, and full of deep interest to all patriotic Englishmen.

THE next of Messrs Bell's reissues in "The Aldine Poets" will be Matthew Prior's Poetical Works, edited by Mr. Richard Brimley Johnson, which will contain several pieces from a variety of sources—including the burlesque on Dryden's "Hind and Panther," which Prior and Montague wrote at Cambridge—here printed for the first time. Some hitherto unpublished letters in the Bolingbroke Correspondence have been consulted in the preparation of the memoir which the editor prefixes to the volumes. The entire text has been collated; and with the additional matter in the appendix and the new memoir, the work may be considered as practically a new edition.

MESSRS. BELL have also in the press a thoroughly revised edition of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, based on that of 1651-2. The editor, the Rev. A. R. Shilleto, has translated the classical quotations, and verified the references for the first time. He has also added an introductory memoir and copious indexes. The edition will be in three volumes, and a small number will be printed on large paper.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. will publish, as the sixth volume of their Pocket Library of English Literature, A Selection from Elizabethan and Jacobean Pamphlets, edited by Mr. George Saintsbury. In this selection Mr. Saintsbury gives only entire pamphlets—a specimen of literary criticism from Lodge, of autobiographic romance from Greene, of politico-religious controversy from the Martin Marprelate series, of burlesque from Nash, of mingled self-pamper and lampoon from Harvey, of paraphrase of foreign matter adapted to English conditions from Dekker, and of what may be called hack-work for the press from Breton. The originals of these pamphlets are for the most part inaccessible except in the original editions.

MISS ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING's new novel, "Orchardcroft," which has been running through the pages of the Leisure Hour, will be published shortly in volume form, by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, and simultaneously in Germany by Baron Tauchnitz. Miss Keeling has also made arrangements for the publication next spring of another book, to be called "Appassionata: A Musician's Story."

THE new volume of the "Pseudonym Library," to be published next week, will be

Gentleman Upcott's Daughter, by Tom Cobbleigh. The Tuscan Republics (Pisa, Lucca, Siena, and Florence, with Genoa), by Miss Bella Duffy, will appear at the same time in the "Story of the Nations."

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish, in a few days, The Lady's Dressing Room, translated from the French of Baroness Staffe, by Lady Colin Campbell. It is said that 30,000 copies of the French edition were sold in three months.

WE are promised immediately two more books of travel in France, both of which are to be abundantly illustrated:—Wayfaring by Southern Waters, from the Quercy to the Dordogne, by Mr. E. H. Harrison, some chapters of which have already appeared in Temple Bar; and Across France in a Caravan, from Bordeaux to Genoa, by the author of "A Day of My Life at Eton."

IN spite of the increasing number of works relating to Chess openings and problems, no reliable history of the ancient game has yet been published. The veteran player, Mr. H. E. Bird, proposes to meet the want by The History of Chess, which he has long been preparing. The book will be published very shortly by Messrs. Dean & Son.

THE Rev. F. Marshall's book on Rugby Football will be published early next week by Messrs. Cassell & Company.

THE next volume of the "Canterbury Poets," to be published at the end of this month, will be a selection from the Poems of the Hon. Roden Noel, with an introduction by Mr. Robert Buchanan.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a volume by Prof. Shuttleworth, of King's College, entitled The Place of Music in Public Worship.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO. will publish in a few days The Germ Groovers, by Canon Potter, of Melbourne. While being, in the main, a weird story of adventure, it contains suggestions as to the origin of the deathly plagues of the earth, and has a strong theological vein running through it.

AMONG the articles appearing in the next number of the Religious Review of Reviews will be "The Peace of the Church," by the Rev. Compton Reade; "The Art of Reading," by Canon Fleming; "The Church Army in Foreign Service," illustrated; "Lay Help," by the late Bishop Fraser; and "Thoughts on Public Worship," by the Rev. Arthur Finlayson. The frontispiece will be a cabinet portrait of the Bishop of Chester, Dr. Jayne.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON announce a cheap edition of Scenes Through the Battle Smoke, by the Rev. Arthur Male, Army Chaplain at Lucknow and in the Afghan and Egyptian Campaigns, with all the original illustrations by Mr. Sidney Paget.

MESSRS. BLACKWOODS have just added Mr. P. G. Hamerton's Marmorne to their cheap series of popular novels, together with two books by Mrs. Oliphant.

THE new volume of Heinemann's "International Library," Björnson's The Heritage of the Kurts, has already run through two large editions, and a third one is announced for next week.

THE free Sunday lectures of the London Ethical Society will be resumed on Sunday next, October 9, when Mr. Bernard Bosanquet will discuss "Some Questions concerning the Transition from Paganism to Christianity." Among those who have promised to give lectures before Christmas are—Prof. J. E. Carpenter, Mrs. Bryant, Mr. Augustine Birrell, Mr. S. Alexander, Mr. R. G. Tatton, and Mr. Graham Wallas. The meetings are held at Essex Hall, Strand, at 7.30 p.m. We may add that the Ethical Society now also manages the University Extension lectures that are given at Essex Hall on Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

WE are requested by Mr. Buchanan to state that the verses appearing from time to time in the Pall Mall Gazette over the signature "R. B." are not from his pen. He has only contributed one set of verses to the journal in question, and that was signed with his full name.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FULL term at Cambridge begins next Tuesday. On Saturday last, October 1, Dr. Peile inaugurated his second term of office as vice-chancellor with the usual address (in English), reviewing the principal events of the past academical year. Incidentally, he mentioned that the number of students had doubled within the last thirty years.

AT Oxford, term does not begin until the end of next week.

THE Disney professorship of archaeology at Cambridge is now vacant. Canon Browne, who has held it for the usual term of five years, does not intend to offer himself for re-election.

PROF. MONTAGU BURROWS will publish immediately, with Messrs. Blackwoods, a volume entitled Commentaries on English History.

THE list of successful candidates at the recent examination for the Indian Civil Service, the first under the new system, includes the names of no less than seventeen Oxford men, being more than half the total. Cambridge is represented by six. There are four natives of India, of whom two were government scholars at English universities. We may add that one of the Oxford men is the fourth generation, father and son, who have been in the covenanted service—or the fifth, if an ancestor may be reckoned who was captain of an East Indiaman, and afterwards director of the Company.

TO the October number of the Educational Review Mr. R. W. Macan contributes a very sympathetic notice of the late Richard Lewis Nottleship, which is illustrated with an excellent portrait. From the same source we learn of the death, in September, of Mr. Robert Castle, estate agent to so many Oxford colleges.

PROF. JAMES LOUDOUN has been appointed president of Toronto University, in succession to the late Sir Daniel Wilson. Prof. Loudoun, who is a native and also a graduate of Toronto, has occupied the chair of physics there for some time past.

AT Trinity College, Dublin, the promoters of the scheme for the foundation of a University Magazine have formed a working committee, and lists for intending subscribers have been opened at the College booksellers.

THE evening classes for the present session at King's College, London, were to be inaugurated on Friday, October 7, with a public lecture by Prof. Cunningham on "Political Economy and Practical Life."

AT the Chelsea centre of the London University Extension Society, Dr. S. R. Gardiner is to give a course of lectures on "European History in the Period of the Renaissance and the Reformation"; and Mr. Bernard Bosanquet a course of lectures on "Plato (with the Republic)."

WE have received the Report of the Judith Montefiore College, at Ramsgate, for the past year, written by Dr. M. Gaster. It gives a conspectus of the courses of lectures delivered by Dr. Gaster himself, by Dr. H. Hirschfeld, and by the Rev. B. Schewzik. Besides the Bible, the Talmud, and Rabbinical literature, the curriculum includes both Syriac and Arabic. Appended to the report is a catalogue of the extensive collection of pamphlets, &c., formed by Zanz, which (together with his library) are now the property of the college.

THE address delivered by Dr. G. Vanzo Smith at Manchester New College, on the close of the last academical year, has been published as a pamphlet (Manchester: Rawson). It contains interesting reminiscences of his own college days, more than fifty years ago; as well as an eloquent defence of the right of Unitarians to the name of "Christians."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF ROBERT STEPHEN HAWKER, VICAR OF MORWENSTOW.

Thy grey manse standeth on the sheer hill-side,
With naught to tell the change 'twixt now and then;

Thy grey church, gazing down the narrow glen,
Watcheth the ebbing and the flowing tide;
The sea-mews circle and sail—all these abide
Though thou art gone, and stilled thy magic pen;
But thy works praise thee in the world of men,
And of the poor thy name is glorified.

Poet and Priest! we tread where thou hast trod,
Behold the same wide main's immensity,
Where seems the great ship but a fairy skiff:
Here earnest thou to commune with thy God,
Watching the sunset fade on Hennacliff,
Or the storm darken o'er the Severn sea.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

OBITUARY.

THIS week, we must be content only to record the death of Lord Tennyson, which took place early in the morning of the day on which we go to press.

ERNEST RENAN.

It is Renan's own fault, in large measure, that the defects of his qualities are thought of first—at least by an Englishman—in making any critical estimate of his position in the world of letters and of scholarship. His gratuitous levity, his unnecessary cynicism, kindly though it was, the touch of superficiality in his research, his lapses of taste, a certain strain of bourgeois optimism—he took no trouble to hide or remove these failings; he rather insisted on thrusting them on his readers. The Englishman who said of Joseph Ernest Renan that he was neither earnest nor a Joseph was dealing with him after his own fashion, making a point but not telling a truth, or even a half-truth. The latter part of the poor witticism, indeed, was grossly unjust: his private life was beyond reproach, thanks to the influence of the cassock which he took up only to lay down. But there was a touch of the sensualist in his thoughts, in his writings—in a certain hankering after the life of les gais, in his Abbesse, and in certain passages of the Vie de Jésus—which give point to the epigram and indicate the fundamental defect of his life work.

That work was the history of the transformation of European thought by Semitic seriousness. The twelve volumes of the History of Christianity and its preparation for eight centuries in Judaea, Histoire d'Israël and Histoire des Origines du Christianisme, form the work of his life by which his significance is to be judged. All else, though it forms a fair library by itself, is but of the nature of parerga and paralipomena. He plunged in medias res with the Vie de Jésus, in reality almost the weakest of the volumes, but gaining, by its piquant contrast of subject and treatment, the greatest literary success of the century. Without haste and without rest, volume after volume, each more solid than its predecessor, followed, till the series culminated in the Marc Aurèle, by far the finest of the set. Then Renan turned back to the history of the præparatio evangelica; and it is gratifying to think that it has been given him to set the seal on the last volume of the Histoire d'Israël, and complete the history of a thousand years' struggle after the ideal that was to dominate the world. These volumes play the part of interpreter between the world of culture and letters and that of scholarship. They give French form to the results of German historical science, on a theme in which culture, letters, and scholarship are all alike interested. The amount of scholarship he brought to bear on his task was only barely sufficient for his purpose. No one can think of him as one of the great names in the history of scholarship. The variations he made on Tübingen or on Ewald (Wellhausen he had not assimilated) were slight and unconvincing; his views on the Fourth Gospel or on the Priestly Narrator have found not a single adherent. A certain impatience of detail, a youthful fecundity of unfounded hypothesis, meet one when testing him on most of the contested positions with which his subject bristles.

Yet if neither profound nor original, his scholarship was mostly sufficient for his purpose. His task was more that of the historian than of the scholar, and still more that of the man of letters than of the theologian, though he had continually to deal with questions of scholarship and of theology. That a man may be both a great scholar and a great historian the example of Mommsen is sufficient to prove, but Renan did not combine the two rôles. He is rather to be compared with Gibbon, who had the same marvellous facility for assimilating the best scholarship of his time. The comparison with Gibbon is indeed striking throughout: the largeness of the theme they each handled with such facility and mastery, the scale of treatment and its appropriate variations, the want of philosophical breadth of generalisation, and above all the mixture of tones, the combination of dignity and frivolity of treatment, are common to both historians.

The comparison with Gibbon, indeed, goes deeper. Renan was a belated child of the Aufklärung, of the movement which made Voltaire and Diderot and Hume and Gibbon, and in return was made by them. The deepening of European thought and feeling, represented on the one side by Hegel, on the other by the Romantic movement, passed almost without influence upon him, and he remained a Voltairian to the last. He used to think and speak of himself as a Celt—was it one of his most subtle jests? Nothing could be farther from the mysticism, romanticism, melancholy, not to speak of the obscurity and dulness of the Celtic genius, than his clear and sunny pages. He may have been a Breton, but he must have been a "Breton non Bretonnant." As a matter of fact, he was the personification of tout Paris. Hence the touch of l'homme moyen sensuel in him, the journalistic smartness which degrades his pages at times; hence—tell it not in Berlin, publish it not in the streets of Leipzig—the Philistine phase of his genius, the complacent satisfaction with things that are, the fatal dealing with serious things in a manner not serious.

His theme was, I have said, the transformation of European ideals by Semitic seriousness. Sin, Salvation, Righteousness, God, Hell, how these conceptions won the world, that was Renan's topic; and he chose to treat it from the point of view and in the tone of the man on the boulevards. It mattered not that he had ceased to believe in the conceptions; the question is rather whether he had ever known what it was to believe in them.

To be a saint you must have sinned, to be a sceptic you must once have believed. And once having believed, it would have been impossible for Renan to have remained so completely at ease in Zion without a touch of the bitterness of the true sceptic. He was a Hellenist of the Hellenes, and he chose to write of the rise and spread of Hebraism. He was, whether he knew it or not, utterly out of sympathy with his subject; and it is only when he reaches that part of it with which he was in entire sympathy, the Marc Aurèle, that he completely rises to the occasion. The origin of Christianity cannot be adequately written by a man who half believes that the universe is a huge edition of Le Petit Journal pour rire.

And yet, with it all, how brilliant the pages in which he attempted his impossible task! If his psychology is thin, how rich is his style! The stately yet elastic march of his periods traverses the centuries unfalteringly. As a theologian, a scholar, a critic, a psychologist, he almost always leaves something to desire; as a man of letters, as a master of style, he is delightful, charming: he scarcely ever fails to rise to the occasion. He was the born man of letters to his finger tips. A characteristic story is told of him when outward and inner voices told him with no uncertain sound, "Thou art no Christian." He hesitated whether to become an historian, but Thierry and Michelet were in his way: a writer of romances, but he would be overshadowed by Balzac and George Sand. Oriental philology and exegesis were the pis aller. That is not the way in which his life work comes to a great scholar or thinker; but it is just the way in which the great man of letters looks about for the subject in which to display his powers. He was the greatest man of letters, pure and simple, that France—or Europe, for the matter of that—has produced.

I have left myself scant space to touch on the miscellaneous productions which will bulk so largely in his œuvres complètes. Of his incursions into the field of literary criticism and philosophy there is little need to speak; they have the charm of his style, but they have little else. His translations of Ecclesiastes, Job, and Canticles were condemned from the outset; you cannot translate the Bible, or, at least, the Old Testament, into French. Nor did the professor of Hebrew shine in verbal emendations and textual criticism. His Mission de Phénicie I do not know; but from the scanty references to it in later research, I should judge that it was not so important as it is bulky. His most solid contribution to knowledge was his Histoire comparée des langues sémitiques; it may be as antiquated now as Bopp, but it will always hold the same place in Semitic philology as Bopp's great work will do for the Aryan language. Renan was indeed at his best in such a general survey of the scholarly achievements of others. He may not have been a great scholar; but he was a really great critic of scholarship, and has aided greatly in raising the general level of French scholarship to the commanding position it now holds. In this connexion, his summaries of Oriental studies in the Journal Asiatique were of high value, and contrast favourably even with Mohl's: it is to be hoped they will be collected like Mohl's. Renan's name was attached, after the rather reprehensible fashion of the Académie, to much work with which he had little to do. The solid accounts of the French Rabbis in the Histoire littéraire were written, it is well known, by Dr. Neubauer; and the magnificent first volume of the Corpus Inscriptionum Semiticarum, which likewise has Renan's name on the title, owes little more to him, one may safely conjecture, than general supervision.

There remain only to be considered his admirable Discours, where his qualities are to be seen at their best. There, if anywhere, as a scholar speaking to men of the world, he could appropriately speak of serious things lightly, could allow lambent irony to play around things of lofty import. These little masterpieces—his own Discours de Reception, his answer to Pasteur, and, we might add, his letter to Strauss—show him at his best. His Souvenirs was an attempt to deal with himself on a large scale in the same manner, but was scarcely so successful, though full of charming passages. He is not fair to his readers: half the fun, so to speak, of autobiography is the exaggerated seriousness with which the autobiographer takes himself. Renan refuses to allow his readers the gratification of a continuous commentary of ironic depreciation; he does that for them, and so destroys the effect of a book otherwise so charming. Curious that the two greatest French men of letters of the nineteenth century lessened their significance in such opposite ways: Victor Hugo always took himself too seriously; Ernest Renan never took himself or his life work seriously enough.

JOSEPH JACOBS.

BRINSLEY NICHOLSON, M.D.

SHAKSPERIAN scholars will have learnt with much regret of the sudden death of this gentle-hearted student on September 14, at his house in Norwood. Born at Fort George, Scotland, in 1824, the eldest son of B. W. Hewittson Nicholson, of the Army Medical staff, his boyhood was passed at the places where his father was successively stationed: Gibraltar, Malta, and the Cape. In 1841 he came with his mother and sisters to Edinburgh, where he entered the university, and in due time took his degree, finishing his medical studies in Paris. As army surgeon he was with his regiment during the Kafir Wars which terminated in 1853 and 1854, spending some years in South Africa. His observation and knowledge of the native tribes are shown in the genealogical tables of Kafir chiefs, and notes thereto, contributed by him to a Compendium of Kafir Laws and Customs, printed by the government of British Kaffraria at Mount Coke in 1858. It was during his long rides and lonely hours in these years that he laid the foundation of his intimate knowledge of Shakspeare, whose works were his constant companion. He was in China during the war of 1860, and present at the famous loot of the summer palace at Peking, and with his regiment in New Zealand in 1864, when the Maori War came to an end. He retired as deputy inspector-general of military hospitals about 1870; and devoting himself to the study of Elizabethan literature, he edited for the New Shakspeare Society the first Folio and the first Quarto of Henry the Fifth, issued in 1875. A third volume, the Parallel Texts of the same play (1877) was completed by his friend, Mr. P. A. Daniel, a severe stroke shortly after his marriage, at the close of 1875, having incapacitated Dr. Nicholson for the time. This illness left its physical effects, but, helped by the devotion of his wife, he continued his favourite studies; and in 1886, encouraged by his friend and fellow-student, Prof. W. T. Gairdner, of Glasgow, he brought out his only important work, an excellent edition of Reginald Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, with an introduction rescuing the old author into modern sympathy. He had also prepared a selection of Jonson's Plays for publication, which it is feared will never see the light; and at the time of his death was engaged upon an edition of Donne's Poems for Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen. He was an occasional contributor to Notes and Queries, the Athenæum, and other periodicals. In all these his habits of accuracy and his full acquaintance with the literature of the period gave his work a value above its pretensions, and rendered his criticism pertinent and sagacious. A man of high character, "inclined to noble thinking," he modestly claimed to be "a student only of what is useful and true and good;" and in his quiet life he carried this out in practice, ever willing to give himself to the service of a fellow-scholar, ever ready with words of kindness out of a true heart for those in trouble. A genuine Shaksperian: peace be to his memory!

L. T. S.

IN our obituary of last week, we regret that the name of Mr. John Peto, one of the workers at the New English Dictionary, was misprinted "Pete."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE October number of the Antiquary is of more than ordinary interest; in fact, there is only one paper with which we could have dispensed without loss. Mr. George Payne's account of the discovery of a Saxon burial-ground at Rochester is important. As the skeletons lay east and west, it is probable that the burials had taken place in Christian times; but we do not hold this to be by any means certain. There is an especial interest attaching to all Saxon and Angle interments, whether the burials be of urns or of bodies; and they become more important when the interments are near the eastern sea. More than one student of credit maintains that Eastern England was inhabited by Teutonic peoples long ere the days of Hengist. If this assumption—for at present it is little more—is ever to be demonstrated or refuted, it can only be by the diligent study of urns and the contents of graves. The Rev. B. J. Harker has a very good paper on certain prehistoric remains at Grassington, in Craven. It appears that, among recent discoveries in that remote part of Yorkshire, are "quite a number of Druidical circles dotted over the hills and pastures." These have never been planned or even described. The Society of Antiquaries has from time to time done good work in relation to our prehistoric antiquities. We trust that the authorities which govern that venerable body may be induced to map these circles without delay; in a very few years it may be too late. The Rev. Dr. J. C. Cox, the editor, contributes a well illustrated paper on some of the churches of Marshland. The grand Norman church of Walsoken, and the fine Perpendicular church of Tetterton, are among those he visited. Will a time ever come, we wonder, when we shall have a survey of all our old ecclesiastical buildings carried out in this thorough manner? Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite's address on church restoration is a powerful document. We trust that it may be widely distributed. It falls to many persons to have to do with the restoration of churches who are quite incompetent for the task. If Mr. Micklethwaite's paper does no other good, it will tend to convince such people that something beyond mere good intentions and a full purse is required to qualify a man for entering on such delicate work.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co.'s LIST.

Fiction.—"The Fate of Fred Lavers," by Alexander Morrison, with illustrations by Herbert Sydney; "In a Forest Glade," by Edward A. Minty, with illustrations by Pegram; "Syringa," by Arthur Nestorien; "Girl with no Name," by Judith Hathaway; "Ghost Lore and other Tales," by F. L. Lamb; "Netta," by E. Elliott; "England's Downfall," by Claude Lyon; "Warped," by J. G. Hornstein; "Faithful to the Last," by C. S. Lamb Fox; "The Laird's Deed of Settlement," by Jane M. Kippen; "Dick, or the Doctor: an Australian Story," by Rex Raynor; "This Working-Day World," by V. G. Fairfax; "True to the Prince," by Gertrude Bell; "Where Honour Sits," by W. B. Home-Gall; "Trifles for Travellers," by A. Wentworth; "Beauty and the Witch," by J. Herman Rees; "The Romance of a Demon," by Thomas Malyn; "Sir Vinegar's Venture," by John Tweeddale; "The Haunted House of Chilka," by Colonel C. F. J. Skeltowe; "Mrs. Smith's Craze," by Henry Ross; "Chequered Courtship," by Alice A. Gore.

Books for the Young.—"A Little Dog's Diary," by Mrs. Clinton-Baddeley, with illustrations by the author; "A Good Little Book for Grown-up Boys and Girls," by Jessie Adams, with illustrations by the author; "Ida's Mistake," by V.G.F., with frontispiece by Robert Springett; "Where the Sea Birds Cry," by Castle Hill, with frontispiece by E. F. Sherie; "Life Threads," by K.E.V., with frontispiece by E. F. Sherie; "For Hal's Sake," by Amy Manifold.

Poetry.—"The Masque of Civilisa," by Francis S. Kemp; "The Path of Life," by Edith M. Bennett; "The Lover of Nature," by George Gee; "The Kingdom of the Zoro," by Robert Ballard; "The God of Fools," by E. Harold Begbie; "The Story of a Life," by Esther Powel; "The Vision of a Beginner," by Constance Finch; "Stray Thoughts in Verse," by E. C. Leader; "A Rhyming Record," by L. B. M. Collings; "Minutiae," by Charles William Dalmon.

Miscellaneous.—"Studies in Life and Literature, with Introductory Sonnets," by Charles T. Lusted; a sixth edition, revised, of "The Author's Manual," with portrait of the author; "Whose Fault? the Story of a Trial at Nisi Prius," by Ellis J. Davis; "Private Schools and Private Schoolmasters," by an Assistant-Master; "A New Creed," by a nameless author.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION'S LIST.

"A Long Chase," by K. M. Eady; "Waif and Gipsy," by Mrs. A. D. Philips; "The Mystery of Hall-in-the-Wood," by Rosa Mulholland; "The Light-Ship Hand," by Henry Frith; "In the Days of '51," by Flora M. Wootton; "Ulf the Norseman; a Tale of the Fjords," by Mary Olney; "Wrecked off Scilly," by Mary Olney; "Elf Island," by Captain T. Preston Battersby; "Heartless Tammy," by Annie E. Courtenay; "Choosing Her Way," or, Do the Work that's Nearest, by the author of "A Schoolboy's Ambition"; "Dick of the 'Paradise,'" by Alfred Colbeck; "A Schoolboy's Ambition," by Mary Russell Day; "Moved by Example," or, Strong as Death, by M. Harriet M. Capes; "Hetty's Garden Party and what came of it," by Emma Leslie.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

AUDERBRAND, Philibert. Petits Mémoires du 19^e siècle. Paris: Calmann Lévy, 3 fr. 50 c.
FRANCE, Anatole. L'étui de nacre. Paris: Calmann Lévy, 3 fr. 50 c.
LECOMTE, Voyage pratique au Japon. Paris: Challamel, 3 fr. 50 c.
ROUSSEL, A. Jamennais d'après des documents inédits. Rennes: Caillière, 7 fr.
SYLVIA, A. de. Séminaire et Séminaristes. Paris: Dentu, 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

WINCKLER, H. Alttestamentliche Untersuchungen. Leipzig: Pfeiffer, 7 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

BISTRIM H. MOORE. Die Erzdiözese Köln bis zur französischen Staatsumwälzung. Neu bearb. v. A. MOORE. 1. Bd. Mittelalter. Düsseldorf: Voss, 10 M.
FONTES rerum brenensium. 7. Bd. 3 Lfg. 1319-1351. Bern: Schulthess, 5 5/6.
MONUMENTA Germaniae paedagogica. 13. Bd. Berlin: Hofmann, 20 M.
SASS, J. Deutsches Leben zur Zeit der sachsen Kaiser. Berlin: Springer, 2 M.
SAURMA-JELTSCH, H. Erhr. v. Die Frauinsache Münzsammlung deutscher, schweizerischer u. polnischer Gepräge. Berlin: Weyl, 40 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

WERNICH, K. Die Bestimmung d. Molekulargewichts in theoretischer u. praktischer Beziehung. Berlin: Springer, 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

FORGET, J. Im Sinä. Le Livre des théorèmes et avertissements, publié d'après les MSS. de Berlin, de Leyde et d'Oxford. 1^{re} Partie. Texte arabe. Leiden: Brill, 6 fr. 50 c.
GRAC, R. De Ovidii metamorphoseon codice Amploniano priore. Halle: Peter, 2 M.
GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 8. Bd. 10. Lfg. Same-Saumseligkeit. Bearb. unter Leitg. v. M. Heyne. Leipzig: Hirzel, 2 M.
HAYET, L. La Prose métrique de Symmaque et les origines métriques du Cursus. Paris: Bouillon, 4 fr.
QUELLEN U. FORSCHUNGEN zur Sprach- u. Culturgeschichte der germanischen Völker. 71. Hft. Judith. Studien in metrischer, etc., by T. G. Foster. Strassburg: Trübner, 3 M.
STREIBER, W. Zur germanischen Sprachgeschichte. Strassburg: Trübner, 2 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PSEUDO-SMOLLETT.

Oxford: Sept. 27, 1892.

I have before me a book recently published by George Routledge (but with no date), which bears on its title-page the following announcement: "The Adventures of Gil Blas of Santillane, translated from the French of Le Sage by Tobias Smollett." At the Bodleian I have also seen a book published by Nimmo & Bain in 1881, in three volumes, containing a translation of Gil Blas identical with that published by Routledge, "preceded by a biographical and critical notice of Le Sage by George Saintsbury." The public is informed that the translation is by Tobias Smollett. An identical version of Gil Blas, put forth as Smollett's, is found in Bohn's Illustrated Library.

The fact is that these modern editions of Gil Blas, which have been issued by George Bell & Sons, by George Routledge, and by Nimmo & Bain, with the name of Smollett on the title-page, do not give the public the Gil Blas of Smollett, but regale them with quite a distinct and independent version. These editions have no right whatever to the name of Smollett, as may be clearly seen by comparing any passage taken from the authentic translation by Smollett with its equivalent as it appears in the pseudo-Smollett editions. Let us take, for instance, the following passage from Le Sage, and see how the French has been rendered by the two different translators:

"Ce n'est point un de ces dévots dont le visage pâle et maigre prêche la mortification; c'est une grosse face, un teint fleuri, une mine réjouie, un vivant qui ne se refuse point au plaisir qui se présente, et qui sur tout aime la bonne chère. Vous serez dans sa maison comme un petit coq en pâte." (Histoire de Gil Blas, liv. x. chap. 10, p. 106 (1735)). (Smollett) "He is none of those devotees whose pale and meagre faces preach up mortification. He has a capacious countenance, a rosy complexion, a merry look, is a jovial soul who enjoys the present hour, and in particular loves good cheer. You will live in his house like a prince."

(The Pseudo-Smollett) "None of your lantern-jawed saints, with Lent in his face, a cat-of-nine-tails on his back, and a cholera morbus in his belly. No such thing! Our doctor is rubicund in the jowl, efflorescent on the nose, with a wicked eye at a bumper or a girl; militant against no earthly pleasure, but most addicted to the good things of the table. You will be as snug there as a bug in a blanket."

This is the kind of windy balderdash which has for many years been foisted on uninquiring publishers, uncritical editors, and an unsuspecting public as the work of the author of Roderick Random, and a fair representation of the style of the elegant Le Sage.

The "Tobias Smollett" of the three publishers is obviously not one and the same person with the author of Roderick Random. Let us now see what is the real name of the author, who by a countless number of English readers has been accepted, on the faith of misleading title-pages, as no other than the illustrious Tobias.

The name of the author who wrote the pseudo-Smollett translation I have been able to discover through the kind help of one of the British Museum librarians, who a few years ago supplied a friend of mine with some interesting particulars on the subject. From a comparison of passages it may be gathered that the Smollett of the publishers was known to his family and friends as Benjamin Heath Malkin. In 1809 Malkin brought out a book, printed for Longman and other booksellers, which had the following title: "The Adventures of Gil Blas of Santillane, translated from the French of Le Sage, by Benjamin Heath Malkin, Esq., M.A., F.S.A." The book contains the following "advertisement":

"On occasion of producing a splendid English edition of Gil Blas, the publishers would gladly have adopted the translation published under the name of Smollett. The defects of that translation are acknowledged: and Le Sage is now understood to be indebted to this popular writer only for his name. Under these circumstances, it has been the aim of the present translator to produce a more easy and spirited transcript of the original; with what ability and success must be left to the reader to determine."

This edition had numerous fine engravings from paintings by R. Smirke, R.A., which engravings appear in Bohn's Illustrated edition.

So we see that this translation, which is known far and wide as Smollett's, was really brought out in 1809 as the work of Malkin, and as an improvement on the translation of the "popular writer" of the eighteenth century.

This matter is not only interesting as a curious piece of literary history, and a striking instance of the general gullibility of mankind; it has also its importance from another point of view. Mr. T. L. Kington Oliphant, in his book The New English (published in 1886), tells us that in taking new words from the translation of Gil Blas he used "Routledge's edition, which bears no date." The consequence is that he has been misled by the title-page, and has used Malkin's translation of 1809 as though it were Smollett's translation of 1749, and dated hundreds of 1809 words sixty years too early. It is not surprising under these circumstances that "the number of new English phrases is remarkable."

This mistake of Mr. Kington Oliphant's has had the unfortunate result of misleading the learned editor of the Stanford Dictionary. In the passage I have quoted from Malkin there occurs the "easy and spirited" expression "a cholera morbus in his belly," a phrase which is not to be met with in the translation of the less elegant Smollett. Mr. Oliphant catches at "cholera morbus" as a new word introduced by Smollett in 1749, and Dr. Fennell follows Mr. Oliphant. The result is that in the Stanford Dictionary we find it stated that "cholera morbus," in the sense of Asiatic cholera, appears in Smollett's Gil Blas as early as 1749! And no doubt some popular lexicographer will copy the Stanford; for fascinating is picturesque error, and the sequacity of popular lexicographers is appalling.

One question I should like to ask, and I hope

I shall get an answer. Who was the first person who foisted the work of Malkin on a confiding public as the work of the popular author of Roderick Random?

A. L. MAYHEW.

"THE JAPS AT HOME."

Savage Club: Oct. 3, 1892.

Will you give me the opportunity of announcing, through the ACADEMY, that Mr. Lander's illustrations for my forthcoming book, The Japs at Home, will not, after all, appear. In ignorance that the other drawings in the book were pen and ink, he executed his in wash. When I wrote to explain this, he generously volunteered to redraw them; but having to finish a portrait of an Australian lady, who was leaving England unexpectedly, he was unable to do so before the book went to press. But there will still be over fifty illustrations.

DOUGLAS SLADEN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 9, 7.30 p.m. Ethical Society: "The Transition from Paganism to Christianity," by Mr. B. Bosanquet.
MONDAY, Oct. 10, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Lower Extremity," I, by Mr. W. Anderson.
WEDNESDAY, Oct. 12, 8.30 p.m. Japan Society: "Japanese Proverbs and Figurative Expressions," by Mr. N. Okoshi.
THURSDAY, Oct. 13, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Lower Extremity," II, by Mr. W. Anderson.
FRIDAY, Oct. 14, 7 p.m. Amateur Scientific: "Intrusive Gneisses," by Mr. J. W. Gregory.

SCIENCE.

The Migration of Birds. By Charles Dixon. (Chapman & Hall.)

THAT Mr. Dixon is a most painstaking student of birds, and that he has omitted little or no evidence which bears on his task, are apparent from the most casual glance at this volume. What migration is in its chief manifestations: its various aspects, the mortality, and other incidents which usually attend it—these are lucidly explained and illustrated by a copious selection of instances. He is far, however, from being satisfied, like Gilbert White a century ago, with tabulating the arrivals and departures of migratory birds. Migration, to his mind, is fraught with far higher issues; "its study foreshadows great discoveries relating to the origin of species, and the present and past distribution of life over the earth's surface." In short, migration is the novissimum organum of science;

"in many instances it is an indicating medium of affinities [whatever this may mean], an explanation of various apparent anomalies in geographical distribution, and unquestionably an evidence of those vast physical changes which have been one of the dominating features of our planet's history in past ages."

The key to Mr. Dixon's speculations is found very early in the book, in the assumption that "birds are evolved from their semi-reptilian ancestors." Verily the famous archaeopteryx has much to answer for. Instinct, as the cause of migration, is next summarily thrust out of court, with the remark that, if birds really possessed it, they would be "transcendently more endowed with mental attributes than man." But no measure of instinct has as yet proved a match for reason. Migration is due, according to Mr. Dixon, to a habit, a hereditary impulse, dating back most probably from miocene or even eocene ages, but considerably modified in the post pliocene glacial epoch, 200,000 years ago.

"The terrors of that far-off Ice Age, the dismay attending the banishment of birds from the polar world have apparently been so deeply impressed upon migrants that they have become hereditary terrors—an impulse, a restless longing desire, even in the young and inexperienced, to hurry away to warmer regions at the first possible moment."

Age after age passed on, and birds adapting themselves to the surroundings gradually developed migratory powers, as we know them. Fortunately, Mr. Dixon assures us that the normal course of things at present will be enjoyed for some thousands of years. But evil days lie in front, and migration will undergo many important changes during the next precession of the equinoxes. As an example of this theory, the author takes the well-known fly-catcher of our gardens. In pre-glacial ages England was warm and full of insects, and the fly-catcher lived here, undisturbed by any longings for migration. It was banished during the Ice Age to Africa, but its flight year by year drew nearer the North, as its breeding range increased. During the slow gradual elevation and submergence of the present Britain in post-glacial times, the regular spring journey across the sea became wider and wider, each individual bird never failing to return to the place where it was born; and so "for 60,000 years or more has this species now crossed the sea." The journey of a thousand miles' length has grown to be a deeply-rooted custom, sanctioned by ages of experience and need. And this instance Mr. Dixon calls "thoroughly demonstrable."

We have preferred to let the author use his own words as much as possible, as it is our unfortunate lot to figure as the advocate of an unscientific devil. Has any valid reason been here adduced for deposing instinct or strongly implanted animal intuition, independent of either reason or experience, from being the primary cause of migration? Does instinct learn or change for the better in any number of years which are known to man? Has the salmon or trout ever learned to spawn without migrating to the upper waters, from the sea and the river deeps? Instinct is not a blind, unvarying faculty, but is liable to blunder, and often does blunder, in the case of migratory birds. They miss their course in storms and tempest, strike against lighthouses, delay migration till winter is upon them, and the like. A woodcock has been seen by a passenger from a great Liverpool steamer far away off the west coast of Ireland, which had evidently lost its course, and in its feeble flight was struck down into the waves by a hawk and drowned. Instinct, with occasional variations, as necessity from time to time suggests, will explain all the phenomena of migration, without calling in geological aeons and hypothetical lines of flight, and terming them "thoroughly demonstrable."

Mr. Dixon has evidently a sneaking fondness for the theory of hibernation in birds. So had White of Selborne, and Dr. Johnson. Several of the author's instances of hibernation are striking, but each case is capable of another explanation. The birds may have flown into the hollow tree or other shelter to escape from imminent death. There they were found and called back to life for the time. We are not told how long they afterwards lived.

It is a pleasing duty now to acknowledge the full account which Mr. Dixon gives of the two great annual journeys of the migrants proper, as well as of the partial migrations which so many of our commoner birds at times affect. Scarcity of food and a fall in the temperature often lead species south. His description of the course pursued by birds on migration along river valleys, by the coast lines and the like, is also borne out by the Reports of the British Association on Migration. As for the evidence, however, that some birds follow an ancient coast line, supposed to have once existed between Spurn Point and Denmark, it may be that the fact of Heligoland being a good central resting place influences these birds. A prominent point is always a favourite migratory station. We have watched many birds land from the Continent one after the other on Flamborough Head. The wealth of Mr. Dixon's examples in bird life, the extent of his information, and his enthusiasm for the subject, must needs strike every reader. Apart from his theories, the amount of solid learning here gathered together on bird migration is very great. He has brought the subject up to the level of our present knowledge, and his book is indispensable to all lovers of birds. It only remains now for the conclusions which are promised from the nine Reports of the Migration Committee mentioned above to be systematised by the excellent ornithologist to whom the work has been entrusted, when all that it seems likely can for many years be known respecting bird migrations will have been ascertained. Whatever be the results of this summary, all who philosophise on birds will be grateful to Mr. Dixon. It will be long before his work can be superseded.

M. G. WATKINS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME JAINA-PRĀKRIT AND PĀLI WORDS.

Harold Wood, Essex.

3. Vivatta-echadda = viyatta-chauma.

In Kalpasūtra (Jin., § 16, p. 37) we find viyatta-chauma employed as an epithet of Arhats and Bhagavats. It is glossed by vyāveritta-chadma, and translated by Prof. Jacobi, "who has got rid of unrighteousness." The note in the Commentary on "Viyattachau mānam" is—"Vyāvrittachadmaḥ ghatikarmāni saṁsāra vā chadma tad vyāvrittam kṣīnam yebhyas te."

Vivattacchadda, the corresponding expression in Pāli literature, is an epithet of the Buddha, and is defined by Childers as "one by whom the veil (of human passion) is rolled away."

The term occurs in Anguttara-Nikāya iii. 40.3, where the Burmese MSS. read vivata ("open") for vivatta. In Jāt. iv. 271, a king addressing a Brahman says:

"Tvam nu tatth'eva tadā ahoṣi udāhu te koṇi nam etad akkhā?
*Vivattacchaddo nu si sabbadassi
Nānam nu te brāhmaṇa bhīṇsarūpanti?"

* There is a Burmese variant lection viva/acchādo.

The Brahman makes answer—"Nāham sabhāṇu Buddhō." We find this expression in the Ambattha-sutta Digha Nikāya iii. 1.5, and Buddhaghosa has a long note on it in the Sumaṅgala-Vilāsinī. Childers, in his explanation of the word, quotes and translates a part only of the commentator's remarks. Here follows the passage in its entirety:

"Arahāṇa hoti sammāsambuddho loke vivatta-echaddo ti. Ettha rāgadosamohamānadditthiavijjāduccarita-chadanehi sattahi pucchehaṇne kilesandhakāre loke tam chadanam vivattetvā samantato sañjātaloko lutvā chito ti vivattacchaddo. Tathā paṭhamena padena pūjārahata, dutiyena tassā hetu yasmā sammāsambuddho ti, tatiyena buddhatta-hetu bhūtavivattacchaddatā vuttāti vedittabbā. Atthavā vivatto ca vicchaddo cāti vivattacchaddo, vatta-rahito chadana-rahito cāti vuttam hoti. Tena arahāṇa vattābhāvena, sammāsambuddho chadana-bhāvenāti evam purimāpada-dvayaṇṇeva hetu-dvayaṇṇ vuttam hoti. Dutiya-ve-ārajjena c'ettha purima-siddhi paṭhamena dutiya-siddhi tatiya-catutthehi tatiya-siddhi hoti, parimaṇa dhamma-cakkhum dutiyam buddha-cakkhum tatiyam samanta-cakkhum sādhetiti vedittabbam" (Sum. i., pp. 250, 251).

Here Buddhaghosa shows that vivatta-chadda is an epithet of the Buddha. As an Arahāt he is vivatta, that is, free from vatta or "rebirth"; and as Sammāsambuddha he is vicchadda, free from chadda or "illusion." The Commentator also points out that vivattacchadda is connected with the third and fourth veśārājjas (see Anguttara iv. 8.2; Milinda-Pañha, p. 105; Mahāvagga, p. 18 = Divyāvadāna, p. 67).

R. MORRIS.

THE TEL EL-AMARNA TABLETS.

Queen's College, Oxford: Oct. 1, 1892.

Mr. Griffith has misunderstood me. In saying that the pronunciation of Qaf as g "is distinctive of Upper Egypt," I did not say that it was distinctive of Upper Egypt only. Indeed, I have heard the pronunciation from the Bedouin of El-Arish, as well as in the neighbourhood of Pelusium.

Count d'Hulst seems to have mistaken the point of the discussion. What we want to know is the modern local pronunciation of Arabic words and names, not their etymological spelling. For the latter we have the lexicons. I specially want the Count to be clear on the subject, as he is one of those on whom we depend for a knowledge of the actual pronunciation of the Egyptian fellāhin. By the way, I should like to ask him how it is possible to pronounce two f's before a b?

Mr. Boscawen's letter raises a more interesting and important question. His identification of the Am (or Amni?) of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets with "the land of the B'nè 'Ammo" of Numb. xxii. 5 is very attractive, though in the Phœnician letters the country of Am seems to be in the neighbourhood of Gebal. Moreover, the relation between it and the land of Ambi or Avbi is not clear to my mind. Can the latter be the Aup of the Egyptian texts?

Now as to the city of Timasgi in the letter of Akizzi. As Mr. Boscawen has pointed out, the other localities mentioned in the letter belong to the neighbourhood of Carchemish, Aleppo, and the valley of the Orontes. How then can Damascus be referred to? It belongs to a wholly different geographical area, between which and Northern Syria the land of the Amorites and the independent kingdom of Alashiya intervened. The editors of the British Museum volume have perceived this fact, and it has led them to the extraordinary statement that Damascus was near Tunip or Tennib. The statement is, of course, as wrong as the further statement that the letters of Akizzi are addressed to Amenophis III., whereas they are actually addressed to Amenophis IV. Nevertheless, there is this much truth in it. If Timasgi is Damascus, we must either transport Damascus to the extreme north, or bring the localities of the north into the neighbourhood of Mount Hermon. This is what I meant by a defiance of geography. It is what seems to me the insuperable geographical difficulty which makes the philological difficulty serious. Taken by itself, the philological difficulty might be overcome. Indeed, I was myself the first to point out (in the case of Dusratta's letters) that in the letters from Northern Syria surds and sonants are confounded together.

Ubi cannot be the Hobah of Genesis, as that would be Khabatu or Ubatu. It may be the Ambi or Avbi of other letters; at any rate, geographically and philologically it corresponds with the Aup of the Egyptian monuments.

The city of Qatan, it may be noted, of which Akizzi was the governor, is mentioned in a tablet from the library of Nineveh (N. A. I. II. 60, 29). The spelling of the name given in this tablet shows that the editors of the Tell el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum are incorrect in writing "Katna."

If Mr. Boscawen is right in his identification of the land of Am, a fresh link will be established between the Trans-Jordanic region and Northern Syria. In my Hibbert Lectures I pointed out that Saul of Edom (Gen. xxxvi. 37) came from the Euphrates; and Dr. Neubauer has since identified Dinhabab, the birthplace of Bela[am], the son of Beor, the first of the Edomite kings, with Tunip or Dunip. What is the meaning of all this?

A. H. SAYCE.

THE PRONUNCIATION AND SPELLING OF PLACE NAMES IN EGYPT.

Crieff: Oct. 3, 1892.

The letters from Mr. Griffith and Count d'Hulst concerning the difference between kom and tall lead me to believe that the explanation of the usage is, as I previously suggested, to be found in the origin of the elevation. The smaller temples were often by choice erected on the uneroded sandy mounds left by the Nile in channelling its way out to sea after the emergence of the sea shore below the Muqattam Cliffs. Pressure of official work prevented me from visiting the sites explored by Mr. Griffith and Count d'Hulst; but I recollect that the Temple of Saft (was it Saft el Hinnā?), situated between the Shebini and Wādi Canals, explored by M. Naville, was on a sand mound. Count d'Hulst notes Kom Shenit-mar Horbēt; I rather think this mound is also said in its core under the sibākh. Probably the Count can verify the existence of many sand mounds from his notes of trial pits sunk in preliminary excavations. Certainly "Tall Bastah" is composed of sibākh, and Bubastis was probably founded on the black soil.

I do not agree with Mr. Griffith as to the gasped Qāf being confined to Cairo. The Delta fallāhīn, from my experience, as a rule gasp the letter or give it the true Arabian pronunciation of a very hard k in the throat. I had a boy from Faraskūr, near Damietta, who certainly had never been to Cairo, and whose parents had been fallāhīn cultivating a strip of the sāhel, which lately was eaten away by the Nile. He was a hanger-on of the Shēkh of Faraskūr, who certainly was very bucolic. I used to take him about with me when I was learning spoken Arabic, and used him as a walking agricultural vocabulary. He always said 'amh, 'amīnah sha'af for qamh, qumīnah, and shaqf (wheat, a brick-kiln, and broken pottery). From this observation and from numerous others, I think that Mr. Griffith, though quite right in his denunciation of the Cairene affectation in talking, has not realised that the gasp is especially common all through the Delta save in Beherah, where there is such a large mixture of recently civilised Beduins. The educated Cairene himself admits that the gasp is a vulgarity; and in the Azhar the Arabic Qāf, as the harsh k in the back of the throat, is always taught. Though the Cairene will say 'adi 'awi awi in his own most affected way, still, if he says the "La Haul," he will always say quwwah.

When I came to Egypt from the North-West Provinces of India, where the best Urdu is talked, I was repeatedly complimented on the highly correct Arabian style of my pronunciation of the Qāf, as if my hearers were conscious of their own difficulties in avoiding calling it 'af. The Indian Muslim from Delhi have kept up the correct Qāf pronunciation, though they have lost the pronunciation of the h and 'ain. I may mention also that I once came across a very small village school between Kill and Isna in Upper Egypt, in which I found the teacher of the Qur'ān trying to hammer into his Sa'di pupils' heads that Qāf was Qāf, and not Gāf, in religious literature; and he seemed to think it quite sacrilegious to say El Gādir as applied to the Deity.

Regarding Mr. Griffith's spelling of Ca'if and Fara'in, this class of proper names, really Coptic, are very difficult to spell with precision, unless they can be reduced to the triliteral root forms. Were Ca'if on the form Fa'il, the 'ain gives the short i a longish sound something like a flat e. And if it is on the form Fa'il, the i still has a peculiar sound, from the fact that 'ain must of necessity change every vowel sound to which it is attached. In spelling these words we must of necessity try and ally them to a known verbal form, and failing this fall back on the most likely verbal form to which it is pretty certain the converted Egyptian speedily adapted the pronunciation.

The subject of the present pronunciation of Coptic words in place names is a most intricate one. On the one hand, there is the impossibility of writing in ordinary unmarked Arabic the difference between the Waw-i-maghūl of Persian—sounded o as the oa in English "coat," and the corrupted Waw moved by Fathah as in Hod (Literary Hand)—a basin. Here the sound is very nearly as the au in Paul (the Apostle), pronounced rather short. So far as I can hear, the Waw in the towns Qūs, Sūs, Manfalūt is often pronounced as the Persian o, and has resisted through all these centuries the tendency of the Arabs to call them Qūs, &c.

I note in another part of the ACADEMY for September 24 (p. 267) that Prof. Mahaffy has hopes of getting at the Coptic vowel-points through the Greek transliterations. I fear the old Greek treated the Fathah no better than his modern representative; and we know the ancient Greeks were as deaf to the great h as the modern ones are who spell "Hasan" Assan in their surveys, and who frequently spell a word beginning with a vowel-sound with an h to ensure the non-pronunciation of the h! But I am encroaching on a subject for which my knowledge of the ancient Egyptian language is far too slender.

I hope in another fortnight (so as to be in time for the philologists who take their way to Egypt) to call your readers' attention to a very remarkable local pronunciation near Wastah, about eighty kilometres south of Cairo.

J. C. ROSS, Lt.-Col.,
Late Inspector-General of Irrigation, Egypt.

London: Oct 4, 1892.

The great map of the French Expedition uniformly spells "Tell" with the final consonant doubled. Tell el-Amarna, however, is not mentioned. This invaluable record of Egyptian orthography, in French and Arabic, prior to 1801, is available for a trifling sum of money—in the edition of 1882—from the Mediterranean to Beni-Suef. These sheets cost fifty centimes each—scale 1:100,000—printed on thin paper from transfer plates, with the Suez Canal, railways, and similar additions; but with no other alterations in the map itself.

COPE WHITEHOUSE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first meeting for this season of the London Amateur Scientific Society will be held on Friday next, October 14, at 7 p.m., at the Memorial Hall, Farringden-street, when Mr. J. W. Gregory will read a paper on "Intrusive Gneisses." There will also be an exhibition of specimens from the volcanoes of Hungary, Bohemia, and the Rhine Provinces, by Mr. G. W. Butler; and of specimens illustrating plant structures, by Mr. L. A. Boodle.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish shortly a popular work by the Rev. H. N. Hutcheson, entitled Extinct Monsters, illustrated with twenty-four restorations of ante-diluvian animals, by Mr. J. Smit. Dr. Henry Woodward, of the Natural History Museum, contributes a preface.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. JAMES GOW'S Companion to the Classics is about to be translated into Bohemian by Dr. Anton Chmelik, of Tabor.

FINE ART.

The Lake-Dwellings of Europe: being the Rhind Lectures in Archaeology for 1888. By Robert Munro. (Cassells.)

IN the Preface to this volume Dr. Munro says that, when the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland offered him the Rhind lectureship for 1888, prescribing as the subject of the course "The Lake-Dwellings of Europe," he hesitated for some time before undertaking the task, because he had then "no special knowledge of lake-dwellings beyond Scotland." Probably the society thought that the author of Ancient Scottish Lake-Dwellings would need but little preparation to enable him to treat the wider subject with as much completeness as could reasonably be demanded in a course of six lectures. Dr. Munro was of a very different opinion. The two years that intervened between his acceptance of the commission and the time fixed for the delivery of the lectures were spent in researches which, in addition to the labour of thoroughly mastering the enormous literature of the subject, included an actual inspection of all the most important lacustrine remains in Europe. The author, accompanied by his wife,

"perambulated the whole of Central Europe with note and sketch-book in hand, visiting, as far as practicable, the sites of lake-dwellings, and searching museums and libraries wherever we thought their relics or records were to be found. The eastern limit of the region thus visited may be represented by a line drawn from Königsberg to Trieste, passing through the intermediate towns of Krakow, Buda-Pesth, and Agram."

The book before us is a worthy result of this great expenditure of labour on the part of so highly skilled an investigator, and will be absolutely indispensable to all students of prehistoric archaeology. Dr. Munro's plan has been to pass over as briefly as is consistent with a due regard to completeness all those portions of his subject that are adequately treated in works accessible to the English reader. The greater part of the material contained in the volume will therefore be new to many even of those who have given considerable attention to the study of lake-dwellings. The illustrations, which are admirably executed, include representations of 2100 different objects. Many of these, of course, are taken, with due acknowledgment, from published sources; but Dr. Munro gives a list of more than sixty museums and private collections from which he has obtained original sketches. The bibliography at the end of the book includes nearly five hundred titles of books and articles treating of lake-dwellings arranged in chronological order, the dates extending from 1822 to 1890. A full list is given of the Irish and Scottish crannogs, with references to the places in which they are described.

Among the most interesting portions of the book are those relating to the terremare of Italy and the closely analogous terpen of Holland and the adjacent countries. Those objects, which exist in great numbers, are flattish mounds of considerable size, containing beds of a rich ammoniacal deposit which was used by the farmers of the neighbourhood as manure. In the process of excavating for this material great numbers of weapons, utensils, and human and animal bones have been discovered in the Italian terremare during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries; but it is only of late years that the true origin of the mounds has been ascertained. By some of the earlier antiquaries they were believed to be funeral pyres of the slain in battle, while others supposed them to have been the cemeteries of successive populations. During the last thirty years, however, the researches of Stöbel, Chierici, Pigorini, and others have shown that they are the remains of prehistoric habitations, chiefly of the stone and bronze ages, built on piles, and in many respects resembling the structures found in the Italian and Swiss lakes. The terpen are of much later date; it does not appear that any of them are older than the late iron age, and the evidence of coins proves that in some cases they continued to be occupied down to the ninth century. It is fortunate for science that the terpen, unlike the Italian terremare, have only recently begun to be worked for their fertilising material; in fact, the discovery of their industrial value seems to have been made after their archaeological importance was already known. In many cases, however, exploration is likely to be permanently impracticable, as the sites are occupied by modern villages and towns. The town of Leeuwaarden is built over two terp-mounds, and it is stated on the authority of Dr. Pleyte that Leyden also stands on similar deposits.

Dr. Munro deals very sparingly in theories, and his general cautiousness gives all the more importance to his few decided expressions of opinion on controverted questions. The style of workmanship represented by the La Tène remains, which exhibit a highly advanced stage of the art of working in iron, he considers to be correctly designated as "Late Celtic"; and he regards it as unquestionable that these remains are due to a different race from that which inhabited the Swiss lake dwellings during the bronze age. The "great swords with massive grips," characteristic of the La Tène iron age, must, he remarks, have been used by a people very dissimilar in physical respects to those who fashioned the small-handed weapons of the bronze age. Besides, the bronze period was in Switzerland succeeded abruptly by one in which the art of the iron-worker appears fully developed; the early iron age, exemplified by the Hallstatt remains, not being represented at all. For these reasons Dr. Munro concludes that the inhabitants of the Swiss lake-dwellings in the stone and bronze periods were non-Celtic, but that this mode of habitation was to some extent adopted by the iron-using Celtic conquerors. The use of the term "Celtic" as a designation of race is of course unsatisfactory, as each of the Celtic-speaking peoples represents more than one ethnological type; but apart from the question of nomenclature, Dr. Munro's view appears to be strongly supported. Whether the Celtic language was introduced into Switzerland by the men of the La Tène period, or whether it was spoken by the races whom they found in possession of the country, is a question on which the facts presented in this volume afford no evidence. Dr. Munro is strongly of opinion that in the British Isles the practice of constructing pile-dwellings was unknown before the iron age, and was introduced by Celts who had learned it on the continent. A competent judgment on this theory can be given only by those whose knowledge of the facts approaches Dr. Munro's own. But it may be pointed out that it is not at all inconsistent with the recognition of the existence of Celts in Britain during the bronze age, or even in the neolithic period.

The only considerable defect in this admirable book is the inadequate amount of information on matters pertaining to physical anthropology. Considering that the author belongs to the medical profession, this deficiency seems somewhat strange. The little that Dr. Munro says about the physical characteristics of the lake-dwellers is almost entirely quoted from other writers; the most important observation on this subject which the book contains being Prof. Virchow's statement that in Switzerland during the pure stone age only the brachycephalic type is known to have existed; but that in the transition and bronze periods a dolichocephalic population gradually became predominant; while in the La Tène period there is great mixture of races, but the brachycephalic skulls are the more numerous. The question of stature is, of course, quite as important as that of cranial type, but it is scarcely referred to. It is to be regretted that Dr. Munro, with his trained power of observation and his remarkable caution and independence of judgment, has apparently not attempted to study this branch of his subject at first-hand, as he would have been almost sure to have obtained results of great value.

Without any disparagement to the excellent volumes issued by former Rhind Lecturers, it may safely be said that no one of them can be compared for thoroughness of workmanship and fulness of information to Dr. Munro's book.

H. BRADLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY."

Settrington Rectory, York: Oct. 1, 1892.

Prof. Ridgeway laments that I did not criticise his revolutionary book more severely. I kept silence about many of his novel theories, among them those which he specities in his letter, because it seemed to me that his arguments were not sufficiently strong to necessitate a reply, and therefore I preferred employing my limited space in commending such novelties as seemed likely to have a permanent influence on metrological science. The book somewhat resembles a certain image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, some portions being of precious metals, and others of less valuable material; and in my review I devoted my attention to the gold, and more especially to the silver. As to Solon's coinage, the value of the ox at Delos and elsewhere, and many other matters, my silence by no means implied assent, but merely a conjecture that the readers of the ACADEMY might have had enough of a stiff subject.

One point, however, may be noticed. At first, the Phœnicians were doubtless the "intermediaries between Greece and Asia"; but at an early date, certainly before the invention of coinage, they had withdrawn from the Aegean, and henceforward Asiatic influences penetrated mainly by the land trade-route through Asia Minor, from Cilicia or Carchemish. This is proved by the Aramean forms of the names of the Greek letters, and by many culture words.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: Oct. 3, 1892.

In speaking of a certain false-necked vase in the British Museum, I first quoted the statement on the label that it came from the tomb of a grandson of Pinetchem; and then, in reply to Mr. Petrie, I added that I had made inquiries in the proper quarter, and received assurances that the vase undoubtedly came from the tomb of a grandson of Pinetchem, as stated on the label.

Mr. Petrie now remarks that "anonymous statements of this kind are not the sort of proofs required in historical questions," just as he remarked before that "an anonymous label is no proof." And he adds that he "should have least expected to have to remind Mr. Torr of this." Now, the question is whether a certain vase in the British Museum came from a certain tomb in Egypt. That is not an historical question in any sense of the term. And the point is whether the evidence is trustworthy, not whether it is anonymous or otherwise. The word "anonymous" has two senses, and Mr. Petrie has managed to confound the two. The label is anonymous, inasmuch as no name appears on it; and the statements were anonymous, inasmuch as no names were mentioned. But, as he is aware, the information given in that label and in those statements is supplied by the responsible officers of the British Museum. When he scoffs at anonymous testimony, he means testimony which cannot be traced to any known source. And that is quite another thing.

When he asks, "who brought the vase to England," and "who took it out of the tomb," he must know that he is asking for information which will not be given. With the existing difficulties in the way of getting antiquities from Egypt, nobody is likely to disclose any of the sources of supply. If they were known, English collections would only get the odds and ends which the Egyptian authorities did not think worth keeping for the Museum at Gizeh.

The evidence now available amounts to this. Those officers of the British Museum whose business it is to see to these matters, have stated on the label that the vase came from a certain tomb; and in reply to my inquiries they have assured me that the vase undoubtedly came from that tomb, as stated on the label. Of course Mr. Petrie is at liberty to believe that they have committed themselves to these very positive statements on the strength of evidence which is really inconclusive; but he will not find many persons to share his belief.

As for the remaining question, "was the tomb intact," I presume that the answer is involved in the statement that the vase came from the tomb of one of the grandsons of Pinetchem. People would not take the trouble to assert that the vase came from this man's tomb if there were any ground for supposing that he was buried in an old tomb among things of earlier date, or that his tomb was used afterwards for burying somebody else with things of later date.

Mr. Petrie has not explained why he failed to mention the false-necked vases of Ramessu III. in his last letter. Nor has he told us anything more about those "hundreds of others," and the "dating" found with them.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Life of Michelangelo, upon which Mr. John Addington Symonds has been continuously engaged for some years, will be published on October 20. It is in two quarto volumes, illustrated with about fifty plates. Among these we may specially mention an etching by M. Ben Damman, after the portrait in the possession of Lord Wemyss; Leone Leoni's wax model of Michelangelo's profile, in the possession of Mr. C. Drury E. Fortnum; the bronze bust by Daniele da Volterra, in the Capitol at Rome, not before reproduced; and a facsimile of the autograph of one of the sonnets. In order to qualify himself for his task, Mr. Symonds has not only exhausted the immense literature on the subject, but he was also permitted to consult the store of MSS. preserved in the Museo Buonarroti at Florence, which have never been thoroughly searched before, and which seriously modify some of the printed sources.

MESSRS. A. & C. BLACK have in the press a royal quarto volume, to be called Abbotsford and its Treasures. It will contain twenty-five plates of the most interesting objects collected by Sir Walter Scott, printed in colours from drawings by Mr. W. Gibb, with an etching of Abbotsford by the same artist for frontispiece. Mrs. Maxwell Scott, the present mistress of the house, contributes descriptive notes.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS announce for early publication the work of the late Llewellyn Jewett on Corporation Plate, including the insignia of office of the chief towns of England and Wales, edited by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope, who has made large additions of his own and brought the whole up to date.

AN exhibition of platinotype reproductions by Mr. Frederick Hollyer of works by Rossetti, Watts, and Burne-Jones, will be opened next week at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly.

THE first meeting of the second session of the Japan Society will be held on Wednesday next, October 12, at 8.30 p.m., in the hall of the Society of Arts, when Mr. N. Okoshi, acting consul-general in London, will read a paper on "Japanese Proverbs and Some Figurative Expressions of the Japanese Language." Members are invited to exhibit Japanese pictures, prints, drawings, carvings, &c., illustrative of the subject of the paper.

MR. MAURICE HEWLETT will lecture at the South Kensington Museum, on November 2 and five following Wednesdays, upon "The Revival of Platonism in Italy," tracing the influence of Neo-Paganism upon Italian art of the fifteenth century. The lectures will be illustrated by specially prepared lantern slides.

THE forthcoming number of the Reliquary will contain:—"Medieval Lavatories," by Charles Clement Hodges; "New Year's Presents given to Henry VIII. in 1526"; "The Monumental Brass and Will of Christopher Warrington Goldsmith, of York, 1614," illustrated; "Columbus," by Rev. A. Donovan; "Worcester Consistory Court," by J. Noake; "Ancient Woodwork: a Seventeenth Century Pulpit at Huntington Church, Yorkshire, by D. Alleyne Walter.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

PREPARATIONS for "King Lear"—which is likely, in some respects, to be the most remarkable production the Lyceum management has attempted—occupy Mr. Irving in part; but the nightly performances of "Henry the Eighth"—the revival of which was brought about after a single week of "The Bells"—are as yet found sufficiently attractive by the public. "Leah" is not likely to be seen before November.

EVEN now the full theatrical season has scarcely begun. Stop-gap managements at the Garrick and the Haymarket, and what is at least a temporary management at Terry's, mark the absence of the faces to which we are most accustomed; and it is still rather in the provinces that we must look for the theatrical activity that is of interest. To the provinces Mr. and Mrs. Kendal—who have lately been delighting certain towns of Yorkshire—remain faithful. In the provinces is Mr. George Alexander, and in the provinces Mr. Tree. Though "Walker, London," is still being played at Toole's Theatre, pending the production of a new piece by its author, Mr. J. M. Barrie, Mr. Toole himself (supported, among others, by Mr. Lawrence Irving and Miss Alice Kingsley, whose talent lies undoubtedly in comedy) has been appearing in the Midland counties and in Dublin. And Mr. Wilson Barrett, having, with himself as the hero, and with Miss Maud Jeffries as the heroine, brought out a new play of his own at Leeds, has now taken it to Bradford. An excellent account is given of it. It is written—as we willingly believe—with force and directness, and (played as it is) it is pronounced to be singularly effective in action. "Pharaoh," it is even possible, may rival "Claudian" in popularity.

WE are to-day enabled to give all that is most important in the cast of Mr. William Poel's adaptation of "The Duchess of Malfi," which he is at the present moment most carefully rehearsing for performance, by arrangement with the Independent Theatre Society, on Friday, October 21, and which will afford an opportunity that no lover of the Elizabethan drama can afford to miss. Miss Mary Rorke, who has not been seen in London for several months, and then, indeed, only in pieces hardly fitted to display her distinguished qualities, will appear in the great rôle of the Duchess. Mr. Sidney BarracloUGH will play Ferdinand; Mr. Jan Robertson, the Cardinal; Mr. Murray Carson, Bosola; and Mr. Buckley, Antonio. Julia will be played by Miss De Winton, while the part of Cariola has been assigned to Miss Hall Caine, the young sister of the novelist. An unusual measure of attention will be paid to scenic detail; and Mr. Irving has been kind enough to open to the performers some of the treasures of the Lyceum wardrobe.

DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS.

Paris: Oct. 1, 1892.

THE season has opened with a series of reprises, of which the most important has been the revival of the "Juif Polonais" (known in England as "The Bells") at the Comédie Française. This drama, brought out for the first time at the small transpontine Théâtre Cluny in 1869, is scarcely worthy to rank in the repertory of the Français from a dramatic or from a literary point of view. The first and second acts offer an interesting picture of the homely life and manners of a small Alsatian town—there is just sufficient action to relieve the monotony of Annette's idyll with the Brigadier Christian and the drinking bouts of old Heinrich and his boon companion Walter; but the sensational element in the third act is better adapted to the stage of the Ambigu. However, thanks to the admirable acting of M. Got in the part of the conscience-stricken innkeeper and to the ever-charming Mlle. Reichemberg in that of Annette, the "Juif Polonais" affords an agreeable passé-temps pending the production of a more important work.

At the Vaudeville, M. Lavédan's witty satire on Parisian and Semitic society, "Le Prince d'Aurec," draws crowded houses. "La Vie Parisienne" has been revived with great success at the Variétés; the play itself is as amusing, and the music as charming, as when first given twenty-six years ago. In fact, the same may be said of almost all the répertoire of the celebrated trio—Meilhac, Halévy, Offenbach: so superior to the empty productions called operettas which of late years have been brought out at the Bouffes or Nouveautés, and, I am sorry to add, have been "adapted" to the tastes of British audiences.

"M. de Réboval," a comedy in four acts, has just been produced at the Odéon. The author, M. Brieux, is one of the few really promising playwrights of the new school as represented at the Théâtre Libre. The idea and plot of his play are simple enough; but the manner in which he has dealt with a very delicate question, the easy flowing dialogue, the absence of forced wit and artificial sentiment, prove that M. Brieux possesses that rare gift, "the instinct of the theatre."

M. de Réboval is a rich manufacturer, and also a Senator. His speeches, full of high-flown sentiments in favour of the working classes, have made him very popular. But this eminent representative of all moral and social virtues, not content with his country home, the affection of a devoted wife and their loving daughter, Beatrice, must needs keep a faux-ménage in Paris. When the play begins, his life and affections are almost equally divided between his two homes, though the balance is beginning to incline the wrong way, and trouble is brewing. Pauline Loindet, his mistress, was lady companion to his mother when he seduced her; a son—Paul—was born, and when de Réboval married he had not sufficient moral courage to break off the liaison. Paul has been brought up away from home, and believes that his father died shortly after his birth. Muc.

de Réboval finds out all this and dies of a broken heart; her husband marries his former mistress; Paul and Beatrice meet, and, ignorant of their relationship, fall madly in love with each other. In course of time an explanation becomes necessary, and in a most painful scene, their parents have to reveal to them the terrible secret that they are brother and sister. Here the author has not attempted to get out of the difficulty by any extraordinary coup-de-théâtre; his dénouement is simple and logical. Paul, after upbraiding his father for his duplicity, declares his intention of leaving home for ever, and joining, as he would a forlorn hope, an African exploring party. Beatrice, after a most heartrending scene, broken-hearted yet forgiving, rushes into her father's arms; but she also cannot remain any longer under the parental roof, and will soon take the veil. M. and Mme. de Réboval remain face to face, abandoned by their children, to pass the rest of their wretched life in solitude and grief. As customary at the second Théâtre Français, the play is well acted; Mlle. Wissocq, a débutante of great promise, was particularly successful in her rendering of the part of Beatrice.

M. Ernest Daudet, a well-known journalist and novelist, elder brother of the still better known Alphonse, has just made his début as a dramatist with "Un Drame Parisien," at the Gymnase. The play, adapted from the author's novel Le Défroqué, is not devoid of sensational interest; and yet the general effect is unsatisfactory, and proves once more that an experienced and talented littérateur is often but an indifferent playwright—that the mere stringing together of a series of dramatic incidents does not make a good play, and that characters and events when put on the stage must be presented in a very different light from the conventional aspect familiar to the novelist.

The Count de Vêran has been assassinated after a supper party given at his own residence. His mistress, a celebrated demi-mondaine, Rose Morgan, is suspected, arrested, put on her trial for murder, and on the point of being condemned, when the Père Vignal, the fashionable Dominican preacher of the day, makes his appearance in court and solemnly declares that she is innocent, that the real culprit has confessed the crime to him, but that he is bound by the secrecy of the confessional not to reveal the name. Rose Morgan is acquitted; and we learn in the course of what might have been a really fine scene between her and the Countess de Vêran, that it was the Countess herself who shot him in a fit of jealous indignation at her husband's shameless conduct. The scenario is quite fin de siècle; the first act takes place in the sacristy of a fashionable Paris church, the second in a luxurious mansion of the profligate Count, and the last in the interior of the criminal court. That clever and conscientious artist, M. Raphael Duflos, surrounded by a bevy of the prettiest Parisian actresses gaily attired in the latest "creations" of the leading dressmaker of the day, have done their best to ensure the success of "Un Drame Parisien." It remains to be seen whether the public will ratify the somewhat unfavourable impression of the first night. C. NICHOLSON.

MUSIC.

THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Leeds: Oct. 5, 1892.

THE Leeds Festival commenced this morning with a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and the favourable reports which had been circulated for some time concerning the excellence of the choir were amply confirmed. The voices are strong, rich, and well balanced. The members have been selected more freely from the West Riding than at previous festivals, and a magnificent body of singers has been gathered together. The music of "Elijah" is, of course, familiar to the choir, and familiarity has bred confidence. The effect in the Baul choruses and in the "Thanks be to God" was imposing. The principal vocalists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, Messrs. Lloyd and Norman Salmoud. The last-named in the arduous rôle of the prophet, though somewhat nervous, showed throughout good intentions. In the restoration of the popular Oratorio to the place of honour, the Festival Committee were probably actuated by a desire to give to the choir a chance of scoring an early and brilliant victory, and this has decidedly been achieved. Leeds has shown in the past that it can dispense with "Elijah," but there is every reason why it should be heard from time to time; it is the strongest of modern Oratorios, and judging it from a purely musical point of view, the most popular.

The Festival scheme is remarkable for the absence of any vocal novelty of large compass. Only two new works will, in fact, be produced during the week: a short Cantata, "Arethusa," by Mr. Alan Gray, a native of York; and a symphony by Mr. Frederic Cliffe, whose first attempt in that branch of composition was so successful. Applications were made to two composers of note—Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. F. H. Cowon—to write specially for the occasion. Illness, unfortunately, prevented the former from carrying out his intention; and a disagreement with the committee, equally to be regretted, caused the latter to withdraw his work when nearly completed. Concerning applications to foreign composers, no mention is made in the prospectus. The difficulties, however, experienced in past years in dealings with them, which have been recorded in the recently published History of the Leeds Festivals, perhaps render it wise to leave them in peace for a while. The fate of the foreign novelties produced here since 1883 deserves a moment's consideration. Raff's "The End of the World," given in that year, was never—if we remember rightly—heard in London, and Dvorák's "Saint Ludmila," in spite of much fine music, has practically vanished; it has not been deemed worthy of repetition, and the Bohemian composer will be represented on Saturday morning by "The Spectre's Bride," his Birmingham success. Of standard chorul works to be given during the week are Mozart's "Requiem," Bach's majestic "Mass in B minor," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise."

At the concert this evening, Schumann's Cantata, "The Pilgrimage of the Rose," was performed. The work, though it contains much that is interesting and characteristic of the composer, was written at a late period of his life, when his mental powers had become obscured. If given by a small choir, and with Schumann's original pianoforte accompaniment, one can enjoy the beauties, and forgive the weaknesses. But why was it selected for a festival choir and orchestra? The whole thing sounded ridiculous. The performance was good: the soloists were Miss Macintyre, Miss McKenzie, and Mr. Plunket Greene. The programme also included Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), Walmisley's Madrigal, "Sweet Flowers," and Berlioz's Overture, "Le Carnaval Romain." There is a fine orchestra under the able leadership of Mr. J. T. Carrodus. Sir A. Sullivan conducted with his usual judgment and ability.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

WHITTAKER'S NEW BOOKS.

PIERRILLE. By Jules Claretie, de l'Académie Française. [Authorised Edition.] With Introduction and Notes by J. BOLEILLÉ, Senior French Master, Dulwich College, occasional Examiner to the Civil Service Commission, and late Examiner in French to the Intermediate Education Board, Ireland, and 27 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. (For Junior Students.)

COALPITS and PITMEN: a Short History of the Development of the Coal Trade and of the Legislation affecting it. By R. NELSON BOYD, M.Inst.C.E. [In the press.]

ELECTRIC LIGHTING and POWER DISTRIBUTION. An Elementary Manual for Students Preparing for the Ordinary Grade Examination of the City and Guilds of London Institute. Written in accordance with the New Syllabus. By W. PERREN MAYCOCK, M.I.E.E. Part I., with 125 Illustrations, in paper wrapper, 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

Ready, fcap. 4to, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MANUAL INSTRUCTION—WOODWORK. By S. BARTER, Organiser and Instructor of Manual Training in Woodwork to the London School Board, &c. With a Preface by GEORGE RICKS, B.Sc. Lond. Illustrated by 303 Drawings and Photo-Engravings.

Sir PHILIP MAUNUS says: "Mr. Barter, in his book on 'Woodwork,' has succeeded in showing, what is most important, the educational value of manual training in school instruction, and has thus rendered a great service to those seeking a trustworthy guide in the practical study of the subject."

"This very excellent and practical work."—Nature.

"We have no words but those of commendation for the volume before us. The matter has been ably thought out and excellently arranged. The illustrations are abundant and beautifully clear."—Schoolmaster.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO THE SAME AUTHOR'S WORK "WOOD-CARVING."

LEATHER WORK. Stamped, Moulded, and Cut. Cuir-Bouilli, Sewn, &c. A Practical Manual for Learners. By C. G. LELAND, M.A. With numerous Illustrations. 5s.

"A delightful addition to the series of practical manuals."—Times.

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY OF POPULAR SCIENCE.

MINERALOGY. The Characters of Minerals, their Classification and Description. By Dr. F. H. HATCH. With 115 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

"Dr. Hatch has admirably united brevity and clearness in his treatment of the crystallographical and physical characters of minerals."—Nature.

"We cordially recommend this little book of Dr. Hatch's as one of the best that students could purchase."—Science Gossip.

ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM. With numerous Illustrations. By S. R. BOTTONE. [Shortly.]

PRECEDING VOLUMES.

PICTORIAL ASTRONOMY. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 131 Illustrations. 4s.

"Worthy of the author's reputation."—Athenæum.

LIGHT. By Sir H. Trueman Wood. With 55 Illustrations. 2s. 6d.

THE PLANT WORLD. By G. Massee. With 56 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

A NEW EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED.

HOBLYN'S DICTIONARY of TERMS USED in MEDICINE and COLLATERAL SCIENCES. Twelfth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 10s. 6d.

THE NEW MINISTRY, NEW BIOGRAPHIES, &c.

32mo, leatherette, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

DOD'S PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION. Sixtieth Year and Sixty-seventh Issue. In Use in the House of Commons, the Government Offices, and the principal London Clubs.

"The invaluable 'Dod.'"—Saturday Review.

LONDON: WHITTAKER & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

THE NEW NOVEL at all LIBRARIES.

CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO.

By I. ZANGWILL, Author of "The Old Maids' Club."

In Three Volumes

Daily Telegraph.—"A curiously interesting portrayal of Metropolitan Judaism. It deals equally with the East-end and the West. There is one chapter which may usefully be compared with the idealistic Jewish scenes in 'Daniel Deronda,' but the author takes quite an opposite view of the future of the race to that which George Eliot attempted to expound through the mouth of her hero."

THE HEAD of the FIRM. By

Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL, Author of "George Geith of Fen Court," &c. At all Libraries, in 3 vols. National Observer.—"One of the best novels of the season. . . . The three volumes, in truth, are well worth reading from cover to cover."

THE ATTACK on the MILL, and other Sketches of War. By EMILE ZOLA. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

Athenæum.—"The 'Attack on the Mill' is indeed the best thing that M. Zola has ever done."

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

Crown 8vo, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

Third Edition immediately.

THE HERITAGE of the

KURTS. From the Norwegian of BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A most fascinating as well as a powerful book. The mere outline of the story can give no idea of the subtle psychology, of the descriptive force, of the underlying poetry which it contains."

Previously Published.

IN GOD'S WAY. By Bjornstjerne Bjornson.	By FROTH. By Armando Palacio Valdes.
PIERRE AND JEAN. By Guy de Maupassant.	FOOTSTEPS OF FATE. By Louis Couperus.
THE CHIEF JUSTICE. By Karl Emil Franzos.	PEPITA JIMENEZ. By Juan Valera.
WORK WHILE WE HAVE THE LIGHT. By Count Lyof Tolstoi.	THE COMMODORE'S DAUGHTERS. By Jonas Lie.
FANTASY. By Matilde Serao.	DONA LUZ. By Juan Valera. [In Preparation.]

COME LIVE WITH ME and

BE MY LOVE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "The Moment After," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

[Crown Copyright Series.]

Daily Telegraph.—"No work of fiction more thoroughly English and rustic in idiom and thought, dialogue and characterisation, has been produced in this country since the publication of 'Under the Greenwood Tree.'"

THE NAULAHKA: a Story of

West and East. By RUDYARD KIPPLING and WOLCOTT BAILESTIER. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Observer.—"The rapid progress of the narrative of harem intrigue and thrilling adventure carries one forward with a breathless rush. 'The Naulahka' is the best of Mr. Kipling's long stories, and that is saying a good deal."

HEINEMANN'S POPULAR 3s. 6d. NOVELS.

NOT ALL in VAIN. By Ada Cambridge, Author of "A Marked Man," "The Three Miss Kings," &c.

TWEEN SNOW and FIRE. By Bertram MITFORD, Author of "A Romance of the Cape Frontier."

THE NEW EXODUS: a Study of Israel in Russia. By HAROLD FREDERIC, Author of "In the Valley," &c. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

THE JEW at Home: Impressions of a Summer and Autumn spent with Him in Russia and Austria. By JOSEPH PENNELL. With Illustrations by the Author. Small 4to, cloth, 5s.

THE GENTLE ART of MAKING ENEMIES. By J. McNEIL WHISTLER. A New and Enlarged Edition. 4to, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NEW AND FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

THE STANFORD DICTIONARY of ANGLICISED WORDS and PHRASES. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press, by C. A. M. FENNEL, D.Litt., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, Editor of "Piudar." Demy 4to, pp. xvi+826, half-buckram, 31s. 6d.; half-morocco, 42s.

"To give the work its due praise, it is one which every library, club, and similar institution is bound to possess, and one, moreover, which no scholar or student will ever be without... The whole constitutes delightful reading, and has more picturesqueness, variety, information, and interest than almost any book we can name."—Notes and Queries.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE in MODERN TIMES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, Tooke Professor in King's College, London. Demy 8vo, 18s.

"The second volume of Dr. W. Cunningham's important and comprehensive work on the Growth of English Industry and Commerce deals with modern times, from the Elizabethan age to the present day.....The contribution is a very valuable one, and all the more so because few English writers on economy have approached the subject from the historical point of view."—Times.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By the Same Author. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"Dr. Cunningham's list of authorities occupies eighteen pages, and that this is no empty display of erudition is evident from a mere glance at the footnotes of almost any page. As far as we can judge, no single authority of any weight has been omitted, and yet the authority of the historian who has so conscientiously presented this mass of evidence for our convenient inspection is proclaimed in every line. He himself is a master of his subject, and we are the more grateful for his self-effacement inasmuch as his compilation is in no way lacking in force and originality."—Athenæum.

SOPHOCLES: THE PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. Vol. VI. ELECTRA. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. [In the press.]

ARISTOPHANES.—EQUITES. With Introduction and Notes by R. A. Neil, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Pembroke College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]

THE MIMES of HERONDAS. The Text edited with a Commentary by Walter Headlam, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [In the press.]

PLATO.—PROTAGORAS. With Introduction and Notes by J. Adam, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, and A. M. ADAM. [In the press.]

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ODYSSEY. The Text edited in accordance with Modern Criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

"We have a text of the Odyssey, very well printed on good paper, and in a handy form, with an introduction (pp. i.-xxii.) and a short apparatus criticus at the foot of the page....To lovers of Homer there is no text which we would recommend more heartily, both for what it contains and what it omits. We hope the Iliad will soon follow."—Journal of Education.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ILIAD. By the same Editor. [In the press.]

A TREATISE on ANALYTICAL STATICS. By E. J. Routh, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of the University of London, Honorary Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Vol. II. Demy 8vo, 10s.

GRADUATED PASSAGES from GREEK and LATIN AUTHORS. For First Sight Translation. Selected and supplied with Short Notes for Beginners, by H. BENDALL, M.A., Head Master, and C. E. LAURENCE, B.A., Assistant Master of Blackheath Proprietary School. Crown 8vo. Part I. EASY, 1s. 6d. Part II. MODERATELY EASY, 2s. Part III. MODERATELY DIFFICULT, 2s. Part IV. DIFFICULT, 2s.

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. Armitage ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Vol. I., No. 1. THE APOLOGY of ARISTIDES on BEHALF of the CHRISTIANS. Edited, from a Syriac MS., with an Introduction and Translation by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A. With an Appendix containing the main portion of the original Greek Text, by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D. Demy 8vo. SECOND EDITION. [In the press.]

Vol. II., No. 1. A STUDY of CODEX BEZÆ. By J. Rendel Harris, M.A., formerly Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, University Lecturer in Palaeography. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Vol. II., No. 2. THE TESTAMENT of ABRAHAM. The Greek Text now first edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by M. R. JAMES, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With an Appendix containing Extracts from the Arabic Versions of the Testaments of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, by W. E. BARNES, B.D., Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

NEW VOLUME OF THE PITT PRESS MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By E. W. Hobson, Sc.D., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics; and C. M. JESSOP, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, and Assistant Master at Reading School. 4s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

PLUTARCH'S LIFE of DEMOSTHENES. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D., Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, Fellow of the University of London, sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPAE. With Introduction and Notes by C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Classical Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. [In the press.]

LIVY.—BOOK VI. With Notes and Introduction by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Books V. and VI. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s. [In the press.]

BOOKS I. AND II.

"Mr. Verity is an admirable editor of Milton."—Athenæum.
"The eleventh book of 'Paradise Lost' has been edited, in masterly style, for the 'Pitt Press Series' by Mr. A. Wilson Verity. In our last notice of English school books, we expressed a wish that he would treat this grand epic in the same exhaustive and scholarly manner as the shorter poems. He has begun to do so, and our gratitude for the excellent edition before us is accompanied by a lively hope that we shall in due course receive the rest of the work annotated by the same able pen."—Guardian, Sept. 14, 1892.

ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY: a Sketch of the Commodities and the Countries of the World. By H. R. MILL, Sc.D., F.R.S.E. With List of Recent Changes, added July, 1892. 1s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1067.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The PEYTON ROMANCE, a New Novel, in 3 vols., by Mrs. LEITH ADAMS,
Author of "Aunt Hepsy's Foundling," is now ready, and may be had at all Libraries.

IN TENNYSON LAND.

Being a Brief Account of the Home and Early Surroundings of the Poet Laureate. By JOHN CUMING WALTERS.
With 12 Plates. Demy 8vo, white cloth, gilt, 5s.

AUSTIN DOBSON and HUGH THOMSON.

THE BALLAD of BEAU BROCADE, and other Poems of the Eighteenth Century. By AUSTIN DOBSON. With 50 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Immediately.]

WILFRID SCAWEN BLUNT.

ESTHER, LOVE LYRICS, and NATALIA'S RESURRECTION. By WILFRID SCAWEN BLUNT.
Elzevir 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Knt.

THE COUNTESS of PEMBROKE'S ARCADIA. Written by Sir PHILIP SIDNEY, Knt. The original 4to-Edition (1590) in Photographic Facsimile, with a Bibliographical Introduction. Edited by H. OSKAR SOMMER, Ph.D. £2 2s.

VICTOR DURUY and Prof. MAHAFFY.

HISTORY of GREECE. By VICTOR DURUY. Crowned by the French Academy. With an Introduction by Prof. J. P. MAHAFFY. 8 vols., super-royal 8vo, £8 8s.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P.

A CONTRIBUTION to our KNOWLEDGE of SEEDLINGS. By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P.
2 vols., demy 8vo. [Immediately.]

SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.

DIARIES of SIR DANIEL GOOCH, Bart. With an Introductory Notice by Sir THEODORE
MARTIN, K.C.B. With 2 Portraits and an Illustration. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"These diaries are a thrilling romance of science, commerce, and industry. We share and sympathise in the diarist's enthusiasm when he tells of his early struggles with mechanical difficulties which experts and theorists had pronounced insuperable."

BLANCHE ROOSEVELT.

VICTORIEN SARDOU, Poet, Author, and Member of the Academy of France. A Personal Study. By BLANCHE ROOSEVELT, Officer of the Academy of France, Author of "Life and Reminiscences of Gustave Doré," &c. Preface by W. BEATTY
KINGSTON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

TIMES.—"Miss Roosevelt has a light and graceful touch."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The author writes with all the enthusiasm of a devoted admirer, but the conversations which she repeats are well worth reading."

THE O'CLERY.

THE MAKING of ITALY, 1856-70. By THE O'CLERY. With Sketch-Maps of Magenta, Solferino, Palermo, the Roman Provinces, &c. Demy 8vo, 16s.

TABLET.—"Written in an admirable spirit, with an admirable accuracy, and in a style at once interesting and readable."

S. A. K. STRAHAN, M.D.

MARRIAGE and DISEASE. By S. A. K. STRAHAN, M.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"It is perhaps hardly necessary to state that Dr. Strahan's object in writing this able and valuable book is to show how much suffering posterity might be spared, and how greatly our race might be improved, if diseased persons would refrain from marrying, and these with a decided family taint would exercise a wise choice in their selection of a partner."

Rev. A. GURNEY.

THE STORY of a FRIENDSHIP. By the Rev. A. GURNEY. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CHURCH TIMES.—"The vehicle of many mystical and beautiful thoughts on religion and art. A prose poem a spiritual romance."

THOMAS A'KEMPIS.

DE IMITATIONE CHRISTI. Latin Text, Rhythmically Arranged, with Translation on opposite pages. Crown 8vo, buckram, red leaves, 7s. 6d.

SPEAKER.—"A choice and scholarly edition of one of the most deeply spiritual books which the cloistered life of meditation has ever inspired."

WALTER BAGEHOT.

LOMBARD STREET: a Description of the Money Market. By WALTER BAGEHOT. Tenth Edition. With Notes bringing the Work up to the present Time by E. JOHNSTONE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

JOHN HOLT SCHOOLING.

HANDWRITING and EXPRESSION. Translated and Edited by JOHN HOLT SCHOOLING, from the Third French Edition of L'Ecriture et le caractère, par J. CREPIEUX-JAMIN. With some 150 Facsimile Reproductions of the Handwritings of Men and Women of various Nationalities. Demy 8vo, 6s.

LONDON: PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

JACOBS'S EDITION OF THE EPISTOLÆ HO-ELIANÆ, by E. K. CHAMBERS	327
CHEYNE'S AIDS TO THE DEVOUT STUDY OF CRITICISM, by the Rev. RONALD BAYNE	328
MORSE STEPHENS'S ALBUQUERQUE, by H. G. KEENE	329
ARTHUR SYMONS'S SILHOUETTES, by PERCY FINKERTON	329
A GENTLEWOMAN OF THE LAST CENTURY, by ARTHUR GALTON	330
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NORLE	332
THE HISTORY OF ANCIENT GREECE	333
NOTES AND NEWS	334
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	334
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	334
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE LAUREATE DEAD," by the Rev. H. D. RAVENSLAY; Tevvāwari Bperdāwq , by R. J. WALKER	335
OBITUARY: ALFRED TENNYSON, by JOSEPH JACOBS	335
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	337
MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST	337
MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON'S LIST	337
MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST	338
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	338
CORRESPONDENCE:— Did Dante know Hebrew? by Paget Toynbee	338
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	338
AN ETRUSCAN BOOK FROM EGYPT. By Prof. SAYCE	338
SCIENCE NOTES	339
PHILOLOGY NOTES	339
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	339
HODKIN'S EXAMPLES OF EARLY ENGLISH POTTERY, by Cosmo Monkhouse	340
CORRESPONDENCE:— "The Origin of Metallic Currency," by Prof. RIDGEWAY; Agypten-Pottery in Egypt , by W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE	340
OBITUARY: THOMAS WOOLNER	341
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	341
STAGE NOTES	341
THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	341
ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA	342

TO PROVINCIAL EDITORS—Advertiser
is prepared to CONTRIBUTE Weekly to a Provincial Paper a LITERARY COLUMN, comprising Notes and Reviews of all the latest Books. Specimen sent. Moderate remuneration.—B. W., 160, Ebury Street, London.

MEDICAL MAN, with spare time, living in bracing Moorland district (Yorkshire), will take a backward PUPIL, educated, good character, and superior riding and driving.—Address MEDICUS, Mrs. Darling's, 39, Highfield, Falsgrave, Scarborough.

WANTED.—An AGENT for the PURCHASE OF OIL PAINTINGS. The Artist is a pupil of Calderon's, and took the "Gold Medal" for the best Collection of Pictures in the Plymouth Art Exhibition of 1890.—Address: DAISY PENDER-CUDLIP, care of Annie Thomas, Sparkwell Vicarage, Plympton, S. Devon.

GRAND Old Oak Long 8-Legged TABLE; a charming old oak Long Settle; and an old oak Bureau Secrétaire, fitted inside small drawers, &c., FOR SALE, together or separately; in good condition; richly carved; can be seen or particulars forwarded.—"LADY," Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

FREDERICK HOLLYER'S EXHIBITION of Platinotype Reproductions of the Works of E. BURNE JONES, A.R.A., D. G. ROSSSETTI, G. F. WATTS, R.A., and other important pictures, the DUDLEY GALLERY, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, W. Open daily, 10 to 6. Admission 1s.

WANTED.—STAMP COLLECTION. Large or Small. References given.—DUNDASIAN, Moffatt, N.E.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LEOTIES REPORTING VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—MISS ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Office, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES.
—Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—MISS C. HYNE WARREN, 310, Strand, W.C.

HINDUSTANI, TELUGU, FRENCH, TYPE-WRITING (Remington), Elementary TAMIL, in LESSONS.—Address General MACDONALD, 99, St. Quintin Avenue, North Kensington, W.

THE CURRENCY, BANKING, ASSURANCE, ANNUITIES, TRADE, WINES, BREWING, FARMING, &c.
Catalogue of Scarce Works on Political Economy just published, JAMES STILLIE, 19, George Street, Edinburgh.

CATALOGUE

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 57, SOHO SQUARE.

ELMSLEA, Lordship Lane, Tottenham.—An EXAMINATION will be held in December next for the purpose of filling up about FIVE VACANCIES in this School. Fatherless GIRLS, between the ages of 7 and 16 years, whose parents are members of the Church of England, and have been in good circumstances, are eligible for admission. The girls receive a modern high school education, and are boarded and clothed, free of charge.—For further information apply to the CLERK to the DRAPEL'S COMPANY, Drapers' Hall, Throgmorton Street, E.C.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 3 vols.

PASSING THE LOVE OF WOMEN.

By MRS. J. H. NEEDELL,

AUTHOR OF "STEPHEN ELLICOT'S DAUGHTER," &c.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

Mr. MAURICE HEWLETT will give a COURSE OF LECTURES in the Theatre, commencing NOVEMBER 2nd, upon "THE REVIVAL OF PLATONISM as ILLUSTRATED by the ART of the RENAISSANCE." The Lectures will be fully illustrated.
For Syllabus, &c., apply to the LECTURER, 53, Colville Gardens, W.; or at the Catalogue Stall at the Museum.

THE HAUSA ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Committee of the HAUSA ASSOCIATION invite APPLICATIONS for a ROBINSON STUDENTSHIP of the value of £200 per annum.
The Student will be required to devote himself to the study of the Hausa language and people, at first at Tripoli and afterwards in the interior.
Applications will be taken into consideration at a meeting on December 2nd.
All communications should be addressed to the Rev. J. O. F. MURRAY, Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

Library of the late ISAAC HEYWOOD, Esq., removed from Mansfield, Northampton.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on MONDAY, October 17, and Three Following Days at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of the late ISAAC HEYWOOD, removed from Mansfield, Northampton, comprising Clutterbuck's Hertford-Lipscombe's Buckingham-Hakluyt Society's Publications—Ainsley and Bowes's Ceramic Art of Japan—Ireland's Napoleon, with Cruikshank's plates—Milton's Paradise Regained, first edition—Physiognomical Portraits, Large Paper, India Proof—Gallery of Fashion, 10 vols., 1794-1802—Salvoir Collection—Delany's Autobiography and Correspondence, both series—Walton's Alps—Book of Esther—MSS. on Vellum, with Original Drawings—Long Series of Rare and Valuable Books on the Colonies—Autograph Letter of Oliver Cromwell, &c.
Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of two stamps.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lacer, Manufacturers, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAYSCROFT Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAYSCROFT Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES, Also, ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Drompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

THE OPPOSITION OF JUPITER, October 12th, 1892.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUPITER AND HIS SYSTEM.

By ELLEN MARY CLERKE.

Demy 8vo, wrapper, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 1d.

A Compendious Monograph giving the results of the most recent observations of the Planet, which for some weeks subsequent to October 12th will be in a specially favourable position for observation.
London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, S.W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., OULS, R.A.; PETTIE, R.A.; IRINSEP, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING" by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for 6d. per copy.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.—New Volume.

SICILY: Phœnician, Greek, and Roman. By the late EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Maps, Illustrations, and Index, large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Times.—"It is Professor Freeman's own work throughout. It is, therefore, unnecessary to commend it."

MR. R. F. HORTON'S NEW WORK.

REVELATION and the BIBLE. By R. F. HORTON, M.A., Author of "Inspiration and the Bible," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

WITH PREFACE BY MISS JANE HARRISON.

The GODS of OLYMPOS; or, Mythology of the Greeks and Romans. Translated and Edited from the Twentieth Edition of A. H. PETSICUS by KATHERINE A. RALEIGH. With Preface by JANE E. HARRISON. 8 Full-page and numerous smaller Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.—New Volume.

MISSING FRIENDS; or, the Adventures of a Danish Emigrant in Queensland. Large Crown 8vo, red cloth, gold lettered, 5s.

Daily Telegraph.—"His account of how he roughed it in various capacities and places is instinct with the charm which accompanies the vivid presentment of real facts.... Many incidents are told with a power and directness which are strikingly effective."

BY H. H. BOYESEN.

ESSAYS on GERMAN LITERATURE. By HJALMAR HJORTH BOYESEN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Scotsman.—"Will be welcomed and diligently read by any thoughtful reader."

BY AUTHOR OF "HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED."

THE FIVE TALENTS of WOMAN: a Book for Girls and Young Women. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of "How to be Happy though Married," &c. Fifth and Cheaper Edition, small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

WRITERS and READERS: Educational Essays. By GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE CAMEO SERIES.—New Volume.

THE LOVE SONGS of ROBERT BURNS. Edited by Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS, Bart. With Frontispiece Portrait of Burns. Half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.
Globe.—"Will be found altogether to be desired."

NEW VOLUME OF "THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY."

THE SAGHALIEN CON-VICT. By KOPOAENKA. 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

Speaker.—"Vivid and exciting."

VOLUME I. OF THE INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES.

THE SHIFTING of the FIRE. By FORD H. HUEFFER. Author of "The Brown Owl," "The Feather," &c. Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S NEWEST BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL.—At all Libraries. 2 vols.

JENNY'S CASE.

By ELLEN F. PINSENT.

"Jenny's case was similar to that of Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and in one respect the author's treatment of it is more original than Mr. Hardy's. The story is told with extreme directness and simplicity, and with quite unaffected and unmanufactured pathos."

Daily Chronicle.

"The book cannot fail of a hearing when its merits are so obvious."—Daily Graphic.

"An honest and satisfactory piece of work. From the first page to the last the plot develops as a revelation of destiny. Fitful to read, interesting for its sincerity and simplicity of design, not savage, but hard in its observation, human to the last degree, 'Jenny Case' is a scholarly novel."—National Observer.

"Jenny is a being worthy of the creative genius of Mrs. Gaskell or Miss Thackeray."—Daily Telegraph.

"A work of remarkable power. Without passion, declamation, digression, or striving after effect, the story is allowed to unfold itself step by step. It is the result of close observation and sympathetic study. It is doubtful if any writer, save George Eliot and Thomas Hardy, has so well caught the idiosyncrasies of rustic character."—Glas. Herald.

"A story of uncommon merit. Mrs. Pinsent is not afraid of hard realities, but her realism is not ugly, and the sadder details of her tale are introduced with a sympathetic reticence which makes these simple annals infinitely pathetic. It is a very remarkable story in every way."—St. James's Gazette.

THE STORY of KASPER

HAUSER. By ELIZABETH E. EVANS. With Portrait. 4s. 6d. The story of the abducted Prince of Baden, which is still believed in by thousands of intelligent persons in Germany, impartially narrated, with much circumstantial evidence in support of it. The tragedy is still the skeleton in the Grand Ducal cupboard.

TWO NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL. [Shortly]

1. FROM ADAM'S PEAK to ELEPHANTA (CEYLON and INDIA.) By EDWARD CARPENTER. Fully Illustrated.
2. SKETCHES of LIFE and CHARACTER in HUNGARY. By MARGARET FLETCHER. Illustrated by ROSE LE QUESNE.

A NEW GIFT-BOOK.

THE WILD PIGS. By Gerald YOUNG. Fully Illustrated by Full-Page Plates and Cuts in the Text, by W. Parkinson. Cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d.

"A thoroughly fascinating story. Tusko, Grumphy, Fussy, Snout, and Chunk deserve immortality."—Vanity Fair.

WILL-o'-the-WISP. By Marie PETERSEN. Translated by Mrs. BRATHWAITE SKETE. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. "The refined conception of this story is certain to ensure for it a large number of readers."—Pub. Circular. "A neat little volume, extremely well printed and bound."—Warrington Guardian.

WITH A PREFACE BY EDNA LYALL.

HAD I BUT KNOWN. By Ella FORDYCE. 3s. 6d. "Miss Fordyce tells her story well."—Athenaeum.

NEW BOOK OF AUSTRALIAN VERSE.
VOICES from AUSTRALIA. By PHILIP DALE and CYRIL HAVILAND. 3s. 6d. "Many of them possess a considerable gift of expression, and the volume is a welcome addition to the poetic literature of Australia."—Jl. of Roy. Col. Inst.

TWO NEW AUSTRALIAN NOVELS.

1. MATTHEW REYMAINE. 3s. 6d.
2. MAKING his PILE: an Australian Story. By JUSTIN C. MACCARTIE. Picture Boards, 2s.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH

LANDED INTEREST: Customs, Laws, Agriculture. By R. M. GARNIER, B.A. (Oxon). 121 pp., 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Full of careful and far-reaching erudition, and falls into line with the works of Prof. Rogers, Mr. Prothero, and Mr. Ashley."—Scotsman. "Eminently readable. An important contribution to economic history."—Glasgow Herald.

AN UNBIASSED CHURCH HISTORY.

HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN

CHURCH: A.D. 1-600. By Dr. W. MOELLER. Translated by ANDREW RUTHERFORD, B.D. 558 pp., 8vo, 15s. "It is a distinct gain to the study of Church history. To the teacher who wants references, to the priest or minister who wants to keep up his theological library, to the public librarian who wants to be able to send his inquirers to a practical and scientific authority, and to be himself directed to the choice of the best books on the subject, as well as to the student, this book may be heartily commended."—Manchester Guardian.

A HISTORY of ÆSTHETIC.

By BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon.), Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow), formerly Fellow of University College, Oxford. 510 pp., large 8vo, 10s. 6d. [LIBRARY OF PHILOSOPHY.]

"Really a great work, masterly in systematisation, accurate in learning, and full of great suggestions."—Prof. Minto in the "Bookman" (Oct. 1).

UNIFORM WITH THE SCHOPENHAUER SERIES.

1. OUTLINES of the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By HERMANN LOTZE. Edited by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A. (Oxon.). 2s. 6d. "A final word must be added on the opportuneness and value of this thoughtful treatise. I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the most suggestive and enlightening that our age has been privileged to welcome."—Rev. JOHN OWEN, in the "Academy," Oct. 1, 1892.
2. The PROBLEM of REALITY. By E. BELFORT BAX, Author of "A Handbook to the History of Philosophy," in Bohn's Library, 2s. 6d.

NEW EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHO-

LOGY: Introduction to. By Dr. THEODOR ZIEHEN, Professor in Jena. Translated by C. C. VAN LIEW and Dr. OTTO BEYER. Crown 8vo. With 21 Illustrations. 6s. "Psychology is broadening its base to an almost perplexing extent, and is encroaching more especially on the domain of physiology. Hence the need of a volume like the present, which aims at giving the beginner a conspectus of the physiological field. We want such a book badly in English. We can recommend Ziehen as exceedingly well adapted to give the student a clear idea of the scope and the methods of the new science of physiological psychology."—Nature.

EMPIRE and PAPACY in the MIDDLE AGES: an Introduction to the Study of Mediæval History. By ALICE D. GREENWOOD. Maps, 4s. 6d.

AN ANGLO-SAXON READER.

By JAMES W. BRIGHT, Ph.D., Associate Professor of English Philology in the Johns Hopkins University. With Notes and Glossary. 6s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOK of ELEMENTARY

BIOLOGY. By H. J. CAMPBELL, M.D., Senior Demonstrator of Biology in Guy's Hospital. 135 Cuts, 6s.

GREEK ACCIDENCE.

By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.). 2s. [PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.]

THE LINO TYPE Composing Machine

IS SPECIALLY ADAPTED for BOOKWORK.

Extract from the "Printers' Register,"
December 7th, 1891.

"The result of the contest between four American composing machines—the Linotype, the Rogers', the MacMillan, and the St. John Typo-bar systems, inaugurated by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Chicago, has been announced. The Linotype showed the best results, composing on the first day of eight hours 47,900 ems, and nearly 49,000 ems on the second day. The matter chosen consisted partly of sporting, market reports, and cable news, which had to be read and corrected."

The above shows that 49,000 American ems (equal to 98,000 English ems) were set in eight hours, giving an average of 12,250 English ems per hour corrected matter, which is a faster rate of speed than has been claimed for the Linotype Machine.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTIONS can be made on the Linotype Machine in about a quarter of the time occupied by hand-setting. To demonstrate this, experiments were conducted by the well-known Publisher, Mr. H. Rand. Into 9,200 ems of matter from the daily press a large variety of errors were purposely introduced both in Linotypes and ordinary type. The Linotype matter was corrected in twenty-seven minutes, while the type matter occupied an hour and a half.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., LIMITED, 30, BOUVERIE STREET, E.C.,

having acquired the monopoly of Linotype Machines in London (excepting newspaper offices) are in a position to quote decidedly advantageous prices to authors for the composition of books by Linotype, and also undertake the printing, being well equipped with printing machinery by the best makers.

DR. SMILES'S WORKS.

JASMIN: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist.

Port 8vo, 6s. 4th Thousand.
"What Jasmin did for himself in poetry Dr. Smiles has now done for him in prose, doing full justice to that part of his life which Jasmin's simple modesty forbade him to record, namely, his unceasing philanthropic efforts. The story is noble as well as touching, and is told by Dr. Smiles with abundance of sympathy and appreciation."

Times.
"Dr. Smiles has performed a praiseworthy task in introducing this little-known but admirable man to English readers.... He died worn out at the age of sixty-five. In the south of France he was mourned as the friend of the friendless, as the St. Vincent de Paul of poetry."

Academy.
"Dr. Samuel Smiles has given to the world a graceful and sympathetic record of a pure and beautiful human life, teeming with the poetry of action as well as of thought, and replete throughout of good deeds and lovingkindness."

Daily Telegraph.
"Il a fait un livre bien personnel et aussi complet que possible. Voilà Jasmin 'raconté' en anglais pour la postérité. C'est M. Smiles qui est le coupable, et son éloquent volume nous a tout fait charmé."

Revue Littéraire.
"No one of Dr. Smiles's books is more delightful than this one about the war-torn poet of Glasgow. Dr. Smiles appears here at his best; for the story of Jasmin's life is full of romance, and the style of this volume has the happy characteristics of ease, simplicity, and beauty."

Liverpool Mercury.
"The story of such a life is well worth telling, and it has been admirably and sympathetically told by Dr. Smiles in a book which, to our mind, is one of the most attractive of all his works."

John Bull.
"One of the most touching and charming biographies we have ever read."—Critic (New York).

LIFE and LABOUR; or, Characteristics OF MEN OF INDUSTRY, TALENT, AND GENIUS. 6s.

MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY. 6s.

THE HUGUENOTS: their Settlements, CHURCHES, and INDUSTRIES in ENGLAND and IRELAND. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SELF-HELP. CHARACTER.

THRIFT. DUTY.

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY. 6s.

LIVES of the ENGINEERS. Illus- trated. 5 vols. 7s. 6d. each.

LIFE of GEORGE STEPHENSON. With Illustrations. 21s.; 7s. 6d.; or 2s. 6d.

JAMES NASMYTH, ENGINEER: an AUTOBIOGRAPHY. With Portrait and 90 Illustrations. 16s. and 6s.

LIFE of THOMAS EDWARD, Scotch NATURALIST. Illustrated by Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A. 6s.

LIFE of ROBERT DICK, Geologist AND BOTANIST. Illustrated. 12s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 362, will be published on OCTOBER 17.
CONTENTS.

- I. PERSIA. By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON.
- II. MORELLI'S ITALIAN PAINTERS.
- III. THE PRINCES of the HOUSE of CONDE.
- IV. MEDITERRANEAN POLITICS.
- V. MEMOIRS of the VERNY FAMILY.
- VI. POPULATION.
- VII. BRITISH CRITICISM of the OLD TESTAMENT.
- VIII. THE POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.
- IX. THE SCOTTISH UNION.
- X. MARSHAL SAXE and the MARQUIS D'ARGENSON.
- XI. A NEBULOUS HYPOTHESIS.

London: LONDONMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 359, will be published on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 19th.

- I. SIR WALTER RALEIGH.
- II. ANCIENT SICILY.
- III. EQUATORIAL ANDES and MOUNTAINEERING.
- IV. HOMER and RECENT DISCOVERIES.
- V. DR. JOHNSON'S LETTERS.
- VI. DEVELOPMENT of DRESS.
- VII. TRAVELLING NATURALISTS in the NEW WORLD.
- VIII. RAPID TRANSIT in LONDON.
- IX. RUSSIA, INDIA, and AFGHANISTAN.
- X. THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

LEADING WOMEN of the RESTORATION.

By GLACE JOHNSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. with Portraits.
The National Observer says: "The book is written carefully and after much research. The memoirs contain many valuable anecdotes. The writing is very well."
Public Opinion says: "Essentially a book of historic value."

The Guardian says: "Written with considerable sympathy and feeling. The portraits are excellent."

WHERE HONOUR SITS. By W. B. Home-

GAILL. Cloth extra, 6s.
The Academy says: "The war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole 'Where Honour Sits' may certainly be pronounced readable."

The Manchester Courier says: "Much true and manly feeling, much real humanity, and decided ability in this volume.... The book is eminently readable."

THE NEW NOVEL by the AUTHOR of "IN SIN OR FOLLY." SYRINGA. By Arthur Nestorian. Cloth extra, 6s. [Just out.]

TRUE to the PRINCE: a Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By GERTRUDE BELL. Cloth extra, 6s.
The Saturday Review says: "She can relate well and clearly, and carries her readers along easily and pleasantly."

SECOND EDITION.

OUR TRIP NORTH. By R. Menzies
FERGUSON, M.A., Author of "Rambles in the Far North,"
"Quiet Folk," &c. Full-Page Illustrations. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
The Saturday Review says: "It is pleasantly written and well illustrated by Messrs. Denovan Adam and Austen Brown."
The Globe says: "An agreeable narrative, written in familiar style. The illustrations are much above the average."

JUST READY, SIXTH EDITION, NEW AND REVISED, WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.
WITH PREFATORY REMARKS by MR. GLADSTONE, who has READ
AND APPROVED THE VOLUME.

Cloth extra, 5s.
The Spectator says: "The aspirant to literature may certainly read Mr. Russell's book with profit."
Miss M. E. BAUMPTON writes: "Your counsel, both to the journalist and imaginative writer, is full of wisdom."

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration.
MSS. read with promptitude, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. New Catalogue of Books post free.

Address—DIGBY, LONG & Co., Publishers,
13, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.
Edited by Professors SALMOND and BRIGGS.

Volume II. of the Series, Now Ready, post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN ETHICS.

By Rev. NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D.,
Author of "Old Paths in New Light," &c.
"A Treatise on 'Christian Ethics' for the Series could not have been entrusted to better hands than those of Dr. Smyth."
Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.

Now ready, Fourth Edition (Volume I. of the Series), post 8vo, 12s.
AN INTRODUCTION to the LITERATURE of the OLD TESTAMENT.
By Professor S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Oxford.
"Learned, sober, and lucid.... contains all that most students can require."—Prof. W. Robertson Smith, LL.D.

COMPLETING VOLUME OF WENDT'S "TEACHING of JESUS."
Now Ready, price 10s. 6d.

Now ready, Volume II., No. 4 (completing Volume II.).
THE CRITICAL REVIEW of THEOLOGICAL and PHILOSOPHICAL
LITERATURE.

Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.
This Number includes "Reviews" by Principals Cave and SIMON, Professors SAYCE, BRUCE, G. A. SMITH, SALMOND, MASSIE, ROBERTSON, KENNEDY, IYERACH, CANNLISH, GIBB, &c.
Published Quarterly (January, April, July, October), price 1s. 6d.
Annual Prepaid Subscription, 6s. (post free).
The Spectator says: "Of the numerous additions which have recently been made to the critical literature of the country, none looks more promising than 'The Critical Review.' It deserves, and will to all appearance attain, success as an organ of the higher scholarship."
Now ready, in cloth binding, Volume II., 8vo, price 7s.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 28, GEORGE STREET.

Cloth, price 2s. 6d., post free.

RHEUMATISM and SCIATICA:

their Nature, Causes, and Treatment.

By JOHN H. CLARKE, M.D.

London: JAMES ERSS & Co., 170, Piccadilly, and 48, Thread-needle Street.

PROF. LOISSETTE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL
ART of NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics. Lost memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better. A self-teaching book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A self-teaching method for all subjects. Invaluable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains
ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS!!!

PROSPECTUS POST FREE.
With opinions of Mr. R. A. PROCTOR,
DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.

Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in

NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING

Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.

PROF. LOISSETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

RUDYARD KIPLING.—BARRACK-ROOM BALLADS, and other Verse. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Extra post 8vo, pp. 208, laid paper, rough edges, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

A special Presentation Edition, bound in parchment, with extra gilt ornament, 7s. 6d.

The First Edition was sold on publication, and two further large Editions have been exhausted. The Fourth Edition is now ready.

BARING-GOULD.—THE TRAGEDY of the CAESARS: The Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines. With numerous Illustrations from Busts, Gems, Cameos, &c. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 30s.

This book is the only one in English which deals with the personal history of the Caesars, a subject which, for picturesque detail and sombre interest, is not rivalled by any work of fiction. The volumes are copiously illustrated.

BARING-GOULD.—SURVIVALS and SUPERSTITIONS. With Illustrations. By S. BARING-GOULD. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A book on such subjects as Foundations, Gables, Holes, Gallows, Raising the Hat, Old Ballads, &c.

PERRENS.—THE HISTORY of FLORENCE from the TIME of the MEDICIS to the FALL of the REPUBLIC. By F. T. PERRENS. Translated by HANNAH LYNCH. In 3 vols. Vol. I., 8vo, 12s. 6d.

This is a translation from the French of the best history of Florence in existence. This volume covers a period of profound interest—political and literary—and is written with great vivacity.

"Q."—GREEN BAYS: a Book of Verses. By "Q," Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c. Fcap 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Also a limited edition on large Dutch paper.

WELLS.—OXFORD and OXFORD LIFE. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY. Edited by J. WELLS, M.A., Fellow of Wadham College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

An account of life at Oxford—intellectual, social, and religious—a careful estimate of necessary expenses, a review of recent changes, a statement of the present position of the University, and Chapters on Women's Education, aids to study, and University Extension.

DRIVER.—SERMONS on SUBJECTS CONNECTED with the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

An important volume of Sermons on Old Testament Criticism preached before the University by the Author of "An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament."

KAUFMANN.—CHARLES KINGSLEY. By M. KAUFMANN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s. A life of Kingsley chiefly as Christian Socialist.

LOCK.—THE LIFE of JOHN KEBLE. By WALTER LOCK, M.A. With Portrait, crown 8vo, 5s.

SELLS.—THE MECHANICS of DAILY LIFE. By V. P. SELLS, M.A. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

KIMMINS.—THE CHEMISTRY of LIFE and HEALTH. By C. W. KIMMINS. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The above are new volumes of the "University Extension" Series.

COX.—LAND NATIONALISATION. By HAROLD COX, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Ready.

HADFIELD and GIBBINS.—A SHORTER WORKING DAY. By R. A. HADFIELD and H. DE B. GIBBINS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The above are new volumes of "Social Questions of To-day" Series.

FICTION.

NORRIS.—HIS GRACE. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Madlle. de Mersac," "Marcia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PRYCE.—TIME and the WOMAN. By RICHARD PRYCE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PARKER.—PIERRE and his PEOPLE. By GILBERT PARKER. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

BLISS.—A MODERN ROMANCE. By LAURENCE BLISS. Crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.; paper, with etching on cover by Sainton, 2s. 6d.

BARING-GOULD.—IN the ROAR of the SEA. By S. BARING-GOULD. Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

CLARK RUSSELL.—MY DANISH SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With 6 Illustrations by W. H. Overend. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MABEL ROBINSON.—HOVENDEN, V.C. By F. MABEL ROBINSON. Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHEAPER EDITION.

BARING-GOULD.—OLD COUNTRY LIFE. By S. BARING-GOULD. Fourth Edition. Copiously illustrated, crown 8vo, 6s.

To be published about December, 2 vols., demy 8vo, about 520 pp., 32s.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF JOHN RUSKIN.

By W. G. COLLINGWOOD, M.A.,

Staff Lecturer, Oxford University Extension, Editor of Mr. Ruskin's Poems, Author of "The Art Teaching of John Ruskin," "The Supplement to 'Denational,' " &c.

This important work is written by Mr. Collingwood, who has been for some years Mr. Ruskin's private secretary and general assistant, and who has had unique advantages in obtaining materials for this book. It will contain a large amount of new matter, and letters which have never been published; and will be, in fact, as near as possible at present, a full and authoritative biography of Mr. Ruskin. The book will contain numerous portraits and illustrations, reproduced in the best style of process engraving.

Messrs. Methuen will also publish a special edition on hand-made paper, limited to 300 copies, with the Illustrations on India paper, price £3 5s.; and a small edition, limited to 30 copies, on Japanese paper, with the Illustrations on India paper, price £5 5s.

As the whole of the Japanese Edition and the greater part of the Large Paper Edition, is already sold, application should now be made to the Publishers, and orders will be booked as they are received.

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.—A Coloured Portrait of Mr. Ruskin from a painting by himself.—Ten Sketches by Mr. Ruskin (now published for the first time).—Several Portraits of Mr. Ruskin.—Sketches by Mr. Arthur Severn, R.I., of Mr. Ruskin's various homes.—Facsimile of a MS. page of "Fors Clavigera."

The sketches by Mr. Ruskin have been so chosen as to show Mr. Ruskin's hand in various styles and periods, in various moods, and in places specially connected with his work.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In handsome 8vo, tastefully printed and strongly bound, price 10s.

THE LONDON AND MIDDLESEX NOTE-BOOK.

An Illustrated Garner of the Local History and Antiquities of the City of London and County of Middlesex.

Edited by W. P. W. PHILLIMORE, M.A., B.C.L.,

Author of "How to Write the History of a Family," Editor of the "Index Library," &c.

In Crown 4to, handsomely printed and bound, price 21s.; Large Paper, price £3 3s. net.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF HEREFORDSHIRE.

By HENRY T. TIMMINS.

A descriptive account of the Picturesque Parts of the County. Fully Illustrated by the Author.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "ELIZABETHAN LIBRARY."

In tasteful antique binding, fcap. 12mo, price 3s. 6d., morocco roxburgh, price 5s. net; Large Paper, 15s. net.

CHOICE PASSAGES FROM THE WRITINGS AND LETTERS OF SIR WALTER RALEIGH;

Being a Small Sheaf of Gleanings from a Golden Harvest.

Edited by ALEXANDER B. GROSART, LL.D.

A NEW VOLUME OF ENTERTAINING ESSAYS.

In One Volume, tastefully printed and bound, price 3s. 6d.

FROM PUNCH TO PADAN ARAM.

Thoughts by a Rambling Philosopher. By ALFRED T. STORY.

"Essays on out-door life and curious characters written with much charm and originality."—The Bookman.

SECOND EDITION.

In fcap. 8vo, tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in half-parchment, price 5s.; Large Paper Copies, price 21s. net.

RES JUDICATÆ: Papers and Essays.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, M.P., Author of "Obiter Dicta," &c.

"One of the most charmingly-written books of criticism which has ever been penned. Mr. Birrell won his fame by 'Obiter Dicta,' and he will assuredly not lose it as a result of his latest work."—Daily Telegraph.

"Clever, and distinctly entertaining."—National Observer. "Will delight all lovers of literature. Mr. Birrell's criticism is fair, and his judgment on literary subjects is sound, while his style is light and easy. A charming and truly companionable book."—Manchester Examiner.

"In many respects this volume is more interesting than the second series of his 'Obiter Dicta.'"—Dundee Advertiser. "In all the papers solid thought and careful judgments are presented in a rich dress of wit, fancy, and learning, and the whole book is so pleasant that no one will read it without wishing that it would never come to an end."—Scotsman.

"The same evidence of wide reading, breadth of sympathy, gracefulness of phrase, and keenness of discrimination will be found here as the reader was delighted with in 'Obiter Dicta.' They place the writer in the front rank of our biographical essayists—the papers on Richardson, Newman, and Arnold, in particular, coming very near perfection, and encouraging high expectations in regard to future efforts in this field of criticism."—Liverpool Mercury.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON

A SELECTION FROM RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S
LIST OF
Forthcoming Publications.

CONVERSATIONS of DR. IGNATIUS von DOLLINGER. Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELL, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE
GOULD. In crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL. By ALFRED T. STORY. With numerous Illustrations from Paintings or Sketches by Linnell. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 23s.

LETTERS and MEMOIRS of the TWELFTH DUKE of SOMERSET. With Selections from his Diaries. Edited by WILLIAM H. MALLOCK.
In demy 8vo.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY LIFE.
Reminiscences and Anecdotes of Coleridge, Southey,
Charles Lamb, Wordsworth, Theodore Hook, Sydney
Smith, Browning, Miss Mitford, Rogers, the Keats,
Douglas Jerrold, Bright, Tennyson, Charles Kingsley,
Lander, Trelawny, Shelley, Sir Robert Peel, Bonamy
Price, Dr. Livingstone, and many other Persons of Note.
By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE, Author of "Memorials of Andrew Crosse, the Electrician." In 2 vols., post 8vo.

IN SAVAGE ISLES and SETTLED
LANDS. A Record of Personal Experiences in Europe,
Egypt, Ceylon, India, Australia, New Zealand, Java, Straits Settlements, New Guinea, Borneo, Tonga, Samoa, the Sandwich Islands, and the United States, in 1880-91.
By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S.
With Maps and numerous Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. In demy 8vo, 21s.

THE LIFE and WRITINGS of
T. W. ROBERTSON. Author of "School," "Caste," &c. By THOMAS EDGAR PEMBERTON, Author of "The Life of Edward Askew Sotherton." With Portrait and Facsimile, &c. In demy 8vo, 11s.

EGYPT TO-DAY. From the First to the Third Khedive. By W. FRASER RAE. In demy
8vo, 16s.

EIGHTY YEARS of MY LIFE. By
T. GORDON HAKE. Including some Recollections and Anecdotes of Count Pozzo di Borgo, Faraday, Rossetti,
Sir Benjamin Brodie, Monckton Milnes, Sir Frederick
Pollock, Sir Henry Cole, George Borrow, Mr. Delane,
Lord Elgin, Mr. Mozley, Sir Thomas Troubridge, Edmund Keen, Sir Henry Bunbury, M. Waddington, and others. In demy 8vo.

A HISTORY of MUSIC: from the Earliest Times. By J. F. ROWBOTHAM. A New and Revised Edition, with further Notes. In crown 8vo,
7s. 6d.

WANDERINGS by SOUTHERN WATERS, from the Quercy to the Dordogne. By EDWARD HARRISON BARKER, "Author of Way-faring in France." In demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 18s.

CHARLES KNIGHT: a Memoir. By his Grand-daughter, ALICE A. CLOWES. With 2
Portraits. In demy 8vo, 14s.

A VISIT to JAVA. By W. Basil
WORSFOLD. With Illustrations. In demy 8vo.

THE RECOLLECTIONS of MARSHAL
MACDONALD, during the Wars of the First Napoleon.
Edited by CAMILLE ROUSSET. A New Edition, in crown 8vo.

STRAY RECORDS; or, Personal and Professional Notes. By CLIFFORD HARRISON. In
2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s. [Now ready.]

THE STILL LIFE of the MIDDLE
TEMPLE, with some of its Table Talk, preceded by Fifty Years' Reminiscences. By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A.
In demy 8vo, 15s. [Now ready.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

STUDENT and SINGER: the Reminiscences of Charles Santley. With Photo-gravure Portrait of the Author as a young man, and two other Portraits in Operatic Costume. Demy 8vo, 16s. [Immediately.]

ENGLAND in EGYPT. By ALFRED MILNER, late Under-Secretary of Finance in Egypt. Demy 8vo, with Map, 16s.
[In November.]

This important work deals with the period of the British Occupation in Egypt, describing the causes by which it was rendered necessary, and the difficulties that have been successively faced and overcome. As a work of reference the book will prove invaluable to all who are concerned with the affairs of Egypt; while as a history of one of the most remarkable enterprises ever undertaken by this country abroad, it presents a record of events rarely paralleled, and full of deep interest to all patriotic Englishmen.

THE MEMORIES of DEAN
HOLE. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, and several Original Illustrations from Sketches by Leech and Thackeray. Demy 8vo,
16s. [Immediately.]

The Dean of Rochester has arranged his "Memories" under alphabetical chapters; thus, he takes in order Archers, Artists, Authors, Cricketers, Ecclesiastics, Gamblers, Gardeners, Hunters and Shooters, Oxoniens, Preachers, and Working Men.
Many have been his friends in all these divisions,
and the book is full of anecdotes and good stories.

ECHOES of OLD COUNTY
LIFE; being Recollections of Sport, Society,
Politics, and Farming in the Good Old Times.
By J. K. FOWLER (Rusticus), formerly of the White Hart Hotel and Prebendal Farms, Aylesbury. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author and other Illustrations. Large Imperial 16mo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

The book is dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. Sir Harry Verney, Bart., and contains many curious and hitherto unpublished anecdotes.

* * It is also intended to issue a Large-Paper Edition limited to 200 copies only. Price 21s. net.

THE BATTLES of FRED-ERICK the GREAT. Abstracted from Carlyle's Biography, and Edited by CYRIL RANSOME, M.A., Professor of History at the Yorkshire College. With numerous Illustrations reproduced from the German Imperial State Edition of Frederick's Works, by special permission of the Director-General of the Royal Museum of Berlin, the Original Battle-plans from Carlyle's Biography, and a map. Square 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Just Ready.]

THE MORAL INSTRUCTION of CHILDREN. By Dr. FELIX ADLER
President of the Ethical Society of New York.
A New Volume in the "International Education Series." Crown 8vo, 6s. [Now ready.]

THE CHILDREN'S FAVOURITE SERIES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

DEEDS of GOLD.

MY STORY-BOOK of ANIMALS.
MY BOOK of FABLES.

RHYMES FOR YOU and ME.

Each Volume contains about Thirty Illustrations.

A charming series of Juvenile Books, each plentifully illustrated, and written in simple language to please young readers. Handsomely bound, and designed to form an attractive and entertaining
Series of Gift Books for Presents and Prizes.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
37, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.
Publisher to the India Office.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's
NEW BOOKS.

CITY FESTIVALS.

By WILL CARLETON,
Author of "Farm Ballads," "Farm Legends," "Farm Festivals," &c.
Best Edition, crown 4to, cloth, 12s. 6d.; Popular Edition, boards, 1s.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography.

By CHARLES WILLEBY. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.
The aim of this book is to give a true, concise, and un-exaggerated account of the 'Raphael of the Piano,' as Heine called Chopin, as well as to point out some of the most characteristic features of his work as a musician.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.

NEW VOLUMES JUST READY.

CHRIST IS ALL. By the Rev.
HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, M.A., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, with Photogravure Portrait, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

PLAIN WORDS on GREAT THEMES.

By the Rev. J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D., Principal of the English Presbyterian College, London. Crown 8vo, with Photogravure Portrait, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THROUGH the LAND of the AZTECS:

Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico. By a
"GRINGO." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.
* * This book contains full and striking descriptions of the manners and customs of the Mexicans, together with an account of personal travel and adventure in the outlying districts of the Republic. The whole of the work is based on the writer's own observations and intimate practical acquaintance with Mexican life and commerce.

A TRAMP ACROSS the CONTINENT:

from Ohio to California on foot, 3,507 miles. By CHARLES F. LUMMIS, Author of "A New Mexico
David," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A RIDE through WONDERLAND.

By GEORGINA M. SYNGE. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THEORY and ANALYSIS of ORNA-
MENT, applied to the Work of Elementary and Technical Schools. By FRANCOIS LOUIS SCHAUERMANN, for eight years Head Master of the Wood and Carving Department, Royal Polytechnic, Regent Street. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

SECOND EDITION, JUST READY.

THE TERRIBLE CZAR: a Romance of the Times of Ivan the Terrible. By Count A. K.
TOLSTOI. Translated by Capt. FILMORE of the "Black Watch." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Not a superfluous word will be found in the entire book, and from the point of view of literary workmanship, vivid word-painting, and sharp relief, it is a model of what a novel should be. . . . Seldom has it been our good fortune to meet with so excellent a rendering of Russian into English."

Athenaeum.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus
HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,"
"A Creature of the Night," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

HYPOCRITES. By Hugh Coleman
DAVIDSON, Author of "The Old Adam," &c. Illustrated. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. KENNEDY, Author of
"Blacks and Bushrangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J.
HYNE, Author of "Four Red Nightcaps," &c. With 8 Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AXEL EBERSEN, the GRADUATE of UPSALA. By ANDRE LAURIER, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MACLEOD OF DARE.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

2s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1892.

No. 1067, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ: The Familiar Letters of James Howell. Edited, annotated, and indexed by Joseph Jacobs. In 2 vols. (David Nutt.)

It is the mode of to-day to edit an English classic with as much respect as if he were a poet of Greece or Rome. Nor need one be at all minded to quarrel with it. Those laborious tomes—the Cambridge Shakspeare, for instance, or Prof. Masson's Milton, or Dr. Hill's Boswell—confer dignity upon humble shelves: they create an atmosphere; they shed a faint reflection of learning upon the most superficial owner. And sometimes they are even useful. With such monuments of erudition, the Epistolæ Ho-Elizianæ, "newly edited, annotated, and indexed" by Mr. Joseph Jacobs, should by all means find a place. "Quæ regio in terris nostro non nota Jacobo" is the somewhat audacious heading prefixed to a section of the Introduction; and, in truth, the vaunt is justified by editor as well as author. Howell's Correspondence swarms with obscure allusions to forgotten personalities and to the labyrinthine intrigues of his time. These Mr. Jacobs has hunted out with commendable ingenuity and considerable success. He has wisely confined himself, in the main, to the clearing away of actual difficulties, and has refrained from swelling the volume of his notes by the undue accumulation of parallel or illustrative passages. That would have been an herculean task, and one which the literary importance of Howell scarcely justifies.

Mr. Jacobs prefaces his reprint of the Letters with an excellent account of Howell's life, a brief sketch of those voluminous works of his which have passed into oblivion, and a more careful study of this one memorial of him which has survived the process of time. On the vexed question of the authenticity of the Letters he sums up most judiciously, so it seems to me, as follows:

"Howell's Letters are thus authentic in a measure, being in the majority of cases, especially in Part III., founded on copies or notes made at the time they are supposed to be written. On the other hand, many of them are 'cooked' by the insertion of incongruous fragments; and others, especially the series addressed to his father, and containing Howell's autobiography, were probably either entirely fabricated or had the biographical paragraphs inserted, since they read too continuously."

Mr. Jacobs, in half humorous apology, calls this a "somewhat drab and trimming conclusion"; but none the less it is the only one which the facts warrant. The critical study of dates forbids us to believe that the Letters were written precisely as they stand; yet to an unbiassed mind they carry the seal of their own genuineness. They read like excerpts from familiar correspondence with a number of friends. There are little touches of actuality which only a genius could have put in afterwards; and Howell was not quite a genius. He was essentially a journalist, of course; no doubt he kept duplicates of his letters; he found them excellent "copy," and "edited" them freely for publication. But the theory that they are elaborate forgeries, composed during his sojourn in the Fleet, is absurd. After all, it rests mainly on the statement of Anthony à Wood, and Anthony à Wood's inaccuracies have led biographers wrong before now. Mr. Jacobs's view is not contradicted by the fact that the Letters are by no means artless—they smack of literary composition. How should it be else? Where is your literary man, trained to regard style, to study the phrase that tells, who can wholly put off himself and his art, when he sits down to write a familiar letter, can divest himself quite of the consciousness of an audience, though it be primarily at least but an audience of one? And wherein does the letter differ in this respect from the novel or the poem? Are not they, too, often written primarily for an audience of one, with only the faintest undersense of those others "who sit fresh-chapleted to listen"?

There is another passage in Mr. Jacobs's Introduction at which I am more inclined to cavil. It is that in which he speaks of Howell's place in the development of English prose style:

"In the development of English style the decisive and critical moment is the introduction of the easy short sentence. Everything written after that sounds familiar and native to modern Englishmen; everything written before that, in prose, sounds archaic and extraneous. Now it is usual to trace the introduction of the natural sentence (as distinguished from the period after the model of Latin prose) to Dryden, or at earliest to Cowley. Yet, if we open Howell anywhere, we come across sentences as short and as natural as any in Dryden or even in Addison. . . . And such sentences are so frequent in Howell as to be characteristic of his style. True, he indulges at times in the more periodic or euphuistic sentence. Yet the point is the first frequent appearance of the more natural sentence, and that, so far as I know, is to be found in Howell, even in his most hackwork performances. It is not too much to say that in the development of English prose true ease in writing comes from Howell, not Dryden."

Well, the fact is that during the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries there were two prose styles. There was the periodic Latinised style of Ascham, Hooker, Milton; there was also a more popular, almost journalistic, style, and this was built up almost entirely upon the short sentence. Open Lyly, Greene, Dekker, above all Nash, and you shall find shorter sentences and more of them than Howell ever dreamt of. From the eighteenth century onwards these two styles coalesce in one, in its essence the modern style; and the point of the modern style lies not in the number of short sentences, but in their subordination to the paragraph, as a unit of composition.

The paragraph is a disintegrated period: it is eclectic in this, that in it co-ordinate clauses, subordinate clauses, clauses merely juxtaposed, lie side by side, harmonised by the rhythmical sense of the writer. Now Howell has not arrived at the paragraph; the single sentence is still his unit. And—"the more periodic or euphuistic sentence"—

"That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow"; let us charitably hope that Mr. Jacobs's pen has slipped.

Howell's prose is not epoch-making, but it is distinctly interesting. It is never slipshod, always racy. And it is extremely various: it rises and falls, becomes more natural or more periodic, according to the dignity of the theme or the writer's familiarity with the person addressed. Like all the prose of the time, it abounds in Latinised words, some of which failed to take root in the language, and seem therefore exotic to a modern reader: such are "perstring," "transvolves," "quadrat," "pomeridian," "commossation," "infandous," "flexanimous," "subdolous."

Mr. Jacobs's notes are, as has been said, both learned and self-restrained; if they err at it, it is by omission, which in view of present-day tendencies may be put down as a fault on the right side. A pretty rigorous examination has only revealed a very few positive mistakes. Thus, in the note to page 689, Flacci epos is explained as a reference to the Aeneid, whereas the epic meant is of course the Argonauticon of C. Valerius Flaccus. And in the note to page 248, Milton's well-known phrase, "the old man eloquent," is quoted as referring to the Earl of Marlborough, to whose daughter the sonnet in which it occurs was written. But Milton meant Isocrates.

James Howell, as has been hinted above, had a typically journalistic mind. He would have made an ideal foreign correspondent for a great London daily. He was eager to acquire and to retail knowledge of every kind, but had no care that it should be first-hand knowledge. Mr. Jacobs points out that his learning on any given subject may generally be traced to some obvious handbook. His interests were catholic: he will tell you an unchaste story, or dwell on the mysteries and solaces of religion with equal zest; he was a bon vivant and a prig, a shrewd observer of politics, and an indifferent verse-maker. His career was a chequered one. Before he was fifty he became successively a commercial agent, a tutor, orator to an embassy, secretary to the Lord President of the North, and a political spy or "intelligencer." This last employment landed him in prison, where he remained for eight years. Thenceforward he principally supported himself by the use of his facile pen, and at the Restoration he received the high-sounding title of Historiographer Royal. His Familiar Letters were published in instalments between 1645 and 1655.

The Letters fall naturally into three groups, distinguished by the epithets Historical, Political, and Philosophical upon the title-page. There are long discourses upon such matters as Sibyls, Witchcraft, the Religions of the World, Catholicism, the United Provinces. These are not badly put together: they would make excellent essays or encyclopædia articles; but they seem hardly in place among familiar correspondence. Then there are letters in which Howell describes the events of his travels, or comments upon the affairs of civil or foreign policy. He has a pretty knack of writing about such things with lucidity and vividness. The most interesting series is that written from Spain, and giving an account by an eye witness of the negotiations for a Spanish marriage, and of the romantic visit of Prince Charles and Buckingham to Madrid. But it is the third, or Philosophical, group which must needs mean most to a modern reader. Shut off from the outer world by the stone walls of the Fleet, Howell's active mind was turned upon itself. He has been touched in the great school of adversity to finer issues; nor is he backward to set his meditations upon paper for the comfort or the encouragement of his friends. Like Sir Thomas Browne, he is at his best in dealing with the great common-places of existence, with Death and Sorrow and Religion; he sets them forth in the decencies of speech, and adorns them with touches of the sublime. Here is a handful of wise sayings:—

"I thank God the School of Affliction hath brought me to such a habit of Patience, it hath caus'd in me such symptoms of Mortification, that I can value this World as it is. It is but a vale of Troubles, and we who are in it are like so many Ants trudging up and down about a Mole-hill. Nay, at best we are but as so many Pilgrims, or Passengers travelling on still towards another Country. 'Tis true, that some do find the way thither more smooth and fair; they find it flowry, and tread upon Camomile all along: Such may be said to have their Paradise here, or to sail still in Fortune's sleeve, and to have the wind in the poop all the while, not knowing what a storm means; yet both the Divine and Philosopher do rank these among the most unfortunate of men."

And here again:

"They who prink, and pamper the Body, and neglect the Soul, are like one who, having a Nightingale in his House, is more fond of the wicker Cage than of the Bird: or rather like one who hath a Pearl of an invaluable Price, and esteems the poor Box that holds it more than the Jewel."

And here:

"You and I have hitherto met abroad under many Meridians; when our course is run here, I hope we shall meet in a Region that is above the wheel of Time. And it may be in the concave of some Star, if those glorious Lamps are habitable. Howsoever, my Genius prompts me, that when I part hence I shall not downwards; for I had always soaring thoughts being but a Boy, at which time I had a mighty desire to be a Bird, that I might fly towards the Sky."

Howell reminds one of Plato's Glaucus, the sea-god encrusted with shells and sea-weed. He is an aspiring soul, but borne down by many frailties. One wishes that he had written more often in this vein.

A word of praise is due to the paper and the printing, the binding, and the general get-up of the book. It is the more distressing to find a considerable number of misprints, whereof the worst are "Aenied" for "Aeneid," and "Kopling" for "Kipling."

ling." There is, apparently, another of some importance in the description of the 1645 edition of the Letters, given on page lxxxvii: the number of introductory pages is omitted.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

Aids to the Devout Study of Criticism. By the Rev. T. K. Cheyne. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS book carries on the work begun by Dr. Cheyne in his Jeremiah and his Hallowing of Criticism. The most popular section of the Old Testament narrative—the history of David—is examined critically, and the results of the examination fearlessly stated; an effort is then made to seize upon the character of the historic David, as it can be discerned after a careful sifting of the documents; and finally, Dr. Cheyne is at pains to insist upon the value for edification of David as modern criticism defines him. This constitutes the first part of the book; in the second part an attempt is made to deal with some of the Psalms in the same manner.

The merits of Dr. Cheyne's work are many; but the first and most important is that his method is right. He begins with a criticism of documents, insisting that "analytic criticism must precede every historical sketch, whether of Old or New Testament times." Those who hold such analytic criticism of the Old Testament difficult or impossible, hold more fully that any historical account of Old Testament times is difficult or impossible. The difficulty of the analysis Dr. Cheyne would at once admit. He cannot in the present case do more than state his own views of the composition of 1 and 2 Samuel. He tabulates eight documents which he discovers in the narrative, and notes as nearly as may be their date and origin. Hostile critics will quarrel with these results, but the mere statement of them will satisfy the readers for whom the book is intended. We are given some indication of the methods by which the analysis is effected, and we are referred to several authorities where the whole problem is elaborately discussed. We are not required to suppose, without any proof and against all probability, that 1 and 2 Samuel were the work of a single writer contemporary with the events he described. It is this supposition, long ago abandoned in the study of the documents of profane history, which persistently blocks the way of the student of the Old Testament. We are inclined to mention as the second of Dr. Cheyne's merits his admirable candour. It has been cast up against him that he is too candid, that there is no stability in his views and conclusions. The taunt is foolish. The critic of the Old Testament who is not prepared to change his views, many times and very completely during the course of his investigations, will do little to advance the knowledge of his subject. Dr. Cheyne's mind is always open to fresh evidence, of which for some years to come there will be continually fresh supplies in the field of Old Testament criticism. The breadth of Dr. Cheyne's culture, as well as his vast erudition, we are already acquainted with; they receive very striking illustration in the book before us. Whether his earnest devoutness can be counted all gain is not quite clear to us. In so far as it gives strength and unction to his style, it is admirable. In so far as it makes him a faithful servant of truth on the one hand, and of his congregation on the other, it is his best gift. But in so far as it makes him overeager to moralise his history, we are suspicious of it. When we are painfully trying to acquiesce in a new conception of David, it jars upon us that we are called upon to be edified almost in the fearless old fashion. Is it not true that for purposes of edification modern criticism makes the earlier heroes of the Old Testament less useful than they used to be? Hitherto preachers have drawn more edification from Moses and David than from Isaiah and Jeremiah, to the serious injury of Christ's religion. The modern criticism which discovers the prophets subordinates, at least comparatively, the patriarchs and kings. We have so far confined our criticism to the first part of Dr. Cheyne's book which treats of David. It is this part which will most effectually instruct the ordinary layman in the methods and results of biblical criticism, and help him to find again the Bible he has lost. Dr. Cheyne's discussion of David's character is eminently interesting, and can be easily followed. Part II., on the Book of Psalms, is more difficult, but probably more permanently valuable than Part I. We have only space to commend in general terms its thoughtfulness and its devoutness. Dr. Cheyne's chief object is to show of certain Psalms that they lose none of their meaning or of their force when the traditional author and date assigned to them are given up. The examination of the career and character of David in Part I. makes the main argument of Part II. specially forcible. The reader is compelled to realise that, granted certain historical facts as premises, the ascription of Psalms 32 and 51 to David is an absurd anachronism.

The second chapter of Part II. is entitled "The Inspiration of the Psalmists." It tries to show that "one of the Church's gains from the so-called higher criticism" is "a view of the inspiration of the Scriptures at once broader and deeper and more true to facts." It is curious after this that Dr. Cheyne should say of himself, "it is also true that I have myself no theory of inspiration to offer." He has a very distinct theory. He insists that Pindar, that the Vedas, that Dante and Browning must be looked upon as inspired. He speaks of Zarathustra "as an inspired prophet and poet, second to none in fervour and in originality." Our only quarrel with the chapter is its apologetic tone. The conception of inspiration which insists that the Jewish Scriptures alone are inspired is as dismal as it is arbitrary and incomprehensible. Its supporters occupy exactly the position of the Judaisers who opposed St. Paul. Dr. Cheyne's conception is not merely natural and logical, it is emphatically a gospel—good news for all who care that God should be just, and that men should have their daily bread. It is trying, therefore, to find Dr. Cheyne condescending to depreciate the Babylonian Flood-story in comparison with the Hebrew. "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel," is the obvious Christian sentiment if Christ is to guide us. The comparison of Jewish and Greek inspiration is full of instruction and interest, but the comparison to prove the superiority of either is wrong and futile. The individual is so small that the inspiration is for him best which he knows best. Moreover, the inspirations of the nations cannot be ranged, like schoolboys, in order of merit. That is last and least which cares to be first. God does not compete with Himself. When Englishmen expect to hear God's voice in their own literature and in the literature of Greece and Rome, as they expect to hear it in Hebrew literature, their ears will open. God is not dumb, but men are deaf, now as formerly. Dr. Cheyne need not apologise when he says "he that hath ears to hear let him hear."

RONALD BAYNE.

"RULERS OF INDIA."—Albuquerque. By H. Morse Stephens. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

ALFONSO DE ALBUQUERQUE, of mixed Castilian and Portuguese origin, was born near Lisbon in 1455. After having received his education at the court of King Alfonso V., he served for some years in that monarch's Morocco campaigns, where he seems to have acquired a Crusader's hatred for everything connected with Islam. Before the end of the century he fought against the Turks in the Levant, and twice more against the Moors of Northern Africa. In 1503 he visited the western—or Malabar—coast of India in command of a small expedition, and showed originality of character by sailing to Mozambique across the then almost unknown seas, instead of adopting the usual route of those times by way of Mombasa. On his return he sought, not without success, to win the interest of the King, Dom Manoel, in a grand scheme for stopping the trade-route by the Red Sea, and obtaining for Portugal the monopoly of Indian commerce by way of the Cape of Good Hope. In 1509 he was appointed Governor of Portuguese India, and at once gratified his love for his country and his hatred for the Crescent by strenuous efforts to destroy the power of the Mappilabs ("Moplas") and other Muhammadans, in whose hands the export trade of that part of India then was. The Hindus—whose religious rules were opposed to maritime pursuits, and who did not excite the same kind of animosity in a crusading heart—were, for the most part, conciliated. One Hindu chief, indeed—the "Zamorin" of Calicut—was disposed to support the Moplas, and this led to much hostility between him and Albuquerque. But such difficulties were gradually surmounted. He took Goa in 1510, and founded a great seaport and place of arms there. In the following year he struck at the heart of the Eastern trade by the capture of Malacca, and a little later established fortified factories at Diu and Calicut. He took Ormuz at the mouth of the Persian Gulf in 1513; and, when the Shah of Persia sent to demand tribute, is said to have shown the envoy some match-lock balls, with the information that this was the sort of tribute the Portuguese were accustomed to pay. He died on board ship, off Goa, in the last days of December, 1515.

The record of this faithful, manly life is succinctly given in the book under notice. There is a good deal of other matter, however; and the actual story of Albuquerque himself hardly fills 100 pages out of 207. This is disappointing; but it probably arises from a peculiarity affecting many other of the Lives in Sir W. Hunter's useful series. The story of a man who bore rule in India is apt to run into history: the events were greater than the men, or the men were so involved in events that they had hardly any other life of their own.

Another trouble in this particular case is that Albuquerque did not much affect the subsequent fates and doings of his countrymen in India. With all his hatred of Islam, he was not a fanatic propagator of the Cross. The Inquisition and other things that brought the Portuguese in India to ruin did not come till long after his time. His one object was the establishment of a commercial monopoly for Portugal. And that object was soon lost. First came the temporary union of Portugal to Spain; then the consequent hostility of the Dutch and the competition of England. The voice of the Imperial Gazetteer (vol. vi., pp. 359-60) is a little uncertain on the point.

"For exactly a century, from 1500 to 1600, the Portuguese enjoyed a monopoly of Oriental trade . . . they were not traders but knight-errants and crusaders . . . the period of the highest development of Portuguese commerce was probably from 1590 to 1610 . . . when their politic administration in India was at its lowest depth of degradation."

The truth of the matter will be seen in Mr. Stephens's book. The Portuguese set the example, afterwards followed by other nations, of establishing factories on the coasts of India for the exportation of spices and textiles to Europe. Not being able to do this with the concurrence of the natives—as has since been found possible in China—they took up the idea of fortified factories, in which they should be safe and independent. But whereas their British successors endeavoured to make treaties with the country powers, or, if compelled to fight the Nawabs and Rajas, conciliated the general native public by respecting their laws and their property and their religious beliefs and prejudices, the knights-errant of Portugal looked on all these things as monstrous obstacles to the truth. Hence, by the middle of the seventeenth century they came to be regarded as common enemies of the Indian people. Bernier says that in his time (about 1650-1660) "they are become a prey to their enemies and fallen so low in the Indies that I know not whether they will ever recover there."

Students will thank Mr. Stephens for this useful contribution to Indian history.

H. G. KEENE.

Silhouettes. By Arthur Symons. (Elkin Matthews & John Lane.)

THERE is so much colour and light in this little book, that we feel inclined to question whether it be rightly named. For many of the poems have less the effect of an outline, a contour, black on white, than of a landscape full of delicate, mysterious harmonies. Take, as an instance, the very first piece in the book. It is called "After Sunset":

"The sea lies quieted beneath
The after-sunset flush,
That leaves upon the heaped grey clouds
The grape's faint purple blush.

"Pale, from a little space in heaven
Of delicate ivory,
The sickle-moon and one gold star
Look down upon the sea."

Here we have but one of many charming little scenes that Mr. Symons paints for us with great sensitiveness of touch. As impressions they convey so much, that the name for them of "silhouette" seems inadequate. In their richness of suggestion and felicity of presentment they remind one of the work of Mr. Whistler. Perhaps this is how, if he chose verse as the medium for his expression, he might appeal to our mental eye.

But it must not be supposed that Mr. Symons makes paysage his chief care. More than once he sounds the graver note of sympathy for the loveliness and the sorrow of life; and here again his touch has the charm of sincerity. The emotion that underlies such lyrics as "To a Portrait" or "In the Night" is of the sort that can never be simulated; it rings true. Slight as these pieces are, they give the thrill that heart-inspired work can never fail to give. No less effective is the poem entitled "Alla Passeretta Bruna." This shows Mr. Symons at his very best; and for that reason it shall be quoted:

"If I bid you, you will come.
If I bid you, you will go,
You are mine, and so I take you
To my heart, your home:
Well, ah! well I know
I shall not forsake you.

"I shall always hold you fast,
I shall never set you free,
You are mine, and I possess you
Long as life shall last;
You will comfort me,
I shall bless you.

"I shall keep you as we keep
Flowers for memory, hid away
Under many a newer token
Buried deep—
Roses of a gaudier day,
Rings and trinkets, bright and broken.

"Other women I shall love,
Fame and fortune I may win,
But when fame and love forsake me,
And the light is night above,
You will let me in,
You will take me."

Another poem remarkable for its power is the "Javanese Dancers," which first appeared in the Book of the Rhymers' Club, and which, together with "Music and Memory," certainly helped to give distinction to that interesting little volume. Here the rhythm of the dance is curiously suggested by the metre, so that we seem to hear :

"The little amber-coloured dancers move
Like little painted figures on a screen."

That certain quaint irregularity in the structure of the verse is of service here; but in other places where this unevenness occurs the effect is not so pleasing. The rhyming of "adorable" with "shell"; lines such as "The soft roar broadening far along," or as

"Simply chaste dreams: but oh," would seem to point to a certain want of ear, if not to a wilful and deliberate disregard for form. More than once the writer seems to take pleasure in repeating words like "night" or "light," when by such repetition no effect is gained either musical or metrical. Take this fine quatrain:

"The fierce wild beauty of the light
That startles twilight on the hills,
And lightens all the mountain rills,
And flames before the feet of night."

Such iteration only vexes the ear. Here and there we seem to note a contempt—or perhaps we should call it a neglect—of form. But, in lyrics, form, facture must ever count for much; it is impossible to disdain it. Mr. Symons, at any rate, has not disdained it in the charming little picture of "Fountain Court," with which we would close our notice of a really notable book of poems:

"The fountain murmuring of sleep
A drowsy tune,
The flickering green of leaves that keep
The light of June,
Peace through a slumbering afternoon,
The peace of June."

"A waiting ghost, in the blue sky
The white curved moon,
June, hushed and breathless, waits, and I
Wait, too, with June.
Come, through the lingering afternoon,
Soon, love, come soon."

PERCY PINKERTON.

Reminiscences of a Gentlewoman of the Last Century: Letters of Catherine Hutton, edited by her cousin, Mrs. Catherine Hutton Beale. (Birmingham: Cornish.)

MISS HUTTON's letters deserve to attract and to interest those who care to linger among the byways of the eighteenth century. Nor are they attractive only for the sake of that fascinating time. If I may borrow a sentence from the writer, "there is an air in their dress and manner that is seldom seen at Birmingham"; and the writer herself is worth cultivating, as well for her good sense as for her good expression of it.

Miss Hutton was born in 1756, and she was the daughter of William Hutton, the historian of Birmingham. "Perhaps the smallest human being ever seen," the historian described her, "though she afterwards grew to a proper size; yet," as he adds prettily, "she always carried a delicate frame." Miss Hutton was unable to remember the time when she could not read. At five years old she read "the gilt books," published by Mr. Newbery; and written, some of them, it may be, by Dr. Goldsmith, as a work of love to entertain the little people of those days. In her eighth year she was sent to school, at her own request. "The school, which till very recently had been the first in Birmingham, was kept by a Mrs. and Miss Sawyer. The mother taught spelling, and reading in the Bible; the daughter, needlework, useful and ornamental, for sixpence a week." When Miss Hutton was ten she went to a writing school for one hour in the day. "My first attempt at writing," she tells us, "was copying the printed letters of a battledore or horn-book." The knowledge of writing soon developed her special talent; and her use of it was to write letters daily to the girls at school. "Nothing delighted me so much as The Tales of the Fairies," she says; "no girl ever was or could be fonder of dancing than myself. My school days were happy. Little was there to learn, and that little was easily learned." Her knowledge was not the less valuable, perhaps, because it was acquired easily; and what she read at home was as excellent as it could be.

"During the time I went to school I read at home the Spectator, Tatler, Guardian, novels, plays, and poetry. I thought Gray's elegy 'In a Country Churchyard' the most beautiful of poems, and I am still pretty much of the same opinion. I admired Goldsmith's 'Hermit of the Dale'; I admire it now, but perhaps I am not quite so much smitten with it. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry were my heart's delight, and my heart has not changed."

To her commerce with those authors, whom she here enumerates, we may attribute her fine taste, her good sense, and her plain style. To read, to meditate, and to enjoy; to dwell and to converse with a great author, to learn the conduct of life from him: these were the old methods of acquiring literature, when "Letters were 'Polite.'" How much better are they than our present method of pursuing the fragments of literature in a guide book or a selection, thinking all the time, not of an author's beauty, nor of his mind, but of the traps and caprices of an examiner. "Optimis assuescendum est," says Quintilian; "et multa magis quam multorum lectione firmanda mens, et docendus est color." At a later period, Miss Hutton records twice that she has been reading Swift's Letters to Stella; from Addison and from Stella she may have learned that invaluable precept, which she took to heart "very early in life," "never to enter into a dispute." Goldsmith will have taught her that common sense is the best commentary to the Scriptures; and she writes with good taste, and with common sense, of a popular institution.

"I have only to see the words Bible Society at the beginning of an advertisement to skip it entirely. Nobody reverences the Bible more than myself; but I question whether its divine precepts have done more good, or their perversion more harm, in this mistaken world; and I would sooner cram the doctor's pills down the throat of an Indian than the Bible of his adversaries."

With the same good sense of the eighteenth century, Mr. Hutton writes about religion:

"Infinite wisdom has appointed many ways to happiness. The road a man takes is of less consequence than his conduct in that road."

If one religion merits a preference to another, that preference ought to arise from an extension of benevolence."

In the same year that Miss Hutton was reading Swift, she "read Goldsmith's Roman History and a volume of Shakspeare (Macbeth)": and in her old age she says, "I am reading the novels of the delightful Miss Austen. All she says are trifles, but all are agreeable."

But not from books alone was Miss Hutton educated; her domestic life was as admirable, in its way, as her literature; and she possessed the enviable secret of enjoying life, of exercising all her faculties, and of using every moment profitably. Mr. Hutton possessed a town house in Birmingham and a country house at Washwood Heath, which in those days was near Birmingham; it is now encompassed by smoke and railways. The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Hutton, of a son, and of a daughter. Miss Hutton says:

"I have made shirts for my father and brother, and all sorts of wearing apparel for myself. I have made pastry and confectionery as habitual employments. I was my father's housekeeper during twenty-six years, and during the twenty-nine years since his death I have been my own. I have nursed my mother during five years' illness, and attended my father during five years of decline. I have written nine volumes which have been published by Longman & Co., and those which have been published by Baldwin & Cradock; and I have written sixty papers which have been published in different periodicals. I have written—that is copied—three hundred and thirty-three songs, with the music. I have cultivated flowers with my own hands. I have made drawings of flowers, birds, and butterflies in their proper colours. I have walked much, and danced whenever I had an opportunity. I have ridden much on a side-saddle and on a pillion behind a servant. I have ridden [Miss Hutton means 'driven'] in every sort of vehicle except a waggon, a cart, and an omnibus."

Her own tastes, and her mother's infirmities, took her from home continually. Miss Hutton was a great traveller about England; almost every year found her at some watering-place, and the most interesting of her letters describe these visits or these journeys.

"I have ridden," she says, "into Cumberland, Yorkshire, and the extremity of North and South Wales. I have been in thirty-nine of the counties of England and Wales, twenty-six times at London, twenty-one at watering places on the coast, and five inland."

In 1778 Miss Hutton made her first journey up to town. She records that Woodstock was passed at five in the morning, and Oxford reached at six; there she "breakfasted in a room without either fire or comfort." At Maidenhead she knew that London was near "by the multitude of carriages on the road"; and she alighted in the city, "stunned with the noise of coaches, and astonished with everything I saw." She describes the theatre, and tells us she saw "The School for Scandal" performed by the original company. She went forth into the park, and waited in the Mall three hours to see the king and queen go by.

"At last, after much wishing for, came their majesties in their chairs, preceded by their footmen and yeomen of the guard. The footmen were dressed in scarlet coats, with stripes of black velvet and gold lace; they wore black velvet caps, their hair in bags, ruffles at their hands, and white silk stockings. The dress of the yeomen was of the same materials, but in a singular form, and was calculated to make them look broad and fierce. The king looked rather sour, and his face was red and bloated. He looked straight forward, and took no notice of the people, who all bowed to him as he passed along."

This was in April, 1778; and the prosperity of the rebels in America may have been answerable for the sourness of George III. As to his manners, we may contrast Miss Hutton's casual narrative with what Johnson reported, after his private audience: "Sir, his manners are those of as fine a gentleman as we may suppose Lewis the Fourteenth or Charles the Second." But of his popularity, Johnson had said in 1777: "If England were fairly polled, the present king would be sent away to-night, and his adherents hanged to-morrow." The footmen, in Miss Hutton's letter, receive more attention than the king: she was ever interested in dress; her letters abound with descriptions of it, or with entreaties for the latest modes; and the great work of her life was a collection of prints and drawings to illustrate the history of costume, or the want of it, from the period of the ancient Britons to her own century. The portraits are enriched by Miss Hutton's explanations and remarks; the whole extends to eight large folios, and it is waiting for a wealthy and an enterprising publisher.

In 1787 Miss Hutton was with her mother at Aberystwith.

"We have," she writes, "a small parlour, a large chamber with two beds, a very good dinner, and our bread and butter, for sixteen shillings a week each. Mutton is half-a-crown a quarter, veal is abominable, and beef is not to be had; ducks and geese are fishy; fish is plentiful, salmon is fourpence a pound; chickens are sixpence a couple, and are excellent. The common people complain that the sea-bathers have raised the provisions to an enormous price."

She writes from Shrewsbury, upon her return:

"We have plodded through Wales, never having travelled five miles in any one hour; and I honestly confess that I like this good old fashion better than the modern one of galloping down hills and on the brink of precipices."

In the next year, Miss Hutton was at Blackpool; a place then with two hundred inhabitants, and four hundred visitors.

"I never found myself in such a mob. The people sat down to table behind their knives and forks, to be ready for their dinner; while my father, my mother, and myself, who did not choose to scramble, stood behind, till some one, more considerate than the rest, made room for us. These people are, in general, of a species called Boltoners; that is, rich, rough, honest manufacturers of the town of Bolton, whose coarseness of manners is proverbial even among their countrymen. The progress of the arts, even the art of cookery, is from south to north. The general observations I have been enabled to make on the Lancastrians are that the Boltoners are sincere, good-humoured, and noisy; the Manchesterians reserved and purse-proud; the Liverpoolians free and open as the ocean on which they get their riches. All ranks and both sexes are more robust than the people of the south. Hysterics and the long train of nervous disorders are unknown in the country. The people of the north are not equal to those of the south in refinement, but they surpass them in sincerity. The surgeon of the Forest of Bowland undertakes only to cure what is curable; while the quacks of the metropolis profess to cure all, without distinction."

The most stirring event of Miss Hutton's life was the Birmingham riot of 1791. In that barbarous calamity Mr. Hutton suffered the ruin of both his houses, and he lost a great deal of property. The violence of the rioters is inexcusable; their animosity, it may be possible to explain. Mrs. Schimmelpenninck says of Birmingham, at the opening of the French Revolution:

"I can look back with surprise at the total change introduced at this time in the subjects of conversation. Even with my father's scientific friends, politics became all absorbing. From the religious party, of whom Dr. Priestley was the head among us, we heard of the fraud and superstition of the Roman Catholic Church, the inordinate power of the priests, the vast revenues of the English clergy, and the grievances imposed by the oath of Supremacy, and the Corporation and Test Acts; so that those who had hitherto fancied themselves free and had moved about in perfect liberty began to feel their necks galled by heavy chains."

Miss Hutton speaks thus of Dr. Priestley:

"Having fully assured himself of the truth in religion, he conceived it his duty to go abroad into the world and endeavour to persuade all mortals to embrace it, an idea which has done more mischief than any which ever entered the erring mind of man. He sometimes, too, in his sermons glanced at politics, a subject that should never be mingled with religion."

Dr. Priestley was fervent, and possibly intemperate; and a public dinner, held to celebrate the fall of the Bastille, was the occasion of an outbreak. The hatred of the people was thought to burn more fiercely against Mr. Hutton, because he had been President for many years over the Court of Requests, a court for the recovery of small debts; in which office, as he says: "I never could find a way to let both parties win. If ninety-nine were content, and one was not, that one would be more solicitous to injure me than the ninety-nine to serve me." Miss Hutton tells how their country house was fired, and their town house was wrecked and pillaged, but not fired, as the neighbours, in alarm for their own orthodox premises, would not suffer it to be burned. The homeless family wandered to Sutton, to Tamworth, to Castle Bromwich, in some fear of their lives; they themselves, as well as their property, were refused a shelter more than once, lest the mob should be revenged upon those who harboured them. Miss Hutton showed great spirit and coolness throughout these trying scenes, but she never forgave them. "I have for ever quitted Birmingham as a home," she wrote; and to their town house the Huttons did not return. The losses, the perils, and the terrors of those anxious days shortened the life of Mrs. Hutton, and she died in 1796. Mr. Hutton survived until 1815. He was as fond of walking as his daughter of riding; and while his family drove, he often accomplished a large portion of the journey on foot. To his exercise he added abstinence; and the Huttons were unwelcome guests at the hotels, until they hit upon the device of paying for wine, but drinking milk. Temperance and exercise contributed something to their longevity: both father and daughter lived to be over ninety, and they preserved their faculties until the end. Miss Hutton lived on until 1816.

"I sit in my chair at the age of eighty-nine years and a half, and look back with astonishment on the occupations of my long life. But the solution is easy. I never was one moment unemployed, when it was possible to be doing something."

As long before her death as 1796, she remarked a decadence in the manners of good society. Speaking of an assembly in that year, and comparing it with an assembly of thirteen years before, she says:

"Then the men were all, with the exception of one individual, dressed in silk, lace, or embroidery. The women were now beautiful and well dressed; but, as to elegance, it is almost lost in fashion."

The portraits and the caricatures of the period bear witness to her just criticism about the decadence of masculine attire; and the decadence is only more marked, through the ugly fashions of the Regency, until the human form is perfectly disfigured by the development of the modern trowser. Nor is the literary decadence less remarkable than the social in the course of Miss Hutton's life: from conversing with Addison, and Gray, and Goldsmith, in her youth, she descended in her old age to Bulwer Lytton, Harrison Ainsworth, and Eliza Cook.

The readers of Miss Hutton should be grateful to the editor for the simple and unassuming way in which she has performed her office. Here and there, indeed, we might thank Mrs. Hutton Beale for more information than she has given. It would be interesting to know, for instance, whether that club to which Mr. Hutton belonged was the celebrated "Lunar Club," which could boast of James Watt and Erasmus Darwin among its members. In one passage the editor, or the printer, is guilty of a ludicrous mistake. Dr. Priestley is made to study "the works of Plato, Aristotle, Marcus Antonius, Epictetus, Seneca, and others, in order to make a comparison between the systems of the Grecian philosophers and Christianity." The memoirs of Mark Antony would indeed be worth studying, if we had them: they would certainly differ from those of Marcus Antoninus; to compare his "system" with that of the Greek philosophers is hard upon the Greeks and upon philosophy; and still harder, we should suppose, for Dr. Priestley, whose endeavours, we may hope, would have led him to contrast, and not to compare, Mark Antony with the Christian doctors. With the exception of this error, the book appears to have no mis-prints; and Messrs. Cornish may be congratulated upon their unblemished pages. The design of the binding, however, and the style of the engravings leave something to be desired.

ARTHUR GALTON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Head of the Firm. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Through Pain to Peace. By Sarah Doudney.
In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Honours Easy. By Charles T. C. James.
In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Leona. By Mrs. Molesworth. (Cassells.)

The Attack on the Mill. By Emile Zola.
(Heinemann.)

Down in the Flats, or Party before Fitness.
By Clevedon Kenn. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Reputation of George Saxon, and Other Stories. By Morley Roberts. (Cassells.)

Hans Vanderpump. A Billionaire Boer from the Transvaal. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

MRS. RIDDELL, in the course of a long and honourable career, has proved herself possessed of too much invention and literary capability to allow of her writing an uninteresting novel. Certainly The Head of the Firm cannot be so described; but it is both less interesting and less attractive in other ways than the majority of its predecessors. Mrs. Riddell won her reputation partly by her command of strong pathetic situations, and partly by the skill with which she converted into good narrative material some of the most technical details of London business life—details of which she has always displayed a most remarkable knowledge. It would seem, however, that this knowledge is confined to "city men," pure and simple; for her two lawyers, Mr. Thomas Desbourne and his nephew, "the head of the firm," are as unlike the real thing as it is possible for them to be. Had any other lady-writer made an experienced solicitor display his ignorance of the formalities attendant upon the acceptance of a bill, no reviewer would have thought it worth while to notice so natural a slip; but when Mrs. Riddell does so we open our eyes. Unfortunately, even if the two lawyers are thrown overboard, there are a few other Jonahs left on board to imperil the safety of the ship. Seeing that Mrs. Riddell treats Philip Vernham so very sympathetically, and finally rewards him with the hand of her heroine, she can hardly mean us to regard him as an insufferable prig, whose priggishness is naked and not ashamed; but how else are we to describe a young man who, when he discovers that his prosperity is due, not to his own ability—as he had fondly thought—but to a girl's unselfish generosity, is at once convinced that his debt can be discharged in full by a proposal of marriage? It is probable, indeed certain, that The Head of the Firm, like some scores of other novels, would have gained greatly by compression, for many of the subsidiary persons stand outside the main action without possessing sufficient interest of their own. If the book is regarded as a whole, it certainly cannot be numbered among its author's conspicuous successes; and yet it contains, as it was sure to contain, plenty of good things. Notable among them are the Battersea chapters, at the beginning of the book, the portraits of the heroine and the deformed young artist, and the powerful trial-scene at the close of the third volume, which proves that Mrs. Riddell's hand has not lost its cunning.

Through Pain to Peace is a pretty, refined, rather doleful, and very sentimental story, in which it may be said that Miss Doudney, like moonlight, touches hardly anything which she does not adorn with a graceful unroality. Mr. Hamerton once said of the French rural wood-carvers that if you give them a Gothic figure to reproduce they will do their work excellently, but that somehow or other they will ingeniously manage to eliminate altogether the Gothic feeling. In like fashion does Miss Doudney, in a most mysteriously skilful way, manage to eliminate the element of life-likeness from the majority of her men and women. There are people in fiction who are clearly impossible, but who nevertheless compel belief: Miss Doudney's people are all possible, but we can believe in hardly one of them, because, in order to produce a certain attractive effect she adopts a method which is fatal to any sense of flesh-and-blood reality. Tracy Taunton is an unrealisable child, with a faint suggestion of Marie Bashkirtseff, and she grows into an equally unrealisable woman, the provoking thing from the critic's point of view being that it is well-nigh impossible to set down in black and white what it is that leaves the impression of unreality; all he knows is that it is there, and that it is not to be got rid of. Still more obviously defective in this respect are the vicar, the organist, the organist's sister, the little seamstress, and, indeed, nearly all the people who figure in the very ecclesiastical third volume. Through Pain to Peace is, as has been indicated, a sweet, graceful book, which could only have been written by a cultivated and refined woman. Miss Doudney's mistake has been that of supposing it possible to combine conventional prettiness and imaginative veracity.

The silly title of Mr. C. T. C. James's book will be recognised by experienced voyagers on the ocean of contemporary fiction as a sort of storm signal; but it will hardly prepare them for the slangy vulgarity of too many of the pages that follow. Nor is this all. A novel may be pervaded by the unattractive quality just named, and may yet possess a certain kind of interest; but Honours Easy is very tiresome. What else could it be when its substance is pretty well divided between the conversation of a middle-aged spinster, who atones for frailty in youth by austerity in later life, and the drinking bouts and flirtations of a young man who, though he has passed through a university and is intended for the Church, represents the typical 'Arry at his dullest and worst? There are also a shopwalker, who is another 'Arry; a young secretary of the Association of Pure Lilies, who is something worse; a profligate baronet, who has seduced the aforesaid spinster; and a couple of shoppirls, who are among the least objectionable persons in the book. It is a pity that such a novel should have been written by anybody; it is a special pity that it should have been written by Mr. James, who has shown himself capable of more reputable work.

Mrs. Molesworth's novel, Leona, has not the wonderful charm of her stories for children, but it is a very enjoyable book. The characters of the young men and girls who are the principal persons in the little narrative drama are, in the main, admirably delineated; and the phrase of qualification is only demanded by a certain difficulty in believing that a girl of Leona's singular nobility and unworldliness of nature could possibly have won a general reputation for the opposite qualities, even among people who had no opportunity of really knowing her. The narrative scheme is very slight, but Mrs. Molesworth's bright, refined portraiture saves Leona from anything like thinness; and the conversation, which is an important element in a tale of this kind, is specially excellent.

The name of M. Zola has somewhat terrifying associations for a number of English readers, but there is not a phrase to alarm the most timid in the two short stories of war which have been introduced and translated by Mr. Edmund Gosse. The Soirées de Médan, in which The Attack on the Mill (L'Attaque du Moulin) originally appeared twelve years ago, is described by Mr. Gosse as "a manifesto by the naturalists, the most definite and the most defiant which had up to that time been made;" but M. Zola's contribution has none of the qualities which are associated with the epithet "naturalistic," except, indeed, that forceful veracity of rendering of which the naturalists have not a monopoly. The story of the episode in the Franco-Prussian war is narrated with a distinctness of imaginative realisation which is rendered all the more impressive by the consistent reticence of the literary treatment; and without a single direct appeal to the emotions M. Zola achieves all tragic effects of pity and terror. The accompanying sketch, "Three Wars," is slighter, but it is a little masterpiece of a kind of art more delicate and miniature-like than that with which M. Zola's name is commonly associated.

Down in the Flats is a story with a purpose, and a very admirable purpose it is. The book is one of which Charles Kingsley would have heartily approved, though it is hardly a book that he would have written; for Kingsley had an artistic instinct, of which Mr. Kenn is somewhat deficient, and he would not have allowed any purpose to dominate the narrative as it is dominated here. Still, the story is constructed and written with care, intelligence, and literary skill, and may be read with pleasure and interest.

There are painters whose work appeals mainly to their fellow-craftsmen, poets who are studied mainly by other poets, and prose writers who appeal to the suffrages not of "the general," but of the critics and literary connoisseurs. In "The Reputation of George Saxon" Mr. Morley Roberts has condescended to an ingenious and popular narrative motive, but in the majority of its companion stories he depends rather too exclusively upon dexterities and delicacies of technique. They have many really fine qualities, and yet one cannot help feeling that they would be more truly artistic if the art were not quite so obtrusive. Not that it is obtrusive in a vulgar, clap-trap way: there is no strain after cleverness, no strain, indeed, of any kind; but the very simplicity and restraint seem somewhat unduly self-conscious. To this criticism there are, however, several noteworthy exceptions, among which "Exlex" and "The Plot of his Story" demand special mention; and everywhere, even in the stories which are from one point of view most disappointing, there is a loyalty to a high literary ideal which deserves and should receive hearty appreciation.

Hans Vanderpump is a narrative extravaganza of the "screaming farce" order, and both letterpress and illustrations are evidently intended to be excruciatingly funny. One sample of the kind of fun provided will amply suffice. The hero has deserted Mrs. Vanderpump, has not seen her for years, and is thinking of marrying a duke's daughter, when the encumbrance reappears.

"Here was his wife alive and kicking—kicking everything but the bucket! And though two wrongs do not make a right, two marriage rites make a very ugly wrong. Altogether it was a nasty situation. . . . The Gordian knot must be cut—and the jugular vein was the place to cut it at."

Of such choice humour as this is Hans Vanderpump all compact.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

THE HISTORY OF ANCIENT GREECE.

A History of Greece. By Evelyn Abbott. Part II. (Longmans.) The thoughts of men in historical study, as in everything else, are widened with the process of the suns. Niebuhr found a helpful analogy to the Roman plebs in his native Ditmarsh. Dr. Abbott looks further afield and clears up the nature of tribes, and the rise of kingship, by the facts of Indian life as told by Sir Alfred Lyall. Whatever new light has been thrown from any quarter on early Aryan society, or on the historical times of Hellas, will be found carefully focussed in his pages. The newest interpretation of coins may here be seen, along with the latest studies of German specialists. The Athenian Constitution of "Aristotle" is cited a good many times, though treated with but slight respect. In fact, Dr. Abbott's second volume, which carries on the tale of Greek affairs from the Ionian revolt to the Thirty Years' Peace, is as good as the first—which is as much as to say that it leaves little to be desired in either scholarship or history. The task of writing a new history of Hellas has grown under his hands. It is indeed impossible, as he says, to give an adequate account of the fifth century B.C. in one volume, and he anticipates that the rest of his work must proceed upon the same extended scale. Perhaps, if more space had been allowed from the beginning, the book might have read somewhat more easily. As it is, the style is at times cramped, probably from the incessant struggle to economize space. A strong sense of what is due to the subject and a natural wish to omit nothing of importance have packed too much information into each page. It is impossible to regret that Dr. Abbott's plan has been enlarged. The change has made room for what should never be abridged, and has rendered possible a full and spirited account of the Persian Wars. Every aspect of this memorable struggle has justice done to it. Its causes; the condition of the contending parties; the use which the Greeks made by land and by sea of the natural features of their country; the exaggerations and improbabilities which have grown on to the story; the ever-fresh interest which cleaves to the story in spite of the detected exaggerations; the picturesqueness of its main incidents; the ups and downs of the struggle; and the uncertainty as to whether it ever had any formal end—all these things stand out clear in Dr. Abbott's pages. The memory of the Persian Wars must live, from their own importance; but also few wars have been reported by a Herodotus and an Aeschylus; and Dr. Abbott's artistic taste has made him quote these writers with excellent effect. The trumpet's note of Aeschylus still rings "like a leaping flame." But the wars suggest deeper thoughts too. The Persians incurred defeat in part because they were ill armed (though surely the ἀγχυλὴ βραχέα of Il. 5, 49 was not a short javelin). But also

"from first to last the [Persian] invasion was conceived and carried out without any real knowledge of the task which lay before the invader. A vast multitude of men and ships was collected without thought of the difficulty of maintaining or even using them; the Greeks were allowed to occupy the best positions; and defeat was almost courted by unnecessary attacks under adverse circumstances. The advice of men who knew the Greek temper, and the points where they [sic] feared defeat, was always disregarded in favour of those who recommended a line more worthy of Persian traditions" (p. 241).

The following chapters (on Peloponnesian and Athenian affairs and on the early history of the Dorian League) are perhaps in themselves less interesting, and they suffer from appearing without their natural culmination—an account of the administration of Pericles, and of the art-creations of his time, which is reserved for another volume. Still, they are solid pieces of work; and the same may be said of the concluding chapters, which give as much unity as is possible to our fragmentary information about early Greek Italy and Sicily. On the whole, Dr. Abbott is writing an excellent history of Greece; and not the least of its merits is that he points out plainly how much there is that we do not know.

Das Griechische Bürgerrecht. Von E. Szanto. (Freiburg i.B.: Mohr.) A "Staatsrecht" for Greece, such as we now possess for Rome, has hitherto been unattainable, partly because of the greater complexity of the state-forms in the subdivided and disintegrated Greek world, partly because we had not documents enough to give us precise and trustworthy legal information. The second source of difficulty is disappearing with the comparison of fresh inscriptions; and, though the first difficulty remains and will remain to trouble systematists, yet Herr Szanto, wisely taking up the subject at the point rendered easiest by the course of discovery, has laid a solid foundation for at least one corner of the building. He selects for separate consideration the right and the rights of citizenship among the Greeks. Δῖλον, as Aristotle says, ὅτι πρότερον ὁ πολίτης ἡγήρεος; and, after a short introduction explaining what constituted a citizen in a Greek state, Herr Szanto goes on to show how citizenship was granted or otherwise acquired. The right was by no means always granted en bloc, and Herr Szanto has some trouble in distinguishing the different grades and limitations recognised—trouble which we think it would have been hopeless to face only a few years ago. Next comes a chapter on ισοπολιτεία. Documentary evidence is called in to show how Greeks understood this word. It did not mean what writers on Roman history have made it mean from a too exclusive consideration of Latin affairs, nor was it, as Boeckh thought, an imperfect citizenship, very much like ισοτέλεια. It can only mean complete civic rights offered by the one state, but not necessarily taken up by the citizens of the other state concerned. In fact, the word answers to the fuller expression ἔλαι ἀπὸ τῆς πολιτείας ἢν βούληται. The third division of the book deals with συμπολιτεία in its two forms, the synoecistic and the federative; and here it naturally trenches on further political problems. The author has relied chiefly on epigraphy for the materials of his study, on treaties and grants; and he utters a word of wise warning against a point of view which has, perhaps, been over strongly held or expressed. Citizenship, its origin and its rights, must not be thought of as too closely interwoven with religion. In prehistoric times common cults were of the first importance in creating or holding together a village or a state; but we may easily exaggerate this influence in the historical period.

Kleinasiatische Studien. Untersuchungen zur griechisch-persischen Geschichte des IV. Jahrhunderts v. Chr. Von W. Judeich. (Marburg: Elwert.) The thread which binds together Herr Judeich's separate "Studien" is the consideration of how the episode dealt with bore on the question, Shall Asia Minor (and especially its fringe of coast and its islands) be Orientalised or Grecised? Shall it be drawn finally into the vortex of Asiatic affairs? Shall it share the nobler and fully Hellenic life of the West, or—as actually happened—shall it be the seed-plot and breeding-ground of all those mixed tendencies to which the name of "Hellenism" is specially applied? There were moments when things looked as if one or other of the first two alternatives were in store for the country. The first Athenian league (and in a smaller degree the league of the next century) gave it its fairest chance of breeding out, as it were, the barbaric strain inherited from the Carian wives of Miletus and other foreign admixtures. The fortune of war decided against this hope. The masterful character and controlling power of Artaxerxes III. Ochus promised to absorb the East Greeks for good in the great body of the Persian empire, and even to hold fast another struggling civilisation, that of Egypt. But the military genius of Alexander baffled the prospects of renewed life for the Persian State. More fortunate in one sense were the separatist movements of the satraps, of Mausollos, and of Euagoras; for, though these leaders failed to achieve the independence on which their hearts were set, yet the great movement of which their action was one phase or expression went on still. The Greek life on the one hand and the Asiatic life on the other lost certain of their distinguishing marks and tended to become fused. Greek kingdoms—without, as yet, the name of king—were constantly forming like bubbles on the troubled surface of West Asiatic affairs. Even the philhellene prince, Kyros the younger, and Lysandros ruling for a moment at Sardis, foreshadowed what was coming; and, when the Diadochi carved the huge empire of the Achæmenidae into great monarchies for themselves, they were only taking advantage of work already done for them by some famous and many obscure forerunners. They found Orientals ready to be Grecised and Greeks ready to submit to Greco rule. Among the many episodes of this long development, Herr Judeich has treated (with conspicuous ability) the part played in the East in the third century B.C. by Sparta and by Athens, the story of Euagoras, the national rising of the Egyptians, the revolt of the satraps, the career of Mausollos, and the relations of Macedon with Persia.

Rivalité d'Eschine et Démosthène. Par A. Bougot. (Paris: Bouillon.) This is one of those clear and lively sketches of a perplexed situation of which the French pen seems to possess the secret. Plunging in medias res, M. Bougot rouses at once the attention of his readers, unfatigued by long preliminaries, and that attention is kept unflagging until the conclusion of the process about the Crown. It is not everyone who could have disentangled so successfully the threads of intrigue and misrepresentation, or who could have raised his subject so well above the somewhat vulgar level of personalities to which the two great orators themselves descended. The quarrel has been treated often enough before, but everything lies in the way in which a topic is presented; and the idea of looking on the politics of the day as a duel between Aeschines and Demosthenes was an ingenious one. Of course there are other ways, and more necessary ones, of looking at them; but then there are plenty of other essays and histories. The book of M. Brédif on Demosthenes, noticed some time back in the ACADEMY, supplies, for instance, a useful complement to that of M. Bougot. The latter is especially political and historical; the former pays more attention to the literary and artistic side of the great orator's work.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A SERIES of articles on the portraits of Tennyson will be commenced in an early number of the Magazine of Art, from the pen of his friend, Mr. Theodore Watts. The selection from the large number of existing portraits has been approved by Lord Tennyson's family, and includes all that are authentic representations of him.

MR. ARTHUR WAUGH's Study of Lord Tennyson, which has been in preparation for the last two years, and which was intended for the spring season, is now announced by Mr. Heinemann for immediate publication. It includes much material which has not hitherto been brought together, and is illustrated with a number of photographs specially taken for the work. The exact title of the volume will be Alfred Lord Tennyson: a Study of his Life and Work.

THE new volume of "The Poets and the Poetry of the Century," entitled Tennyson to Clough, to be issued immediately, will contain some interesting information supplied to the editor by several members of the Tennyson family. The critical notes on Lord Tennyson, and on his two brothers, Frederick and Charles, are written by Dr. A. H. Japp.

THE publication of Mr. R. L. Stevenson's Beach of Falesá, which it was intended to issue this autumn, has been postponed till next year. Mr. Stevenson's work on Samoa, issued under the title of A Footnote to History, has reached a second edition; and The Wrecker is now in its sixteenth thousand.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. announce a volume of eleven sermons, entitled Faith, by the Rev. H. C. Beeching, rector of Yattendon, who will be remembered as one of the authors of "Love in Idleness."

THE Chiswick Press will issue at the end of this month Some Notes on Books and Printing: A Guide for Authors and Others, by Mr. Charles T. Jacobi, the manager of the Chiswick Press, and also examiner in typography to the City and Guilds of London Institute.

A NOVEL, entitled Anthea, by Cécile Cassavetti, will be shortly issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. It is a sensational story, based on historical facts of the time of the Greek War of Independence.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish the English edition of the re-issue of Herman Melville's works, edited, with a biographical and critical introduction, by Mr. Arthur Stedman, with a portrait of the author, a map, and other illustrations. The complete set will form four volumes, of which Typee and Omoo will be ready very shortly, and White Jacket and Moby Dick are in the press.

A NEW volume of essays by the late J. Hain Friswell, author of "The Gentle Life," entitled This Wicked World, will be published immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson.

THE second volume of the "Elizabethan Library" is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication. It is entitled Choice Passages from the Writings of Sir Walter Raleigh, with an introduction by Dr. A. B. Grosart.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS publish this week a new three-volume novel by Mr. William Westall. The same author is writing a story which will run, early next year, in the Weekly Budget and other newspapers, and be published simultaneously in the United States, by Mr. P. F. Collier, of New York, who has acquired the American and Canadian rights.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS announce Devonshire Wills, being a collection of abstracts of early Wills and Administrations proved and granted in the diocese of Exeter, extracted, arranged, and annotated by Mr. Charles Worthy, the county historian.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON will publish the English edition of a work by the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, of Princeton, entitled Bernard of Clairvaux: The Times, the Man, and his Work.

THE first large edition of Mrs. Oliphant's new novel, The Cuckoo in the Nest, has been exhausted. A second edition will be ready next week.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. announce a second edition of Mr. Silas K. Hocking's new volume, Where Duty Lies, the first having been exhausted on the day of publication.

The annual meeting of the Ruskin Society of London was to be held on Friday of this week, in the Governors' room of the Charterhouse, when Canon Elwyn, the Master, had undertaken to point out the chief features of interest in the ancient building. The ordinary meetings of the Society, which is now in the second year of its existence, are held at the London Institution, on the second Friday of the month, from November to May, at 7.30 p.m.

COLLECTORS of Thackerayana may be glad to have their attention called to The Chronicle of St. George, a quarterly periodical printed at Brighton, but published by Messrs. Bradford & Noel of Chichester. The October number contains some reminiscences of the novelist by his cousin, the Rev. F. St. John Thackeray, well known to many generations of Etonians. Writing of his own schoolboy days, he says:

"I never visited, rarely saw him [Thackeray] at this time without having a sovereign slipped into my hand on leaving him. . . . On these delightful visits he would spare no pains in taking me to places of amusement—the play or the pantomime—sometimes after an excellent dinner at the Garrick Club, where I remember his checking some one in the act of blurring out an oath, the utterance of which he would not tolerate in my presence."

Concerning his appearance, he quotes from the Agricola of Tacitus: "Nihil metus in vultu: gratia oris supererat. Bonum virum facile crederes, magnum libenter."

WE believe that the general consensus of foreign opinion would assign the first place among Tennyson's works to Enoch Arden. A few months ago, M. Beljame, professor at the Faculté des Lettres de Paris, published an annotated edition of it, to which was appended a continental bibliography. From this we learn that there are seven translations in French, and six in German. Of the former, one is by Xavier Marmier (who has himself died this very week), and another has an introduction by Scherer. Of the latter, one with illustrations has passed through more than thirty editions. It has also been translated twice into Dutch (with a frontispiece by Josef Israels), and twice into Italian; into Spanish, by D. Vicente De Arana (with illustrations); into Norwegian; into Hungarian; and into Bohemian. With the exception of the Spanish and some of the French, all these translations are in verse. In addition, there are no less than four annotated editions in French, and one in German. A dramatised version was produced at Boston in January, 1865, within a year after its publication; and another at the Royal Surrey Theatre in 1869.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. WILLIAM WATSON has written an elegy on Tennyson of some length for this week's number of the Illustrated London News, which will also contain verses by Dr. Richard Garnett and Mr. Andrew Lang.

THE Marquess of Salisbury will contribute a paper on "Constitutional Revision" to the November number of the National Review.

THE forthcoming number of the Economic Review will contain the following articles: "What Attitude should the Church adopt towards the Aims and Methods of Labour Combinations?" by Rev. Canon H. Scott Holland; "The Present Position of the Sweating System Question in the United Kingdom," by Mr. David F. Schloss; "Co-operative Credit-Banking in Germany," by Mr. Henry W. Wolff; "The Universities' Settlement in Whitechapel: a Criticism," by Mr. T. H. Nunn; "The Theory of Prize-Giving," by the Rev. and Hon. E. Lyttelton, and the Rev. H. Rashdall; "Thoughts on Social Problems and their Solution," by Mr. E. Vansittart Neale.

THE serial tale in the Ladies Treasury for next year will be written by Mary Albert, and entitled "Sybil Golding's Rubies."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford, on October 8, Dr. Boyd delivered the usual Latin speech, reviewing the events of the past academical year, on the occasion of beginning another term of office as Vice-Chancellor. The report in the Times somewhat awkwardly makes him mention the services to archaeology of the late "Colonel" Chester, instead of "Greville" Chester.

PROF. SAYCE will deliver a public lecture at Oxford on Wednesday next, October 19, on "The History of Canaan according to the Babylonian Monuments." He intends to start for Egypt immediately afterwards.

MR. J. BASS MULLINGER, the historian of Cambridge University, who has been appointed to deliver the Birkbeck Lectures at Trinity College, has chosen as his subject "Schools of Theology at Cambridge."

MR. J. RENDELL HARRIS, the new reader in palaeography at Cambridge, will deliver this term his first course of lectures in the Divinity School, entitled "Introduction to Greek Palaeography."

PROF. H. F. PELHAM, Camden professor of ancient history at Oxford, will publish immediately, with Messrs. Percival, a volume entitled Outlines of Roman History, with maps.

THE Rector of the University of Padua has addressed a Latin letter to the Vice-Chancellors of Oxford and Cambridge, inviting them to send a delegate to the Galileo Tercentenary, which it is proposed to celebrate from December 6 to 8. It was on December 7, 1392, that Galileo was appointed by the Republic of Venice to the chair of astronomy at Padua, which he occupied for twenty-two years.

MR. WILFRED GILL, of Magdalene College, Cambridge, will deliver a special course of lectures during the present session at 13, Kensington-square (King's College Department for Ladies) on "Ancient and Modern Aspects of Hellenism," with a free introductory lecture on "Our Intellectual Debt to Greece," to be given on Tuesday next, at 11.15 a.m.

WE may mention here two pamphlets which have appeared during the vacation. One is the inaugural address delivered by Mr. James Stuart at the opening of the third series of vacation courses of study at Cambridge. In this he traces the development of the University Extension movement during the last twenty-one years, and incidentally throws light on the origin of the term. The other is a report of a conference held at Oxford in August, on the extension of university teaching among workmen, in which Mr. Tom Mann and several other workmen took part. The result was a proposal to provide specimen courses of University Extension lectures in the industrial districts, on a scale which will require at least £1000 a year for three years. It is proposed to tell off one or more experienced lecturers, as educational missionaries, for this branch of the work; to furnish each lecturer with a travelling organiser, who will make the local arrangements through trade unions and co-operative societies, and explain the purpose and scope of the courses at each chosen centre before the lectures begin; and to equip each course with the best possible illustrations.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE LAUREATE DEAD.

(October 6, 1892.)

THE laurels fall from off as high a brow,
As since our Shakspeare wore the poet-bays,
Who breathed Sicilian music thro' his lays,
And felt great Homer's resonant ebb and flow,
Who knew all art of word that man may know,
And led us on by love's undying ways,
Who gave us back the old Arthurian days,
The last of Laureates, Tennyson, lies low.

Our golden age is shorter, and the spheres
That sooner wane may swiftest wax to prime,
But when shall sing another as he sung
Who wrought with Saxon purity of tongue
The one great epic of two hundred years,
The one memorial utterance for all time?

H. D. RAWNSLEY.

Τεννύσωνι Βρετάννῳ.

στρ. Γούσιν ἦτοι σε Μούσαι, δάκρυ χέοντι δ' ἄνδρες παρὰ τάφον τὸν ἰόντες, ὅς αὐδρῶν αἰεὶς βίον ἐλευθερίον ἤθη τε παρθένια καὶ πατριὰν χθόνα τέδν, κλεινὰν τε πολέμου βοᾶν φιλοκάλους τ' εὐκλεῶς μαχατὰς ἐκελάδῃσας, ἐν δ' ἱππέων ᾄωτον, τραπέζας
κτίσταν γε πρῶτον ἅμα κυκλίου καὶ πρὸς δρόν·
ἀντ. ἔμωμον ὅσπερ τελέσαις
πολυπόνοις ἐν ἀλλοῖς παρὰ βρατοῖσι φανερὸν βίον ὕφρῃα λίμνας κατὰ ῥόαν δι' ὕδατ' ἤλθεν· κόραι δὲ κόμισαν
ἀγλαὰ χρυσοφόροι
θεῖοις μέλεσιν χερῶν ἅμ' ἐπαφὰς μαλθακᾶν.
ἰάδῃ δὲ βαρὺ τραῦμ' ἔδος ἐς ἀφθιτον μολόντος ἄνακτος·
παμπάισιν ἐνθ' ἐπεδέκοντο νῦν καὶ θαλάις

ἐμφδ. ἦρωες· οὐ μὲν γὰρ τάδε πρέπει πάλιν ἄλλων ὁμῶν· τέλεα πρὸς σῶθεν γὰρ λείκεται, ἐπιγόναις χάρις θαντοῖς ἀνάδ' οὐ κτεράς· ἀλλ', ὦ μάκαρ, χαῖρέ μοι καὶ φθίμενος· ἡ γὰρ βλέπεις δὴν ἐγὼς ἔταν, ἡ σε λάβῃ ἔχει, κρᾶτιστον ἐσθλῶν.

R. J. WALKER.

OBITUARY.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

THE greatest poetic artist of the English-speaking race has passed away. There need be no sadness of farewell at such a close to such a career. To have passed a long life in undivided devotion to the noblest of the arts, to have grown in mastery of it almost to the end, to have become in very deed the voice of the nation he loved so well: this has been surely the supreme lot. It is characteristic that almost the only trouble of his later years was the intrusive reverence of his fellow-countrymen, a burden that might have been borne with somewhat more of patience and geniality. But there was a touch of the aristocrat about Tennyson that chimed in well with the dignity of his art, and completes the picture of the vates sacer, the consecrated voice of a mighty people, brooding in self-chosen isolation upon the things of highest import.

That is not the figure which Tennyson presents on his first appearance in the arena where he was to outstrip all rivals. His Keepsake period lasted long. Looking back, we can indeed discern in the volume of 1842—in the "Ulysses," in the "Morte d'Arthur," in "The Two Voices"—the promise of nearly all that was to come. But these were imbedded in much that was pretty but petty, Wordsworthian idylls too long drawn out, Lords of Burleigh and Ladies Clare, that half justified the early scoffers, Wilson and the rest. Even the melody, though sweet and clear, was thin and at times tinkling. Grace, not force or dignity, was the characteristic up to and including "The Princess" of 1847, the most graceful poem of such length in the language.

Yet all the while the master was growing in command over his instrument. Even in the earlier volumes of 1830 and 1832 there were premonitions of the almost flawless workmanship in words which was to be the cachet of Tennyson's style. They say that men's minds ossify after forty. Certainly there comes to languages growing old a stage of ossification, when new collocations of words become increasingly difficult and the conventional epithet is stereotyped and polarised. In the history of English style, in prose indirectly as directly in poetry, that stage of ossification was arrested by Tennyson. He is the great master of the epithet in our language. He revived old words like "marish," he invented new ones like "murmurous." He seems to have taken infinite care over the filing of his phrases. A careful study of the variae lectiones of his successive editions is a liberal education in poetic form, and there was probably much greater modification before anything of his appeared in print at all.

It is for this reason that the poet with whom he is to be affiliated in the history of English poetry, regarded simply as an art, is, of all poets in the world, Pope. It was Pope's aim, he himself avowed, to make English poetry correct in form. It was Tennyson's function to bring back to English verse that care for form which had disappeared from it when he began to write. During his adolescent period, the titular head of English poetry was Robert Southey, who published amorphous masses which he called poems, while Wordsworth was acting up to a theory of poetry which implied that form was of no consequence. Tennyson rescued English poetry from these tendencies. No wonder that his influence has been the dominant one among all but a few. As in the eighteenth century every poetaster aped Pope, so in the nineteenth every English minor poet has followed in the wake of Tennyson.

There can be little doubt that this care for form was due to his University education on the old classical Trinity lines. Tennyson is of the classical order of poets in a double sense. There are always poets learned in their art who love to reproduce and recall the best work of their predecessors in their own or in the classical languages: Milton and Gray are of this class. There are poets, again, who preserve in their lines the reserve, the dignity, the καίριος of the great poets of antiquity, even though they may not be intimately acquainted with them: Collins and Keats are classical in this sense. Tennyson was classical in both ways: he has antique reserve, he is full of reminiscences. It is this fact that has made the comparison to Virgil or to Theocritus so natural, yet so misleading. The reference to Theocritus might pass for one side of his work, and that the least important. But Tennyson had no such theme as the Majestas Romae of the great Mantuan before him: no national-religious sanction to his subject, no haunting sense of a world-theme in his words.

There is, indeed, in Tennyson's first period, which we are at present considering, no haunting sense of anything. There is none of the magic, the mystical charm of Coleridge or of Rossetti in his lines. They are as clear cut as crystal, and as cold. One feels no rush of impetuous emotion behind the words, no uncontrollable outburst of imaginative force. Yet it is this that gives us the sense of a great poet, a vision of unknown vistas of the poet-soul flashing through the verse. Tennyson in his first period knows exactly what he wants to say, and says it in the best way. This is the side of him that has made him popular, and contrasts so favourably with the obscurity and incoherence of many of his compeers. Yet it has its weakness in the want of depth, want of soul-tone in his earlier work.

Akin to this clear-cut form was the accuracy and minuteness of observation which made him so successful a painter of domesticated Nature. His achievements in this direction may have been over-estimated. He is not immaculate: the songster nightingale is always with him the female, not the male, as it is in Nature: he was probably misled by the myth of Philo-mela. But the minuteness and independence of his powers of observation are acknowledged on all hands, and go naturally with the clear vision of the artist in words. Yet here again the result is to impair the true poetic effect. Nature in poetry must be used as a "pathetic fallacy" to give the Stimmung to the emotions the poet wishes to arouse. Minute attention to detail diverts the emotion, and at best produces only a decorative effect.

The danger was that this mastery of form and clearness of vision would lead to mere daintiness, might even result in the feeble elegance of vers de société. Tennyson was saved from this by the great chastening sorrow of his life. While he was training himself as a poetic artist with metrical experiments and coinages of five-word phrases enshrining his observations of Nature, he was also elaborating his masterpiece—"In Memoriam." For twice the Horatian period he kept this series of poem-sequences by him, adding, revising, inserting, and rejecting, till the whole grew to a moving series of pictures of a soul's development from the first overwhelming stroke till the final reconciliation of sorrow and hope. Injustice is done to Tennyson in thinking of the "In Memoriam" as one outburst. He is careful to mark the stages of his grief. In one case we can even date a stanza at least thirteen years later than the death of Arthur Hallam. When the poet speaks of science charming her secret from the latest moon, there is little doubt he is referring to the discovery of Neptune in 1846; yet this occurs in one of the earlier sections of the poem. The dangers involved in a philosophical poem were overcome by putting the problem in a concrete shape. The theology of the poem was from Rugby: it is the voice of the Broad Church, clear, yet somewhat thin, and wanting in the higher imagination. The curious anticipations of Darwinism which occur so frequently in it were due to the interest excited by Chambers's Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation, which appeared in 1844, and enable us to see how late these sections of the poem were added. The felicities of phrase with which it abounds cause it to rank as one of the best known poems in the language, and the one with which the name of Tennyson will be indissolubly connected. Here, again, the comparison with Pope is justified. The only other long philosophical poem in the language of any real literary merit is his "Essay on Man."

"Maud" is even a greater surprise when compared with the Tennyson of the first period. There is no lack here of impetuous emotion, no cold decorative work. There is even a touch of hysteria in the highly wrought passion. The poet broke here with Manchesterthum: the sword is the voice of God, as a later poet has put it. There was in "Maud" an indication of emotional power, as in "In Memoriam" there was an unexpected proof of intellectual power, in one who had seemed only the idle singer of an empty day. To the poet of "In Memoriam" and "Maud" there seemed no height too high, no poetic exploit too ambitious.

Unhappily, the poet's ambition turned for nearly a quarter of a century into spheres of poetic art where his powers, great as they were, were inadequate. He was not an epic poet, he was not a dramatic poet; yet he devoted his forces at their highest capacity to epic, to drama. An epic is the presentation of a national myth regarded as sacred: the "Paradise Lost" answers to this description, the "Idylls of the King" do not. Arthur has never been a national hero: he is mainly the outcome of a long series of literary creation; the "Idylls" could at best claim only to be a literary epic, not a national one. But the temper required for the literary epic is the romantic, not the classical spirit. There must be something of the Viking delight in battle, a tone of χαρμῆ, not to mention a certain sensuous glory, surrounding the passion of the epic. Such ideals are different from the Rugby ones, which Tennyson represents in literature.

It is scarcely denied that Tennyson transformed the tone of his originals, of the "Mabinogion" and the "Morte Darthur." The unworthy gibe that the "Morte d'Arthur" of Tennyson was a "Morte d'Albert" was the more unfair, as the "Morte d'Arthur" is the least unsuccessful of the series, and departs least from the original. But the whole conception of Guinevere, and still more that of Vivien, was of the nineteenth-century English gentleman, and something in the spirit of Mr. Podsnap. The control of passion, which is so characteristic a part of the Rugby ideal, has its noble side, but it has a narrowing effect on the artist when dealing with passionate subjects. Along with it goes a want of humour, conspicuous alike in Tennyson and in Wordsworth. The "Northern Farmer" is almost the sole exception to the high seriousness of his work. The isolation of the poet must have contributed to this defect: one cannot keep oneself in cotton wool with impunity.

The epic period, 1860-70, was succeeded by a dramatic decade even more disastrous for his reputation. It is not merely that the dramas were unsuited for the stage; their fatal defect was that they were not dramatic. There is more dramatic force, for example, in the closing lines of "Lucretius" than in the whole of the the dramas put together. It is useless to note that the character of Henry II., or of Mary, is according to the Records: dramas are not histories. Tennyson may have conceived his characters aright; he has not presented them dramatically. Here, again, as in the epic series, one felt the absence of the creative rush, the sense of a personality behind the artistic work and greater than it. The great poet is himself greater than his work; the sense of easy mastery of their materials is given by men like Shakspeare or Homer. Tennyson's epic and dramatic studies leave a sense of the poet's struggle with an uncongenial task. Even the poet's mastery of form had declined; there are many passages in the "Idylls" which, by their mere verbal beauty, redeem the poems from insignificance. There are scarcely any in the dramas—apart from the lyrical interludes—which are either worthy of their setting or worthy of being taken out of their setting.

I can remember the disastrous effect the epic and dramatic periods had on Tennyson's reputation during the "seventies." We that were interested in the future of English letters had lost all hope in Tennyson: our eyes were turned to Rossetti and Mr. Swinburne. It became the fashion to think and speak slightly of the great master, who was all the while maturing to a final creative outburst which was to raise him far above any contemporary, far above most of his predecessors in English song, except the two greatest names of all. The fifth act of the drama of Tennyson's poetic career fulfils all, and more than all, the promise of the earlier ones.

Since Sophocles there has been nothing in all literature like that St. Martin's summer of Tennyson's muse. The old age of Goethe was devoted to science; the vital portions of the second part of "Faust" were written years before they were published. The vigour and virility of the volume of "Ballads," the "Teiresias" volume, the "New Locksley Hall," and the "Demeter" volume were astounding: "Rizpah," "Vastness," "The Ballad of the 'Revenge,'" "Teiresias," to mention some of the more striking, were achievements of the first order in poetic force. There was no want of the rush of inspiration behind the verse; there was rugged vigour, sublime incoherence. The metrical forms could no longer bear the fullness of the poetic fervour. There was no over-niceness of precision; even the metre had grown less smooth, more Michaelangelesque. It was as if the frost of old was sending spikes of ice across the surface of the stream of verse. Thus, in the "Crossing of the Bar," which has been so mercilessly reiterated during the past week, the third line of each stanza seems to our ear wanting in the old smoothness and ring; yet it is effective for all that.

It is in the Tennyson of these later days that we recognise the master—the great poet-soul looming behind the poem, and greater than it. He rises at times to an almost prophetic strain. He had always been English of the English; if this had given him some narrowness of vision and sympathy, it gave him in later years the intensity which seems impossible without some narrowness. He has revived for us the half-forgotten sentiment of patriotism. Even throughout the pseudo-cosmopolitanism of the Manchester period of recent history he was always for England first: "Love thou thy land!" was his refrain throughout, and he set the example himself. He has been the one Laureate that was really the nation's voice. If his utterances as Laureate do not take a foremost place among his compositions, that is simply because the English nation during his laureateship has been happy in having no dramatic episodes in its history. You cannot be strikingly effective in dealing with a slow and unconscious development.

It cannot be said of Tennyson that he has been a great spiritual force in the national development of the last half-century. "The Princess" may have aided the movement for the higher education of women, though it is in essence a protest against it. "In Memoriam" has liberalised theology and been to the Broad Church movement what "The Christian Year" has been to the High Church. But where is the Broad Church now? "Maud" may have helped to free England from the shackles of Manchesterism. His later incursions into polemical verse, the "Children's Hospital" and the unfortunate "Promise of May," were best forgotten. Direct didacticism is likely at all times to lead to priggishness. The teaching of the true poet is indirect—a sort of induction of the poetic temper and attitude, far more subtle and penetrating in its effect than all your direct teaching. The pictures of still and cleanly English life in the earlier idylls, of sturdy heroism in the ballads, even the somewhat namby-pamby chivalry of the epic "Idylls"—these were the teachings of Tennyson, so far as he was a teacher. It is noteworthy that, in almost all these aspects, he was carrying on the tradition of his predecessor on the poetic throne.

There were so many Tennysons that one would never have done in attempting to deal with all sides of his multifarious poetic activity. But throughout the five acts of his poetic life there is one common element that binds them into an organic unity. His lyrics were as sweet last as first. They run through and connect together, like a string of pearls, all his poetic phases, even his bronze and iron periods. They give unity to "The Princess"; they relieve the heaviness of the dramas. Dainty and exquisite in form, they have besides that haunting charm, that imaginative atmosphere which is too often wanting in Tennyson's other work. Their melody is almost unsurpassed in our language, and they have received the homage of musicians in frequent settings. Yet I remember George Eliot saying to me, that, exquisite as they are, they are seldom suitable for singing, especially when compared with the Elizabethan lyrics which trill forth as naturally as from a bird. The collocations of consonants in Tennyson's lyrics often impede voice production. The Elizabethans were writing for a nation of singers; Tennyson was writing for a people with whom singing is a lost art.

It was his lyrics that made him the popular poet he undoubtedly was. He was emphatically, for the Victorian era, the man that sang the nation's songs. If these were at times wanting in the finer harmonies and the more complex rhythms, that was no bar to their popularity—it was rather a condition of it. The critical problem of Tennyson's art, we have been told, is his simultaneous acceptance by mob and by dilettanti. The solution is obvious: he appealed to these different classes with different phases of his art. He could use the simplicity, even the banality, of Longfellow, and he could also wield the wand of Coleridge, or of Rossetti. There were so many Tennysons.

Of Tennyson the man the public know nothing; it was his dignified wish to live his life apart. The glimpses we catch of him reveal something akin to his own bluff English squire, tempered by even more than the usual share of poetic sensitiveness. This aloofness need only be here considered in reference to its consequences on his art. This cannot but have suffered from want of contact with the larger life, which made him impossible as a dramatist. But it prepared the way for the Seerhood of the closing period, and, above all, enabled him to live his life solely devoted to his glorious art.

No English poet impresses one with such a sense of continuous improvement in the technique of his vocation. At first the echoes resound: a touch of Keats, a sentiment of Wordsworth, a phrase of Byron, a rhythm of Shelley or of Coleridge, metrical experiments in quantity—everywhere we find the poet testing all things poetical, and holding fast that which was good. Soon the individual accent comes, in the "Palace of Art," in the "Lotus Eaters," in "The Epic"; and the music strengthens and deepens till the last. No English poet but Milton shows so steady an advance in his art from the beginning of his career till its close. Nor has Milton the same wide command of all the keys. Tennyson is the greatest poetic artist of England, and he will thus remain at once the people's poet and the poets' poet of these isles.

It is no world-poet that England now is mourning with commingled pride and grief. No world-pain throbs through his lines. No world-problem finds in him expression or solution. The sweet domesticities, the manly and refined ideals of English life in the middle period of the nineteenth century—Tennyson was the fluted voice of these. To these he has given immortality while he has gained immortality from them. For us he has helped to form the English ideals which are destined to be an abiding influence in the national life. He spoke not to the world at large: he spoke only to his beloved England. He was, and is, our own Tennyson.

JOSEPH JACOBS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for October contains three valuable scholarly articles. Dr. John Taylor gives a sympathetic sketch of Prof. Cheyne's recent work on the critical study of the David narratives and the Book of Psalms, bringing forward those points which most needed to be emphasised against hostile misrepresentations. Prof. Ramsay gives his third paper on St. Paul's Journey in Asia Minor, dealing with Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe. Prof. G. A. Smith discusses with brevity and acuteness the most startling of Duhren's critical conclusions in his recent work on Isaiah; it is to be regretted that he did not rather call attention to some of the numerous points on which all critical scholars must be glad to learn from this accomplished commentator. The other papers are by Bishop Walsham How, in favour of a selection from the alterations of the Authorised Version of the New Testament made by the revisers; by Prof. Beet, on Modern Theories of the Atonement; and by Dr. David Brown, on Herod the Tetrarch. Prof. Sanday gives a note on Marcus Dod's popular work on St. John; and Prof. A. B. Davidson, on Arthur Davis's small book on the Hebrew Accents, which has already been noticed in the ACADEMY.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

"Student and Singer": the Reminiscences of Charles Santley, with a photogravure portrait of the author as a young man, and two other portraits in operative costume; "England in Egypt," by Alfred Milner, late Under-Secretary of Finance in Egypt; "The Memories of Dean Hole," with a photogravure portrait of the author, and several original illustrations from sketches by Leech and Thackeray; "Echoes of Old Country Life," being Recollections of Sport, Society, Politics, and Farming in the good Old Times, by J. K. Fowler (Rusticus), formerly of the White Hart Hotel and the Prebendal Farms, Aylesbury; "The Battles of Frederick the Great," abstracted from Carlyle's Biography, and edited by Prof. Cyril Ransome, with numerous illustrations reproduced from the German Imperial State Edition of Frederick's Works, the original battle-plans from Carlyle's Biography, and a map.

Educational.—"The Moral Instruction of Children," by Felix Adler, President of the Ethical Society of New York; and "Education from a National Standpoint," translated from the French of Alfred Fouillée, by W. J. Greenstreet, forming two volumes in "The International Education Series"; "A First French Course, with Grammar Exercises and Vocabularies," by James Boiello; "A First French Reader and Exercise Book," edited for use in schools, with a vocabulary, by W. J. Greenstreet; "A First German Course," by L. J. Lumsden; "A First Latin Course, for the use of Beginners," with grammar exercises and vocabularies, by W. J. Greenstreet; "An Elementary Algebra for use in Schools and Colleges," by Prof. Tanner and W. J. Greenstreet; "The Standard Course of Elementary Chemistry," Parts I.-V., by E. J. Cox; "Arnold's English Readers," Primers I. and II., "Infant Reader," and Books I.-VII., edited by Dr. M. T. Yates; "Arnold's Reading Sheets," to accompany the Primer in "Arnold's English Readers"; "Arnold's Geography Readers," Books I.-VII., edited by Dr. M. T. Yates; "Arnold's History Readers," Books I.-VII., edited by Dr. M. T. Yates; "Arnold's Unseen Readers," Book III.-VI., with test-cards corresponding to the letterpress; "Arnold's Wild Flower Pictures," a series of coloured pictures for the decoration of schools.

The Children's Favourite Series.—"Deeds of Gold," a book of heroic and patriotic deeds, tending to inspire a love of courage, bravery, and devotion; "My Book of Fables," chosen chiefly from the famous old Fables of Aesop and others dear to children of all generations; "My Story-Book of Animals," anecdotes and tales about animals, from the familiar pets of the house to the beasts of the forest; "Rhymes for You and Me," short verses and rhymes, which everybody loves, and which are the first to be learned and the last to be forgotten by children.

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON'S LIST.

"Berie the Briton: a Story of the Roman Invasion," by G. A. Henty, with twelve page illustrations by W. Parkinson; "In Greek Waters: a Story of the Grecian War of Independence (1821-1827)," by G. A. Henty, with twelve page illustrations by W. S. Stacey and a map; "Condemned as a Nihilist: a Story of Escape from Siberia," by G. A. Henty, with eight page illustrations by Walter Paget; "The Thirsty Sword: a Story of the Norse Invasion of Scotland (1262-63)," by Robert Leighton, with eight page illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and a map; "The Heiress of Courtleroy," by Anne Beale, with eight page illustrations by T. C. H. Castle; "A Very Odd Girl: or, Life at the Gabled Farm," by Annie E. Armstrong, with six page illustrations by S. T. Dadd; "The Captured Cruiser: or, Two Years from Land," by C. J. Hyne, with six page illustrations by F. Brangwyn; "An Old-Time Yarn: wherein is set forth divers desperate mischances which befell Anthony Ingram and his shipmates in the West Indies and Mexico with Hawkins and Drake," by Edgar Pickering, illustrated with six page pictures drawn by Alfred Pearse; "A Rough Road: or, How the Boy made a Man of Himself," by Mrs. G. Linnaeus Banks, illustrated by Alfred Pearse; "Penelope and the Others: a Story of Five Country Children," by Amy Walton, illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke; "A Cruise in Cloudland," by Henry Frith, illustrated by W. S. Stacey; "The Two Dorothys: a Tale for Girls," by Mrs. Herbert Martin, illustrated by Gordon Browne; "An Unexpected Hero," by Eliz. J. Lysaght, with three page illustrations by S. T. Dadd; "The Bushranger's Secret," by Mrs. Henry Clarke, with three page illustrations by W. S. Stacey; "Phil and his Father," by Ismay Thorn, illustrated by S. T. Dadd; "Prim's Story," by L. E. Tiddeman, illustrated by T. H. Wilson; "The Lost Dog, and Other Stories," by Ascott R. Hope; "A Council of Courtiers," by Cora Langton; "The Rambles of Three Children," by Geraldine Mockler; "Little Miss Masterful," by L. E. Tiddeman; "An Australian Childhood," by Ellen Campbell; "A Sprig of Honeysuckle," by Georgina M. Squire.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & Co.'s List.

"With Russian Pilgrims," by the Rev. Alex. A. Boddy; "The National Churches," Vol. IV., "The Church in the Netherlands," by the Rev. P. H. Ditchfield, Vol. V., "The Church in Scotland," by Canon Luckock; "Great Characters of Fiction," edited by M. E. Townsend; "Farthings," by Mrs. Molesworth; "The Little Doctor, or the Magic of Nature," by Darley Dale; "The Queen of the Goblins," by Wilhelmina Pickering; "Nigel Bartram's Ideal," by Florence Wilford; "The Sound of the Streets," by Mrs. Robert O'Reilly; "A Troublesome Trio, or Grandfather's Wife," by Mrs. Reginald Bray; "Stories told to a Child," by Jean Ingelow; "Captain Geoff," by Ismay Thorn; "Cousin Isabel," by Marion Andrews; "Little Sisters of Pity," by Ismay Thorn; "A Pair of Old Shoes," by Christabel R. Coleridge; "A Week spent in a Glass Pond," by Mrs. Ewing; "My Birthday Book," edited by Mrs. Trebeck; "The Story-Telling Album for Boys and Girls"; also the following annual volumes: "Sunday," "Chatterbox," "The Prize," "The Young Standard Bearer," "Leading Strings," "Friendly Work," "Friendly Leaves," and "Chatterbox Christmas Box."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

BOURGET, P. La Terre promise: Roman. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
CASTEL, J. Périaik: Légende bretonne. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
CAPITALES, Les, du Monde. Paris: Hachette. 22 fr.
CYON, E. de. Nihilisme et Anarchie. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
FALSAN, A. Les Alpes françaises: les montagnes, les eaux etc. Paris: Baillière. 3 fr. 50 c.
FIODOR, S. Parlamentarwissenschaft. III. Die parlamentar. Technik. Berlin: Puttkammer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
HERVEY DE SAINT-DENYS, Marquis d'. Six Nouvelles nouvelles, traduites du chinois. Paris: Maisonneuve. 5 fr.
LENTHERIC, Ch. Le Rhône: Histoire d'un fleuve. Paris: Plon. 18 fr.
MURKISS, Th. Handzeichnungen zu seiner Uebersetzung der Weltgeschichte d. Sabellicus. Strassburg: Gerschel. 8 M.
ROUTIER, Gaston. Le Mexique. Paris: Le Soudier. 3 fr.

STEGE, R. Goethe u. die Brüder Grimm. Berlin: Besser. 5 M.
STERN, B. Vom Kaukasus zum Hindukusch. Reiseskizzen. 6 M.
Die Romanovs. Intime Episoden aus d. russ. Hofleben. 3 M. 50 Pf. Berlin: Cronbach.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

LAMAIRESSE, E. L'Inde après le Bouddha. Paris: Carré. 4 fr.
VACONIUS, F. Die messianische Idee der Hebräer, geschichtlich entwickelt. 1. Th. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

BLERETREU, K. Geschichte u. Geist der europäischen Kriege unter Friedrich dem Grossen u. Napoleon. Leipzig: Friedrich. 3 M.
BOULART, Baron. Mémoires militaires du général, sur les guerres de la République et de l'Empire. Paris: Lib. illustrée. 7 fr. 50 c.
FESTOARE, Rudolf v. Ihering zu seinem Doctor-Jubiläum überreicht. Strassburg: Trübner. 3 M. 50 Pf. Stuttgart: Enke. 7 M.
GRANDMAISON, Geoffroy de. L'Ambassade française en Espagne pendant la Révolution (1789-1804). Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
HOFFMANN, M. Geschichte der freien- u. Hansestadt Lübeck. 2. Hälfte. Lübeck: Schmiersahl. 4 M.
JOSEPHI, F. opera omnia. Post I. Bekkerum recognovit S. A. Naber. Vol. III. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M. 60 Pf.
LAMPRECHT, K. Deutsche Geschichte. 3. Bd. Berlin: Gartner. 6 M.
SCHULTEN, A. De conventibus civium romanorum. Berlin: Weidmann. 4 M.
TOLLIN, H. Geschichte der französischen Colonie v. Magdeburg. 3. Bd. Abth. 1. A. Magdeburg: Faber. 12 M.
VICUVA-MIRRA. Les Chamanes-Indes pré-Aryennes, etc. Paris: Maisonneuve. 25 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

ACLOQUET, A. Les Lichens: anatomie, physiologie, morphologie. Paris: Baillière. 3 fr. 50 c.
FREYTAG, L. Vereinfachung in der statischen Bestimmung elastischer Balkenträger. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M.
KLEIN, F. Vorlesungen üb. die Theorie der elliptischen Modulfunctionen, ausgearb. v. R. Fricke. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner. 24 M.
PERRIER, Edmond. Traité de Zoologie. Fasc. 2. Protozoaires et phytozoaires. Paris: Savvy. 22 fr.
PUBLICATIONEN der v. Kuffner'schen Sternwarte in Wien (Ottakring). Hrsg. v. N. Herz. 2. Bd. Wien: Fricke. 20 M.
STEIN'S Orchideenbuch. Berlin: Parey. 20 M.
TEMNING, E. Beitrag zur Darstellung u. Kritik der moralischen Bildungslehre Kant's. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
ZSCHORKE, E. Weitere Untersuchungen üb. das Verhältniss der Knochenbildung zur Statik u. Mechanik d. Vertebraten-Skelettes. Zürich: Orell Füssli. 8 M.

PHILOLOGY.

CORPUS inscriptionum graecarum Graeciae septentrionalis. Vol. I. Inscriptiones graecae Megaridis, Oropiae, Boeotiae ed. W. Dittenberger. Berlin: Reimer. 85 M.
GODEFROY, Fred. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne langue française. 70e Livr. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
KAHLE, B. Die Sprache der Skalden auf Grund der Binnenn- u. Endreime, verbunden m. e. Reimarium. Strassburg: Trübner. 7 M.
PRAEUS, S. Index Demosthenicus. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
RICHTER, P. Zur Dramaturgie d. Aeschylus. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M. 50 Pf.
ROSNY, L. de. Chan-Hai-King. T. 1. 30 fr. Le Hiao-King. 20 fr. Paris: Maisonneuve.
STEINEN, K. v. den. Die Bakairé-Sprache. Leipzig: Koehler. 18 M.
STERNBACH, L. Curiae Menandreae. Cracow: Verlags-gesellschaft. 2 M.
WEISSENFELS, O. Cicero als Schulschriftsteller. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DID DANTE KNOW HEBREW?

Stanhoë Grange, Norfolk: Oct. 8, 1892.

HAD Dante access to Hebrew literature, either of his own knowledge or through the medium of his Jewish friend, Immanuel Ben Salomo of Rome? This question has often been discussed (see T. Paur, Jahrbuch der deutschen Gesellschaft, iii. 423-462, iv. 667-672; K. Witte, Dante-Forschungen, ii. 43-47; Plumpton, Commedia and Canzoniere of D. I. lxxv-lxxvii; and F. Delitzsch, "Zwei Kleine Dante-Studien" in the Zeitschrift für Kirckliche Wissenschaft for 1888, i. 41-50). There is, however, one small point of some interest in this connexion which, so far as I am aware, has hitherto been left unnoticed.

In the Targum on the Book of Esther Mordecai the Jew is continually designated by the appellation of "the Just" (see Smith, Dict. of Bible, s.v. "Mordecai"), an expression which is not used of him in the biblical text. It is worthy of note, though it may be a mere coincidence, that in the passage of the "Purgatorio" (xvii. 29) where Dante sees Haman crocifisso (an expression, by the way, justified by the Vulgate, "Domum Aman concessi Esther, et ipsum jussi affigi cruci," Lib. Est. viii. 7 *), with Ahasuerus, Esther, and Mordecai grouped around him, he speaks of the last as "il giusto Mardocheo."

PACOT TOYNBEE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 16, 7.30 p.m. Ethical Society: "Art and Ethics," by Mr. Percival Chubb.
MONDAY, Oct. 17, 5 p.m. Hellenic: "Some Early Homeric Vase-Paintings," by Miss Eugénie Sellers; "Iron in Homer," by Mr. F. B. Jevons.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Lower Extremity," III., by Mr. W. Anderson.
TUESDAY, Oct. 18, 8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Developments in Buddhist Architecture and Symbolism," by Major R. C. Temple.
WEDNESDAY, Oct. 19, 3 p.m. Microscopical: "Methods for Staining Medullated Nerve Fibres," by Dr. C. E. Beevor; "Heterosporium asperatum: A Parasitic Fungus," by Mr. G. Massee; "The Use of Monochromatic Yellow Light for Photo-Micrography," by Dr. H. G. Pfifford.
THURSDAY, Oct. 20, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Trunk," I., by Mr. W. Anderson.
FRIDAY, Oct. 21, 7.30 p.m. Ruskin: "The Spirit of Art," by Mr. Arthur Boutwood.

SCIENCE.

AN ETRUSCAN BOOK FROM EGYPT.

Die etruskischen Mumienbinden des Agramer National-Museums. By J. Krall. (From the "Dankschriften der K. Akademie der Wissenschaften in Wien," vol. xli.)

ARCHAEOLOGICAL discoveries of the most unexpected character follow rapidly one upon the other. Who could have dreamed that the larger part of an ancient Etruscan book would be discovered, much less that it would be discovered among the wrappings of an Egyptian mummy? Yet such is the case. Prof. Krall, the fortunate discoverer, has not only brought to light one of those "linen books" which, we are told, were treasured up in the temple of Moneta at Rome, he has also found what is likely to prove the key to the decipherment of the mysterious Etruscan language.

About the year 1849 an Egyptian mummy of the Ptolemaic epoch was brought to Europe by an Austrian traveller, Michael von Barić. Ten years later, and some time after his death, the mummy found its way into the museum of Agram, where it has since been preserved under a glass case. Either at the time of its presentation to the museum or shortly before, it was unrolled, and it was noticed that some of the linen bandages which had been wound around it were inscribed with characters. Brugsch Pasha examined these in 1867-8, and thought they might be Ethiopian, and in 1877 a few of the lines were copied by Sir R. Burton, who "suspected" that they embodied "a translation of the Todtenbuch from Egyptian into some Arabic (Nabathean?) tongue." It was reserved for Prof. Krall to discover that the letters were those of the well-known Etruscan alphabet, and that the words inscribed in them were words which have been met with in the Etruscan texts.

* Cf. the Prologue to the Wycliffite versions of the Book of Esther: "This book of Hester, the queen, makith mynde of the ríhtful Mardochee, and of the wickidde man Aman."

* So also in the Wycliffite versions: "The hous of Aman I hane grauntid to Ester, the quen, and hym I hane comaundid to be fíchid (var. haugid) on the cros."

The complete editing of the text has been a work of time and difficulty. Here and there the letters were almost or wholly illegible. Moreover, the linen pages of the ancient book had been torn into several fragments, and to fit these together was by no means an easy task. The work, however, has now been accomplished, and we have before us in consecutive order what Prof. Krall calculates to be about two-thirds of the original text.

The conclusion of the book has been preserved, though the commencement is missing. The work was divided into sections or chapters with spaces between them, and the words are separated from one another by means of points. The same words and phrases, moreover, are constantly repeated, a fact which ought to prove of considerable assistance to the decipherer. The majority of the words have already been found in the Etruscan inscriptions, more especially in that of the Cippus Perusinus, the only inscription of any length as yet discovered. Certain numerals, it may be added, a knowledge of which we owe to the famous dice of Toscanella, are of frequent occurrence.

The nature of the text, I think, it is not difficult to determine. In the concluding portion, as well as in several other places, we meet with the words hintha and hinththin. Now, the meaning of the root hinth has long been known. The derivative hinthial signifies a "ghost," as is shown by a picture in a tomb at Vulci, where hinthial Patrukles is written over "the shade of Patrokles." The newly-discovered book, therefore, must, like the Egyptian Book of the Dead, be a sort of ritual for the departed. We may, perhaps, see in it one of the twelve sacred books of Tages, which contained all the religious lore of the Etruscan priests and soothsayers.

Its ritualistic character is further made apparent by what is evidently a sort of magical incantation, which is found at the beginning of the seventh column. The incantation consists of three lines, which are marked off from the rest of the text by two symbols. Each line begins with the word male ("O fair one"?), and ends with the rhyming words aisvale ("divine"?), ale and vale. In the last it is possible that we have the borrowed Latin "vale."

Other borrowed Latin words seem to exist in the text. One of these is vinum. Another, I believe, is tiurim, which occurs several times in the phrase tiurim avils khis. This I should translate "a bull of two (?) years," the phrase ehurse tinsi tiurim avils khis being "offer to Jupiter a bull of two (?) years."

I have followed Canon Isaac Taylor in assigning to ki or khi the meaning of "two." But in the newly-found book (col. x., line 21) we have the sequence ki, thu, zal; and since in the Cippus Perusinus ki, zal and huth, make up the numeral xii., it seems to me pretty clear that the Etruscan names of the first six numerals really were: (1) makh, (2) huth, (3) sa, (4) ki, (5) thu, (6) zal.

Where the newly-discovered text is so particularly valuable is in showing us at last what were the forms of Etruscan grammar. The scanty materials furnished by the inscriptions have never as yet afforded us a real insight into this most important part of the language. Now we see that the forms of Etruscan grammar were both numerous and complicated, and I doubt if anyone will ever again venture to connect them with the forms of Indo-European speech. Prof. Krall's discovery has dealt the death-blow to all the theories which assumed the Etruscan language to be Indo-European.

Towards the end of his memoir, Prof. Krall discusses the question of the authenticity of the newly-discovered book, and proves conclusively its genuineness. Words, for instance, occur in it which were not known until after it had been examined by Brugsch Pasha; indeed, at the time of his visit to the museum of Agram even the Etruscan numerals had not been discovered. A forger would thus have had to anticipate the discoveries which have been made since 1874 by a number of different scholars.

The mummy around which the pages of the book were folded was that of a woman. But it seems probable that they were not intended to be a safeguard for her in her passage through the world below; had they been so, they would not have been torn into strips. It is more likely that, like the Petrie Papyri, they came from the waste-paper basket of some Etruscan who had settled in northern Egypt, and that they were purchased by an Egyptian undertaker for the purposes of his trade.

Before concluding, I must not forget to say that the index to the Etruscan words contained in the text has been prepared by the competent hands of Dr. Deecke.

A. H. SAYCE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

SIR JAMES CRICHTON-BROWNE, treasurer of the Royal Institution, has received from Mr. Thomas Hodgkins, of Setanket, Long Island, New York, the munificent donation of £20,000 to the funds of the institution, to be applied in the promotion of scientific research. Mr. Hodgkins recently presented £40,000 to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington.

COLONEL BAILEY, R.E., lecturer in forestry at the University of Edinburgh, has been appointed to fill the office of secretary and editor to the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Arthur Silva White.

MESSRS. H. ALABASTER, GATEHOUSE & CO. have in the press a work by Mr. E. C. de Segundo, entitled Domestic Electric Lighting, treated from the Consumer's Standpoint.

IN view of the opposition of Jupiter on October 12, Miss Ellen M. Clerke—who has already done so much in her larger works to make intelligible the phenomena of the stellar and the solar systems—has written a well-printed shilling pamphlet, entitled Jupiter and His System (Edward Stanford). In lucid language, the successor of Mary Somerville tells us about Jupiter as we see him, about his physical condition, his great red spot, and his moons; while on the cover, we are shown the markings of the surface of the planet, together with the relative size and distance of his satellites, of which the number is now raised to five. We may add that Jupiter will remain easy of observation for twelve nights longer.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

IN memory of the Rev. John Alfred Robinson, who died at his work in the employment of the Church Missionary Society in the Niger Territories, an Association has been founded to provide a scientific study of the Hausa language, the lingua franca of the Central Sudan, with a view of translating the Scriptures into that tongue, and also of promoting the higher interests of the people. The first step of the Hausa Association will be to appoint two Robinson students, conversant with Arabic or Hebrew, whose preliminary labours will be carried on in the comparatively temperate climate of Tripoli, and who will afterwards proceed to the Central Sudan. Their primary work will be to study the language and customs of the Hausas, and to gather materials for translations of the Bible. All scientific observations collected during their residence in Africa will be sent by the Association for distribution to the appropriate societies.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Oct. 5)

ARTHUR DILLON, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. William Poel read a paper on "John Webster." Of John Webster, the dramatist, who flourished in the reign of James I., little is known. According to Gildon he was clerk of the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and member of the Merchant Tailors' Company. In part of an old satire, quoted by Dodsley, he is accused of being a very ill-natured and capricious critic; but the verses are miserable, and if Webster was severe on such scribblers we cannot blame him for injustice. He certainly had a high opinion of himself; and in his address to the reader prefixed to his "White Devil; or, Vittoria Corombona," he uses very lofty language in talking of his own merits. He compares himself by implication with Euripides—to whom he is an antipode—and tells the reader that he writes very slowly, which from the extreme inaccuracy and poverty of a vast number of his lines might not have been suspected. But perhaps Shakspeare alone, of all the great men of his illustrious age, was unconscious of his greatness: at least, he bore his faculties meekly, and few of his contemporaries even suspected his genius. Indeed, from the manner in which Webster classes the dramatic writers of his age it seems never to have occurred to him that Shakspeare's poetic gifts were quite exceptional. In the address before alluded to, Webster writes:—"I have ever truly cherished my good opinion of other men's worthy labours—especially of that full and heightened style of Master Chapman; the laboured and understanding works of Master Jonson; the no less worthy composes of the both worthily excellent Master Beaumont and Master Fletcher; and lastly (without wrong last to be named) the right happy and copious industry of Master Shakspeare, Master Dekker, and Master Heywood." The plots of Webster's dramas are irregular and confused, his characters are often distorted, and there is, in general, an appearance of imperfection and incompleteness about the whole composition, so that the attention is wearied out, the interest flags, and we rather hurry on than are hurried to the horrors of the final catastrophe. But Webster was a man of truly original genius, and some single scenes in his plays are inferior in power of passion to nothing in the whole range of the drama. He seems to have felt strong pleasure in the strange and fantastic horrors that rose up from the dark abyss of his imagination. The vices and the crimes which he delights to paint partake of extravagance, and in the retribution and the punishment there is a character of corresponding wildness. Our sympathies, suddenly awakened, are often allowed as suddenly to subside. There is no unity of design in the events of his dramas, nor is there, perhaps, a single character that stands out, clearly and boldly, before the reader like a picture. Still, if in the integrity and consistency of character he generally fails, he shows consummate art in the poetry of scenic action. "The White Devil," which was probably the first play

Webster wrote alone, for he had previously collaborated with Dekker, does not seem to have received its just measure of applause, although there are scenes in it well calculated to engage the attention of those whom Webster, when speaking of its failure, calls an "understanding auditory." It is, however, more rambling and less compact and entire in its plot than "The Duchess of Malfi" and "Appius and Virginia"; its characters are more coarse, and its incidents less strange; the author rather winds round the main situations than approaches them in a straightforward course. But, in "The Duchess of Malfi," he is full of important business, deep and tragical; he needs no subsidiary plots to swell his drama to the proper dimensions, the weight of the matter carries him straight to the pith of the action. Indeed, the rapidity with which the author, in this play, makes time ply his wing, is such that we learn almost in the same speech of the marriage of the Duchess and the birth of three children. It is not, however, until we reach the fourth act that Webster's handling of dramatic situation is shown to be of the highest order. The measure then is heaped up to the brim without being overfull; and, however improbable the incidents may be, they do not fail to make the nerves tingle and the blood run cold: the gloom of death hangs like a pall over the scene, and the imagination is held spellbound by it. Nor could anything be more strikingly dramatic than the concluding dialogue. "No single line," says Prof. Dowden, "in any English play is more thrilling in its dramatic power than that put by Webster in this scene into the mouth of Ferdinand, when Bosola displays the body of the Duchess—

'Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle; she died young.'

Beautiful, too, for its naturalness is the intense anxiety of Bosola, when the Duchess for a moment opens her eyes before she expires—

"Her eye opes,
And heaven in it seems to ope, that late was shut,
To take me up to mercy."

Again, in the last act, we are introduced by some fine lines to a passage of a very singular kind, and one that is as skilfully treated as it is singular in conception. This is the dialogue between Antonio and the Echo. The anxiety and uncertainty of Antonio as to the fate of the Duchess, and the strange and awful responses of this airy nothing, notwithstanding the artificial nature of the dialogue, produce sensations thrilling and startling. Webster's imagination had a fond familiarity with objects of awe and fear. The silence of the sepulchre, the sculptures of marble monuments, the knelling of church bells, the ceremonies of the corpse, the yew that roots itself in dead men's graves, are the illustrations that most readily present themselves to his mind. If our early dramatic poets were not behind Webster in these singular predilections, they had less imagination in the conception of them, and less skill in utilising them. Mr. Poel proceeded to give the stage history of Webster's plays, and concluded his paper with an account of his arrangement of "The Duchess of Malfi," which will be produced by the Independent Theatre Society on Friday, October 21.—A discussion followed, which was opened by Mr. Arthur Dillon, and continued by Mr. James Ernest Baker, Mr. W. Alison, Mr. H. Hooton, and other members of the society.

FINE ART.

Examples of Early English Pottery, Named, Dated, and Inscribed. By John Eliot Hodgkin and Edith Hodgkin. (Printed by subscription.)

WHAT with the labours of M. Solon, Prof. Church, and the late Mr. Jewitt, not to mention any more, there has grown up quite a literature around the old English potter; and now we are presented with a volume which, approaching the subject rather from the antiquarian than the artistic or technical side, is a welcome addition to the authorities on the subject. Mr. J. E. and Miss E. Hodgkin have compiled a catalogue, comprehensive if not actually exhaustive, of dated and inscribed pieces of certain classes of English pottery, from the sixteenth to the close of the eighteenth century, and have given facsimiles of the inscriptions as well as pictures of the more notable specimens. The volume is well produced, so far as paper and print are concerned, and the binding is quaint and characteristic, imitating the decoration of early slip ware.

The authors have started with the advantage of Mr. Hodgkin's own collection, which is rich and extensive, containing a very unusual number of dated pieces, including a tyg of 1645, a posset pot of 1678, another of 1712, a mug of 1730, a dish of 1709 (made by one William Wright), and several other early pieces, dated and undated, of the brown glaze ware, decorated and undecorated with slip. In other and later kinds, especially of English delft, the Hodgkin Collection is especially rich. Mr. J. E. Hodgkin seems, indeed, to have made a particular study of this ware, which is most embarrassing to the ordinary amateur. It is, of necessity, beyond his power to describe accurately the subtle distinctions in colour, and "softness," and glaze, which to a very practised eye determine whether a piece is Dutch, or Lambeth, or French, or Bristol; but the hints which he gives are valuable, and to many will be new. Of course, the authors have not failed to search the British Museum, which (thanks greatly to Mr. Franks) has now a choice collection of Early English pottery, or the Schreiber Collection at South Kensington, or the Museum of Practical Geology, or, indeed, any important collection, public or private; and they have, moreover, by correspondence and advertisement revealed the existence of many an isolated piece lying hidden in cupboards in town and country. For the illustrations, for the sake of both accuracy and convenience, a photo-relief process has been selected, the results of which are fairly satisfactory. Brown ink has been employed for the brown-glazed ware, a pale blue for the delft, and so on; and the tints have been so well chosen that they help considerably in suggesting the general character and appearance of the different wares. The brown selected for stoneware is particularly successful.

The earliest dated piece described in the book is one of those favourite jokes, "The Puzzle Jug," which seem to have been a source of never-ending mirth to our ancestors for several centuries. It belongs to the Museum of Practical Geology, and has a green glaze with the figures 1571 in relief. A fine jug with four double handles made at Wrotham in 1612 heads the list of slip decorated wares; and the Delft section begins with a barrel-shaped mug (now in the Museum of Practical Geology) which was made at Lambeth in 1631 or 1632, for both dates are found upon it. Concerning the Bristol pieces there is more doubt. It is "with considerable diffidence" that the authors ascribe five specimens to Bristol with dates anterior to 1706, and the cause of the diffidence is a supposed "dictum" of Prof. Church, that the earliest date on this ware, is 1706. But I cannot find that the professor has uttered any such dictum. In his excellent Handbook on English Earthenware the earliest date mentioned is certainly 1706; and he states that pieces of an ornamental character were turned out as early as 1706, but he never says that they were not turned out earlier. It is somewhat discouraging to find the Hodgkins not quite confident in this matter; still more so when we are obliged to infer from a note a little further on they are not even confident that the piece of 1706 mentioned by Prof. Church is really Bristol, and that among the doubtful pieces are some which belong to Mr. J. E. Hodgkin himself. After all, we fear that we are yet a long way from an absolute test of the different kinds of Delft.

Valuable for purposes of study as this collection of dated pieces may be, it is as well perhaps that the interest of the book is not confined to dates. As we turn over the pages it is impossible not to feel that the old English potter, rough and uncultivated as he may have been, had a true artistic pleasure in his work and a genuine decorative sense which is hard to find to-day. In this respect, the early brown glaze jugs and posset pots decorated with slip, with their many handles and bold decoration, are the most interesting and most truly beautiful. The drawing is uncouth, but it is always rightly decorative; the spelling of the inscriptions is illiterate, but the letters are formed and placed on the vessel in a manner which gives pleasure to the eyes; while the feeling for form is often strikingly original and charming. Take, for instance, the Wrotham Jug (No. 31) in the British Museum, with its handles curved exactly to suit the shape of the vessel, and the wonderful decorative effect got out of a few rosettes and twirls and the date 1653, or could anything be more quaint and elegant in a rough and simple way than No. 39—"Ann: Brit: her cup. 1682"—with its six handles and dotted inscription, now in the Norwich Museum. Nor does the interest of the book end either with its art or archaeology; those who care for neither may spend a pleasant hour in reading the curious, ill-spelt inscriptions with which the early English potter loved to decorate his pots withal. How hearty is the favourite line, "The best is not too good for you"; or "The gift is small, Goodwill is all. 1650." Sometimes their invention is better than knowledge. What an improvement, for instance, is Mary Oumfaris on Mary Humphreys; and is there not a touch of extra loyalty in the injunction to "obey the King"? Cosmo Monkhouse.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ORIGIN OF METALLIC CURRENCY."

Fen Ditton, Cambridge: Oct. 10, 1892.

Canon Taylor says:

"At first the Phoenicians were doubtless the intermediaries between Greece and Asia; but at an early date, certainly before the invention of coinage, they had withdrawn from the Aegean, and henceforward Asiatic influences penetrated mainly by the land trade route through Asia Minor from Cilicia or Carhemish."

This is to explain how the eight Babylonian shekel got into Greece proper. But as we find the Phœnician heavy gold shekel and the Phœnician silver shekel used by the Greeks of Asia Minor long after the Phœnician influence had withdrawn from the Aegean, in regions which were in close contact with the interior of Asia Minor, and through whom alone the influences of Asia Minor, such as the light Babylonian shekel, could have passed to Greece proper, it is impossible to see how the Greeks of Europe could have obtained the light shekel. Again, why would the Eubœans adopt as a standard the light shekel, when the Ionian cities, with which their commerce lay, used the Phœnician?

Canon Taylor now says that in reviewing my book he employed his space "in commending such novelties as seemed likely to have a permanent influence on metrological science." In his review (September 10) he had said, "We come to Prof. Ridgeway's theory of the origin of the Greek silver standards. This is the portion of the book which will probably meet with the greatest amount of hostile criticism." Accordingly he devoted the greater part of his review to this point. In my simplicity, I have always believed that "hostile criticism" was directed against the worst part of a book. Like Nebuchadnezzar, Canon Taylor has been having a nap, for he evidently had forgotten what he said in his review when writing his last letter.

WILLIAM RIDGEWAY.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: Oct. 10, 1892.

The answers to Mr. Torr's last paragraph have appeared in previous letters of mine.

The dating of vases which I laid down in Illahun, and have since reaffirmed in a recent letter, has been challenged by the quotation of one other vase.

We now learn that the needful history of this vase cannot—or must not—be stated. Its evidence must therefore slumber, along with those questions of Museum ethics and official infallibility with which it is at present unhappily obscured. Those who know the local conditions at Thebes will best appreciate such a mystery. Surely the subject may now rest.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

OBITUARY.

THOMAS WOOLNER, R.A.

IN any other week than this, the death of Woolner would have attracted more notice than it has received. But the national mourning for the Laureate has diverted attention from the sculptor, whose name will be preserved partly by its association with his.

Thomas Woolner died very suddenly, on October 7, at his house in Welbeck-street. He was born in 1826, at Hadleigh, in Suffolk; and at the early age of thirteen was placed in the studio of William Behnes. His first work was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1843. Though never a member of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, he came under the influence of that movement, and contributed lyrics to the Germ (1850), afterwards republished in the volume entitled My Beautiful Lady (1863), which has passed through several editions. These lyrics represent his high-water mark in poetry, though he also wrote three long poems in very graceful blank verse, all dealing with classical subjects—Pygmalion (1881), Silenus (1884), and Tiresias (1886).

After a sojourn of two years in Australia, Woolner rapidly rose to the front rank of English sculptors, being elected R.A. in 1874. His work is characterised by refinement and grace rather than by monumental vigour. His busts are more happy than his full-length statues, though he was also successful in his recumbent effigies. He has left portraits of many of his great contemporaries, who were also his personal friends. His bust of Tennyson, taken in middle life, stands in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge. His diploma work for the Royal Academy was "Lady Godiva"; and he also executed ideal figures of "Elaine" and "Guinevere," the latter of which has been chosen as frontispiece for the Idylls of the King in Macmillan's library edition. Good specimens of his work are to be seen in the vignettes to some of the volumes of the "Golden Treasury" series.

Woolner had a country house near Horsham, in Sussex. But he somewhat pointedly declined to take part in the recent celebration of Shelley's centenary.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

A NEW volume of the Magazine of Art begins with the November part, which will have for frontispiece a photograph after Mr. Marcus Stone's picture of "The Return." Mr. A. C. Swinburne contributes the first of a series of "Carols of the Month," each of which is the subject of a full-page illustration. And among the other contents will be—"Art in its relation to Industry," by Mr. Alma Tadema; "Originality in Pen-Drawing and Design," by Mr. Harry Furniss; "The Advantages and Disadvantages of Art Study in Paris," by M. F. Cormon; and "Titian's Summer Pilgrimage," by Leader Scott, with illustrations by Mr. J. MacWhirter.

THE first meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies for the current session will be held on Monday next, October 17, at 5 p.m., at 22, Albemarle-street, when the following papers will be read:—"Some Early Homeric Vase-Paintings," by Miss Eugénie Sellers; and "Iron in Homer," by Mr. F. B. Jevons.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Anthropological Institute will be held at 3, Hanover-square, on Tuesday next, October 18, at 8.30 p.m., when Major R. C. Temple will deliver a lecture on "Developments in Buddhist Architecture and Sculpture, as illustrated by the Author's Recent Exploration of Caves in Burma," illustrated by lantern slides. We may add that women are eligible as fellows of the Institute; the president for the year is Dr. E. B. Tylor. The regular meetings do not begin until November.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Maspero exhibited a photograph of a Chaldean bas-relief from Constantinople. It bears the name of King Naramsin, who reigned at Babylon over Northern Chaldaea about 3800 B.C. Though much mutilated, what remains shows workmanship of a refined kind. It represents a human figure standing, clothed (as on the most ancient cylinders) with a robe that passed under one arm and over the shoulder, and wearing a conical head-piece flanked with horns. The general appearance strikingly recalls Egyptian monuments of the same date. Naramsin, like his father, Sargon I., has left the reputation (perhaps legendary) of a great conqueror; a campaign against Magan is attributed to him. M. Maspero was disposed to explain the style of the bas-relief by Egyptian influence. It differs widely from the sculptures of Tello, which are coarse and clumsy. But these, though of later date, come from a provincial town, not from a capital. M. Menant mentioned that the collection of M. de Clercq contains a cylinder, also of remarkable workmanship, with an inscription in characters of the same style as those on the bas-relief in question; but it bears the name of Sargani, king of Ayadi, who is several generations earlier than Sargon I. Both of these are examples of an art which was never surpassed in Chaldaea.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

WE may state that, to meet a general request, the Independent Theatre Society have decided to admit—on slightly more than the usual theatre prices—those members of the general public who may be interested in the forthcoming production of Mr. Poel's arrangement of "The Duchess of Malfi"; and we may add that one of the features of the new production will be the performance of the mediæval "Dance of Death," which is being arranged by that rising poet, Mr. Arthur Dillon. The piece will be played on two occasions.

MUSIC.

THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

ON Thursday morning Mozart's Requiem Mass was performed. The greater a work, the more does it stand in need of a fine interpretation; and it may safely be said that Mozart's masterpiece of sacred music had full justice rendered to it by the Leeds choir. It is scarcely possible to imagine a finer volume or greater nobility of tone or a more satisfactory ensemble. Sir Arthur Sullivan, in the "Requiem æternam," wisely adopted Mozart's colouring, so that the opening trombone phrase in the "Tuba mirum" produced the startling and solemn effect intended by the composer; by the free use of trombones in the previous number that effect has often been spoilt. Both Gluck and Mozart knew how to bring out a special colour at a special moment, but their intentions have often been disregarded. The exact part played by Süssmayer in the completion of the "Requiem" cannot be determined; but there are certain moments in which one feels that the master mind which created the first number, and the deeply pathetic opening phrase of the "Lacrymosa," is either veiled or withdrawn. The soloists were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd and Andrew Black, who all strove, though with varying success, to do their best.

At the head of the second part of the programme came Mr. Frederick Cliffe's new Symphony in E minor. The composer has headed each movement with a superscription; and not only from these, but also from the general character of the music, it is evident that the work is of the "programme" kind, but as with Beethoven's "Pastoral," it is capable of being judged to a great extent as abstract music. The opening movement, "At Sunset" (Allegro moderato) in E minor has a principal subject of much character, and a second one of much charm, while in the working out of both the composer displays considerable skill and imagination; but the music seems imbued with a spirit of restlessness rather than of the repose suggested by the title, of which so admirable a specimen is given in the coda. The following movement, "Night," is an expressive tone picture: the opening mystic phrase, the soothing theme given out by the strings con sordini, the episode of the lady and the lover—everything is effectively presented. The composer has attempted certain realistic touches, but has kept well within the limits of his art. The influence of Wagner is strongly felt throughout the first two movements, while in the third movement we seem to have, as it were, an echo of Mendelssohn's "fairy" strains. Mr. Cliffe has, however, something to say for himself, and what he borrows from the masters he will one day be able to pay back with interest. The "Fairy Revels" are graceful, but not striking. The Finale, "Morning," is remarkable for conciseness, brilliancy, and vigour. The work was conducted by the composer, who was received with enthusiasm. Mr. E. Lloyd sang "Come, Margarita, come," from the "Martyr of Antioch," and the programme concluded with Mendelssohn's fine psalm, "When Israel out of Egypt came." In this the choir sang magnificently.

At the evening concert a selection from "Die Meistersinger" was given, with Mme. Albani, Miss McKenzie, Messrs. Lloyd, Picrey, and Plunket Greene as soloists. Wagner is now the fashion: at one time it was the correct thing to abuse his music—now it is just the contrary. The public at Leeds apparently enjoyed what was put before them; but that was the Overture, part of the first scene, meaningless in the concert-room, and the third act miserably curtailed. It is not right to present a masterpiece in this distorted fashion. The Overture, with its rich and sonorous orchestration, of course takes with the public, and as a piece of abstract music is complete in itself; but much of what came afterwards was sound without sense. The programme included Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's fine Orchestral Ballad, "La belle Dame sans Merci," given under the composer's direction. Mme. Albani won a brilliant success with "Dall' aurora," from "L'Etoile du Nord."

Friday morning was devoted to Bach's Mass in B minor. The singing of the noble choruses was really grand; in one or two places there was a note or two not in perfect tune, but this, after all, only served to remind one that the singers were human. And they were engaged on a task worthy of their powers: the choral portions of the Mass, especially the solemn Crucifixus and the majestic Sanctus, rank among the master's highest achievements. To write anything in praise of the work seems superfluous, but the Leeds performance appeared to invest it with fresh power and interest. The effect of the bold progression of the bass against the sustained notes of the other voices in the Sanctus was perhaps never surpassed by Bach. The trumpets, made on the old German model, with their penetrating high notes, were, of course, prominent features of the orchestral accompaniment. There are times when attempts to reproduce old scores of the eighteenth century are praiseworthy, but it must be remembered that the past can only be imperfectly restored; and at Leeds, where the choir is so rich and powerful, reformation rather than restoration in the orchestra would be more satisfactory. To revive one or two instruments of Bach's time, and to mix them up with modern instruments combined in modern fashion, is no genuine restoration; the latter is indeed practically impossible.

The Mass was preceded by Sir A. Sullivan's "In Memoriam" Overture, as a mark of homage to the poet whose remains now rest in Westminster Abbey. It was admirably played under the composer's direction.

On Friday evening Mr. Alan Gray's short setting of Shelley's "Arethusa" for chorus and orchestra was given. The music, if not particularly strong, is full of excellent feeling, and contains some refined and indeed, one may say, picturesque writing. It is a work of good promise. The performance, under the composer's direction, was all that could be desired. The programme included Schubert's Unfinished Symphony beautifully rendered, Brahms's "Schicksalslied" admirably sung, and Mr. E. German's "Richard III." Overture. Miss Macintyre and Mr. Plunket Greene, the vocalists, greatly distinguished themselves—the one in Santuzza's song, the other in some Hungarian melodies.

On Saturday morning Dvorák's "Spectre's Bride" (in which Miss Macintyre was heard at her best), and Dr. C. H. Parry's noble setting of the psalm "De Profundis," and in the evening a Handel selection and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," proved fresh triumphs for the choir.
J. S. SHEDLOCK.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

SIR AUGUSTUS HARRIS commenced his autumn season at Covent Garden on Monday evening. After the storm and stress of the summer campaign, it was refreshing to listen to the calm, classic strains of "Orfeo." The continued popularity of that opera is a pleasing sign of the times. With regard to the performance there is not much to say. Mlle. Giulia Ravogli's dignity and pathos in the title-rôle are still as marked as ever. In the first act she was not quite herself, but later on displayed her best powers. As the opera is likely often to be heard, it does seem a pity that the Bertoni Aria is not withdrawn, and Gluck's ending of the first act restored. Again, why does not the première danseuse move about with more measured step, and why do the chorus singers in the second act quit the stage with such an untidy and unmusical movement? And once more, why does not Mlle. Ravogli refuse the "Che farò" encore; the more she gives way to the public, the more difficult will it be for the latter to reform. The encore seems to spoil the striking effect which she produces by her rendering of the song.

After Gluck came the "Cavalleria Rusticana." The Santuzza was interpreted by a new comer, Mlle. Del Torre. She may have been nervous, but her voice had not a sympathetic sound, neither was her acting forcible. Signor Cremonini took the part of Turiddu: he has a voice of good quality, one with the true tenor timbre. At first he was cold in his manner, but gradually warmed up, and before the close made a highly favourable impression. Signor Pignatola was good as Alfio, but somewhat tame; Mlle. Guercia was the Lela. Both operas were carefully conducted by Signor Bevnigam. On Tuesday evening "Il Trovatore" was revived, but did not draw a full house: the performance on the whole was good. Mlle. Rosita Sala, the new Leonora, is young, and has a sympathetic and well produced voice; as an actress she lacks experience. Signor Gianini as Manrico sang well. The chorus was good.

"Lohengrin" was given on Wednesday evening. There were shortcomings, but, on the whole, the performance had good points. Mme. Melba as Elsa acted well, and sang admirably; her rendering of the part lacked, however, a certain sympathetic fervour. Signor Cremonini as Knight of the Holy Grail, acted with considerable dignity, and in some of the quieter portions his pleasing voice told to advantage; but he was not an ideal Lohengrin. Mlle. Guercia has evidently made a thorough study of the part of Ortruda; but much study has led to exaggeration, and in consequence some of her best intentions result in melodramatic effects. The part of Telramondo was played in a conscientious manner by Signor Dufriche. The chorus sang well. Signor Bevnigam conducted with care; but the reading of the orchestral music was at times tame, and at other times too restless.

TWO NEW AND IMPORTANT WORKS.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON: A STUDY OF HIS LIFE AND WORK.

By ARTHUR WAUGH, B.A. Oxon.

WITH TWO PORTRAITS, AND TWENTY-ONE ILLUSTRATIONS

From Photographs specially taken for this Work.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 10s. 6d.

[Ready October 17.]

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE SECRET SERVICE:

THE RECOLLECTIONS OF A SPY.

By Major HENRI LE CARON.

WITH PORTRAITS AND FACSIMILES OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 14s.

[Ready October 19.]

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NATIONAL APPROACHING DIVISION OF PROFITS.
FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. PROVIDENT PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000. £4,000,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000. INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Next Division of Profits will be made as at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

The First Large Edition of Mrs. OLIPHANT'S New Novel, "THE CUCKOO in the NEST," has been exhausted. A Second Edition this day at all the Libraries.

Mr. DOUGLAS SLADEN'S "THE JAPS at HOME," has been over subscribed before publication. A Second Edition at press, in demy 8vo, with over 50 Full-Page and other Illustrations, price 15s.

This day at all the Libraries.

THE HON. MRS. HENRY CHETWYND'S NEW NOVEL.
A BRILLIANT WOMAN. In 3 vols.

DARLEY DALE'S NEW NOVEL.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. In 3 vols.

The Glasgow Herald says: "Masterly delineation of character marks the novel throughout as the work of a keen observer as well as a faithful artist." (First review.)

THE DICTIONARY of AUSTRALASIAN BIOGRAPHY. Comprising Notices of Eminent Colonists from the Inauguration of responsible Government down to the Present Time (1855-92). Edited by PHILIP MENNELL, F.R.G.S., assisted by Eminent Colonists. In large crown 8vo, half-leather and cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net. [This day.]

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF

The POETS and the POETRY of the CENTURY,
Edited by ALFRED H. MILES.

In parchment, 7s. 6d. each; in buckram, gilt, 6s. each; Popular Edition, in cloth gilt, 4s. each.

4. FREDERICK TENNYSON to ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
5. CHARLES KINGSLEY to JAMES THOMSON.

With Critical Articles by AUSTIN DOBSON, J. ASHCROFT NOBLE, Dr. GARNETT, RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, Dr. JAPP, HALL CAINE, THOMAS ARCHER, JOSEPH KNIGHT, MACKENZIE BELL, the Hon. RODEN NOEL, &c., &c. [This day.]

BY MRS. J. KENT SPENDER.

NO HUMDRUM LIFE FOR ME. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with Illustrations, 5s. [Next week.]

BY CANON POTTER, M.A.

THE GERM GROWERS: the Strange Adventures of Robert Easterley and John Wilbraham. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. [This day.]

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE GENTLE LIFE."

THIS WICKED WORLD, and Other Essays. In cloth, gilt top, 5s. [This day.]

HUTCHINSON & CO., 25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

With 124 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

LONDON.

By WALTER BESANT, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c.
"London" is as good as a novel—better than many. It is a romance in which the writer has found inspiration."—Yorkshire Post.
"What the late John Richard Green has done for England, Mr. Besant has here attempted, with conspicuous success, for Cockaigne—a series of vivid and indelible pictures of the people of the past. No one who loves his London but will love it the better for reading this book. He who knows it not has before him a clear duty and a manifest pleasure."—Graphic.
"A charming volume.... In a series of pictures Mr. Besant unrolls before our eyes the panorama of a living London in the ages that are past. He has clothed the dry bones of his story with living and fascinating interest."—Morning Leader.

NEW NOVELS AT EVERY LIBRARY.

THE IVORY GATE. By Walter Besant, Author of "Dorothy Forster," &c. 3 vols.

TRUST-MONEY. By William Westall, Author of "Red Ryvington," &c. 3 vols.

THE MARQUIS of CARABAS. By Aaron Watson and LILLIAS WASSERMANN. 3 vols.
"Certainly one of the brightest and best novels of the season."—Glasgow Herald.

BOB MARTIN'S LITTLE GIRL. By David Christie MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat," &c. 3 vols.
"A novel that contains some of the best work Mr. Christie Murray has yet done."—Scottish Leader.

TREASON-FELONY. By John Hill. 2 vols.
"Clever, ingenious, and off ordinary lines."—World.

HANDY NOVELS.

A New Series of Stories, uniform in style, fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d. each.

THE OLD MAID'S SWEET-HEART. By ALAN ST. AUBYN.
A LOST SOUL: being the Confession and Defence of Charles Lindsay. By W. L. ALDEN.
* * * Others are in preparation.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

SANTA BARBARA. By Ouida.
ALONE on a WIDE WIDE SEA. By W. Clark Russell.
THE DUCHESS of POWYSLAND. By Grant Allen.
CORINTHIA MARAZION. By Cecil Griffith.

NEW TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.

MARVEL. By the Author of "Molly Bawn."
IN DURANCE VILE. By the Author of "Molly Bawn."
A MENTAL STRUGGLE. By the Author of "Molly Bawn."
A MODERN CIRCE. By the Author of "Molly Bawn."
A PRINCE of the BLOOD. By James Payn.
A PRODIGAL'S PROGRESS. By Frank Barrett.
IDLE TALES. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
THE NUN'S CURSE. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell.
WANTED! By Dick Donovan.

A SOLDIER'S CHILDREN. By John Strange Winter, Author of "Cavalry Life," &c. With 34 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"Exceedingly touching.... a very charming story."—Academy.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMANT. By Mark Twain. With 81 Illustrations by Hal Hurst and Dan Beard. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"Full of fresh fun.... As laughable a series of changes, surprises, and contrasts as ever got into a book.... heightened by a set of clever illustrations."—Scotsman.

MAID MARIAN and ROBIN HOOD. By J. E. Muddock. With 12 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.
"A capital tale, full of vigorous writing."—Scottish Leader.

A ROMANCE of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By W. H. MALLOCK. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.
"Has real importance as a study of some of the most unpleasant features of our own time."—Graphic.

THE DOWNFALL. By Emile Zola. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"The most wonderfully faithful reproduction of a historical drama ever committed to writing."—Spectator.

MY FLIRTATIONS. By Margaret Wynman. With 13 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
"A clever little volume.... A great deal of truth, and a corresponding amount of fun."—Daily Telegraph.

THE BRIGHTON ROAD: Old Times and New on a Classic Highway. By CHARLES G. HARPER, Author of "English Pen Artists of To-day." With a Photogravure Frontispiece and 90 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s. [Shortly.]

THE THOUSAND and ONE DAYS: Persian Tales. Edited by JUSTIN H. MCCARTHY. With Photogravure Frontispiece to each volume by Stanley L. Wood. 2 vols., crown 8vo, half-parchment, 12s.

WHERE ART BEGINS. By Hume Nisbet, Author of "Lessons in Art." With 27 Illustrations. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

LORD TENNYSON: 1809-92. A Complete Biography. By HENRY J. JENNINGS. Crown 8vo, portrait-cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
"The best biography of the Laureate extant."—Derby Mercury.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

AN ENGLISHMAN in PARIS: Notes and Recollections during the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s. (Sixth thousand.)

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Two volumes of 'Notes and Recollections' of extraordinary interest. These remarkable reminiscences constitute an unique repository of authentic anecdotes, entertaining aperçus of character, and curious disclosures."

The Daily News says:—"Here is a delightful book about the Paris of the immediate past, one of the liveliest it has ever been our good fortune to read."

The World says:—"The book is crammed full of good stories, and will be found both instructive and entertaining."

Truth says:—"It is long since so interesting, and in many ways even so valuable, a book has been published as is the 'Englishman in Paris,' which for the moment is attracting general attention."

SAMUEL LAING.

HUMAN ORIGINS: Evidence from History and Science. By SAMUEL LAING, Author of "Modern Science and Modern Thought." With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. Seventh thousand in the press.

Black and White says:—"Mr. Laing has been inspired to put his great knowledge to a laudable use, and compose for us clearly, in one volume, the teaching of modern science upon the origin and antiquity of man. . . . The book is wonderfully interesting."

The Daily Chronicle says:—"In the present work Mr. Laing attacks some of the vexed questions of modern science of the highest importance, and on the whole with a fulness of knowledge and an ability which leaves little to be desired. . . . The reader will find many questions canvassed in Mr. Laing's pages with a clearness, a literary power, and an amount of scientific knowledge which is seldom insufficient and never wearisome."

AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE.

SHOOTING and SALMON FISHING: Hints and Recollections. By AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE, Author of "Deer-Stalking." With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 16s. Second edition in the press.

The Field says:—"We have derived considerable enjoyment from reading Mr. Grimble's book; it is fresh and pleasant, and not so dictatorial and full of 'book-learning' as many other volumes; indeed, it is practical throughout. The illustrations are very bright and good."

The Morning Post says:—"Full of exciting stories of shooting and fishing. . . . It is a commonplace, but one that is inevitable in this instance, to say that the book should be in every sportsman's library."

CHARLES DIXON.

THE MIGRATION of BIRDS: An Attempt to Reduce Avian Season-Flight to Law. By CHARLES DIXON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Times says:—"Mr. Charles Dixon, than whom, perhaps, no more scientific ornithologist exists, formulates a theory to account for a phenomenon which has hitherto refused to yield up its secret. He first dismisses rather contemptuously the view of those naturalists who ascribe migration to instinct. For 'instinct' he would substitute 'habit.' The superiority of Mr. Dixon's theory really resides in this—that he offers a rational explanation of the origin of this 'instinct' or 'hereditary impulse.' . . . The plausible theory which Mr. Dixon propounds is illustrated with abundance of ornithological learning, and a multitude of examples which, he tells us, might have been indefinitely increased. Apart from his speculations, Mr. Dixon's book is a most interesting monograph upon the facts and phenomena of bird migration, and we can hardly doubt that, whether his theories win acceptance or not, the volume in which he sets them forth will become part of the necessary equipment for future explorers in this department of ornithology."

SURGEON-GENERAL C. T. PASKE AND F. G. AFLALO.

THE SEA and the ROD. By Surgeon-General

C. T. PASKE AND F. G. AFLALO. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 4s. 6d. An exhaustive account of the Habitat and Peculiarities of the Chief Species of British Sea Fish that are to be taken with rod and line.

The Field says:—"This is a practical and, at the same time, readable work upon the art of sea angling with the rod."

The Fishing Gazette says:—" . . . This pleasantly-written and instructive book. . . . Throughout the work are numerous references to the fish and fisheries of foreign lands; and altogether it is a long time since we have come across a book on sea fishing at once so readable and so full of information."

W. H. HUDSON, C.M.Z.S.

THE NATURALIST in LA PLATA. By W.

H. HUDSON, C.M.Z.S., Joint-Author of "Argentine Ornithology." With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 16s. Second Edition.

Mr. Alfred R. Wallace says:—"This volume is, so far as the present writer knows, altogether unique among books on natural history. What renders this work of such extreme value and interest is, that it is not written by a traveller or a mere temporary resident, but by one born in the country, to whom its various tribes of beasts, birds, and insects have been familiar from childhood; who is imbued with love and admiration for every form of life; and who for twenty years has observed carefully and recorded accurately everything of interest in the life histories of the various species with which he has become acquainted. The book is written in an earnest spirit and in a clear and delightful style. . . . Never has the present writer derived so much pleasure and instruction from a book on the habits and instincts of animals. He feels sure that it will long continue to be a storehouse of facts and observations of the greatest value to the philosophical naturalist, while to the general reader it will rank as the most interesting and delightful of modern books on natural history."

ROBERT C. LESLIE.

THE SEA-BOAT: How to Build, Rig, and Sail

Her. By ROBERT C. LESLIE, Author of "A Sea Painter's Log." With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. [This day.]

COMPLETION OF JUNKER'S "AFRICA."

TRAVELS in AFRICA DURING the YEARS

1875-1886. By DR. WILLIAM JUNKER. Translated from the German by A. H. KEANE, F.R.G.S. Containing 527 Illustrations in the Text and Maps. 3 vols., demy 8vo. 21s. each volume.

The Times says:—"Of the scientific value of Dr. Junker's Travels to the ethnologist, the anthropologist, and the geographer, even a cursory examination of the present volume will convince the reader. . . . The translation is clear and flowing; nor must we omit to commend the numerous illustrations, which greatly enhance the utility and interest of the volume."

Black and White says:—" . . . Dr. Junker's work has attractions for every class of reader; for the geographer and natural historian it is invaluable, for the general reader it is full of various and most interesting reading. It is the full record of a great and noble exploit carried out with no mercy towards and no sparing of the traveller's own strength and health, and happiness and comfort, but—and this fact should stand forth prominently—with infinite mercy towards the savages and slaves by whose aid his own great life work was accomplished."

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU.

PAPACY, SOCIALISM, and DEMOCRACY. By

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU, Member of the Institute of France. Translated by PROFESSOR B. L. O'DONNELL. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HANNAH LYNCH.

ROSNI HARVEY. By Hannah Lynch. 3 vols.

Crown 8vo.

[This day.]

A. S. PUSHKIN.

THE QUEEN of SPADES and other Stories.

With a Biography. Translated from the Russian of PUSHKIN by Mrs. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [This day.]

THE HON. MARGARET COLLIER.

RACHEL and MAURICE, and other Tales. By the HON. MARGARET COLLIER (Madame Galetti di Cadilliac), Author of "Our Home in the Adriatic." Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. [This day.]

CHARLES BLATHERWICK.

IN the SHADE of SCHIEHALLION. By

CHARLES BLATHERWICK, Author of "Peter Stannor." Crown 8vo, 12s. [Shortly.]

G. F. UNDERHILL.

IN and OUT the PIGSKIN. By G. F. Underhill.

With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s.

[Shortly.]

NEW EDITIONS.

H. DE WINDT.

FROM PEKIN to CALAIS by LAND. By H.

DE WINDT. With numerous Illustrations by C. E. Fripp, from Sketches by the Author. Second and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. [This day.]

E. R. TAYLOR.

ELEMENTARY ART TEACHING. By Edward

R. TAYLOR, Head Master of Birmingham Municipal School of Art. With over 600 Diagrams and Examples. 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Second edition in the Press.]

W. H. MALLOCK.

A HUMAN DOCUMENT. By W. H. Mallock.

New Edition in one volume. Crown 8vo.

[Shortly.]

MORLEY ROBERTS.

IN LOW RELIEF: a Bohemian Transcript.

By MORLEY ROBERTS. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MARY A. DICKENS.

CROSS CURRENTS. By Mary A. Dickens.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ERNEST RENAN'S WORKS.

RECOLLECTIONS of MY YOUTH. Translated from the French, and Revised by Madame RENAN. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE FUTURE of SCIENCE: Ideas of 1848. Demy 8vo, 18s.

HISTORY of the PEOPLE of ISRAEL.

FIRST DIVISION.—Till the Time of King David. Demy 8vo, 14s.

SECOND DIVISION.—From the Reign of David up to the Capture of Samaria. Demy 8vo, 14s.

THIRD DIVISION.—From the Time of Hezekiah till the Return from Babylon. Demy 8vo, 14s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1068.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 31° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. MCCLURE, M.A. New Edition, brought up to date. Imp. 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

* It was by this Atlas that Dr. ANDERSON discovered the new Star in Auriga.

VEGETABLE WASPS and PLANT WORMS. By M. C. COOKE, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

TIME. By Professor C. V. Boys, A.R.S.M., F.R.S

[In preparation.]

OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Professor Percy F. FRANKLAND, F.R.S.

[In preparation.]

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth, Rector of Wrington, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON BRITAIN. By Grant Allen, Esq., B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"If any reader wishes to obtain, in a small compass, a general view of our Anglo-Saxon language, literature, and laws, he cannot do better than study this careful and conscientious epitome of those subjects."—Spectator.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry III. to the Revolution of 1688. By HENRY G. HEWLETT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

[A Set of Works designed to present the Chief Races of Europe as they emerge out of pre-historic darkness into the light furnished by their earliest recorded words. The Literature dealt with covers a period stretching from its beginning until the Middle Ages.]

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature."—Scotsman.

* Others in preparation.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE BOOKS of CHRONICLES in RELATION to the PENTATEUCH and the "HIGHER CRITICISM." By the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

DESCRIPTIVE LANTERN LECTURES on ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. By Rev. C. ARTHUR LANE. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE GREEK DEVOTIONS of LANCELOT ANDREWS, BISHOP of WINCHESTER. From the Manuscript given by him to WILLIAM LAURENCE, afterwards ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, and recently discovered. Edited by the Rev. Canon P. O. MEDH, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

THE CATHOLICOS of the EAST and his PEOPLE. Being the Impressions of Five Years' Work in the "Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission." By the Very Rev. A. J. MACLEAN and the Rev. W. H. BLOWNE, LL.M. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

COLONIAL CHURCH HISTORIES: History of the Church in Eastern Canada and Newfoundland. By the Rev. J. LANGTRY. With Map. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE BOOK of the UNVEILING. Studies in the Revelation of St. John the Divine. By the AUTHOR of "THE CHRONICLES of the SCHÖNBERG-COTTA FAMILY." Printed in red and black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

CHRISTUS COMPROBATOR; or, the Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament. Seven Addresses by C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE AUTHENTICITY of the GOSPEL of ST. LUKE: its Bearing upon the Evidences of the Truth of Christianity. Five Lectures by the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

HANDY BOOK of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By Rev. E. L. CUTTS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

A DICTIONARY of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. E. L. CUTTS, Author of "Turning Points of Church History," &c. With numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

OUR WORSHIP. By the Rev. Preb. Sadler. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE BOOK GENESIS. By the Rev. F. Watson. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

ROUND the ROUND WORLD on a CHURCH MISSION. By Rev. O. E. MASON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

OF the IMITATION of CHRIST. Four Books. By THOMAS À Kempis. Fcap. 8vo, printed in red and black, half-bound, 2s. 6d.; limp Persian, 4s.; limp German calf, 5s.; vellum circuit, 6s. 8d.

A New Edition, based on the best Text, and without curtailment or modification.

HERBERT'S POEMS. New Edition in Red and Black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

MONUMENTAL HISTORY of the EARLY BRITISH CHURCH. By ROMILEY ALLEN, Esq. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHURCH of ENGLAND (The Title Deeds of the). By the Rev. T. P. GARNIER. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE PARABLES of the OLD TESTAMENT. By the Right Rev. ALFRED HARRY, D.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

THE PETRINE CLAIMS: a Critical Enquiry. By the late Rev. RICHARD F. LITTLEDALE, LL.D., D.C.L., Author of "Plain Reasons against Joining the Church of Rome," &c. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

CHIEF ANCIENT PHILOSOPHIES.

[This Series of Books will deal with the Chief Systems of Ancient Thought, not merely as dry matters of History, but as having a bearing on Modern Speculation.]

ARISTOTELIANISM. Part I. THE ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By the Rev. I. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Hon. LL.D. Part II. THE LOGICAL TREATISES, the METAPHYSICS, the PSYCHOLOGY, the POLITICS. By the Rev. W. GRUNDY, M.A. The Two Parts in 1 vol. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EPICUREANISM. By Wm. Wallace, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Merton College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, satin cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STOICISM. By the Rev. W. W. Capes, Fellow of Hertford College. Fcap. 8vo, satin cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
CAREW HAZLITT'S LIVERY COMPANIES OF LONDON, by F. HAWKINS	353
HURNE'S DIVERSE COLORES, by LIONEL JOHNSON	355
ELTON'S CAREER OF COLUMBUS, by the Rev. WESTWORTH WEBSTER	355
LESSING'S LAOCOON, by T. W. ROLLESTON	356
QUILL'S TRANSLATION OF TACITUS, by F. T. RICHARDS	357
REGAN'S JAPON PRATIQUE, by S. McCALMONT HILL	357
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	358
SOME BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY	359
NOTES AND NEWS	360
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	360
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	361
ORIGINAL VERSE: "IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY," by Dr. JOHN TUDHUR	361
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	361
SLAVICA, by W. R. M.	361
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	362
CORRESPONDENCE—
MISS. of the LXX and Catenas at Milan, Verona, and Venice, by the Rev. H. A. Redpath; Iron in Homer, by Prof. Lewis Campbell	362
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	364
THE STORY OF NAMUKU, by Prof. Max Müller	364
CORRESPONDENCE—
An Israelitish War in Edom; Hebrew Loan-Words from Greek, by Prof. Sayce; Old Burmese Inscription at Buddha Gogyi, by Major Temple	365
SCIENCE NOTES	366
ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS	366
PHILOLOGY NOTES	367
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	367
MIDDLETON'S HISTORY OF ILLUMINATING, by J. W. BRADLEY	367
ORITARY: JONAH GILBERT, by F. W.	369
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Pithon, Bunnies, and (or) On, by Cope Whitehouse; Aegyptian Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr	369
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	369
STAGE NOTES	370
"EUGENE ORIGIN," by J. S. Shedlock	370
MUSIC NOTES	370

POSITION of TRUST.—Schoolmaster, Surveyor, 52, business man; 22 years in present situation; married, no encumbrance.—BALL, Silsey, Boston.

WANTED.—STAMP COLLECTION. Large or Small. References given.—DUNDAN, Moffat, N.B.

MEDICAL MAN, with spare time, living in bracing Moorland district (Yorkshire), will take a backward PUPIL to educate; good care and supervision; riding and driving.—Address MEDICAL, Mrs. Darling's, 39, Highfield, Falsgrave, Scarborough.

FREDERICK HOLLYER'S EXHIBITION of Platinotype Reproductions of the Works of E. BURNE JONES, A.R.A., D. G. ROSETTI, G. F. WATTS, R.A., and other important pictures, the DUDLEY GALLERY, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, W. Open daily, 10 to 6. Admission 1s.

SWITZERLAND.—Persons of both sexes wishing change of air, or to study at University Music Conservatorium of Art School, can be RECEIVED at moderate charge in quiet little FRENCH PENION. Arrangements for family. Excellent English references.—ANNA, Pension, 22, Boulevard Helvétique, Geneva.

GRAND Old Oak 8-Legged TABLE; a charming old oak Long Settle; and an old oak Bureau Secrétaire, fitted inside small drawers, &c. FOR SALE, together or separately; in good condition; richly carved; can be seen or particulars forwarded.—"Livy," Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

TENTH MEMOIR OF THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE FESTIVAL HALL of OSORKONTE (Embastis). By EDWARD NAVILLE. With 39 Plates. (Now ready.) KLEIN PAUL, TRENCOR, TURNER & Co., London; and Offices of the Fund, 37, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.

BOOK of the DEAD.

MRS. THURD will give a COURSE of LECTURES at 13, KENSINGTON SQUARE (King's College, Department for Ladies), on "THE BOOK of the DEAD," commencing OCTOBER 20th.—For particulars, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, 13, Kensington Square, W.

PROFESSOR POOLE has arranged the following COURSES at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—Prof. POOLE, "HISTORY and MONUMENTS of EGYPT," MONDAY, Oct. 24, and following Eight Mondays, 5 p.m.; "HIEROGLYPHICS," SATURDAY, Oct. 29, 4.15 p.m., and following Seven Saturdays, Mr. BOSCAWEN, "COMPARATIVE ARCHAEOLOGY of EGYPT and WESTERN ASIA," THURSDAY, Oct. 27, and following Five Thursdays, Each class £1 1s. Tickets may be obtained of the SECRETARY, University College, Gower Street, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND WORK of every description.—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES. —Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—Miss C. HYDE WARREN, 310, Strand, W.C.

THE CURRENCY, BANKING, ASSURANCE, ANNUITIES, TRADE, WINES, BREWING, FARMING, &c.

Catalogue of Scarce Works on Political Economy just published. JAMES STILLIE, 19, George Street, Edinburgh.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST.

GOSSIP of the CENTURY. Personal and Traditional Memories—Social, Literary, Artistic. With more than 100 Portraits. By the Author of "Flemish Interiors." 2 vols., royal 8vo, 1050 pp., 42s.

"In these two large and beautifully printed volumes we have a great amount of the century's best gossip. The two volumes are, in fact, a kind of encyclopædia of gossip about monarchs, statesmen, doctors, writers, actors, singers, soldiers, men of fashion."—Daily News

ANGELICA KAUFFMANN: a Biography. With a List of her Portraits and Drawings, and some Illustrative Reproductions thereof. By FRANCES A. GERARD. 1 vol., 15s.

"Angelica's is a singularly difficult life to write, and her latest biographer has evidently spared no pains to make this volume complete. It is excellently illustrated, and is unquestionably a book of great interest."—St. James's Gazette.

A NEW BOOK OF POEMS.

FATE IN ARCADIA, and other Poems. By EDWIN J. ELLIS. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. 7s. 6d.

"* A Large-Paper Edition of 100 copies only at 41 1s. each, with 10 additional Illustrations, has been printed on hand-made paper.

"He who buys it will have obtained a wise comrade and an ever fascinating friend."—Bookman.

"His poetry is distinctly a criticism upon life, often fantalising by the fantastic subtlety of its thought, but just as often fascinating by the beauty of its poetic form."—Academy.

COMEDY and COMEDIANS in POLITICS.

By the Countess HUGO. 2s. 6d.

"The niece of Victor Hugo poses as the champion of Italy and the enemy of Signor Crispien. The book she has written is really a smart résumé of contemporaneous Italian history."—Publishers' Circular.

IN LADIES' COMPANY. Six Interesting Women. By Mrs. FENWICK MILLER. Fcap. 6s.

"Mrs. Miller has given us a volume to be grateful for."—Daily Chronicle.

CLUB CAMEOS. Portraits of the Day. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Typical of a class, and, as a rule, these lay figures bear a startling resemblance to real life."—Speaker.

ROUNDOUBT RECOLLECTIONS. By JOHN AUGUSTUS OSHEA, Author of "Leaves from the Life of a Special Correspondent." 2 vols., 21s.

"A book so lively in tone as these 'Roundabout Recollections' is not vouchsafed to us every day."—Morning Post.

Now ready at the Booksellers and Libraries.

SOCIAL ENGLAND from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By W. C. SYDNEY, Author of "England and the English in the Eighteenth Century." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY SIR RANDAL ROBERTS.

RIDGE and FURROW. 2 vols.

(Now ready.)

NEW NOVEL BY C. T. C. JAMES.

Author of "Holy Wedlock."

HONOURS EASY. 3 vols.

"Is uncommon amusing, and is written in a spirit that enhances its charm."—National Observer.

NEW NOVELS in 1 vol., at 6s. each.

BY MRS. MACQUOID.

MISS EYON of EYON COURT. 1 vol., 6s.

"In its way this little book is a masterpiece."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY WILLIAM WESTALL.

BEN CLOUGH. 1 vol., 6s.

"It is, indeed, remarkably clever."—Vanity Fair.

BY TIGHE HOPKINS.

The INCOMPLETE ADVENTURER. 1 vol., 6s.

"The hero is a delightful creation."—Literary World.

IN the TILTYARD of LIFE. By Henry NEWELL. 1 vol., 6s.

"The last tale, 'A Jew in Moscow,' is well and forcibly written, and from what we know of the treatment of the Jews in Russia it might be thought to be founded on fact, so strange is the fiction."—Publishers' Circular.

GEORGE WARING'S CHOICE. By Frank BARON. 6s.

"The story is a good one, well written, well worth reading, and very deeply interesting."—Scotsman.

IN FOOL'S PARADISE. By H. B. Finlay KNIGHT. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Amongst the strongest of one-volume novels which have lately appeared."—Daily News.

WARD & DOWNEY,
12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of PAMPHLETS.

CLEMENT S. PALMER is now preparing, and will issue very shortly, a Catalogue of about 40,000 Pamphlets, arranged under Subjects and Authors' Names. He will send it free on application to 109, Southampton Row, W.C.

THE HAUSA ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Committee of the HAUSA ASSOCIATION invite APPLICATIONS for a ROBINSON STUDENTSHIP of the value of £200 per annum.

The Student will be required to devote himself to the study of the Hausa language and people, at first at Tripoli and afterwards in the interior.

Applications will be taken into consideration at a meeting on December 2nd.

All communications should be addressed to the Rev. J. O. F. MURRAY, Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

WEST LONDON ETHICAL SOCIETY.

SUNDAY MORNING LECTURES, OCTOBER, 1892.

PRINCES HALL, PICCADILLY.

11.15 o'clock, to be delivered by STANTON COIT, Ph.D.

OCTOBER 23.—"THE HISTORICAL FORESHADOWINGS of an ETHICAL MOVEMENT."

OCTOBER 30.—"IMAGINATION and MORALS."

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Belfast, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

SEELEY & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Ready in October, price 21s., cloth.

THE INNS of COURT and CHANCERY. By W. J. Loftie.

With 12 Engravings and many smaller Illustrations, by Herbert Raitton and other artists.

LARGE-PAPER COPIES, with Proofs of the Engravings (100 only), 12s. net.

Now ready, price 12s. 6d., cloth.

SACHARISSA: Some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland, her Family and Friends. By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. Henry Ady). With Portrait after Vandyke, demy 8vo.

"Mrs. Ady has made the best of her materials, and considerable human as well as historical interest may be derived from her labours."—Times.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d., cloth.

STUDIES in MODERN MUSIC: Berlioz, Schumann, and

Wagner. By W. H. HADOW, M.A., Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford. With Five Portraits on Copper, crown 8vo.

Ready in November, price 7s. 6d., cloth.

DEAN SWIFT and HIS WRITINGS. By G. P. Moriarty,

Balliol College, Oxford. With Nine Portraits on Copper, crown 8vo.

LARGE-PAPER COPIES, with Proofs of the Portraits (150 only), 21s.

Ready in November, price 6s., cloth.

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE. From the French of E. Corroyer.

Edited by WALTER ARMSTRONG, Director of the Irish National Gallery. With 238 Illustrations.

Ready in October, price 6s., cloth.

CHARING CROSS to ST. PAUL'S. By Justin McCarthy.

Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL. New Edition.

Ready in October, price 5s., cloth.

STORIES from the GREEK COMEDIANS. By the Rev. A. J.

CHURCH. With 16 Coloured Illustrations.

Ready in October, price 5s., cloth.

THE REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE. By Colonel

MALLESON, C.S.I. With Portraits and Plans.

LARGE-PAPER COPIES, ROXBURGHE (200 only), 10s. 6d.

Ready in November, price 5s., cloth.

IN the SERVICE of RACHEL, LADY RUSSELL. By Mrs.

MARSHALL. With 8 Illustrations.

Now ready, price 5s., cloth.

ADRIFT in a GREAT CITY: a Story. By M. E. Winchester.

With Illustrations by JACOMB HOOD.

"One of Miss Winchester's pleasantly written tales.....in its descriptions of slum life in Liverpool, it is equal to any of her previous efforts."—Daily Telegraph.

Ready in October, price 5s., cloth.

THE GREAT WORLD'S FARM: Some Account of Nature's

Crops and How They are Grown. By SELINA GAYE, Author of "The Great World's Lumber Room." With a Preface by Professor BOULCHER, and 16 Illustrations.

Ready in November, price 1s., cloth.

AT the HOLY COMMUNION: Helps for Preparation and Reception. By the Rev. H. C. G. MOULE.

Now ready, price 5s., cloth.

ST. DUNSTAN'S CLOCK: a Story of 1666. By E. Ward.

With 8 Illustrations.

"Gives a very good idea indeed of the Great Fire."—Daily Telegraph.

Now ready, price 5s., cloth.

THE SIEGE of NORWICH CASTLE: a Story of the Last

Struggle against the Conqueror. By M. M. BLAKE. With 12 Illustrations.

"The Story of Norwich Castle, by M. M. Blake, boldly lands us at starting in the days of the Norman Conquest and the Crusades, and contains some admirably life-like pictures of that epoch."—Daily Telegraph.

Ready the last week in November, price 35s., cloth; half-morocco, 42s.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUME for 1892. Being the Third of the New Series. With 36 Etchings and other Engravings, and many minor Illustrations.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d., cloth.

THE YORKSHIRE COAST, and the CLEVELAND HILLS and DALES. By JOHN LEYLAND. With Map, Etchings, and other Illustrations by Alfred Dawson and Lancelot Speed.

LARGE-PAPER COPIES (250 only), 12s. 6d.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d., cloth.

THOMAS and PAUL SANDBY, ROYAL ACADEMICIANS:

their Lives and Works. By WILLIAM SANDBY. With 5 Portraits on Copper, and 12 other Illustrations.

Now ready, price 6s., cloth.

LANCASHIRE. By Leo H. Grindon. With many Illustrations.

New Edition.

SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The LIFE of THOMAS PAINE.

With a History of his literary, Political, and Religious Career in America, France, and England, to which is added as hitherto unpublished Sketch of Paine by William Cobbett. By MONSIEUR D. CONWAY. Illustrated. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s.

The publication of this work has been delayed in consequence of the discovery by the author of some important new material, including an unpublished sketch of Paine by William Cobbett. The paper by Cobbett possesses some exceptional importance because it expresses a complete change of opinion on the part of its writer from the view held by him at the time of some of his earlier utterances concerning the career of Paine; while it was largely upon some of these earlier utterances that were based the conclusions arrived at concerning Paine by those who first wrote about him after his death.

A POWERFUL ROMANCE BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

CYNTHIA WAKEHAM'S

MONEY: a Novel. By ANNA KATHERINE GREEN, Author of "The Leavenworth Case." 16mo, cloth, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.; boards, 2s.

This striking new story by Miss Green is one of the best the author has produced.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE BOOK LOVER. A Guide to the Best Reading. By JAMES BALDWIN. 12mo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

JOHN WYCLIF, Last of the Schoolmen, and First of the English Reformers. By LEWIS SERGEANT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

Ready shortly.

HERMAN MELVILLE'S WORKS.

A Reissue, by arrangement with the family of the late HERMAN MELVILLE, of his famous Romances of the Southern Seas.

Edited with Biographical and Critical Introduction by ARTHUR STEDMAN.

The Series will comprise 4 vols., post 8vo, cloth gilt, price 5s. per volume.

1. TYPEE. A Real Romance of the Southern Seas. [Shortly.]2. OMOO. A Sequel to "Typee." [Shortly.]

To be followed by

3. MOBY DICK; or, the White Whale.4. WHITE JACKET; or, the World on a Man-of-War.

"LEADERS IN SCIENCE" SERIES.

The LIFE and WORKS of LOUIS

AGASSIZ. By CHARLES F. HOLLDER, Author of "Life and Works of Charles Darwin," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [In preparation.]

WALT WHITMAN.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIA; or, the Story of a Life. Being Selections from the Prose Writings of WALT WHITMAN. 12mo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

PRATT PORTRAITS: Sketched

in a New England Suburb. By ANNA FULLER. 16mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

HISTORY of the UNITED STATES. From the First Administration of Thomas Jefferson, 1801-1805, to the end of the Second Administration of James Madison, 1813-1817. By HENRY ADAMS. Illustrated with Maps. 9 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, £4.

24, Bedford Street, Strand, London; and New York.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S LIST.

THE NATIONAL CHURCHES.

Edited by P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s. each.

4. THE CHURCH in the NETHERLANDS. By P. H. Ditchfield, M.A., Rector of Barkham, Wokingham. [In preparation.]

5. THE CHURCH in SCOTLAND. By H. M. Luckock, D.D., Dean of Lichfield. [Shortly.]

THE PRECEDING VOLUMES IN THIS SERIES ARE:—

1. GERMANY. By S. Baring-Gould, M.A., Author of "Mehalah," "Germany, Past and Present," &c. With Maps.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's contribution is excellent... One of the best accounts in English of the German Reformation, its real meaning and real effects, that we have ever come across."—Guardian.

"It is at once solid and graphic, accurate and picturesque."—Scott's Magazine.

2. SPAIN. By Frederick Meyrick, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln, Editor of the Foreign Church Chronicle. With Map.

"It is a really valuable work."—Manchester Examiner. "Exceedingly interesting."—Church Bells.

3. IRELAND. By Thomas Olden, M.A., Vicar of Ballyclough. Crown 8vo, with Maps.

"In dealing with the early ecclesiastical history of Ireland he has studied the original authorities himself, and thrown much valuable light on many points hitherto obscure in themselves."—Times.

"For seldom has the student of Irish history the good fortune to encounter work so learned and so simple, so instructive and so entertaining as this brilliant epitome of the history of the early Irish Church."—Athenaeum.

FARTHING. By Mrs. Molesworth, Author of "Carrots," "Cuckoo Clock," &c. Handsomely bound in cloth, with first-class illustrations by G. M. Bradley. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE LITTLE DOCTOR; or, The Magic of Nature. By Darley Dale, Author of "Spoilt Guy," "The Village Blacksmith," &c. Illustrated by Alexander Munro. Attractively bound in cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A NEW AND ORIGINAL FAIRY BOOK OF GREAT MERIT.

THE QUEEN of the GOBLINS. By Wilhelmina Pickering, Author of "The Adventures of Prince Almero," &c. Profusely illustrated by Olive Cockerell. Appropriately bound in fancy cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

Vol. II., demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

MOTHERS in COUNCIL. Edited by Charlotte M. Yonge. This volume contains contributions by CAROLINE A. OIBERNE, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mrs. HALLETT, Lady MARGARET HAMILTON, the Hon. K. SCOTT, HENLEY I. ARDEN, Mrs. SUMNER, and others.

NIGEL BARTRAM'S IDEAL. By Florence Wilford, Author of "A Maiden of Our Own Day," "Vivia," &c. New Edition. Well bound in cloth, illustrated, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

STORIES TOLD to a CHILD. By Jean Ingelow. New Edition, prettily bound in cloth, with illustrations, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CAPTAIN GEOFF. By Ismay Thorn, Author of "Quite Unexpected," "Flock of Four," "Geoff and Jim," &c. Illustrated, imperial 16mo, cloth boards, 2s.

COUSIN ISABEL: a Tale of the Siege of Londonderry. By Marion Andrews, Author of "The Quest of Jack Hazelwood," &c. Illustrated, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., 2, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.; AND 41, VICTORIA STREET, S.W.

Just published, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE GALILEAN: a PORTRAIT of JESUS of NAZARETH. By WALTER LLOYD.

Also just published, in 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, price 13s.

THE SUPERNATURAL: its Origin, Nature, and Evolution. By JOHN H. KING.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 29, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

Just issued, price 3s., post free.

LIFE of JESUS. A New Translation. By RENAN.

London: WILLIAM GROVE, 6, Wine Office Court, Fleet Street.

Price 2s. 6d., post free.

ON FISTULA, and its Radical Cure by Medicines. By J. COMPTON BURNETT, M.D.

London: JAMES EPPS & Co., 43, Threadneedle Street, and 179, Piccadilly.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums or deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on publication. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF LEWIS MORRIS.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITION. 5 vols., fcap. 8vo, 5s. each.

SONGS of TWO WORLDS. Fourteenth Edition.

THE EPIC of HADES. Twenty-fifth Edition.

GWEN, and the ODE of LIFE. Ninth Edition.

SONGS UNSUNG, and GYCIA. Fifth Edition.

SONGS of BRITAIN. Fourth Edition.

A VISION of SAINTS. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

POETICAL WORKS. Eighth Thousand. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.; cloth extra, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

THE EPIC of HADES. Elzevir Edition, 6s.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO., LTD., PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891.

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

Rev. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."

Mr. J. CARVELL WILLIAMS writes:—"It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."

Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

TENNYSON and "IN MEMORIAM." An Appreciation and a Study. By Joseph Jacobs. Uniform with Mr. Jacobs' "Essays and Reviews" (George Eliot, Matthew Arnold, Browning, Newman). 1891. 16mo, 112 pp., 2s. 6d.

[IMMEDIATELY.]

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VI., No. 8. OCTOBER. 1s. 6d. net.

Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers) 13s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

J. A. R. MUNRO.—THE CHRONOLOGY of THEMISTOCLES' CAREER.
A. TILLEY.—LUDUS LATRUNCULORUM.
H. RICHARDS.—Ad with the FUTURE in ATTIC.
W. M. LINDSAY.—METRICAL TREATMENT of SUPERLATIVES in PLAUTUS.
PLATT'S ODYSSEY of HOMER.—D. B. MONRO.
BATTIFOL on the ATHANASIAN SYNTAGMA DOCTRINAE.—A. ROBERTSON.
MAHAFFY'S PROBLEMS in GREEK HISTORY.—R. W. MACAN.
SHORTER NOTICES.
NOTES.
ARCHÆOLOGY.
MONTHLY RECORD.
SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.
BIBLIOGRAPHY.

A NEW VOLUME of THE BIBLIOTHEQUE DE CARABAS.

THE ATTIS of CATULLUS.

Edited, Translated, and Accompanied by Dissertations on the Myth of Attis, the Origin of Tree Worship, and the Gallambic Metre, by GRANT ALLEN. 8vo, xvi., 156 pp., vellum wrapper, 7s. 6d. net.

*Of the previous issues in the Bibliothèque de Carabas, No. 1, "The Cupid and Psycho of Apuleius," translated by WILLIAM ARLINGTON, edited by ANDREW LANG, and No. 2, "The Enterpe of Herodotus," translated by B. R. (1884), edited by ANDREW LANG are out of print, Nos. 3, "The Fables of Bidpai," translated by SIR THOMAS NORTH (1570), edited by JOSEPH JACOBS, and No. 4, "The Fables of Æsop," translated by W. GAXTON (1484), edited by J. JACOBS, may still be had at 12s. and 21s. net, respectively.

The volumes of the Bibliothèque de Carabas will not be re-printed. Nos. 1 and 2 command a high premium. Oct. 28/92.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE DOCUMENTS of the HEXATEUCH.

Newly Translated and Chronologically Arranged by W. E. ADDIS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Vol. I. The Oldest Book of Hebrew History. With Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo, 350 pages, cloth, 12s. 6d.

*The only work in English which gives the Documents of the Pentateuch and Book of Joshua in chronological order as determined by modern critics.

INDIAN FAIRY TALES.

Selected and Edited by J. JACOBS. Illustrated by J. D. BATTEN. Crown 8vo, uniform in fancy cloth with "English Fairy Tales" and "Celtic Fairy Tales," 6s.
150 Large-paper copies have been printed on Japanese vellum, subscription price 31s. 6d. net. Only a few copies remain.

GERMANIC ORIGINS: a Study in Primitive Culture. By FRANCIS B. GUMMERE, Ph.D., Professor of English in Haverford College, 8vo viii., 490 pp., cloth, 10s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—Land and People—Men and Women—The Home—Husband and Wife—The Family—Trade and Commerce—The Warrior—Social Order—Government and Law—The Funeral—The Worship of the Dead—The Worship of Nature—The Worship of Gods—Form and Ceremony.

CYNEWULF'S CHRIST: An

Eighth Century English Epic. Edited with a Modern Rendering, Notes, Glossary, and a Dissertation upon the Cynewulf Rimes, by ISRAEL GOLLANCZ. Small 4to, xxiv., 216 pp. Printed by Constable on hand-made paper, with frontispiece reproduced in colours from an Eleventh Century MS. 12s. 6d. net.

EPISTOLÆ HOELIANÆ: the Familiar Letters of JAMES HOWELL. Edited, Annotated, and Indexed by JOSEPH JACOBS. 2 vols., medium 8vo, xciv., 862 pp. Printed at the Ballantyne Press, on hand-made paper, and bound in half-buckram, top gilt, £1 4s. net.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, STRAND.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

ESSAYS and ADDRESSES: Lectures on Buddhism—Lectures on the Life of St. Paul—Papers on Dante. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., late Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SECOND VOLUME of DR. BOYD'S REMINISCENCES.
SECOND EDITION, NOW READY.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS of ST. ANDREWS, 1865-1890. By the Very Rev. A. K. H. BOYD, D.D., LL.D., First Minister of St. Andrews, Author of "The Recreations of a Country Parson." 2 vols. 8vo. Vol. I., 12s.; Vol. II., 15s.

A SELECTION from the LETTERS of GERALDINE JEWsbury to JANE WELSH CARLYLE. Edited by Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND, Author of "The Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle," and Prefaced by a Monograph on Miss Jewsbury by the Editor. 8vo, 16s.

"A charming contribution to a class of literature which has always been fascinating for the student and lover of his kind. . . . Certainly the reading public will be grateful to Mrs. Ireland for having so well performed her task, and put into their hands a book which will be a permanent addition to literature."—Leeds Mercury.
"These letters exhibit Miss Jewsbury as a keenly observant woman and a splendid correspondent. . . . One may read them at any page with pleasure."—Scotsman.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MARK TILLOTSON."

BY the WESTERN SEA. By JAMES BAKER. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The Athenæum says of it:—"It is imbued with the soul of nature, and it is a picture complete in itself. The leading characters are a crippled artist and a lovely girl with poetic aspirations; between the two there are passages of great tenderness and truth."

The Guardian.—"By the Western Sea" is a beautiful story, beautifully told. . . . The motive of Mr. James Baker's story is the triumph of soul over form. . . . The conversations are very good, and the descriptions of scenery are exquisitely lovely; and plot, talk, and scenery all work together to justify the theme chosen by the author. It is not too much to say that one feels better for having read the story."

WORKS BY JAMES SULLY, M.A., LL.D.

Grote Professor of Mind and Logic in the University College, London.

OUTLINES of PSYCHOLOGY. New Edition, Revised and largely

Re-written. Crown 8vo, 9s.

THE HUMAN MIND: a Text-Book of Psychology. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s.

CHEMICAL LECTURE EXPERIMENTS. By G. S. NEWTH, Royal College of Science, South Kensington. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE NEW EDEN: a Story. By C. J. CUTCLIFFE HYNE. With Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"The idea is worked out with astonishing skill and cleverness, and so logically developed that the book has all the interest of one with an intricate plot."—Scotsman.

THE GREEN FAIRY BOOK. Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 13 Plates and 88 Illustrations in the text by H. J. FORD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

AFTER TWENTY YEARS: a Collection of Reprinted Pieces. By JULIAN STURGIS, Author of "Thraldom," "John Malmgren," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

BUDDHISM—PRIMITIVE and PRESENT in MAGADHA and in CEYLON. By REGINALD STEPHEN COPESTON, D.D., Bishop of Colombo, President of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. 8vo, 16s.

PLEAS and CLAIMS for CHRIST. By HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND, M.A., Canon and Precentor of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE LORD'S DAY and the HOLY EUCHARIST treated in a Series of Essays by various Authors. Edited, with a Preface, by ROBERT LINKLATER, D.D., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Strand Green. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CHURCH in RELATION to SCEPTICS: a Conversational Guide to Evidential Work. By ALEX. J. HARRISON, B.D., Lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society, Boyle Lecturer, 1892, Author of "Problems of Christianity and Scepticism." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PRACTICAL REFLECTIONS UPON EVERY VERSE of the BOOK of GENESIS. By the Author of "Practical Reflections upon every Verse of the New Testament," &c. With a Preface by the Right Rev. EDWARD KING, D.D., Lord Bishop of Lincoln. Crown 8vo, price 4s. 6d.

SAINT PETER and the FIRST YEARS of CHRISTIANITY. By the Abbé CONSTANT FOUCARD. Translated from the Second Edition, with the Author's sanction, by GEORGE F. X. GRIFFITH. With an Introduction by Cardinal GIBBONS. Crown 8vo, 9s.

On Monday Next. Price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—NOVEMBER.

MRS. JULIET. By Mrs. ALFRED W. HUNT. Chaps.

XXXI.—XXXIII.

SPORT and NATURAL HISTORY on the BOTLETLI RIVER, NIGAMILAND. By H. A. BRYDEN.

A PLEA for THIRTY-SHILLING PIECES. By Sir JOHN EVANS, F.R.S.

A FEAT of '94. By A. H. BRESLY.

MYSTIC: the TALE of a BONNET. By L. B. WALFORD.

A GOSSIP ABOUT EELS. By THOMAS SOUTHWELL.

A BARBER'S POUND. By WILLIAM J. LACEY.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. 362.

1. PERSIA. By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZEN.

2. MORELLUS ITALIAN PAINTERS.

3. THE PRINCES of the HOUSE of CONDE.

4. MEDITERRANEAN POLITICS.

5. MEMOIRS of the VERNEY FAMILY.

6. POPULATION.

7. BRITISH CRITICISM of the OLD TESTAMENT.

8. The POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

9. The SCOTTISH UNION.

10. MARSHAL SAXE and the MARQUIS D'ARGENSON.

11. A NEBULOUS HYPOTHESIS.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO."

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jacks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Messrs. Penley, W. Wykes, Sam Sothorn, J. Nelson, C. Thornbury, Ernest Percy, W. Heriot, and Charles Hawtrey; Misses Ethel Matthews, V. Armbruster, G. Harrison, Ewell, A. Yorks, C. Elton, &c. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Coult, R. Nainby, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terris, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Ellisson, Irene Rickards, and Carolus Hill. 8.30, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Little, Nainby, and Miss S. Grey.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir Augustus Harris.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER. Messrs. Henry Neville, James Fernandez, Leonard Boyne Julius Knight, J. L. Shine, Arthur Williams, Charles Dods-worth; Misses Millward, Blanche Horlock, Fanny Brough.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE AWAKENING. Messrs. Herbert Waring, Sant Matthews, Allan Ayneworth, John Carter, Douglas Bruce, Arthur Elwood; Mesdames Estelle Burney, Vane Featherstone, Nina Boucicault, Eva Williams F. Shirley. Preceded, at 8.30, by A HUSBAND IN CLOVER

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mrs. Langtry's Season.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, AGATHA TYLDEN, MERCHANT AND SHIPOWNER. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, W. T. Lovell, F. A. Everill, Edmund Maurice, Rudge Harding, W. Cheesman; Miss Marie Linden and Mrs. Langtry.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, CIGARETTE. At 7.40, A PAIR OF LUNATICS. Messrs. Cairns James, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Lyons, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Florence Bankhardt, Hannah James, Marion Erle, May Laurie, Helen Vicary, J. Bradford, C. Loseby, and Albu.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Signor Lago's Royal Opera.

THIS EVENING, at 8, EUGENE ONEGIN (in English). Mesdames Fanny and Lily Moody, Selma Svatlovsky. Messrs. Iyer McKay, Charles Manners, and Eugene Oudin. Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood. Saturday, LOHENGRIN.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE BARONESS. Messrs. Lionel Brough, Charles Conyers, Charles E. Stevens, Fred Emney, George Grossmith, jun., Percy Brough, Magrath, Wm. Foxon, Mesdames Jessie Moore, Olga Schubert, Constance Wallace, G. Reese, S. Nainby, M. Asquith, Violet Dene, and Agnes Giglio.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.

SATURDAY EVENING at eight p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, CIGARETTE. At 7.50, CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING. Messrs. Collette, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Fair, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Amadi, Marion Erle, May Lawrie, M. Collette, H. Vicary, C. Loseby, J. Bradford, and Albu.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, NIOBE (ALL SMILES) Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtrey, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Isabel Ellisson, Venie Bennett, Eleanor May, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, and C. Zerbin. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Bennett; Mr. Hawtrey, &c.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton. At 7.45, THE WOODEN SPOON. Mesdames Violet Robinson, Millie Vere; Messrs. W. Philp and Leonard Russell.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS.

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.

Estimates and all information furnished.

Contracts entered into.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER
£2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free
Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—
"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—between the figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The information cost me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

LEADING WOMEN of the RESTORATION.

By GRACE JOHNSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. with Portraits.
The Notional Observer says: "The book is written carefully and after much research. The memoirs contain many valuable anecdotes.
The writing is very well."

Public Opinion says: "Essentially a book of historic value."
The Guardian says: "Written with considerable sympathy and feeling. The portraits are excellent."

WHERE HONOUR SITS. By W. B. Home-
GALL. Cloth extra, 6s.

The Academy says: "The war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole 'Where Honour Sits' may certainly be pronounced readable."
The Manchester Courier says: "Much true and manly feeling, much real humanity, and decided ability in this volume....The book is eminently readable."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN SIN OR POLLY."
SYRINGA. By Arthur Nestorien. Cloth extra, 6s. [Just out.]

TRUE to the PRINCE: a Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By GERTRUDE BELL. Cloth extra, 6s.
The Saturday Review says: "She can relate well and clearly, and carries her readers along easily and pleasantly."

SECOND EDITION.

OUR TRIP NORTH. By R. Menzies

FERGUSON, M.A., Author of "Rambles in the Far North,"
"Quiet Folk," &c. Full-Page Illustrations. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
The Saturday Review says: "It is pleasantly written and well illustrated by Messrs. Denovan Adam and Austen Brown."
The Globe says: "An agreeable narrative, written in familiar style.
The illustrations are much above the average."

JUST READY, SIXTH EDITION, NEW AND REVISED, WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE, who has READ
AND APPROVED THE VOLUME.
Cloth extra, 5s.

The Spectator says: "The aspirant to literature may certainly read
Mr. Russell's book with profit."

Miss M. E. Daubon writes: "Your counsel, both to the journalist and imaginative writer, is full of wisdom."

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration.
MSS. read with promptitude, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. New Catalogue of Books post free.

Address—DIGBY, LONG & Co., Publishers,
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, London.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON,
186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr.
MENZIES; in DUBLIN of MESSRS. EASON &
SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF- YEARLY.	QUAR- TERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d
Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK

DR. SMILES'S WORKS.JASMIN: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist.

Post 8vo, 6s. 4th Thousand.

"What Jasmin did for himself in poetry Dr. Smiles has now done for him in prose, doing full justice to that part of his life which Jasmin's simple modesty forbade him to record, namely, his unceasing philanthropic efforts. The story is noble as well as touching, and is told by Dr. Smiles with abundance of sympathy and appreciation."

"Dr. Smiles has performed a praiseworthy task in introducing this little-known but admirable man to English readers. He died worn out at the age of sixty-five. In the south of France he was mourned as the friend of the friendless, as the St. Vincent de Paul of poetry."

"Dr. Samuel Smiles has given to the world a graceful and sympathetic record of a pure and beautiful human life, teeming with the poetry of action as well as of thought, and redolent throughout of good deeds and lovingkindness."—Daily Telegraph.

"Il a fait un livre bien personnel et aussi complet que possible. Voilà Jasmin 'raconté' en anglais pour la postérité. C'est M. Smiles qui est le complice, et son élégant volume nous a tout à fait charmé."

"No one of Dr. Smiles's books is more delightful than this one about the warm-hearted poet of Gascony. Dr. Smiles appears here at his best; for the story of Jasmin's life is full of romance, and the style of this volume has the happy characteristics of ease, simplicity, and beauty."—Liverpool Mercury.

"The story of such a life is well worth telling, and it has been admirably and sympathetically told by Dr. Smiles in a book which, to our mind, is one of the most attractive of all his works."—John Bull.

"One of the most touching and charming biographies we have ever read."—Critic (New York).

LIFE and LABOUR; or, Characteristics of MEN of INDUSTRY, TALENT, AND GENIUS. 6s.MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY. 6s.*THE HUGUENOTS: their Settlements, CHURCHES, AND INDUSTRIES in ENGLAND AND IRELAND. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

6s. each. SELF-HELP. CHARACTER. | THRIFT. DUTY.

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY. 6s.LIVES of the ENGINEERS. Illustrated. 5 vols. 7s. 6d. each.*LIFE of GEORGE STEPHENSON. With Illustrations. 21s.; 7s. 6d.; or 2s. 6d.*JAMES NASMYTH, ENGINEER: an AUTOBIOGRAPHY. With Portrait and 90 Illustrations. 16s. and 6s.*LIFE of THOMAS EDWARD, Scotch NATURALIST. Illustrated by Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A. 6s.*LIFE of ROBERT DICK, Geologist AND BOTANIST. Illustrated. 12s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

Thick 8vo, pp. 318, price 7s. 6d.

FROM THE CAVES AND JUNGLES OF HINDOSTAN.

By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

A translation of Mme. Blavatsky's famous letters from India to the Russian Messenger of Moscow, in 1879; full of strange secrets of Indian life, and gorgeous pictures of Oriental nature. A few of the subjects are:—A Rajput Adept; Gulab Lal Sing; a Yogi's Cave; a Subterranean Palace; Secret Libraries; Saved by a Sadhu; the Karli Caves; a Dead City; a Witch's Den; Fire and Cauldron; the Seven Sisters; a Magic Flower; the Golden Lake; Infant Brides; the Jesuits of India; a Bewitched Tiger; a Secret Passage; Saved by Gulab Lal Sing; Heracles and Egypt; an Enchanted Island; the Rajput Sphinx; an Avenue of Fakirs; Mystic Trances; Seymour Sunnyasi; Himilayan Sages, &c.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY,
7, DUCK STREET, ADELPHI, LONDON, W.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

BY

B. L. FARJEON.THE MARCH OF FATE

By the Author of

"Great Porter Square,"

"The Mystery of M. Felix," &c.

3 vols.

By ALBERT KEVILL-DAVIES.*MISS BLANCHARD of CHICAGO.

By the Author of "Marriage up to Date," "An American Widow," &c.

Oct. 21.

By MRS. EDWARD KENNARD.*WEDDED TO SPORT.

By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "That Pretty Little Horse-breaker," &c.

3 vols.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH states: "Mrs. Kennard has achieved at least one notable success in 'Wedded to Sport'.... Interspersed in the tale are many of those sporting scenes in the delineation of which the authoress has already won her reputation."

The MANCHESTER EXAMINER's opinion: "'Wedded to Sport' is far more carefully worked out, than usual. The analysis of character is good and the development of plot shows a due regard for probability.... the book is good of its kind."

By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip).*THE HON. JANE.

By the Author of "Allerton Towers," "Kato Valliant," &c.

3 vols.

The SCOTSMAN's opinion: "'The Hon. Jane' is a thoroughly readable story...."

The COURT JOURNAL's opinion: "The story is certainly by no means lacking in exciting incidents.... The fascinating Captain Stafford is well drawn, and the story, as a whole, smartly written...."

By MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN.*A BIG STAKE.

By the Author of "Drawn Blank," "The M.F.H.'s Daughter," &c.

3 vols.

The SCOTSMAN's opinion:—"There are some smart society sketches in 'A Big Stake'.... the interest is well maintained to the end."

The PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR's opinion:—".... it is a very good novel."

The ACADEMY's opinion:—"Mrs. Jocelyn is a bright and vivacious writer.... the novel is really interesting, and the hunting scenes, of course, are as attractive as usual."

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL(5th Year of Publication).—THREE GIRLS.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER. In picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

[Oct. 21.]

"BELGRAVIA."

A London Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA DUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF "BELGRAVIA."

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by FLORENCE MARRYAT, ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), MRS. J. SALE LLOYD, SOMERVILLE GIBNEY, SAUMAREZ DE HAUVILLAND, CHARLOTTE E. MORLAND, &c.

Vol. LXXVIII. (560 pages), elegantly bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

"LONDON SOCIETY."

A Monthly Magazine. Price 1s.

Serial Tales, entitled "THE COUNTESS PHARAMOND," by "RITA," and "A BURIED SIN," are running in the above Magazine.

Now ready.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF "LONDON SOCIETY."

Price 1s.

Containing Contributions by B. M. CROKER, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, the Hon. Mrs. NATHANIEL FIENNES, the AUTHOR of "MISS MOLLY," BEATRICE G. HILL, &c.

Vol. LXI. (780 pages), handsomely bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 10s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes, 2s. each.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

ONE WAY of LOVE By Constance

SMITH, Author of "The Repentance of Paul Wentworth," "The Riddle of Laurence Hayland," &c. 3 vols.

NURSE ELISIA. By G. Manville

FENN, Author of "Mabine Noodle," "The Master of the Ceremonies," &c. 2 vols.

"No one who takes up 'Nurse Elisia' will put down the volumes without regret."—Daily Telegraph.

A WOMAN'S AMBITION. By Henry

CRESSWELL, Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine," "A Willy Widow," &c. 3 vols.

"The story is one of thrilling and absorbing attraction, and it cannot fail to succeed."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Cresswell's latest novel may fairly be ranked among the good books of the season."—Saturday Review.

"The book is well written, and shows good taste throughout."

"The whole effect of the novel is good."—Manchester Examiner.

"One of the cleverest stories of the day."—Glasgow Herald.

SIR ANTHONY. By Adeline Sergeant,

Author of "Caspary Brooke's Daughter," "An East London Mystery," &c. 3 vols.

"'Sir Anthony' possesses the most uncommon merit of a well-constructed, well-balanced plot. The story is told in a perfectly straightforward way, with no unnecessary digressions; no useless characters are introduced, and the whole effect is that of a well-digested production."—Manchester Examiner.

BENT ON CONQUEST. By Edith

MAUD NICHOLSON. 3 vols.

"Evidently this is a story in which sentimental readers will rejoice. Plot, characters, incidents, and diversions are all one woof of optimism."

Athenaeum.

QUIXOTE, the WEAVER. By C. G.

FURLEY SMITH. 3 vols.

HURST & BLACKETT'STHREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

PART of the PROPERTY.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

The AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS.

By MABEL HART.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE.

By M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE.

By the AUTHOR of "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

A CROOKED PATH.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

ONE REASON WHY.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MAHME NOUSIE.

By G. MANVILLE FENN.

THE IDES of MARCH.

By G. M. ROBI S.

A SELECTION FROMHURST & BLACKETT'S*STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLE-

MAN.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS

ABOUT WOMEN.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

NOTHING NEW.

MISTRESS and MAID.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

A NOBLE LIFE.

HANNAH.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A BRAVE LADY.

STUDIES from LIFE.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

THE OLD JUDGE; or,

Life in a Colony.

TRAITS of AMERICAN

HUMOUR.

The AMERICANS at HOME

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ROBERT FALCONER.

ALEC FORBES.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LAIRD of NORLAW.

AGNES.

LIFE of IRVING.

A ROSE in JUNE.

PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

CONVERSATIONS of DR. DOLLINGER. Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELI, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE GOULD. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

JUST READY.

IN SAVAGE ISLES and SETTLED LANDS. A Record of Personal Experiences in Europe, Egypt, Ceylon, India, Australia, New Zealand, Java, &c., in 1888-91. By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and Illustrations, 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

EGYPT TO-DAY. The First to the Third Khedive. By W. FRASER RAE. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

JUST READY.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND. A Visit to Cyprus in 1880. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c. A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

STRAY RECORDS; or, Personal and Professional Notes. By CLIFFORD HARRISON. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 21s.

THE STILL LIFE of the MIDDLE TEMPLE. By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,
Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA. By Mrs. ALICK MACLEOD. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MRS. KEITH'S CRIME."

AUNT ANNE. By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD. Fourth Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

A GIRL with a TEMPER. By H. B. FINLAY KNIGHT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST

WILL BE PUBLISHED IN NOVEMBER, 1892.

A New Prose Work by John Ruskin.

THE POETRY OF ARCHITECTURE;

OR,

The Architecture of the Nations of Europe Considered in its Association with Natural Scenery and National Character.

Reprinted from "London's Magazine" for the First Time in Book Form.

In ONE VOLUME, of about 272 pages, with Chromo-Lithograph Frontispiece, 14 Plates in Photogravure from unpublished Drawings by the Author, and 9 Full-Page and other new Woodcuts.

THE SUBJECTS OF THE PLATES ARE:—Old House in Croydon—Palace by Bay of Naples—Windows at Naples—Old Building at Naples—Nise—Houses and Cathedral Spire, Um—Vercelli—Towers, Chambers—An Alpine Chapel—Looking to Lake Maggiore from Vogogna—Houses at Zog—Cottage near La Cite, Val d'Aosta—An Italian Village—Swiss Farm on the Reuss below Lucerne—Woodwork and Vine, Abbeville.

A Special Edition of 300 Copies will be issued on Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper, and the Plates on India Paper, large post 4to, £2 12s. 6d.; half-parchment, extra.

The Ordinary Edition, with all the Illustrations, 4to, 21s., cloth.

WILL BE ISSUED OCTOBER 31.

BY G. LOWES DICKINSON, M.A.,
Author of "From King to King."

REVOLUTION and REACTION in MODERN FRANCE.

Being the substance of Lectures delivered in connection with the University Extension, and dealing with the Internal, Political, and Social History of France, from 1789 to 1871.

Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

BY JOHN RUSKIN.

The ELEMENTS of DRAWING.

In Three Letters to Beginners.

1. On First Practice—2. Sketching from Nature—3. On Colour and Composition.

APPENDIX: 1. Illustrative Notes—2. Things to be Studied. INDEX.

With all the Illustrations as originally Drawn by the Author. Cloth, 5s.; roan, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

Uniform with Small Editions. [Now ready.]

As "The Elements of Drawing" has never been completely superseded, and as many readers of Mr. Ruskin's works have expressed a desire to possess the book in its old form, it is now reprinted as it stood in 1850, with the addition of an Index.

BY F. T. PIGGOTT, M.A.

THE GARDEN OF JAPAN:

A Year's Diary of its Flowers.

The Illustrations consist of Two Coloured Plates of Japanese Flowers, and several others by the Author, some Coloured Designs on the Title-Pages, also Four Pictures by Alfred East, R.I.

The Work is Hand-printed throughout. The "End Papers" have been specially made for this Book from the Design on a Lady's Kimono.

Demy 4to, price 15s., bound in Japanese Vellum, with border of Cherry Design, printed in Colours, after Keisai Yeisen.

The Special Edition, on Japanese Paper, is limited to 80 Copies, of which 75 are for Sale at 25s. net.

[Now ready.]

"To all book-lovers the volume will appeal by the perfection of its printing, paper, and binding, and to all art-lovers by the beauty of its illustrations."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Piggott's charming volume cannot fail to excite much interest about the flowers and gardens of Japan, and it will doubtless induce others to enter on a delightful field of inquiry."—Manchester Guardian.

MORITURI TE SALUTANT.

Metrical Monologues and Legends.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. [Just out.]

CONTENTS—MONOLOGUES: The Dying Confession of Col. Teipe, V.C.—Jael's Justice—The Lament of the Lord of Lee—The Last Words of a Disbeliever—The Song of a Pitiable Wife—The Repentance of a Versifier.

LEGENDS: Tout pour l'Honneur—A Roman Wife—The Bells of St. Symphorian—A Legend of the River Niagara.

GEORGE ALLEN, Orpington; and 8, Bell Yard, Temple Bar, London.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY beg to announce that MAJOR WINGATE'S Book, entitled TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892, from the Original Manuscripts of Father JOSEPH OHRWALDER, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with two Sisters, on Camels, from the Sudan, is now ready at all Libraries, 1 vol., demy 8vo, fully Illustrated, cloth, ONE GUINEA.

The narrative gives a terribly realistic description of the wild fanaticism of the Mahdi's followers, and the barbaric cruelty which they displayed at every stage of their victorious advance through the Sudan, from the siege of El Obeid to the fall of Khartum. A detailed account is given of the Mahdi himself and his chief Emirs; and the manner in which the Rebellion gradually gathered force until it became resistless, is dramatically traced. The privations of Father Ohrwalder and the Sisters are told with simplicity, but no word-painting is needed, for the story which is recounted is an altogether fearful one, and includes the destruction of General Hicks and his army, the murder of Stewart and Power, the march across the desert from El Obeid and its nameless horrors, and incidents connected with the fall of Khartum and the death of Gordon, followed, as that rapidly was, by the death of the Mahdi himself. A flood of light is thrown on many obscure phases of events in the Sudan, and one of the most important parts of the book is that dealing with the Mahdi's successor—a man utterly opposed to all recognised laws and forms of government—who has established his authority in the Sudan, and whose present rule of barbaric tyranny and despotic oppression is most graphically described. Captured in 1882, and carried along by the Mahdi in his career of bloodshed and victory, Father Ohrwalder and his companions have witnessed most of the stirring events connected with the great Sudan revolt, the details of which are now for the first time fully and faithfully described.

LONDON:
SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.;
and all Booksellers.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1892.

No. 1068, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Livery Companies of London: their Origin, Character, Development, and Social and Political Importance. By W. Carew Hazlitt. (Sonnenschein.)

MR. HAZLITT'S history of the seventy odd Livery Companies of London has an advantage commonly denied to works appealing in the main to antiquarian tastes, that of bearing upon a vexed political question of our own time. Like all national institutions, excellent or otherwise, these bodies have been called upon in the court of public opinion to show cause why they should continue to exist, at any rate in other than an extremely altered form. Fifteen years or so ago a cry was raised in many quarters for nothing less than their reorganisation and disendowment. It was contended that they stood in the way of an urgent measure of municipal reform, that the conditions under which they held their property meant a serious loss to the imperial revenue, that their principal business consisted in getting up banquets on a colossal scale, and that they should not be exempted from that control of trust moneys to which even the Universities had had to submit. Naturally enough, these attacks gave rise to a good deal of angry controversy both in and out of print, and one of the earliest things done by Mr. Gladstone in his second administration was to appoint a Royal Commission on the subject. The Companies, with one or two exceptions, met the investigation in the wisest possible way. They at once gave all the desired information, though under a respectful protest against such an intrusion into what they held to be private affairs. By withholding that information they would have been within their strictly legal rights, but would have provided their critics with additional weapons. The Report of the Commission, extending to four volumes, appeared in 1884. Its tenour was much less unfavourable than had been expected. It "went, as a whole, to show and establish in a conclusive manner, and under the most authoritative auspices, that the guilds were far from justifying the strictures passed upon their management and financial economy by many influential public men, and that, whatever might have been the directing impulse or motive, their property was, at the period when the Commission sat, extensively utilised, not only for charitable purposes—as to which there have been conflicting opinions—but for purposes directly and indirectly connected with education, social science, and human progress." Indeed, it is doubtful whether the Report, by clearing away some misconceptions arising from pure ignorance, did not put them in a stronger position than before. Mr. Gladstone, at all events, saw no necessity for drastic legislation concerning them; but two objectionable privileges which they enjoyed were done away with, one by the Corporate Tax, imposed in the same year, and the other by the slight redistribution of administrative powers effected under the London County Council. Nor, as Mr. Hazlitt is disposed to think, have the Companies much reason to fear the Socialism of the future. Many of them have adapted themselves to the changing needs and circumstances of the age with marked judgment and generosity, and by continuing this course they can hardly fail to gain a large measure of popular sympathy and support.

The records here brought together are rich in antiquarian and even historical interest. Whatever faults may be found with the Companies, it cannot be denied that for several centuries they played an important part in the making of commercial England. For their origin we must look to the mediæval craft guilds, which, in their turn, may have sprung from the collegia opificum of the Romans, and which at one time existed in almost every city of Europe. First established for charitable purposes only, the principal Companies gradually enlarged the sphere of their operations as, in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the continuous increase of commerce made the necessity of organisation among themselves more urgent. They assumed a well-nigh absolute control over the different trades and manufactures, attained both municipal and political power in the City of London, and in many cases became the possessors of extensive property in land at a comparatively trifling cost. The majority of them received charters of incorporation in the time of Edward III., who himself belonged to the Fraternity of Linen Armourers, or Merchant Taylors, and in whom they would seem to have found a steadfast friend. As readers of Chaucer may remember, each came to wear a distinctive dress, an "outward and visible sign of membership and graduated dignity." Hence the application to them of the term "livery," which, notwithstanding one meaning it has since acquired, is retained by their successors to the present day. External insignia were but a natural result of the spirit of freemasonry that prevailed among them. In Mr. Hazlitt's words, a vintner did not presume to wear the livery of a grocer, or a freeman of a warden, any more than either ventured to infringe the ordinances of his craft or to cross the lines of his charter. In other respects, of course, the Companies had not a few features in common, including a deep-seated hatred of foreign competition in trade, a punctilious regard for religious observances, and an amiable weakness for elaborate feasting on particular occasions. More especially were they at one in caring for the good name of what was proudly called the "camera regis," the city of London. To show the importance they arrived at, it may be mentioned that they were represented at coronations by their "masters," and would ride forth in full state to welcome illustrious visitors to the capital. Of their material prosperity we have more than one proof: they were heavily taxed in different ways, and it not infrequently happened that a monarch in distress would swoop down upon them for loans never to be repaid. Yet, notwithstanding all this, many of them continued to flourish as time went on, whoever might be on the throne. The Great Fire swept away a good deal of their property, but could not bring them to utter ruin. In another century or two a few of them amassed greater wealth than before, thanks in no slight measure to the increase in the value of land in the City. Meanwhile, however, the Companies had generally undergone a remarkable change. By degrees they lost their purely industrial character by admitting outsiders to their ranks, while the altered conditions of trade were distinctly unfavourable to the authority they had so long exercised. Their position at this moment is simply that of charity trustees with a large corporate estate, only five of the number continuing to discharge anything like their old regulative functions.

What are known as the twelve great Livery Companies—the Mercers, the Grocers, the Drapers, the Fishmongers, the Goldsmiths, the Skinners, the Merchant Taylors, the Haberdashers, the Salters, the Ironmongers, the Vintners, and the Clothworkers—naturally receive Mr. Hazlitt's best attention. If tradition may be trusted, the first is old enough to have provided London with its first mayor, Henry Fitz-Alwyn. Certain it is that among subsequent members of the fraternity were Sir Richard Whittington, whose influence at court and in the city did the guild immense good, and Sir Thomas Gresham, who proudly wrote "Mercer" after his name in his letters to Queen Mary. The Grocers were an amalgam of two small bodies, the Pepperers and the Spicers. Let the origin of the former be noted:

"Twenty-two persons carrying on the business of pepperers in Soper's-lane, Cheapside, agree to meet together to a dinner at the Abbot of Bury's, St. Mary Axe, and committed the particulars of their formation into a trading society to writing. They elect after dinner two persons of the company so assembled, Roger Osekyn and Lawrence de Halswell, as their first governors or wardens, appointing at the same time, in conformity with the pious spirit of the age, a priest or chaplain to celebrate divine offices for their souls."

In 1345 the company was incorporated under the title of "The Wardens and Commonalty of the Mystery of the Grocers of the City of London," and about eighty years later they built for themselves a hall "in Conhoopelane, in the Warde of Chepe." Here, in 1645, they "magnificently feasted" both Houses of Parliament, afterwards singing the forty-sixth Psalm. Whitlocke, our authority for this, also tells us that when Charles I. had been executed about six months another such entertainment was given in the same place.

"The Speaker, the House of Commons, the General, with the officers of the army, the Lord President and Council of State, after the hearing of two sermons, went to Grocers' Hall to dine with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council, according to their invitation. The music was only drums and trumpets. The feast was very sumptuous; no healths drank, and no incivility passed."

The Master of the company in 1689 was no less a personage than William III. The first mayor of London, if not a Grocer, unquestionably belonged to the Drapers Company, to whom he bequeathed an estate at Queenhithe in 1215. After 1541, their headquarters were at Thomas Cromwell's house in Throgmorton-street, which, escheated to the crown by his attainder, they had bought from Henry VIII. The Fishmongers sprang up before the middle of the twelfth century, and, thanks to the taste of Londoners for fish of all kinds, presently found themselves in a comfortable position. One of the number was Sir William Walworth, and the dagger with which he slew Wat the Tyler may be seen in their stately hall by London Bridge. The Goldsmiths and the Skinners appealed with about equal success to the vanity of their fellow citizens, the history of the former company, who are still associated with the ancient Trial of the Pyx, offering a few curious points for consideration. As for the Merchant Taylors, there is a legend to the effect that the Devil, accompanied by Pride, appeared among them in Birchin-lane, expecting to meet with a cordial reception, but was so vigorously set upon with Spanish needles that he incontinently fled. The names of Stow and Speed and John Webster grace the roll of this fraternity, who merited the respect of posterity by engaging Ben Jonson and Dekker to write for them. It is upon record that Dr. South, having been made their chaplain, took for his first sermon the not unappropriate text, "A remnant of this shall be saved." Merchant Taylors Hall, with the relics stored in it, is one of the most interesting in London. The Haberdashers, probably an offshoot of the Mercers, owed a little in olden times to the introduction of pins, and the Salters a good deal more to the once universal demand for salted fish. Though the Ironmongers were not incorporated until 1464, it is possible that they may be of greater antiquity than the other companies, as the trade had flourished in Britain since the Roman occupation. Guests at the banquets in Vintners Hall will remember that it is an old custom there to drink "Five times Five." Presumably this was introduced to commemorate the fact, recorded by Stow, that in 1356 the company "sumptuously feasted" five royal personages at once—Edward III., the King of France, the King of Scots, the King of Cyprus, and Edward the Black Prince. Like the Merchant Taylors, the Clothworkers can boast of having had a king in their ranks. James I. incorporated himself with them "as men dealing in the principal and noblest staple ware of all times—viz., woollen cloths." How it came about is thus related by Howes:

"Being in the Clothworkers Hall, the King asked who was Master of the Company, and the Lord Mayor answered, 'Sir William Stone,' unto whom the King said, 'Wilt thou make me free of the Clothworkers?' 'Yea,' quoth the Master, 'and thinke myselfe a happy man that I have lived to see this day.' Then the King said, 'Stone, give me thy hand; and now I am a Clothworker.'"

By a strange oversight, this incident, with others that I have mentioned, is not referred to by Mr. Hazlitt. The building in which it took place went down in the Great Fire. "Strange it is," wrote Pepys, "to see Clothworkers Hall on fire these three days and nights in one body of flame, it being the cellar full of oyle." Pepys himself, it may be added, was the Master in 1677, as some beautiful plate which he presented to the Company reminds us.

Nor do the minor companies, numbering over sixty, fail to obtain their due share of space. Nominally the lead among these is taken by the Dyers, who once fought with the Clothworkers for the place now occupied by the latter. Four others—the Armourers, the Carpenters, the Leathersellers, and the Sadlers—are each as wealthy as some of the great companies. For the Stationers we cannot but have a feeling of grateful respect: they long influenced the course of English learning, and their registers of publications from 1557 onwards are above all price. Mr. Hazlitt infers from the Drapers' accounts of 1516 that the tallow-chandler of those days, in addition to his own special wares, dealt in a multifarious assortment of domestic necessities—mustard, red and white vinegar, verjuice, oatmeal, fine salt, packthread, lathes, gally-pots, pans and brooms. Nay, he perceives, here the parentage of the modern chandler's shop and its almost inexhaustible resources. Be this as it may (the list of the commodities is certainly staggering), the Tallow Chandlers Company, incorporated in the fifteenth century, has always taken a high position among the secondary guilds of London, and, though not provided with the longest of purses, has worthily upheld the reputation of the City by its graceful hospitality. Dowgate-hill, on which their hall stands, is supposed to have been the centre of their industry from a very remote period. The Weavers existed in effect before the Conquest, and, indeed, are fully persuaded that they are the oldest of all the guilds. The name of a writer for all time appears on the roll of the Butchers, another ancient fraternity. In 1687-8, "at a court held in Pudding-lane, Daniel Foe (Defoe), son of James Foe, citizen and butcher, of Fore-street, Cripplegate, attended to apply for his admission by patrimony, and was admitted accordingly, and paid, in discharge of serving all offices, £10 15s." For a few years the Grocers included the sale of drugs in their monopoly. James I., possibly at the instance of Gideon Delaune, wisely resolved to separate the two trades, and the Apothecaries found themselves raised to the dignity of a distinct corporation in 1617. Their hall adjoins the site of the Blackfriars Theatre, in which Shakspeare so often set foot. The Painter-Stainers are remarkable because they were the precursors of the Royal Academy, and because they made an abortive attempt in the seventeenth century to have the court painters fined for exercising their art without being freemen of that worshipful company. Previously apart, the Barbers and Surgeons, oddly enough, joined hands under Henry VIII., but returned to single blessedness in 1745. Even after that, we are assured, the former "continued to let blood," which is probably true in more senses than one. The Fruiterers, who first appear in 1515, have come into increased prominence of late, owing to the efforts they are making, with the help of Sir James Whitehead, to extend the cultivation of fruit as a large source of profit and of wholesome food. As for the Outlors, they have suffered much from the competition of Sheffield, and the Needlemakers might have become a guild of the past if it had not been for the energy of a well-known London journalist, Mr. J. C. Parkinson.

In writing this book Mr. Hazlitt has broken a little fresh ground. He so far improves upon the labours of Herbert and others as to give us the first comprehensive record of the Livery Companies of London. If, on the whole, his portly volume, extending to between six and seven hundred pages, does not rise above the level of a dry compilation, it is marked by a fulness and accuracy which can hardly fail to make it a permanent authority on the subject. He relies in a large degree upon the report of the Royal Commission, but adds to it the fruits of special reading, independent inquiry, and a wide knowledge of English life in the past. Of the tracts and broadsides relating to the Companies, he prints a tolerably complete list. Now and then, however, he sins in the way of omission. Besides the instances already noticed, he does not speak of the curious ceremony observed by some Guilds at the elections of their Masters; and an interesting point is missed in connexion with the Fruiterers' annual offering to the Lord Mayor, "in amicable commutation of the ancient right of the municipal authorities as City fruit-meters" to a toll in kind on all produce of this sort brought within their territory. It remains to be said that the value of the work is not diminished by a blind prejudice in favour of the Companies. Mr. Hazlitt's attitude towards them is rather that of the "candid friend."

"Whatever we may have done in the direction of criticising some of the proceedings and tendencies of the city guilds, our primary motive has been, and is, not to bear a part in pulling down these few remaining old stones of London, but to preserve them. The guilds have, to a large extent, their future in their own hands; and they seem, on the whole, fairly sensible of the responsible position which they occupy, and of their changed relationship to the community."

In another page he says:

"By studying contemporary feelings and wants, the municipality, in all its length and breadth, may, and will, continue to prosper; but by a misinterpretation of its relationship to the State it would incur a danger not to be possibly overrated. No earthly power—not even Lord Salisbury's omnipotent Upper Chamber—could save the Corporation and allied bodies from destruction if they should leave the path which most of them are treading, and wherein their true salvation lies."

On the other hand, the wealthy noblemen and gentlemen who believe in the right of the State to interfere with the corporate possessions of the companies are reminded that they are playing with a two-edged weapon. They "acquired their property under circumstances precisely analogous to those which placed the civic bodies in possession of theirs. In both instances the pecuniary value was comparatively, if not absolutely, trifling at and long after the date of entrance upon it; and in both cases the national industry and prosperity made it and them what it is and what they are. The difference occurs when we compare the stewardship of the City with that of the great capitalists and owners in Parliament. 'Physician, heal thyself!' Let a Royal Commission issue a report to the nation upon the property of the Dukes of Westminster, Bedford, and Portland, the Marquis Camden, Earl Cadogan, Lord Portman, and a few more. For if redistribution is to be granted it must be granted all round."

And the equity of the proposition is really beyond dispute.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

Diversi Colores. By Herbert P. Horne. (Chiswick Press.)

HERE is a book of an alluring form; severe and grave, but also, in the right way, curious. Most modern books, if they be ambitious of pleasing the eye, succeed in nothing but in violating all propriety: the editor's or the reviewer's table is littered with volumes, "prettily" adorned, printed, and bound in fashions repugnant to the lover of Aldus and of Foulis, because guided by no canons of taste and reason. Ours is a complacent and an incapable age. We scorn the vulgarities of the Great Exhibition, but if a vulgar thing finds its way into an Exhibition of Arts and Crafts, we fall down and adore. Just so, publishers and writers, who know not that the designing of a title-page demands an almost architectural sense of composition, offer us their lawless prettiness in the name of art. But when we light upon a book in which size of page and type, quality of paper and ink, arrangement of lines and spaces, severity of ornament and design, are one and all satisfying and admirable, we look with confidence to the discovery of like excellences in the literature of so good and choice an artist. Here, in external matters, is evidence of abundant thought: surely, then, the interior graces and dignities will not be wanting. And it is indeed so.

Mr. Horne has chosen for his volume but thirty-three poems, in the cleanest lyrical manner: brief, that is to say, and finely done, and full charged with imaginative thought. They are chiefly concerned with two great interests: with the human beauty of divine religion and with the divine beauty of human love. Such a phrase tries to express and to explain the sentiment of these poems, and somewhat to allay the reproaches of those who may be disposed to detect in the devotional poems something unreal, and in the passionate poems something sensual. A faith which does not merely embody moral ideas in beautiful concrete form is no easy matter of verse: "from David unto Dante," as

Mr. Patmore sings, there were no poets of divinity in the Jewish and Christian worlds; and, though Dante be a magnificent exception, there have been "none since him." If any man be foolish enough to read Milton in the spirit of creeds and councils, he will find Milton, under Puritan forms, cherishing a cultured and austere religion of "Epicurean and Stoic severe"; and in Lucifer, son of the morning, a grander and more touching figure than the shadowy deities or demigods of Milton's Heaven. But of fine religious verse two kinds have conspicuously flourished, although in ways less lofty than those taken by the profane poets. There is the religious verse of strong believers, to whom the thing celebrated is all in all, though a natural genius keeps their expression at a good degree of excellence; such men were Herbert and Newman. And there is the religious verse of men who, whether fervent believers or no, were filled with the imaginative or the pictorial beauty of the thing celebrated, its power to touch and charm: such men were Crashaw, the ardent Catholic, and Herrick, the pagan Protestant. Angelico and Perugino may stand for types of the like distinction among Christian painters. It is to the latter of these two classes that Mr. Horne would seem to belong; he is taken by that aspect of Christianity, in which the sacred persons and stories wear an appealing beauty after a human fashion: mentem mortalia tangunt, here is cause for wonder, reason for tears, a reaching to the heart. But the divine element, if not fully felt, is grandly apprehended: μέγας ἐν τοῦ-τος θεός; here are "the magnalities of religion," with an eternal strength, realised for the imagination by the various witness of ages. Take, for example, Mr. Horne's "Morning Song for Christmas Day"; it is designed with an admiring remembrance of much old verse for music, sung and played gravely in high places upon the viols: voice answering voice, and joining voice, as the music runs its divisions, and the song disposes its theme. You feel the ceremonial beauty of the Christmas song, with its moving presentation of a story, at once homely and divine. The sentiment is sanctioned and embalmed by a thousand memories. To compose such a piece, in the very spirit of Jacobean art, with all its glad gravity of demeanour, yet without a trace of servile imitation, is to preserve a sense of old powers and beauties for use in living art, rare enough in these days. In his few poems upon sacred matters, Mr. Horne appears to me far more really successful than Mr. Swinburne or Rossetti: they copied the externals; Mr. Horne has gone far to realise the interior graces and aims, while he presents them in curiously fortunate form.

But it is in his secular or profane poems that Mr. Horne manifests his greater distinction of tone. Upon the composition of these he has exercised a singular degree of constructive power. It would be possible to work out, with some completeness of idea and detail, the influence upon poetry of a trained skill in the allied arts of design: to show how the perfect presentation of thought, with its imageries and ornaments, require an architectural sense of truth and of simplicity in proportion. Few modern poets work under so saving a discipline: they are lavish, luxuriant, wanton. But when a poem, be it lyric or epic or dramatic, is clean and clear of design, "without superfluousness, without defect," it carries us away to the memories and the traditions of happier days for art. Mr. Horne's poems are of this rare sort; concentrated, weighty, charged with the graces that come of discipline. In the main, they are concerned with the moments and the affairs of love, in the power of beauty to inspire the intellectual imagination. "Beauty like hers is genius," wrote Rossetti, as with some echo in his mind of that earlier saying, Steele's or Congreve's, "to love her is a liberal education." And these lyrics, dealing with beauty in this charmed way, have two qualities, which might impress a reader unversed in such considerations, as the qualities of coldness and of sensuousness, combined to produce an unpleasing effect of contemptuousness. The judgment would be unjust, but not unintelligible. The artistic severity, which refines upon the contents of imagination, can rarely make a direct appeal to all the world; it appeals to the serious and the careful among the followers of aesthetic pleasure: quantum est hominum venustiorum. And so these admirable verses will not touch a casual reader; in seeming to such an one somewhat bald, rigid, inhuman, they pay the penalty which Milton and Dante, the supreme and unapproachable masters, were content to pay: the penalty of losing the vagrant sympathies of a multitude. Sophocles and Euripides, Virgil and Horace, Wordsworth and Byron, Goethe and Schiller, Corneille and Hugo, all great, all honourable men of art; but how great an interval separates the first in each pair from the second. And with the lovers of spiritual and intellectual beauty because it is severe, not because it is unrestrained, lies the certainty of a lasting success. In that school of elect masters there is room for all worthy disciples; and I make no foolish nor exaggerated claim, if I claim for these poems that they are the work of no mean disciple.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

The Career of Columbus. By Charles I. Elton. With Map. (Cassells.)

As the title implies, this work is not intended to be a biography of Columbus—it presupposes in the reader some knowledge of many of the incidents of his life; but it is somewhat difficult to classify it. Mr. Elton evidently did not wish to tell over again an oft-told tale; therefore he has dealt with Columbus in a different way from that of the mere biographer. He examines the circumstances which made Columbus the man he was, the ambitions of the age which turned his thoughts in one direction, the conditions of navigation which made his attempt rational and successful, the peculiar pedantic and religious mysticism which gave him faith in his undertaking, and made the result a certainty to himself beforehand, but yet hindered him from over rightly understanding what it was that he had done.

Mr. Elton tells all this with an amount of learning and research which will be lost on the ordinary reader; for, from the first page to the last, though mentioning generally his authorities in the text, not a single note, or reference to the particular book, or passage, is given. Yet we often long for this—e.g., on page 79, we should have been glad to know the actual title and edition of the Cosmogony of Aethicus (Ethicus Hister, we presume), to which allusion is made in the text. We become constantly aware that real research has been made, but the materials found are concealed from the reader, who is thus scarcely able to appreciate at their due worth Mr. Elton's results and conclusions.

In the Preface, Mr. Elton states it as his object "rather to illustrate the explorer's character than to debate the evidence on disputed points in his biography." Thus, Genoa, rather than Savona, is assumed as the birthplace of Columbus; the story of the visit to the Convent of La Rabida and the part played by its Prior is not discussed; the relations of Columbus to the French admirals, Coulon, or Colombo, or "the Pirates Colombo," as their victims called them, and their connexion with the Colombo of the Riviera, are narrated but are hardly cleared up. The account of the sea fight off St. Vincent in 1485 only confuses matters; it was in that of 1470 that Columbus saved his life by swimming. Mr. Elton speaks with reserve about the discovery of North America by the Northmen, and of the effect of the rumour of such discoveries on Columbus. His residence, after his marriage, on the island of Porto Santo, of which an attractive picture is given, probably furnished more sources of corroboration to what had hitherto been mere theory. Watling Island is given as the real point of discovery and landing on the New World.

All this is very well told, and evidently with full knowledge of the various authorities. But the book seems to us to need an additional chapter in order to be complete. The object of it is "to illustrate the explorer's character," but it closes without any summary of that character. It leaves still undecided, almost undiscussed, the questions: Were Columbus and his family treated unfairly or not by the Spanish sovereigns? Were not his misfortunes due in great part to his own faults of temper and character? Originally Columbus knew not what it was that he asked for, nor the Catholic kings what they granted; was it wise or reasonable in him to insist on the letter of the compact, when the result proved so different from what either party had expected? These are questions full of interest; there are almost, if not quite, enough materials to answer them. Mr. Elton has shed some light upon them, has illustrated them; but why has he recoiled from the fuller statement in solution of them? Why have we not the picture suggested, if not actually promised, in the Preface? Such a portrait drawn by Mr. Elton would have been masterly; the whole book shows us this. It is so good that it ought to have been better. It is only the lack of this final chapter which makes us close it with a feeling of disappointment; but it is very much higher than any piece of popular book-making written for the occasion.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Lessing's Laocoon. Edited, with English Notes, by A. Hamann. Revised, with an Introduction, by L. E. Upcott. (Oxford: The Clarendon Press.)

DR. ALBERT HAMANN published in 1878 an edition of Lessing's Laocoon, with an introduction and notes in English. This work has now been re-edited by Mr. L. E. Upcott, who, in revising Dr. Hamann's notes, has held before himself as a model "the style of annotation customary in well-edited Greek and Latin books," which, indeed, was very much Dr. Hamann's model too. The result is a scholarly and helpful edition of the Laocoon. The notes are brief but thoroughly adequate. They clear up all linguistic difficulties, and give the student all the collateral information he can reasonably demand on the subjects treated by Lessing. The classical quotations are translated, the allusions are explained, the errors are corrected, the latest information on the subject of ancient art is brought to bear where it is really relevant, and judiciously kept out of sight where it is not. Roman type is used in the text instead of what Dr. Hamann calls "the barbarous letters to which Germany still clings with misguided patriotism," and with results, it may be added, painfully evident in her troops of bespectacled school children. The proof reading has evidently been carried out with extreme care; in fact, the book might be called faultless were it not for one or two notes, in which a rash attempt is made to suggest improvements in Lessing's style. In chap. xii. Lessing observes that Count Caylus is unable to tell us how, in a painting of certain Homeric scenes, figures described by the poet as invisible

"so anzubringen sind, dass die Personen des Gemäldes sie nicht sehen, wenigstens sie nicht nothwendig sehen zu müssen scheinen können."

The string of verbs here is really not so very objectionable, for the strong emphasis to be laid on "scheinen" relieves the effect of the accumulation. But Dr. Hamann would amend the sentence from "wenigstens" down by writing

"oder wenigstens so, dass es scheinen könnte, als ob sie dieselben nicht nothwendig sehen müssten."

Now I venture to submit that this is weak and watery where Lessing is strong and terse, and also that the introduction of a second "so" would clash disagreeably not only with the first "so" but with a third "so" which, as it happens, begins the next sentence. Again, in chap. xx. Lessing comments on Ariosto's detailed description of Alcina's beauty:

"Was nutzt alle diese Gelehrsamkeit und Einsicht uns Lesern, die wir eine schöne Frau zu sehen glauben wollen, die wir etwas von der sanften Wallung des Geblüts dabei empfinden wollen, die den wirklichen Anblick der Schönheit begleitet?"

Dr. Hamann would avoid the heaping up of verbs by writing, "die wir glauben wollen, eine schöne Frau zu sehen." But this is surely another hasty and temerarious suggestion. "Glauben wollen" balances "empfinden wollen," and cannot be removed from the place where Lessing put it without spoiling the structure and rhythm of the passage.

Structure and rhythm—these are strange words to apply to German prose, the most amorphous, heavy, unwieldy method of expression that any civilised people has devised for itself! But there is just the signal merit of Lessing; there is the merit which makes him so peculiarly valuable to the foreign student who wishes to obtain a thorough mastery of the German tongue. Steeped in the atmosphere of the classics, a humanist to whom classical literature was neither a form of philology nor a form of folk-lore, he endowed the literature of his own country with a native classic style, such as later Germany, trained in philology and folk-lore, has little care to imitate. Here, no doubt, his inborn dramatic instinct helped him: the necessity he felt to make every word a deed, to make it do its work, strike home. His sentences are structures of words, not heaps or bundles.

He proves on every page that a classic German prose can be written, and has been written—a prose more German in its character than Heine's, more finished in its rhetoric than Goethe's:

"Wir lachen, wenn wir hören, dass bei den Alten auch die Künste bürgerlichen Gesetzen unterworfen gewesen. Aber wir haben nicht immer Recht, wenn wir lachen. Unstreitig müssen sich die Gesetze über die Wissenschaften keine Gewalt anmassen; denn der Endzweck der Wissenschaften ist Wahrheit. Wahrheit ist der Seele nothwendig; und es wird Tyrannei, ihr in Befriedigung dieses wesentlichen Bedürfnisses den geringsten Zwang anzuthun. Der Endzweck der Künste hingegen ist Vergnügen; und das Vergnügen ist entbehrlich. Also darf es allerdings von dem Gesetzgeber abhängen, welche Art von Vergnügen, und in welchem Masse er jede Art desselben verstaten will (Laoc. ii.).

Here is a rhetoric which marches, and does not crawl, a phrase which has sonority and rhythm; and I hardly know where else to look for these qualities in German prose literature.

From this point of view, however, something better might have been found for the English student than the Laocoon. Lessing in controversy with Winckelmann and Caylus is not so entertaining or so brilliant as he sometimes is in controversy with Klotz or with Rösser or with Goeze; and, although the Laocoon is a work which lies at the root of all modern aesthetic criticism, although perhaps no work of pure criticism ever had so immediate and so wholesome an effect on creative art, still one must admit that some half dozen chapters out of twenty-nine are all the modern student really needs to make himself acquainted with. Much of it deals with antiquated controversies; in much of it, especially when he treats of artistic questions, Lessing shows himself very ill-informed. He had never seen even a cast of the Laocoon group, which he uses as the starting point of his discussion. The root idea of the treatise, that the excellence of any art lies in developing the capacities peculiar to its own material, not in imitating those of another, is, of course, of profound value, and is expounded with admirable force and insight. But the extent to which words can legitimately be used, not merely to relate actions, but to paint objects, was gravely underestimated by Lessing. Haller's much-lauded description of the Alpine gentian, quoted by Lessing as a conspicuous example of the necessary failure of words to paint an object, is certainly deplorable; but if Haller cannot paint a gentian in words Mr. Ruskin can. The Nibelungenlied is a great poem, without a trace of the pictorial imagination; yet a poem is not the worse, but the better, for pure word-pictures such as this from Sordello:

"Here, left a sullen breathing while
Up-gathered on himself the Fighter stood
For his last fight, and wiping treacherous blood
Out of the eyelids just held ope beneath
Those shading fingers in their iron sheath,
Steadied his strengths amid the buz and stir
Of the dusk, hideous amphitheatre."

It is singular that, so far as I am aware, no one has published a book of extracts from Lessing's critical writings for the use of students of German. Books of extracts are, of course, generally detestable to lovers of literature, but all Lessing's prose is of so fragmentary a character—the Laocoon itself is a fragment—that this kind of treatment is appropriate in his case. A most interesting and useful book might be made by selecting portions of the writings of Lessing, which would fairly represent his contributions to the literary, philosophic, and religious thought of his time. I think the labours of Dr. Hamann and Mr. Upcott would have been better spent on such a book as that. But if it was desirable that English students should have an edition of the Laocoon worthy of a European classic, then here it is; and it may be hoped that they will be grateful for it.

T. W. ROLLESTON.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF TACITUS.

The History of P. Cornelius Tacitus. Translated into English, with an Introduction and Notes, by A. W. Quill. In two vols. Vol. I. (John Murray.)

IT is no disparagement to Mr. Quill to say that he has attempted an enterprise beyond his powers. If any classical author can be really translated, it will be some second-rate writer, with a neutral, colourless style. Pausanias can suffer no wrong from a translator, so long as the translator knows Greek. Tacitus has hitherto defied all efforts to render him into a modern tongue. We have seen neat translations of short passages from his works; but their carefully studied mannerism would become intolerable if prolonged. We have enjoyed clever parodies of him, but these have been almost centos from his own language. A satisfying translation of the Annals or of the Histories we have never seen, and do not greatly expect to see. Mr. Quill has made his success impossible by undertaking too much at once. It would be no easy task to extract to the full the meaning of Tacitus, and give it to the reader in plain and precise English.

This, however, could be done, and well done. But to combine this with the task of putting the meaning of Tacitus into something like the form of Tacitus within an English mould is to court failure; the genius of our language is against it. Mr. Quill has aimed at catching "the echo of a classic voice"; the echo is like a voice from a phonograph—a caricature of the original.

The "pregnant brevity," which Mr. Quill, like every reader of Tacitus, admires, cannot be reproduced in English. We have no inflections; we are forced to expand the compact Latin of moods and case-endings; and when a translator tries to make compensation for this, he falls into curtness, obscurity, or laxity of phrase. It is surely not English to say "Admitting that Vespasian created my position, amplified by Titus, exalted by Domitian, still I am bound in honour to write without prejudice."

More successfully, perhaps, might the poetic colour of the historian's language be copied, though an attempt to reproduce one element only of that blended mass of peculiarities which makes up the style of Tacitus would be unjust as disturbing a nice balance. Still, the poetical turns alone might—were it worth while to try so artificial an experiment—be imitated, if the imitator could spend a lifetime in finding appropriate phrases from our own verse-literature ("gainst," "scape," and "twixt" alone will not do), and if he could make his borrowed turns of expression and choice of words suggest refinement, as such things do in Latin, instead of bombast or catch-words, as they do in English. But the effort to realise this particular end would be at war with the search for brevity, and is still more inconsistent with a taste for the style of Carlyle.

"The modern counterpart of Cornelius Tacitus is undoubtedly Thomas Carlyle. . . . Whoever studies Tacitus faithfully, and seeks to translate him with some regard to the condensation of the original, must find, will he, nill he, Carlyle coming out through the tips of his fingers."

Though there is much of truth in this, and though bits of the French Revolution stick in the memory like bits of the Histories, yet devotion to this aspect of Tacitus' manner would prevent the reproduction of other aspects. Not only must the poetical language disappear, but the little rhetorical tricks must go too. Petty they are, no doubt; but without them Tacitus would not be Tacitus. Yet Carlyle would none of them, and insistence on brevity would make them difficult. Changes of word, for mere change's sake, might be managed. Change of construction inside a sentence would generally be intolerable in English. Alliteration we might retain—Mr. Quill is quite right with his "greed and hate, those mainsprings of mutiny," and his "resting-place 'twixt pinnacle and perdition"—but the antithesis and epigram of Tacitus can seldom be reproduced without sounding laboured. In the Latin they are neat because they are concise; but English tends rather to insert a point into well-rounded sentences; and then what becomes of Tacitus' brevity? Mr. Quill gives us a succession of jerks, and his brevity prepense makes him more rugged than even Carlyle.

On these accounts, then, we feel unsatisfied with this newest attempt to translate the Histories; but we find it also disfigured by occasional lapses into newspaper-English. "Synchronise" and "maudlin gush" are words out of keeping here; "lavish feeds" is slangy; and the French canaille has not even the poor excuse of answering to a Greek word. Moreover, although it is clear that Mr. Quill has been taking immense pains over his attempt to solve an impossible puzzle, some slight confusions of metaphor have escaped his revision. In defence of saying that "Galba's easy temper whetted the maw of favourites," it might be urged that people do sometimes speak of a whet to the appetite; but it would be hard to justify the expression that "a lying concoction, although started with a spurt, died away after a few days," or the talk of "a social atmosphere pregnant with mischief." But we must let Mr. Quill speak for himself in a longer passage (Book ii., c. 66):—

"The spirit, quite unbroken, of the conquered legions, made Vitellius anxious. Scattered through Italy, intermingled with the victors, they talked treason, and the Fourteenth Legion, furious beyond all others, challenged their defeat. 'Twas only a detachment,' they cried, 'was routed at the battle of Bedriacum; the strength of our legion was not there.' Vitellius determined to send the Fourteenth back to Britain, whence Nero had summoned them, and meanwhile quarter upon them their inveterate enemies, the Batavian cohorts. Tranquillity soon vanished mid such an array of armed hate. At Turin, whilst a Batavian violently accused an artisan of cheating, and a legionary upheld the man as his billet, their respective comrades gathered round and passed from brawls to blows. A fierce conflict would have flamed forth had not two Praetorian cohorts, taking sides with the Fourteenth, inspired them with courage and scared the Batavians. These latter Vitellius attached to his army in recognition of their loyalty, but ordered the legion to cross the Little St. Bernard and deflect their course away from Vienne, for the Vienne, too, were suspected. On the night of the legion's departure, part of Turin was destroyed by the scattered and abandoned watch-fires, a loss, like many other evils in the war, blotted out by the greater calamities of other cities. After the Fourteenth had crossed the Alps, the most mutinous mooted a march toward Vienne, but they were restrained by the unanimity of the more orderly, and the legion was landed in Britain."

Much more valuable than the translation are the notes. Here we have the conclusions arrived at by good scholarship, well nourished on the latest literature of the subject. Mr. Quill defends his views with the sort of acuteness and practicality which we have been wont to admire in the pages of Hermathena.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

Le Japon Pratique. Par Félix Régamey. Avec cent dessins par l'auteur. (Paris: Hetzel.)

THIS work has reached a second edition, and though a little out of date, it is full of information, and in the small space of 300 pages of good type contains sufficient facts to supply texts for volumes of articles on Japan.

The book is divided into parts. The first and most interesting is headed "Le Japon vu par un artiste"; then follows a concise account of the methods of working in stone, wood, and metal, of manufacturing pottery and textile substances, and chapters upon the food and fruits of the country. It concludes with a useful vocabulary and list of authorities on Japan stretching from Marco Polo to Satow and Hawes.

With the exception of the first part, the work is evidently a compilation from official documents, and the authorities given in the bibliography; but as in many French handbooks, the compiler has sacrificed everything to minute accuracy, so much so that three pages are devoted to a catalogue of the trees used in carpentry and cabinet work. The Japanese names of seventeen distinct tints employed in silk dyeing, in addition to the "plantes tinctoriales," are given, with a full account of the sources from whence they are derived. Every process, either in manufactures, arts, or cookery, is described stage by stage; the author does not spare us a recapitulation of the hours of repose enjoyed by silkworms before they begin to spin. The result upon the reader is disastrous; and were it not that he is led on from page to page by the attraction of the illustrations, he would soon tire of the painstaking industry which has been expended upon the book. Still, there is some satisfaction in knowing there are seventeen edible fungi to be found in Japan, and that the excellent shoyu (soy) requires to be heated thrice a day for three months, and then pressed through cotton bags, boiled, left to cool, clarified and poured into little barrels, before becoming fit for use.

M. Régamey has drunk deep at the same fountain as M. Gonse, and has adopted very fully his view of the genius of the last and greatest Japanese artist, Hokusai, "le vieillard fou de dessin," as he called himself—the man who, during his ninety years of life, by his wondrous sketches of the comedies and dramas of animal and human life, taught the Japanese people the beauty of unconventionality. His pupil, Kiosai, who died but three years ago, was visited by M. Régamey, who gives us an admirable sketch of the artist resting from his work, spectacles in hand. The two painters each drew the other's portrait; and I can well imagine that the one by the Japanese artist was "un croquis de verve étourdissante," and that the Frenchman keeps it as his most precious possession. With the death of Kiosai, the bead roll of Japanese painters closes. The production and reproduction of pictures, engravings, and illustrations has rapidly increased, but the extraordinary artistic instinct of the Japanese now called upon to exert itself for gain has tended to lower the standard of art; for such is their facility of creation that most of their works are good, but none supremely excellent.

We have much to learn from a people whose pen is a brush, and who can pourtray the fleeting impressions of the moment more easily than they can describe them.

S. McCALMONT HILL.

NEW NOVELS.

The Marquis of Carabas. By Aaron Watson and Lillias Wassermann. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Honourable Jane. By Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip). In 3 vols. (White.)

Treason Felony. By John Hill. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Eunice Anscombe. By Mrs. J. E. H. Gordon. (Sampson Low.)

The Incomplete Adventurer. By Tighe Hopkins. (Ward & Downey.)

The Black Carnation. By Fergus Hume. (Gale & Polden.)

Dr. Campion's Patients. By W. G. Waters. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

The Disintegrator. By Arthur Morgan and Charles Brown. (Digby, Long & Co.)

The Dynamitards. By Reginald Tayler. (Henry.)

ROMANCES of the peerage, whether they be truth in the guise of fiction or fiction counterfeiting truth, are seldom without interest, and the fortunes of so ancient a noble house as that of Carabas might be expected to furnish the story-teller with excellent material. One had supposed, however, that there was only one Marquis of Carabas—legendary history, at any rate, knows only one—whereas Mr. Aaron Watson and Miss Wassermann introduce us to four. The first of the four is an excellent specimen of his order: a peer so finely constituted on the moral side that his son's delinquencies break his heart. The son, who becomes the next marquis, has no heart to break; but he has a skull which deserves no better fate than to be scalped, and it is by an operation of that kind that he comes to an untimely end. The third marquis is a very exemplary person, until a certain temptation occurs to him, when he goes wrong, and ends his career ignominiously. The fourth is a man of the people, and therefore a model of all the reforming virtues. A plot in which there are so many leading characters necessarily has a fair number of subordinate ones, and it is these who give to the story its chief interest. The Dean family, and that singular American, Marc Aurelius Tidd, are all excellent of their kind. Little Nellie Dean the invalid, and Josh the poet, are two of the most essential people in the book; and the most impressive episode of the story is that of the Socialist procession, which has a tragic ending for one of these two, and melancholy consequences for the other. The novel calls itself a story of to-day; and, if the plausible telling of incidents the like of which might happen in contemporary life suffices for such a story, then it is appropriately named, and will serve its purpose.

What good purpose is to be served by such a book as The Honourable Jane one scarcely knows. The majority of the people in it are either worthless or uninteresting, and the two who are meant to be something better are poor creatures. Jane Herries may have had in her the making of a heroine; but her various acts of selfabnegation are foolish rather than heroic. As for Captain Stafford, it is inconceivable that a man with the sense and character vaguely imputed to him would be so weak and so easily taken in. The story will perhaps appeal to the more omnivorous sort of novel readers; but they are a class who do not want the aid of a critic.

The opening chapter of Treason Felony is brilliant. The two Irishmen and their Scotch comrade, whose Celtic nationalities are discernible under their Spanish-American names, are seen to advantage as the fighting emissaries of a transatlantic Republic. Nor do they cease to be interesting in the tamer events which make up the rest of the story. But the English part of the plot is a failure. The Long family are dullness itself, as also is Harry Long's friend Shaw, whose talk is far too prosy. If all that is non-essential in the English chapters were cut out, a bright and effective tale would remain.

That it is possible to tell an admirable story to advantage in one volume is shown by Mrs. J. E. H. Gordon in Eunice Anscombe. Here we have for the most part a rural plot, and a few characters of that true rustic type which is charming when naturally rendered, and hopelessly spoiled by exaggeration or feebleness in the drawing. Farmer Dale is an excellent specimen of it, and his oracular opinions on various topics are not unworthy to be remembered with those of Mrs. Poyser of immortal memory. Eunice herself, though she belongs to another class, is delightfully rustic in her ways of thought. Her notion that "violets always look so much more glad to see people than any other flowers"—she had arranged some in a visitor's room—is very happy. The visitor puts in a plea for roses; but Eunice will only agree as to the old-fashioned roses—"not those tiresome Maréchal Niels that hang their heads and say, 'I wish you had not gathered us.' And red roses grow sulky and turn mauve to spite you for picking them." Among the other characters are two very genuine boys, Bimbi and Bobo, who have little to do with the plot, but whose unsophisticated freshness may be said to furnish the keynote of the story.

Mr. Tighe Hopkins might surely have called his very clever tale by a more appropriate name than The Incomplete Adventurer. Guy Warwick is not an adventurer at all, but an enthusiast, and a choice specimen of that genus. A sword-thrust in the arm is healed by a powder, which in some remarkable way combines curative and life-sustaining properties. It is, in fact, an equivalent of the long-sought elixir vitae, and the discoverer of it is an obscure French physician. Guy, who is as eloquent as an Irishman, as irrational as Don Quixote, and as poor as both, wants to give impossible thousands for the secret of its composition, but the modest Frenchman will not accept a higher price than £500. Guy has not as many pence, but he assures himself that the philanthropic capitalists of England will cheerfully provide funds, both for buying the Frenchman's secret and for extending the blessings of the powder to the human race. He tries the Stock Exchange, and to his delight finds some of the worthies of that institution ready to listen to his proposals. But their idea is to turn Guy into a quack, and to send him about the country with the accessories of a showman. He is naturally indignant, and before any other course suggests itself, the Frenchman dies. The story, which is brilliantly told and may be read at a sitting, does not leave the poor enthusiast unconsoled.

Mr. Fergus Hume has the knack of writing thrilling books, and The Black Carnation is as thrilling as any he has produced. A tragedy occurs in the first chapter, and the rest of the tale is occupied with the discovery of the criminal and the unravelling of the mystery of the crime. Theory after theory suggests itself, and the reader over and over again imagines that he is on the right track; but the secret is so carefully kept that, when it is told in the last chapter, it comes as a complete surprise.

Many are the devices for tacking together a number of short stories and giving them a connected interest. Mr. Waters has hit upon an ingenious one in Dr. Campion's Patients. Dr. Campion establishes a home of refuge for weary men. It lies in the heart of London, and externally looks like an unoccupied house, while the building has the interesting reputation of being haunted. Haunted in a sense it is, for the sumptuous interior hears the strange stories of men who would have rushed wearily out of life if a kindly hand had not drawn them into this unsuspected and welcome hiding-place. The would-be suicides are men of attainments and character, and the revelations they have to make are therefore the more impressive. The stories have all the air of actuality.

There is seldom much to be said for stories which affect to accomplish things impossible to science. The Disintegrator belongs to that kind of fiction. The hero of the story is meant to be a remarkable person. "Guiding and controlling all his actions," we are told, "was a magnificent self-reliance, which, aided by great energy and considerable strength, enabled him to do almost anything he desired." One of the things he desired to do was to acquire such a mastery over natural laws as to be able to thwart them or control them at his will. The wish is conceivable, but not its attainment; and though the reader will follow the story of Mr. Foden Flint's supposed achievements with curiosity and interest, he will not be beguiled into believing in them.

Is there, then, any romance latent in dynamite? Mr. Reginald Tayler, at any rate, bases a well-laid plot—in The Dynamitards—on the Nihilist disturbances of 1888; and he contrives to blend a pretty love story with a record of villainy. But he also flavours his book with a few scraps of pious reflections, which he had better have omitted.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

Garden Design and Architects' Gardens. By W. Robinson. (John Murray.) How far has the architect a right to determine the character of the garden which is to surround the house he has designed? His claim to have a large voice in the matter has been asserted with vigour by Messrs. Blomfield and Thomas (who are architects), and the assertion has been made by them in a little volume, daintily bound and elegantly illustrated (see ACADEMY, May 21). It has now provoked a spirited reply from the very competent pen of Mr. W. Robinson (who is a professional gardener), and he, too, has not despised the advantages which well-executed woodcuts lend to the treatment of such a subject. So the public is indebted to both parties for a pretty book, and will probably be satisfied that in such a controversy there is a good deal to be said on both sides. The formal garden has its merits, its beauties, and its appropriateness; the informal garden also has them—"only more." When Mr. Robinson says that

"the place of formal gardening is clear for ever. The architect can help the gardener much by building a beautiful house! That is his work. The true architect, it seems to me, would seek to go no further," he is merely telling the architect to mind his own business and stick to bricks and mortar. But in the way he tells him this he seems to display a little of that professional jealousy which is apt to interfere with fair judgment. Is the painter of a beautiful picture to be precluded from expressing an opinion on the style of the frame, lest its maker should be offended thereby? And is it not possible for architect and gardener so to work together that harmony shall prevail both in action and in its results? We believe it is, and that in Mr. Robinson's own practice it is found. With very much that Mr. Robinson says we fully agree. There is a wide distinction between formality and deformity. A yew hedge well clipped is an example (and, in its place, a good example) of the former; a yew tree distorted into some fantastic shape is an example (everywhere bad) of the latter.

Contributions to Horticultural Literature. By William Paul. (Paul & Son, Waltham Cross.) The author of this volume stands in the first rank of practical gardeners, and the experience of a long life spent in the intelligent—one might even say the enthusiastic—pursuit of horticulture is worth having. The earliest of the papers comprised in this volume is dated 1843, and deals with the cultivation of roses in pots. In the fifty years that have elapsed since it was written, Mr. Paul has seen the adoption of his suggestion that we should follow the then French fashion, and make the pot-culture of roses part of our general system. But pretty well half of this volume is occupied with the subject of roses, and yet there is more to be said upon it, for Mr. Paul himself is the author of an exhaustive work on The Rose Garden, which runs to 360 pages. On other matters there are directions and hints that will be invaluable to the horticulturist, whether professional or amateur; and we have no hesitation in saying that these contributions, widely scattered through various journals, were worth collecting, and form an important contribution to the literature of the garden.

The Gentlewoman's Book of Gardening. By Edith C. Chamberlain and Fanny Douglas. (Henry.) This is one of the recent additions to the "Victoria Library for Gentlewomen," and deals with a subject in which many ladies take an interest. Information is given in most of the branches of horticulture which are likely to be practised by female hands, whether gentle or simple; and if the style of writing is, from a literary point of view, somewhat too florid, the tone is generally practical. A chapter is devoted to gardening as a profession. We are told that there are many ladies throughout the country making a moderate competence by gardening, and that where there have been failures they have been due to ignorance, incompetence, and foolish pride. But if gardening cannot be made a profitable business by all, it is certainly a pleasant and healthy recreation. "The present-day woman is"—our authoress tells us—"all cosmetics, all whalebone, all nerves." Without endorsing such a statement, we may express our belief that she who cultivates a garden cultivates her health.

The Rural Exodus. By P. A. Graham. (Methuen.) Every great movement in social or economic science is the result of complex causes: the least study of the steady flow from the country during late years into cities and towns shows this conclusively. Under all the springs of action affecting this phenomenon lie two which specially influence it: first the depreciation of agriculture; next, education. With regard to the first of these, the farmer's own difficulties react upon his labourers: he cannot find them so much work as in the good old days, and their work cannot be remunerated with satisfactory wages. The low price of corn, together with unfavourable seasons, have told greatly upon rural life. Education has resulted in reading, even if it be only newspaper reading, and in a desire to see more of the world in the hopes of bettering the countryman's lot. Subsidiary reasons exist, but these in the main have led to the rural exodus. Mr. Graham rightly says: "It is hardly possible to avoid the conclusion that in the depressed state of agriculture we must seek for the great reason of the rural exodus, and the only remedy that by any chance can be effectual must rely mainly upon the revival of this industry." When he goes on to attribute another leading cause to the dulness of rural life he is mistaken. Dwellers in the country, especially farm labourers, do not feel this dulness. It is the condition under which they have been born and brought up, and it does not affect the problem save in a very limited measure. Mr. Graham's book is somewhat desultory, a series of pleasant sketches of the parson, the squire, and village life generally; while his essays on the remedies which have been proposed for this influx of the country to the town are slight and superficial—the allotment system, fruit-farming, parish councils and the like, merit more careful treatment at his hands. But they are written in a pleasant spirit, and show considerable powers of observation. The Rural Exodus holds its own against many of the books which have lately been written about Hodge and his prospects. It is a pity that the author should allow himself in such careless writing as—"he feels far more than he ought to," "where the people go to," "schoolmasters who staff the rural schools" and the like; while the obvious sneer at the squire for "attaching quite too much importance to a certain passage in the Church Catechism about 'doing my duty in that state of life unto which it has pleased God to call me,'" is not merely unwarranted, but is actually precluded by the true quotation, "that state of life unto which it shall please God to call me." In spite of these blemishes, there is much in Mr. Graham's reflections which is worth the serious attention of all who day by day see a great problem working itself out before their eyes, in districts proverbial of old for their lack of change and the permanence of their customs and habits.

Rod and River: or, Fly-fishing for Salmon, Trout and Grayling. By Major A. T. Fisher. (Bentley.) Although carefully put together and beautified with big print and wide margins, this book can scarcely be commended, save on Venator's principle—"I love any discourse of rivers and fish and fishing." It contains absolutely nothing that is new, and what is old is not presented in any striking manner. Ronalds and Halford are largely quoted with regard to trout flies. The list of salmon flies and their tying is the best feature of the book. Major Fisher seems to have had little experience of Scotch fishing, and his paragraphs on sea-trout fishing and fishing for salmo ferox are superficiality itself. Loch "Luggan" ought to be "Laggan," and "whylling" is of course a misprint for "whirling." The author cannot understand why the alder-fly is called the "orl." In Herefordshire the alder-tree is universally known as the "orl." Will it be believed that, after Kingsley's Chalk Stream Studies, Major Fisher has never used the "governor-fly," and does not even name that admirable fisherman in connexion with the alder-fly? Let us earn Major Fisher's gratitude by introducing him to Kingsley's appreciative eloquence on the alder-fly, beginning at "O thou beloved member of the brute creation! Songs have been written in praise of thee; statues would ere now have been erected to thee," &c., &c. (Chalk Stream Studies). For the rest, amid the crowd of angling manuals which are written for beginners, Major Fisher's Rod and River can hold its own. It is agreeably written, lucid, comprehensive; but it was scarcely required.

The Sea and the Rod. By C. T. Paske and F. G. Ahalo. (Chapman & Hall.) These authors, with the avowed intention of producing a practical book on sea-fishing, especially with a rod, have put together a quantity of miscellaneous writing which Dr. Badham would have termed fish-tattle. Only three sea-fish are, as a rule, taken with a rod, the bass, the pollack, and the mackerel; but some fourteen chapters are here devoted to the history and catching of most of the common fish of English seas. Seven more treat of baits, sea-fishing literature, the anglers' equipments, and the like. A good many practical hints are swallowed up by much irrelevant matter, and superficial information. For catching grey mullet, the writers recommend paste, but it is the most difficult of all sea-fish to ensnare without the use of a net, and seldom looks at a bait of any kind. The style of the book may not unfairly be gauged by the following specimen:—"Should the information contained in the present volume be dressed in a sufficiently palatable manner to make it readable, it will not be the less reliable;" while the large teeth of a fish are termed "a formidable dental armament." It is adorned with cuts of fish as seen in tanks, and these are of a most grotesque and comic character. That of the sea-bream in particular possesses a delightfully cynical expression. It is to be feared that most people will continue to prefer the manuals of Wilcocks and Young as guides to sea-fishing. While doing full justice to Izaak Walton, the present writers deem his book "obsolete"; but the hundredth edition was published in 1888, and Lowell wrote a preface to yet another in 1889.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE full title of the Duke of Argyll's forthcoming book will be The Unseen Foundations of Society: an Examination of the Fallacies and Failures of Economic Science due to Neglected Elements. He deals with his subject both historically and analytically, discussing in particular the theory of rent and the wages fund theory.

SIR W. W. HUNTER has received authority from the Secretary of State for India to prepare a new edition of his Indian Empire, which forms an independent volume of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India." The figures of population, and also all administrative statistics, will uniformly be brought down to the year 1891; while advantage will be taken to incorporate the results of the most recent historical researches. The book will be published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. in the spring of next year.

THE next volume in the series of "Rulers of India" will be Lord Lawrence: and the Reconstruction of India under the Crown. It is written by Sir Charles U. Aitchison, one of the first batch of "competition wallahs," who was Foreign Secretary under Lawrence's Government, and afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

MR. H. G. KEENE, the chronicler of the Moghul Empire, is engaged on a History of India, from the earliest times down to the present day, in two volumes. It is intended mainly for the use of students, and will be published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co.

MR. JOHN MURRAY has in the press a new work by Mr. W. S. Lilly, to be entitled The Great Enigma. It deals with agnosticism and the Christian synthesis.

THE volume of Addresses, by Mr. Henry Irving, which Mr. Heinemann has in the press, will have for frontispiece a portrait by Mr. Whistler.

MR. JOSEPH JACOBS will publish next week, with Mr. David Nutt, a short study of Tennyson, with special reference to In Memoriam.

MR. HORATIO BROWN, author of Life on the Lagoons and Venetian Studies, has just finished a Short History of the Venetian Republic, which will be published immediately by Messrs. Percival & Co. His object has been to trace the life of the State as a personality, attempting to show what made her, how she grew, what mistakes she made, and how she paid for them.

MR. WALTER LEWIN has written a biography of Clarke Aspinall, the Liverpool philanthropist, which is to be published in November. The book will be illustrated with portraits, and with a facsimile of handwriting.

MR. GEORGE FERGUSON will publish shortly, with Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, the second volume of his poetical sequence, Our Earth: Night to Twilight.

MR. G. J. HOLYOAKE'S Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life will appear next week, in two volumes, containing frontispiece portraits of the author.

MR. UNWIN will also issue, next week, The Nationalisation of Health, by Mr. Havelock Ellis; and '93, or the Revolution among the Flowers, by Mrs. Byng, with pictures by Miss Helen Fairbairn.

THE first part of Cassell's New Technical Educator will be published on October 26. The work will be uniform with the New Popular Educator just completed, and will be illustrated with new engravings and coloured plates. Sir Philip Magnus, Mr. Quinton Hogg, Prof. W. Pepper, Mr. Henry Cunynghame, and others will contribute a special series of papers, while the lessons on technical subjects will be written by authors and teachers of practical experience.

MR. FRANK T. MARZIALS writes to us from 2, Blomfield Villas, Uxbridge-road, that he is preparing a Life of Gavarni, the French caricaturist, for Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston and Co., and would feel extremely obliged by the communication of any letters or reminiscences, especially if relating to the period of Gavarni's sojourn in England. Any letters would be at once copied and returned.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON announce that the first large edition of The Japs at Home, by Douglas Sladen, was subscribed for before publication, and that a second edition will be ready in about a fortnight.

A PRESENTATION red line edition of Dr. Stalker's Imago Christi is now issued, with red and gilt edges, in padded leather, and other styles of binding.

JAMES AND MARY LEE TREGASKIS, of the Caxton Head, High Holborn, have issued a trade catalogue of what they describe as "a portion of their library." Quite apart from the admirable illustrations in facsimile with which it is enriched, it contains very much to interest and allure the bibliophile. Elzevirs, it seems, have fallen to a few shillings; while for two first editions of Lewis Carroll—which any of us may have improvidently given away to a child, now a married woman—no less than eleven guineas is asked. We here learn, for the first time, that a number of liturgical books, in sheets, were saved from a fire at the Hôtel Plantin some six years ago. The examples of Blake appear cheap. But the special feature of the catalogue is the number of fine bindings, both ancient and modern. We may particularly mention a Canon Missae Pontificae [?], from the Borghese Library.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Rome:

"During the past summer many volumes hitherto in the archives of the Dataria at St. John Lateran and elsewhere have been transferred to the Vatican. The series of papal registers has been increased by about 8000 volumes, a large proportion of which are duplicates of those already in the Vatican archives. The registers of petitions addressed to the popes during the fifteenth century are now in their places. The registration of these, first ordered by Benedict XII., was carried on under Clement VI. and Innocent VI.: but the series is not complete. Copies and abstracts of many petitions from England are among the Roman transcripts at the Public Record Office. Additions have been made to the reference library, and an entrance to it, which it is hoped will soon be accessible, has been made from the archives as well as from the library."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

AMONG the serials to appear in the new volume of the Century, which begins with the November number, are:—"Sweet Bells out of Tune," by Mrs. Burton Harrison, a novel of New York Society, being in some sense a companion to "The Anglomaniacs; Woolcott Balestier's posthumous novel, entitled "Benefits Forgot"; autobiographical reminiscences by Signor Tommaso Salvini; "To Gipsyland," by Mrs. Pennell, giving an account of her recent visit to Hungary, with illustrations by Mr. Pennell; and a series of articles on the Bible and modern criticism, from various points of view. The November number will also contain the second article by Mr. Archibald Forbes on "What I saw of the Paris Commune," supplemented by some reminiscences of an American lady.

IN addition to the paper by Lord Salisbury on "Constitutional Revision," the following articles will appear in the National Review for November: "Renan," by Mr. R. H. Hutton; "Protection," by Mr. Frederick Greenwood; "Lord Tennyson," by Mr. Alfred Austin; and "The General Chapters of the Jesuits," by Mr. R. S. Beauchlerk.

THE November number of the Leisure Hour, which begins a new volume, will have for frontispiece a coloured reproduction of Mr. Faed's picture in this year's Academy, "School Board in a Country Cottage"; and the opening chapters of serial stories by Mr. Stanley J. Weyman, L. Dougall, and Tighe Hopkins.

MR. FREDERICK HAWKINS contributes to the next number of the English Illustrated Magazine an article on the Green Room of the Comédie Française, with notices of some of the players, beginning with Molière, whose portraits are to be found there.

A NEW three-volume novel by Edna Lyall, entitled "To Right the Wrong," will be begun in the January number of Good Words.

"Kossuth and Klapka, with Personal Recollections by Karl Blind," will appear in the forthcoming number of the Scottish Review, containing a number of little-known facts which shed light on the Hungarian War of Independence and on the action of its leaders in exile, during and after the Italian War.

THE November number of St. Nicholas will contain a poem of some length by Whittier, called "An Outdoor Reception," which commemorates a visit paid to him by a party of young girls.

THE forthcoming number of the Eastern and Western Review will contain a memorial poem on Tennyson by Mme. Mijatovich, the wife of the late Serbian minister; and also a narrative, "The Childhood of Tippu Khan," by Sir Frederick J. Goldsmid.

WE understand that the Churchman, which was under the editorship of the Rev. W. O. Parton from its commencement till his death, will in future be edited by Archdeacon Sinclair.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE first lecture on the Romanesque trust at Oxford, founded on the example of the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, will be delivered by Mr. Gladstone in the Sheldonian Theatre on Monday next, October 24, at 2.30 p.m. His subject is "Medieval Universities, with special reference to the University of Oxford."

MR. J. A. FROUDE will deliver his inaugural lecture as regius professor of modern history at Oxford on Wednesday next, in the theatre of the University Museum. He also proposes to deliver a course of lectures this term upon "The Council of Trent."

SIR ROBERT S. BALL, the now Lowndean professor of astronomy and geometry at Cambridge, was to deliver his inaugural lecture on Friday of this week.

MAJOR R. C. TEMPLE will deliver a lecture before the Ashmolean Society at Oxford, on the evening of Tuesday next, upon "Buddhist Cave Architecture in Burma," illustrated with lantern slides, and with specimens presented by him to the Pitt-Rivers collection.

MR. J. BASS MULLINGER will deliver a course of twelve lectures at Cambridge this term, in connexion with the Teachers' Training Syndicate, upon "The History of Education."

MR. GILBERT C. BOURNE, of New College—who contributes a memoir to the new edition of Moseley's Notes of a Naturalist on the "Challenger," just published by Mr. Murray—has returned to Oxford as assistant to Prof. E. Ray Lankester.

WE are asked to state that the late Prof. Adams left a number of offprints of his scientific papers, and that Mrs. Adams will be happy to send copies, so far as their supply allows, to scientific friends or others interested in her husband's researches. Application should be made by letter, addressed to Mrs. Adams, 4, Brookside, Cambridge.

A MEMORIAL to the council of the senate, drawn up by Mr. E. S. Roberts, of Caius, is being circulated at Cambridge, advocating the postponement of all the Tripos examinations from the beginning of the Easter term until the first week in July.

THE Walsingham medal at Cambridge, offered by the new High Steward for an essay giving evidence of original research in biology or geology, has not been awarded, as no essay was sent in.

WE understand that the total number of freshmen at Oxford this term is 691, as compared with 687 last year. The list in this week's Oxford Magazine is not complete; but of those given non-collegiate come first with 52, Balliol and University each have 11, and Merton 31.

THE Plumtre Scholarship at Queen's College, Harley-street, founded by the late Dean of Wells, has been awarded, for the first time, to Miss Mabel Goodove, daughter of Mr. Thomas M. Goodove, professor of applied mechanics at the Royal School of Mines.

PROF. R. S. POOLE has made arrangements for three courses of lectures in archaeology at University College during the present term. He will himself deliver nine lectures on "Egyptian Archaeology," on Mondays, at 5 p.m., beginning on October 24; while Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen will deliver six lectures on "The Comparative Archaeology of Egypt and Western Asia," on Thursdays, beginning on October 27. The introductory lecture of each course is free to the public; and the lectures will be followed by a visit to the galleries of the British Museum. The third course of eight lectures, on "Hieroglyphics," will be given by Prof. Poole at the British Museum, on Saturdays, at 4.15 p.m., beginning on October 29. There will afterwards be examinations in each subject.

MR. TALFOURD Ely, professor of Greek at Bedford College, York-place, will begin a course of lectures in archaeology on Tuesday next, October 25, at 3 p.m.

MRS. TIRARD will give a special course of lectures at 13, Kensington-square (King's College Department for Ladies) on "The Book of the Dead," commencing on Wednesday, October 26. The lectures will be followed by three demonstrations in the Egyptian galleries of the British Museum for students attending the course.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, OCTOBER 12, 1892.

In her still House of Fame her Laureate dead
England entombs to-day, lays him to rest,
The leaves of honour green around his head,
Love's flowers fresh on his breast.

Mourn him in solemn service of high song,
Music serene as breathed in his last breath,
When, to the soundless ocean borne along,
He met majestic death.

Mourn him with grief's most fair solemnities,
Ritual that with an inward rapture suits,
While in stern pomp the mind's grave companies
March as to Dorian flutes.

If tears we shed, 'tis but as eyes grow dim,
When some rich strain superbly rolls away;
For like the close of an Olympian hymn,
Ended his golden day.

Bear him in pride like a dead conqueror,
Brought home to his last triumph in sad state,
Over him his Country's Flag; who in life's war
Was victor over fate.

We saw him stand, a lordly forest tree,
His branches filled with music, all the air,
Glad for his presence; fallen at last is he,
And all the land is bare.

So, with old Handel thundering in our ears
His mighty dirge, marching from breast to breast

In sorrow's purple pageant, with proud tears,
We leave him to his rest.

JOHN TODHUNTER.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

AS usual, the summer numbers (July—September) of the Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia appear together. The opening paper by Padre Fita applies the Greek indications on certain inscriptions to fix the regnal years of some Visigothic kings. Ramon Riu proves the existence of a Jewish quarter at Solsona. Father Codera describes five newly acquired Arabic MSS. Fernandez Duro examines the tradition of Alonso Sanchez as a precursor of Columbus, rejecting the name, but admitting the possibility of European ships having visited St. Domingo before 1492. Antonio Blazquez has an important study of the Antonine Itineraries of Spain. Assuming that the total length is probably correct, he brings the separate stations into accord with the topography by a few emendations. The latest results of the explorations at Cabeza del Griego (Segobriga), made at the expense of Mr. Thomson, are summed up by Padre Fita in two papers. But the most valuable documents printed by him in this number are those connected with the discovery of America: the expedientes of Hernan Cortes, Francisco Pizarro, and of Diego Colon for admittance into the Order of Santiago, from the Archives of Uclés. Of the last a facsimile is given. The evidence that Columbus was born at Savona, supplemented by that brought forward by Signor Rocca (p. 241), is very strong. Two of the Bulls, photographs of which have been sent by Leo XIII. to the Queen Regent, are here given—viz., that of Nicholas V., September 20, 1448, authorising the appointment of a Bishop of Greenland; and of Julius II., April 10, 1507, in favour of Bartholomew Columbus. A Bull of Leo X. (1520), nominates the second Bishop of Darien, and acknowledges the royal patronage, "de jure patronatus Regis Castella et Legionis pro tempore existentis." Proof is also given of Amerigo, as well as Alberigo, Vespucci being found as early as 1480.

SLAVICA.

THE Bulgarians continue to show a great deal of literary activity. The Sbornik or Recueil published yearly by the Government contains valuable papers on the history and architectural remains of the country, but the articles on ethnology and folklore are the most important. Collections of ballads also make their appearance in these pages, and the dialects of the language are undergoing a thorough investigation.

We have lately received from Rustchuk—now called by its old name Russe, without the Turkish suffix—the first numbers of an illustrated paper, called L'tro, "the Morning," edited by MM. Panniotov and Moskov. So far as we can form an opinion from these specimens, it promises to be a success. Among other articles, there is a description of the monastery of the Trinity at Trnovo; and a life with a portrait of Ivan Vazov, the most considerable poet whom Bulgaria has as yet produced. The wood engravings, though they require a little more finish, are creditable, as is the execution of the magazine generally, where so much had to be begun and so much Turkish barbarism to be got rid of. We hope that this illustrated paper will contribute to spread culture among the Bulgarians. Something has been done previously by the excellent little magazine called "The Library of St. Clement," published at Sofia.

The Bohemians seem as active as ever; there is hardly a branch of knowledge now in which a really national literature does not exist among them. In the "Library of Popular Knowledge" (Knihovna Lidských Vedomosti) has begun to appear a work on man in the prehistoric period, with especial reference to Slavonic countries (Lidstvo v Dobe Predhistoricke se zvelástrím zretelem na zeme Slovanske). The price of each number is only 24 kreuzers. The illustrations are abundant, including, of course, a picture of the celebrated Neanderthal skull. The two numbers which we have seen are full of excellent reading. The author contends, in his Introduction, that in similar books Slavonic antiquities have been too much ignored. To fill this lacuna is one of his chief objects.

In the literary journal, Lumír, which we are glad to see continues its activity, there appeared recently two papers by Dr. J. V. Prašek on the work which has been done by Prof. Sayce in the field of oriental history. A just tribute is here paid to the learned labours of our countryman, whose literary career Dr. Prašek sketches. The articles are valuable besides, as giving a summary of the professor's latest views on the decipherment of the Tel el-Amarna Tablets.

W. R. M.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRAHM, O. Karl Stauffer-Bern: sein Leben u.s.w. Stuttgart: Göschen. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 DESCHAMPS, L. La Philosophie de l'écriture: exposé de l'état actuel de la graphologie. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr.
 DUNBAR, W., Poems, edited &c. by J. Schipper. Part 3. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M. 60 Pf.
 GOTSCHALL, R. v. Studien zur neuen deutschen Litteratur. Berlin: Allg. Verein f. deutsche Litt. 6 M.
 KUNSTENKMALE, die d. Königl. Bayern vom 11. bis zum Ende d. 18. Jahrh. 1. Bd. 1. Lfg. München: Albert. 10 M.
 LE ROUX, Hugues. Mairins et Soldats. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
 LEJEUNE, L. Au Mexique. Paris: Cerf. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MALON, R. Précis historique, théorique et pratique de Socialisme. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MEYER, J. Das ästhetische Formgesetz der Plastik. Leipzig: Seemann. 4 M.
 MULLER, J. W., en H. LOEPMAN. Die Hysterie van Reynaert Die Vos, naar den druk van 1749, vergeleken met Caxton's Egelsche vertaling. Zwolle: Tjeenk-Willink. 3 fl.
 PERRET, E. Le Roman: étude morale. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr.
 RONCA, U. Cultura medioevale e poesia latina d'Italia nei secoli XI e XII. Rome: Loescher. 7 fr. 50 c.
 SCHMIDT, Ch. Répertoire bibliographique Strasbourgais jusque vers 1530. I. Jean Grüninger 1483—1531. Strasbourg: Heitz. 10 M.
 THIBAUT, Ch. Traditions populaires de la Haute-Saône et du Jura. Paris: Lechevalier. 10 fr.
 WALDENFEL, E. Mémoire pour la rétrocession de l'Alsace-Lorraine, adressé à S. M. l'Empereur et Roi Guillaume II. Paris: Perrin. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- FELTEN, J. Die Apostelgeschichte, übers. u. erklärt. Freiburg-i-B.: Herder. 8 M.
 KATTENBUSCH, F. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. altkirchlichen Taufsymbols. Giessen: Ricker. 1 M. 40 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BERWICK Y ALBA, la Duquesa de. Autógrafos de Cristóbal Colon y Papeles de América. Madrid: 16 fr.
 BONNASSIEUX, P. Les grandes Compagnies de commerce: étude pour servir à l'histoire de la colonisation. Paris: Plon. 10 fr.
 CHUQUET, A. Guerres de la Révolution. T. 7. Mayenne 1792—1793. Paris: Cerf. 8 fr. 50 c.
 CRIFE, F. de. Le Parti des politiques au lendemain de la Saint-Barthélemy: La Molle et Coconat. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.
 FAUCON, N. La Tunisie avant et depuis l'occupation française. Paris: Challamel. 15 fr.
 FOURÉ-MACÉ, l'Abbé. Le Prieuré royal de Saint-Magloire de Lehon. Paris: Lechevalier. 15 fr.
 KONDAKOF, N., J. Tolstoi et S. RINACH. Antiquités de la Russie méridionale. Fasc. III. et dernier. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
 KOENIGER, F. Ebstländische Klosterlektüre. Ein Beitrag zur Kenntnis der Pflege d. geist. Lebens in Ebstland im Mittelalter. Reval: Kluge. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 LEHR- u. HANDBUCH der politischen Oekonomie. 3. Hauptabth. 2. Thl. Agrarwesen u. Agrarpolitik. Von A. Buchenberger. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Winter. 15 M.
 MAZON, A. Histoire de Soulaive (naturaliste, diplomate, historien). Paris: Fischbacher. 15 fr.
 MEYER, Ch. Hardenberg u. seine Verwaltung der Fürstenthümer Ansbach u. Bayreuth. Breslau: Meyer. 3 M.
 MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Auctorum antiquissimorum Tom. X. 30 M. Epistolarum Tom. III. 25 M. Poetarum latinorum mediæ ævi Tom. III. partis II. fasc. 1. 10 M. Berlin: Weidmann.
 REDLICH, O. R. Die Anwesenheit Napoleons I. in Düsseldorf im J. 1811. Düsseldorf: Lintz. 2 M.
 RENESSE, le Comte Théodore de. Dictionnaire des figures heraldiques. Fasc. I. Bruxelles: Schepens. 4 fr.
 RUVILLÉ, A. v. Die Auflösung d. preussisch-englischen Bündnisses im J. 1782. Berlin: Peters. 1 M.
 THOMAS, E. L'Envers de la société romaine d'après Pétroline. Paris: Hachette. 8 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ARNOLD, R. Bemerkungen üb. Kraft u. auslösende Kraft im Besonderen. 1 M. 30 Pf. Biologische Studien. I. Das biolog. Grundgesetz. 4 M. 80 Pf. Greifswald: Abel.
 KOPPEL, H. Die Verwandtschaft Leibnizens m. Thomas v. Aquino in der Lehre vom Bösen. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 LIEBEL, R. Die Zoocœcidien der Holzgewächse Lothringens. Berlin: Friedländer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 MICHELL, M. Contributions à la Flore du Paraguay. V. Basel: Georg. 4 M.
 SEMPER, C. Reisen im Archipel der Philippinen. 2. Th. 5. Bd. 7. Lfg. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 24 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CZYCZKIEWICZ, A. Untersuchungen zur 2. Hälfte der Odyssee. Brody: West. 1 M.
 FARINERO, A. De Hercule tragico Graecorum. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
 FARR, le Colonel. L'Annuaire mère des langues: communauté d'origine des races celtiques, scythiques, soudanaises et de l'Indo-Chine. Paris: Hachette. 5 fr.
 JONIO, G. Codici ignorati nelle biblioteche di Napoli. Fasc. 1. Χερσφάντος τὰ παραλειπόμενα. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 MEINHARDT, P. De forma et usu juramentorum, quae inventiuntur in comiorum graecorum et Platonis, Xenophontis, Luciani sermone. Jena: Pohle. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 OMONT, H. Fac-similés des plus anciens manuscrits grecs en onciale et en minuscule de la Bibliothèque Nationale, du IV^e au XII^e Siècle. Paris: Leroux. 32 fr.
 PICHON, le Baron J., et G. VICAIRE. Supplément au "Viandier de Taillevent" et le manuscrit de la Bibliothèque du Vatican. Paris: Techener. 5 fr.
 SAUSSURE, H. de. Antiquités mexicaines. Fasc. 1. Le manuscrit du Cacique. Basel: Georg. 24 M.
 SÜGSTRAND, N. In Syntaxis Draegerianam notationes nonnullae. Lund: Möller. 1 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MSS. OF THE LXX. AND CATENAS AT MILAN, VERONA, AND VENICE.

Sparsholt Vicarage, Wantage.

The following is a complete list of MSS. of the LXX. and Catenas to be found in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, the Cathedral Library at Verona, and S. Mark's Library at Venice, compiled from the catalogues of those libraries:

I. MILAN.

1. The famous Codex Ambrosianus (F), of which a sufficient account is to be found in vol. i. of the new edition of the LXX. published at Cambridge. Press-mark A. 147.
2. 4 Maccabees under the title Ἰωσήφου εἰς Μακκαβαίους, part of a MS. of which the press-mark is H. 11, sup. This is followed by "Esther secundum septuaginta (græce)." The MS. catalogue describes the whole volume as Codex bombycinus saec. circa xiii.
3. Folia duo mutila tantum (græce) initio et fine codicis. These leaves, in cursive, are used as the backing for the binding of a later MS., and contain parts of Isa. xix. 10—xxi. 11.
4. Psalterium (græce). Cod. memor. mutilus antiquiori caractere (T. 14, sup.). Mutilated at the beginning; leaves off in Ps. 117.
5. Psalterium Davidis (græce). Cod. memor. caractere grandiore saec. circiter xi. cum duplici figura initio codicis (M. 54, sup.).
6. Psalterium graecum. Cod. memor. saec. circiter xii. (Q. 15, sup.). Part of Ps. i. missing, also the later Psalms.
7. Psalterium graecum. Cod. parvus memor. (+ 24, sup.). This has two or three pages in uncials which contain the prayer of Manasses. It is very doubtful whether or not this is Holmes and Parsons, 111.
8. Psalterium graecum. Cod. memor. saec. xv. membrana et caractere forma politula admodum nitida (G. 94, sup.).
9. Catena in Job (græce) cod. membr. caractere nitido cum accentibus variantibus et notis grammaticis in margine: bonae notae licet non admodum fortasse vetustus (B. 117, sup.). There are constant references to the Hexaplar in this MS.
10. Catena in Proverbia Salomonis (græce) (C. 267, inf.).
11. Catena in Proverbia, Ecclesiasten, Cantica, Job (græce). Cod. memor. cum textu aequo ac notis saec. x. vel xi. ineuntis. (A. 148, inf.). "Codex optimus et antiquissimus." This is apparently (?) Holmes and Parsons, 139.

12. Catena SS. Patrum in Isaiam (græce). Cod. membr. antiquior. (G. 79, sup.). Codex valde antiquus ex Thessalia.

13. Commentarii in Psalmos David et Cantica Scripturae (græce). Codex membr. antiquior. Desunt decem primi Psalmi (H. 112, sup.). "Codex antiquus in suburbio Corcyrensi emptus."

14. Scholia in Prophetas Joel, Abdiam, Jonam, Habacuc et Sophoniam mut. (græce) in membr. saec. ix. (H. 43, sup., No. 1).

15. Scholia in S. Scripturam incerti (græce) (B. 146, sup.).

16. Varia in plures B. S. libros metricè scripta (græce). Extant in cod. membr. per vetusto male compacto qui et palimpsestus. The underlying text is almost undecipherable.

17. Isaias propheta. Catena aurea fragmentum in eum græce (D. 473, inf.).

18. Isaias propheta. Catena patrum in ejus prophetica nempe S. Basilii, Cyrilli (græce). Cod. chart. (S. 12, sup.).

19. Liturgica quaedam cum pericopis V. et N. Testamenti (græce): cod. membr. saec. x. (xii. ?) (C. 16, inf.). "Fragmentum ex Calabria adjectum."

20. Preces sacrae . . . psalterium graecolatinitum; . . Cod. membr. saec. xv. (C. 13, inf.); "codex olim ecclesiae Sanctae Mariae de populo Romae."

21. Psalmi cum catena græce. Cod. memor. caractere ligato et asperiori cum spiritibus antiquis. (B. 106, sup.). Holmes and Parsons, 113.

22. Psalmi Davidis cum expositione variorum (C. 264, inf.). This only extends to Ps. 54.

23. Psalmi sive Catena SS. Patrum in Psalmos græce. Cod. memor. caractere ligato et spiritibus antiquioribus (M. 47, sup.). "Codex antiquus in suburbio Corcyrensi emptus."

24. Psalmi sive Catena in Psalmos pars altera videlicet a Ps. 74 deinceps. Cod. bombyc. antiquior (F. 126, sup.).

25. Psalmi seu Commentarium in omnes Davidis Psalmos et Cantica SS. (græce) codex bombyc. (A. 221, inf.).

26. Psalterium graecum cum commentariis seu catena Patrum. . . Cod. memor. saec. xiii. (F. 12, sup.). Is this H. and P. 112?

27. Psalterium graecum ita descriptum ut singulis versibus e regione respondeat brevis ac dilucida explanatio. Cod. memor. saec. circiter xiii. duplici columna. (G. 36, sup.). This only extends as far as Ps. 109.

28. Psalterium graecum cum notis. Cod. membr. vetustus spiritibus antiquis caractere vix ligato et claro notis vero minutissimis (C. 98, sup.). The first page of this is missing.

29. Psalterium graecum cum proemiis et glossis marginalibus. Cod. bombyc. (H. 60, sup.).

30. Psalterium graecum cum Precationibus aliquibus in calce additis (G. 12, sup.). Defective at the beginning; it commences in Ps. 11.

31. Psalterium et cetera Cantica item Preces nonnullae (græce). Codex membran. caractere ligato minuto non impolito (B. 1, sup.).

32. Salomon, Proverbia, Ecclesiastes, Canticum Canticozum, Sapientia, Ecclesiasticus (græce). Cod. membr. vetustus caractere ligato grandiori satis nitido cum accentibus variantibus (B. 68 sup.). "Codex vetustus Corcyrae emptus." The first fragment of Prov. i. 1—ii. 15 is in quite a different and later hand.

II. VERONA.

1. The famous Graeco-Latin Psalter (R), of the Greek text of which I hope to publish shortly a full collation.

2. A Catena on the Psalms with Hexaplaric readings.

III. VENICE.

The first part of this list is taken from Zanetti's Catalogue.

1. In folio membranaceus fol. 164, uncial. saec. viii. aut ix. (H. and P. 23). It begins at Job xxx. 7, and contains also Prov., Eccl., Cant., Sap., Sir., the Minor Prophets (with arguments), Isa., Jer., Ez., Dan., To., Ju., 1 Macc., 2 Macc., 3 Macc., 4 Macc., followed by other matter.

2. In folio minori membranaceus, saeculi circiter x. (H. and P. 29). It begins at Gen. 43, 14, and contains the rest of the Pentateuch, Josh., Jd., Ruth, 1 & 2 Ki., 1 & 2 Macc. (in chartaceis foliis recentiori manu descriptis), and a fragment of 3 Macc.

3. In folio membranaceus saeculi circiter x. (H. and P. 121). It contains summaries of some of the books, and the Pentateuch, Josh., Jd., Ruth, 1—4 Ki., 1 & 2 Ch., 1 & 2 Esdr.

4. In folio membranaceus saeculi circiter xi. (H. and P. 120). This originally contained at the end Ju. and To. Now the MS. contains the Pentateuch, Josh., Jd., Ruth, 1—4 Ki., 1 & 2 Ch., 1 & 2 Esdr., 1—4 Macc., Esth. (as far as ix. 13).

5. In folio membranaceus saeculi xv. Besaronionis jussu facile exscriptus (H. and P. 68). This contains Gen.—2 Chr. (as above) Isa.—Dan. the Minor Prophets, Job, Pss., Pr., Eccl. (fresh writing at 2i. 1^o. 2. 17), Cant., 1 & 2 Esdr. (with contents), Esther, Sap., Si., Ju., To., 1—3 Macc., followed by the N. T.

6. In folio partim membranaceus (to the middle of Ezek.) partim chartaceus saeculi xv. (H. and P. 122). This contains Gen.—2 Ch., Isa.—Dan., Ho.—Mal., Jb., Pss., Prov., Eccl., Cant., 1 & 2 Esdr., Esth., Sap., Si., Ju., To., 1 Macc. (to i. 18), N. T. (in parchment).

7. In 4^o oblongus membranaceus a dextera in sinistram Hebraeorum more [only so far as the pages are concerned] exaratus foliorum 362 recentiori et non obvio characterē. This contains Gen.—Deut., Prov., Ruth, Cant., Eccl., Lam., Dan. (as far as 12-13).

15. Octateuchus in folio minori membranaceus foliorum 400 saeculi circiter x. Appingitur in marginibus Catena.

16. Catena in Libros Regum (Field, 243*) in folio chartaceus foliorum 465 saeculi circiter xi. It contains 1—4 Ki., followed by 1 & 2 Ch., 1 & 2 Esdr., Esth., To., Ju., 1—4 Macc. (the last book not complete).

17. In folio majori membranaceus foliorum 430 pulcherrimae atque optimaē notae saeculi x.; auro et picturis elegantibus priora duo folia ornantur. This is a Psalter with the Canticles.

21. Proverbia cum marginali Catena: in 4^o membranaceus foliorum 292 saeculi circiter x. This also contains Eccl., Cant., Jb.

22. In 4^o membranaceus foliorum 289 saeculi circiter xiii. This is a Catena on Proverbs with other matter following.

23. Catena in Proverbia Salomonis (with other matter): in 4^o membranaceus saeculi circiter x. foliorum 126. This volume contains a fragment of an uncial MS. of the Proverbs at the beginning and end of the book, used as a backing for the binding, apparently of the seventh or eighth century. It has hitherto escaped notice. I give the text of it in full, so far as it can be recovered:

Pr. xxiii. 21. διερρηγμένα και

22. ακουε πρς τ. υιε

κ . . . μη καταφρονει

σου η μητ . .

24. ως εκτρεφει πατηρ δικαιος

. . . δε υιον σο . . . ευφραινε

. μητηρ αυτου

25. αινεσθω ο πατηρ και η μητηρ

. οι

κ ρετω η τεκονσα σε

26. δ υιε σην καρδιαν

ο οφθαλμοι εμας οδους

. ιτωσαν

27. κ γορ τετρημενοι εστιν

. τριος οικος

κ εαρ στενον αλλοτριων

28. ο γαρ συντυχμος απολειτοι

κα παρανομος αναλωθησεται

τι αι τινη θορυβος τινη

. ις

τι διαι και λεσχαι

τι ντριμματα δια κενης

* *

30. *

ου ν ιχνευοντων σου . . . ο .

. ται

* *

31. *

κ μιλειτε εν περιπαταις

ε γορ εις ται φιαλας και τα

. τηρια δως τους σφθαλ

. υς σου

υ ρον περιπατησεις γυμνα

. ρος υπερου

32. τ εσχατον ωσπερ υπο οφε

. πεπ ληγως εκτεινεται

κ σπερ υπο κεραστου δια

. ται αυτω ο ιος

33. ο θαλμοι σου οταν ιδωσιν

. στριαν

τ μα σου τοτε λαλησει σκολια

34. κ ατακιση ωσπερ εν καρδι

. λασσης

κ σπερ κυβερνητης εν πολ

. κλυδωνι

35. ε δε τυπταουσιν με και ου

* *

. δειν

. αρθρος γινεται ινα ελθω ζητησω μ

συιελουσμαι

xxiv. 1. υιε μη (ζηλωσης) κακους ανδρας

μη θυμησης ειναι μετ

. *

2. ψ αρ μελε αυτω

και π υς τα χειλη α λαλει

3. μετα σοφι οικοδομε σε

και μετα συνεσεως ανω *

4. μετα αισθησεω μικρ *

ταυτεια

εκ παντοτ πλουτου τιμ *

καλου

5. κρεισων σοφος ισχυρου

και ανηρ φρονησιν εχων *

γι υ μεγαλου

6. μετα κυβερνησεως γινεται π *

λεμος

βοηθεια δε μετ καρδιας βου λευτικης

7. συφια και εννοια αγ *

* *

9. *

. μαρτιας

ακαθαρσια ανδρι λοιμω εμμο

λυνθησεται

10. εν ημερα κακη και εν ημερα

θλιψεως εως αν εκλειπη

11. . υσαι αγομενους εις θανατον

και εκπρω κτειμενους μη

φειση

12. εαν δε ειπης ουκ οίδα τωτων

γινωσκε οτι κς καρδιας παντω γινωσκει

και ο πλασας πνοην πασιν αυτος

οιδεν παντα

. αποδιδωσιν εναστω κατ

τα εργα αυτου

13. αγε μελι υιε αγαθον γαρ

κηριαν ιν . γλυκαθη σου υ φορυγξ

14. υτως αισθητει σοφιαν τη ση

ψυχη

* *

και ελπις σε ουκ εγκαταλειψε .

15. μη προσαγαγης σεβη νομη δι κοιων

μηδ(ε*) απατηθης χορτασια κοι

λιας

16. επτακις γαρ πεσειται υ δικαιος

και αναστησεται

οι δε σεβεις ασθενησουσιν

εν κακοις

17. εαν πεση ο εχθρος σου μη εκ .

χαρης αυτω

εν δε τω υποσκελισματι αυτου

μη εκαιρου

18. οτι οψεται κι και ουκ αρεσει

αυτω

και αποστρεψει τον θυμω αυ

του απ αυτου

19. μη χαιρε επι κακοποιους

μηδε ζηλυν αμαρτωλους

20. ου γαρ μη γενηται εκγασια πα

ρανομων

λαμπτηρ δε απεβαν σεβησθησεται

21. *

και μηθετερω αυτων απει

θησης

22. εξαιφνης γαρ τισονται το . .

σεβεις

τας δε τιμωριας αμφοτερ . .

. *

22a. λαγον φυλασσομενος υιο . .

πωλειας μακραν εσται δεχομενος δε εδεξατο αυ . . .

22b. μηδεν ψευδος απο γλωσση .

βασιλει λεγεσθω

και ουδεν ψευδος απο γλω .

σης αυτου ου μη εξελθη

22c. μαχαιρα γλωσσα βασιλειως κ . .

ου σαρκεινη

αδ αν παραδοθη συντριβη

σεται

22d. εαν γαρ οξυνθη ο θυμος α

συν νευροι ανους αναλι

22e. και οστα ανων κατατρωγε . . .

και συγκαiei ωσπερ φλοξ ωστε αβρωτα ειναι νεοσσα . .

αετων

24 (30, 1). τους εμους λογους υιε φο . .

θητι

* *

ταδε λε *

υσις θω και παινωμα .

25 (30, 2). αφρονεστωτς γαρ ειμι παν των ανων

και φρονησις ανων ουκ εστιν

εν εμωι

26 (30, 3). θς δεδιδαχεν με σοφια .

και γνωσιν αγων εγνωκα

27 (30, 4). τις (sup. 4 litt.) ανεβη εις τον ουν και κατεβη

τις συνηγαγεν ανεμους εν κολπω τις συνε . τριψεν υδωρ εν ι ματιω

τις εκρατησεν των ακ . αν

της γης

τι ονομα αυτω η τι ονομα

τοις τεκνοις αυτου ια γνωσ

28 (30, 5). παντες γαρ λογοι θυ πεπρω μετοι

υπερασκει δε αυτος τ τ(?)

* λαβουμεν αυτον

29 (30, 6). *

. δης γειη

30 (30, 7). δυο αιτουμαι παρα σου

και μη αφελης μου χαριν προ

του αποθιμειν με

31 (30, 8). *

. δη

πλουτον δε και περιαν μη

μαι δως

συνταξαν δε μοι τα δεοντα

και τα αυτηρη

32 (30, 9). ια μη πλησθεις ψευδης

γενωμαι και ειπω τις με ορα

η πενηθεις κλεψω και ομο

σω το ονομα του θυ

33 (30, 10). μη παραδωσ οικειτην εις χει

ρας δεσποτου

μη ποτε καταρασθαι σ αφανισθης

34 (30, 11). εκγονον κακων πρι κα . .

ραται

την δε μη ουκ ευλογ . .

35 (30, 12). εκγονον κακων δικαι . .

αυτων κρινει

την δε εξοδον αυτου

πεινι . . .

The most noticeable readings in the above interesting fragment, when compared with B, are xxiii. 23 μητηρ for ψυχη, which does not occur in any other MS.—29 αηδαι (AS)—35 γινεται for εσται, in no other MS.—xxiv. 9 om δε 2^o with A—10 εκλειπη (A)—11 εκπρω (A)—14 ασηθησει (not elsewhere)—16 επταεις (A)—o (=A)—20 παρνομων (Holmes and Parsons, 149, 260)—22a μακραν for εκτος (not elsewhere)—226 ψευδος απο γλωσσης αυτου (AS)—ου μη (S)—27 α γως (A)—28 υπερασπει (C)—30 και (not elsewhere).

25. In 4^o chartacens saeculi circiter xiii. This is a Catena on Isaiah in two hands.

The remaining MSS. are in the appendix to the printed catalogue of Zanetti not yet printed.

1. Membran. in 8^o saec. xii. Psalterium cum Canticis Troparia pro festis accedunt.

2. Chart in 8^o saec. xv. (S. Joannis in Viridario Patavii). Presented by Jo. Calphurnius, bearing the date 1446. This is also a Psalter.

13. Membran. in 1^o saec. circa xii. Libri Paralipomenon, Esdrae, Esther, Tobit, Judith, et Maccabaeorum cum Praefatione ad singulos libros et Catena in Psalmos a Psalmo 5^o ad 29^{um}. It also contains Prov., Eccl., Cant., Sap., Si. (ending at 35 [32].24).

16. Membr. in 4^o saec. xiii. Psalmi cum nonnullis Orationibus et Canticis. Codex initio mutilus incipiens a Psalmo viii. cum Psalmo 151 apocrypho et canticis.

26. Cod. membr. in 4^o saec. xiv. Psalmi cum aliquot Canticis initio et in fine mutilis. It contains both Greek and Latin Psalms, and commences at επ 1^o (23.2), and leaves off in the middle of the Canticle from Habakkuk.

27. Psalmi cum aliquot Precibus. Codex chart. in 8^o saec. xvii.

30. Membr. in 4^o saec. x. Catena in Psalmos a Psalmo primo usque ad centesimum quartum. Codex mutilus in fine.

31. Hesychii Scholia in Psalmos. Codex exaratus a Bartholomaeo Monacho; Cod. membr. in 8^o saec. circ. x.

32. Membr. in 8^o saec. xi. With Paschal tables; corresponding to H. and P., 152. The title of it is Psalmi cum aliquot Canticis: codex initio et in fine mutilus.

36. Cod. chart. in 1^o saec. xiv. Expositio in Psalmos.

37. Cod. membr. in 1^o saec. xiv. Interpretatio in Isaiam initio mutila. This MS. also contains S. Gregory of Nyssa's Homilies on Ecclesiastes and Theodoret's Quaestiones in Genesin.

38. Chart. in 4^o saec. xv. Psalmi cum expositione Hesychii.

41. Catena in Psalmos. Codex chart. in 1^o saec. xvi. This MS. contains a fragment of a cursive Psalter with a text very similar to that of R and T, and also a fragment of a collection of extracts from the Psalms.

44. Chart. in 1^o saec. xvii. A beautifully written Psalter with Catena.

49. Membr. in 4^o saec. xii. Psalmi cum Canticis et aliis Precibus. This commences at i. 4. At the end of the MS. are fragments of a palimpsest of S. John's Gospel seen by Tischendorf, 1847.

62. Cod. chart. in 4^o saec. xv. Psalterium argumentis singulis Psalmis praemissis. This is followed by other works.

I owe many thanks for much courtesy and kindness to the librarians of the three libraries mentioned above.

HENRY A. REDPATH.

IRON IN HOMER.

London: Oct. 18, 1892.

In the interesting discussion at yesterday's meeting of the Hellenic Society which followed Mr. Jevons's paper on "Iron in Homer," it appeared to me that too little had been said of those passages in which iron is mentioned either as a valuable commodity or as a form of treasure. This silence may have been occasioned by the fact that, in the recurring phrase in which iron is mentioned as a possession, it is associated with bronze as well as with gold. But if all the passages are taken together, including Il. ix. 366, xxiii. 261, does it not appear tolerably evident that, while the iron was in the shape of axe-heads (double or single), the bronze was in the more massive form of cauldrons and tripods? This is rendered more probable by the statement that the treasures brought out in Od. xxi. had been won by Odysseus—the axe-heads, no doubt, in contests with the invincible bow. It appears from Il. xxiii. 850 that the prize for archery took this form. (One axe-head would make many arrow-heads.)

The epithet πολύκιητος, "much-laboured," by which iron is distinguished in the line above referred to, must have originated at a time when men still wondered at the working of iron. The upshot seems to be that while in two passages the Odyssey, like the Hymn to Hermes, shows unexpected familiarity with the use and even the manufacture of iron, both poems carry on the whole the impress of an incipient iron age.

How this bears on the relation of the Iliad to the Mycenaean civilisation, I leave it to others to determine. Although Strabo identifies Alybe, "where the silver is born," with the land of the Chalybians, there is no trace in Homer of any traffic in iron coming from the south-eastern shores of the Euxine. With the commencement of that traffic, of which we have a reminiscence in Aeschylus, iron must have become more abundant. By the way, Why does Aeschylus call the Chalybian "a colonist from Seythia"?

LEWIS CAMPBELL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 23, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Distribution of Animals and what it teaches," by Dr. Andrew Wilson. 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Faith and the Moral Order," by Miss M. S. Gilliland.

MONDAY, Oct. 24, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Trunk," II., by Mr. W. Anderson.

THURSDAY, Oct. 27, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Trunk," III., by Mr. W. Anderson.

FRIDAY, Oct. 28, 5 p.m. Physical: Discussion of Mr. Williams's Paper on "The Dimension of Physical Quantities"; Discussion of Mr. Sutherland's Paper on "The Laws of Molecular Force," with Papers by Dr. Young and Mr. Thomas on "The Determinations of Critical Density, Critical Volume, and Boiling Points."

SCIENCE.

PROF. BLOOMFIELD'S "CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE INTERPRETATION OF THE VEDA."

II.

The Story of Namuki.

No one has shown more clearly than Prof. Bloomfield that the first, though not always the last, commentary on the Vedic Hymns must be sought for in the Brāhmanas. And yet there is a gulf between the two which defies chronological determination. How this gulf is to be accounted for, how in many cases the simple language of the Hymns ceased to be understood, how the artless legends alluded to in the Hymns became, as Prof. Bloomfield admits, exaggerated and distorted in the Brāhmanas, and what interval of time is required to account for this hypertrophy, is more than we shall ever be able to discover. What we know is that in all countries a period of prose literature is subsequent to a period of poetic literature, and that, so far as we can judge, India forms no exception to this rule. It is quite another question how much of the elaborate ceremonial and of the no less elaborate folk-lore preserved in the Brāhmanas is actually presupposed in the Hymns, and how much may be of later growth.

The story of Sunahsepa, for instance, and of his sufferings, was certainly known to the Vedic poets; but whether the long story of his being sold by his father to be sacrificed as a substitute for another victim, a prince of the royal line of the Ikshvākus, was known to them likewise is very doubtful, even if we do not consider that the whole legend was elaborated from indications contained in the Hymns. Here, as elsewhere, I quite agree with Prof. Bloomfield that a certain tact is requisite, a certain sense which helps us to discriminate between what is natural and what is artificial, between what is primary and what is secondary. But under all circumstances, great would be the mistake if, as interpreters of the Vedic Hymns, we were to refuse the assistance supplied to us by the Brāhmanas. Nothing that can possibly throw light on the brief and dark allusions contained in the Hymns should be ignored, whether contained in the Brāhmanas and the Upanishads, or in the Nirukta and the Śāstras—nay, even in the epic poems and the Purāṇas. Śāyana has availed himself of all these sources; and if I have always insisted on Śāyana's commentary as a sine qua non of Vedic scholarship, I am not likely to undervalue the help given us by the authors of the Brāhmanas so long as we maintain towards them the same independence of judgment which we know to be necessary in our reliance on Śāyana. It may truly be said of Śāyana: Śāyana, non sine te, nec tecum vivere possum.

There is a legend of Namuki, frequently mentioned in the Brāhmanas, and alluded to in several passages of the Vedic Hymns, to which Prof. Bloomfield has devoted an article in his learned Contributions to the Interpretation of the Veda. The legend, as reconstructed from various sources by Prof. Bloomfield, is this:

"Indra, the god of the clear sky, is for ever slaying with his thunderbolt the cloud-demons who obstruct the rain and withhold from mortals the blessings consequent upon it. But in one instance he encounters the demon Namuki ('Don't let go,' or 'Hold fast'), who, instead of falling an easy victim to his thunderbolt, engages him in close combat and rather gets the better of him. Namuki holds Indra fast, and refuses to let him go unless he enters into a strict agreement not to slay him subsequently. The compact is constructed very diplomatically, so as to leave apparently no possibility of danger to Namuki from Indra; the latter agrees not to slay the former either by day or by night, i.e., as Namuki construes it, at no time whatever. He agrees further not to slay him either with a staff or a bow, with the flat hand or the fist, with anything wet or dry, i.e., as Namuki intends, with no known weapon. For a while the pair are boon companions. But Namuki, the āsura, is bound to betray his nature, fundamentally hostile to Indra, the deva; and upon one occasion, when Indra had imbibed freely of his favourite beverage, the soma, he plies him still further with the strong drink surā (brandy), which is regarded as unholy, and is no doubt conceived as the special drink of the Āsuras. Indra becomes stupefied, and loses his strength, his senses, the taste for food and soma, and in the story Namuki is conceived as having robbed him of these and appropriated them to his own use. The gods now step upon the scene. The Āsvins, the heavenly physicians, and Sarasvatī, the goddess of wisdom, cure Indra, and afterwards Indra with their help conceals a plan by which he may slay Namuki, without perjuring himself. In order to evade the clause of the compact which forbids him to do the deed either by day or by night, they choose the time of the dawn before the sun had risen, 'that being neither day nor night.' In order to introduce a weapon not included by the stipulation of the compact, they forge a bolt from the foam of the waters, 'that being neither wet nor dry.' Indra slays Namuki, but he is still without his soma, which now flows from the body of Namuki mixed with blood and impure, so that they may not touch it. Here again the Āsvins lend their aid; they drink the loathsome mixture, and having purified it in their divine bodies, they return it to Indra."

Prof. Bloomfield has clearly seen that this myth, like most myths, is derived from a number of what I call mythological roots. He discovers five of them in the myth of Namuki: (1) The battle between Indra and Namuki; and the subsequent compact; (2) Namuki makes Indra drunk with surā, and robs him of strength, enjoyment of life, and the soma; (3) Indra, with the aid of the Asvins and Sarasvati, circumvents the compact and revenges himself on Namuki; (4) the Asvins and Sarasvati bring back the soma from Namuki; (5) Minor points in the story.

What Prof. Bloomfield is anxious to prove is that this story of Namuki has no physical background, or, as he expresses it, that it was never preceded by any historical or naturalistic version. He admits, indeed, that Indra is very largely a storm-god, who attacks the clouds and other natural phenomena personified as demons. But he takes him in this legend as merely the heroic person Indra, embroiled with all sorts of meanly beings, one of them happening to be the demon Namuki. He will not even allow that Namuki was so called because he would not (na) let go (muk) Indra. He thinks that this is a mere after-thought. Still, this explanation is given as early as the time of the Taittiriya-brāhmaṇa (1, 7, 1, 6) and surely no name was ever given without some reason, and in few names is the reason of the δυνατοθέρης so manifest as in that of Namuki. Vritra, Sushna, and other demons, with whom Prof. Bloomfield classes Namuki, clearly betray the intention of their name-givers—why should not Namuki? And why should Namuki alone be merely a fanciful being, while all the other opponents of Indra have their roots, like Indra himself, in natural phenomena? If we imagine that all the opponents of Indra must represent clouds, then, no doubt, it would be difficult to imagine a cloud that would not let go Indra. But Indra has many characters and many enemies. In one of his characters Ind-ra is known to be the lord of the moon (ind-u), at first the ally, but afterwards the locum tenens of Soma. He is represented not only as drinking the ambrosia of the moon, like the other gods, but as fighting for Soma, and rescuing Soma from the iron fortress into which his enemies had thrown him, and kept him captive. All this has been well worked out by Prof. Hillebrandt in his learned work on Vedic Mythology. There are two features of the moon which occupied the attention of the ancient poets, and had somehow or other to be accounted for. We know that the eclipses of the moon seemed very terrible, and they were accounted for by a demon or graha, who for a time devoured the moon, but had to surrender it afterwards. This can hardly be the physical foundation of the Namuki story, for, after all, the demon of the lunar eclipse had to let go, at least for a long time. But there was another eclipse of the moon which took place constantly from every full moon to every new moon. It is this gradual eclipse which seems to me at the root of the Namuki and several other legends. We have the well-known legend of Soma being carried off and held in prison, till a bird, a falcon, discovers him and brings him back. Indra himself is sometimes represented as doing the work of that bird, and bringing back the captive Soma. Even then Soma is not safe from his enemies, for an archer, called Kṛishānu, aims at him, and sometimes a feather of the bird is said to have been shot off. Now why is this enemy, sometimes represented as a Gandharva, called Kṛishānu (literally, "he who makes thin")? Because as Durgādāsa informs us, the dark half makes the moon thin (Kṛishnapakṣaḥ kṛisyati Kāndram). In the Atharva-veda, xii. 3, 16, we read of the moon as gyotishmān, and as "uta yah kakarsa," as the bright and as he who grows thin. And this Kṛishānu is evidently an old name, if, as has long been suggested, it is the same as the Avestic Keresāni.

What then is Namuki supposed to do? He is supposed never to loosen his hold on Soma; neither does he, for every night Soma becomes smaller and smaller, and Indra, the lord of Soma, falls more and more into the power of Namuki. As he cannot shake him off, he offers a compromise, never to kill him by day or by night, &c., if only Namuki will let him go. Such compromises are not uncommon in Aryan mythology. Achilles is vulnerable in one place only, so is Sigfried. Again, the whole earth is made to promise not to injure Balder; he is killed at last by the mistletoe, because that grows on a tree, and not on the earth. Now the fact is quite true. Indra does not kill the enemy of the moon in fair combat. Namuki elings to him till almost nothing is left, and yet he does not kill Soma altogether. The curious feature in the Namuki myth is that Namuki is killed at last by what is called a piece of foam, which is neither moist nor dry. What is this piece of foam? Prof. Bloomfield, who is very fond of explaining legends by reference to sacrificial acts or to popular superstitions, maintains that this foam (phena) in the story of Namuki owes its origin to a superstition that lead drives away evil spirits. That superstition is certainly very old. It exists in the Atharva-veda and elsewhere. But foam is not lead. True, says Prof. Bloomfield; but there is a Paribhāṣā-Sūtra at Kaus, 8, 18, which says that lead, river-lead, iron-filings, and the head of a lizard are in practice all equivalent to lead. And this so-called river-lead is explained by one commentator as nadiphenapīṇḍah, a lump of river-foam. All this is very curious, but is it more than curious? Prof. Bloomfield thinks that the river-lead or the river foam was supposed to be efficient against demons, because Indra wrung off the head of Namuki with foam. But why was Indra believed to have performed this violent operation with mere foam? That is the question that has to be answered, unless we say with Prof. Bloomfield and Bergaigne that it is better not to ask too many questions. I do not mean to say that we can answer all such questions, but I do think that we ought to try to answer as many as we can. Now let us remember that it is when Soma or the moon is reduced to the last kalā, the last gasp, that Indra turns round. Sometimes it is said that, when only a little is left of the fifteenth part of the moon, the Pitris come to fill it again. Sometimes the moon is supposed to be actually invisible for three nights. But at all events it is when Soma has come to the last kalā or digit, that Indra faints for a time, and then recovers himself by wringing the head of Namuki. The question then is, can this last kalā or the first kalā of the moon be likened to phena or foam? Among the many similes or even appellations of the moon, a very frequent one is ārmī, the wave; and whoever has watched the moon rising over a wild and foaming sea will easily understand the simile. Now if the small crescent of the moon can be called a wave, why not the foam or crest of a wave? But we need not ask why not, for anyone who has but read the first verse of the Hitopadesa knows how the kalā of the moon is likened to a streak of foam, gahnarīphenalekhā. Hence this strange fiction of the foam also seems to me to have a naturalistic foundation in the last and first kalās of the moon. That at the approach of the new moon Indra seems overcome, that all the Soma seems to have gone out of him, and been swallowed by Namuki, is intelligible enough. And who cures Indra in his distress? The Asvins—whether on account of their being the physicians of the gods, or on account of their appearing always just before sunrise, is difficult to settle. Let it only be clearly understood that the two Asvins are among the oldest representatives of the universal dualism of nature, of day and night, of morning and evening, of sun and moon. But why was Sarasvati supposed to have assisted Indra at the time of new-moon? Because, as we see in the Brāhmaṇas, where Sarasvātī is identified with the full moon, Sarasvati is identified with Amāvāsyā, or the new moon (Hillebrandt, Vedische Mythologie, p. 382). Of course, it is impossible to say at what moment of time new moon takes place: it is a vanishing moment, and we know how much trouble the ancient Brāhmaṇas took to fix it. Hence it might well have been fabled that the exact time when Indra shook off Namuki could not be fixed, that it was entre chien et loup, neither at night nor in the day. All the rest would follow, for the reins of the imagination of Vedic poets were held very loose. The only unexplained element in the whole story is the surā, not the soma, which Indra is supposed to have drunk, before he was quite overcome. Surā, or parisrut, though not exactly brauly, is a vulgar, even a forbidden, beverage, the beverage of Asuras, not of Devas. Yet it seems to have been taken as a remedy against Soma-nausea; and there is a ceremony, the Sautrāmāṇī, in which it forms a very prominent part. Whether that ceremony is a reflex of the new moon disasters or new moon recoveries of Indra, or whether that ceremony has supplied some details to the Namuki legend, is more than I should venture to say. For the present I think we must be satisfied with admitting that the Vedic fabulists, when they had to account for the discomfiture of Indra, imagined that the Asura Namuki had drugged his boon companion by giving him his own, the Asura beverage, to drink. I agree with Prof. Bloomfield that in minor points the fancy of the ancient as well as modern story-tellers runs very free, but I still hold that in their broad outlines all mythological stories spring from nature, as seen by her earliest interpreters. F. MAX MÜLLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN ISRAELITISH WAR IN EDMON: HEBREW LOAN-WORDS FROM GREEK.

Queen's College, Oxford: Oct. 9, 1892.

Rather more than a month ago, Mr. Binion, in a letter to the ACADEMY, proposed a new reading for the corrupt passage in Numbers xxi. 14; but his conjecture is not likely to satisfy anyone except its author. The translators of the Septuagint, however, had a different text before them from that which appears in the Masoretic version—a text, too, which gives good sense, and can be construed grammatically. Instead of the impossible wāhēbh they read zāhābh, while in place of בכוריה they had כרפיה, without the initial bēth, which, as Dr. Neubauer has pointed out to me, is merely a repetition of the final letter of the preceding word. Lastly, the word which is punctuated "wars" in the plural in the Masoretic text was punctuated by them as a singular. Hence the verse appears in the Greek version: "Wherefore it is said in a book: The war of the Lord consumed Zahab and the brooks of Arnon."

If, however, we adopt the reading Zahab, which is thus supported by an earlier authority than the Masoretic text, it is not necessary to make any further alterations in the Hebrew version. The verse would run: "Wherefore it is said in a book" (or "the book" if we change the punctuation): "The wars of Yahveh were at Zahab in Suphah" (or "of Suphah," if we omit the bēth) "and at the brooks of Arnon." We learn from Deut. i. 1 what was the situation of both Zahab and Suphah. We are there told that the plain "over against Suph" was "between Paran and Tophel and Laban and Hazereth and Di-Zahab." Di-Zahab, as has long been recognised, is a compound, the first element of which corresponds with the Arabic dhū, so that the name means "the district of Zahab." In Gen. xxxvi. 39, mention is made of "the waters of Zahab," the last king of Edom whose name is given being said to have been the grandson of Matred, "the daughter" (or "son" according to the Septuagint) "of Mē-Zahab." The expression "daughter" (or "son") must be here used in the common sense of "native."

Zahab, then, was in Edom, not far from Suph or Suphah. The position of the latter locality is fixed by 1 Kings ix. 26, from which we learn that "the sea of Suph" was the Gulf of Aqaba. Consequently, one of "the wars of Yahveh" was in Edom in the neighbourhood of the Yām Suph.

Now Zahab means "gold," and the name thus points to the existence of gold mines. The fact will bring to memory Sir Richard Burton's book on The Gold-Mines of Midian, and the expedition upon which he was sent by the Khedive. The district of Zahab must have been included in the "sandy" region of Havilah, which, according to Gen. xxv. 18, and 1 Sam. xv. 7, lay on the eastern border of the Ishmaelites, and in which, as we are informed in Gen. ii. 12, there was "gold." It is a district which sorely needs exploration.

"The war of Yahveh" in this part of Edom is unrecorded in the Old Testament; and we should not have heard of it at all had it not been alluded to in "a book" in connexion with the war against the Amorites, of which we have an account. But it may be possible to bring it into relation with a campaign made by Ramses III. of the Twentieth Egyptian Dynasty against "the Shasu of Mount Seir." A discovery I was fortunate enough to make last winter has shown that the Israelites had not as yet settled in what was afterwards the territory of Judah when Ramses III. overran southern Palestine and captured its chief cities; and it is further remarkable that he alone of Egyptian Pharaohs—so far as we know—ventured to lead an army into the fastnesses of Mount Seir. It is therefore by no means improbable that "the war of the Lord" referred to in the book of Numbers was a war waged with the Egyptian king.

As I am about to depart to my Egyptian home, I may perhaps be allowed to mention another subject, which has, however, nothing to do with the history of Israel. The discovery of the name of a Yivana or "Ionian" in the Tel el-Amarna tablets, coupled with the fact that he was serving in "the country of Tyre," opens up the possibility of the introduction of Greek words into the language of Canaan at an early period. The Hebrew yayin or yain "wine," therefore, no longer presents the same difficulties as heretofore. August Müller has pointed out that, like the Ethiopic wein, it must have been borrowed from the Greek oinos, oinon, and not the Greek word from it. It is not found elsewhere in the Semitic languages; it has no Semitic etymology, and the vine is not a native of the countries to which the Semitic populations belonged. According to the naturalists, it is a native rather of Armenia and the Balkans. The Hebrew word, however, can hardly have been borrowed from the Armenians, as the Vannic inscriptions have shown that the vine was called udulis in the old language of the country.

Another Hebrew or Canaanitish word which I should regard as of Greek origin is lappāl, "a torch." This, again, has no Semitic etymology, while the Greek λαμπάς is, of course, connected with the root of λάμπω. Possibly mekhêrôth in the Blessing of Jacob (Gen. xlix. 5) is another loan-word of the same kind, the Greek original being μάχηρα.

A. H. SAYCE.

OLD BURMESE INSCRIPTION AT BUDDHA GAYÂ.

London: Oct. 12, 1892.

In General Cunningham's new book, Mahâ-bodhi, a plate is given (No. xxix.) of a copper-gilt umbrella found by Mr. Beglar to the west of the great temple at Buddha Gayâ, and beneath it is given a hand copy and a photograph of a Burmese inscription found on it. The hand copy is, as such things are apt to be, badly drawn, and so misleading as to be quite unintelligible; but from the photograph the words can be made out.

General Cunningham says (p. 75):

"The Burmese inscription appears to open with a date, but I cannot read it satisfactorily. I can make out the words Siri Dhamma Râjâ Guru, but the last four letters puzzle me."

The inscription runs thus, according to my reading in strict transliteration: [Sak]karâj 397 ku || Siri Dhamma Râjâ Guru || Mahâtthir, or as the modern Burmese would say: Thekkayit 397 ku Thiri Damma Yâza Guru Mahâti. This being interpreted means:—The secular year 397, Sri Dhamma Râjâ Guru, the High Priest. The term Mahâtthir, or Mahâtthêr, as the more learned men prefer to write it, though both words are pronounced Mahâti, is the well-known Pâli Mahâtthêra. Dhamma Râjâ Guru is a title applied frequently to high priests or sayādaws (= ācāriya + Burmese honorific suffix taw, commonly also pronounced sadu) in Burma. The full title of one such personage on his iron seal lately presented by myself to the Pitt-Rivers Museum runs thus:—Sundarâbhivamsa Dhammāṅkara Mahādhammarâjâ-guru. These words are pronounced by the Burmese:—Thōndayūbiwunthā Dammāṅgingyā Mahādammayāzâguru. The peculiar title of the Royal Preceptor himself is always, as I understand, Sri Dhamma Râjâ Guru; so the inscription means that the umbrella was presented or set up by the Royal Preceptor in the year 397 Burmese era, or A.D. 1035, as General Cunningham supposes. The date and archaic character of this inscription make it one of great importance.

R. C. TEMPLE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE next volume in Mr. Walter Scott's "Contemporary Science" series, to be published immediately, will be Public Health Problems, by Mr. John F. J. Sykes, medical officer of health for St. Pancras. The author attempts to summarise the essential points in evolution, environment, parasitism, prophylaxis, and sanitation, which bear upon the preservation of the public health. The volume will be copiously illustrated.

THE arrangements for the next session of the Royal Geographical Society present several new features. In addition to the ordinary meetings, it is proposed to give a special series of Christmas lectures to young people, to be followed by a course of ten weekly educational lectures, specially adapted for teachers, by Mr. H. J. Mackinder. At a special meeting on November 7, Capt. Lugard will recount his discoveries in Equatorial Africa. The ordinary meetings begin on November 14 with a paper by Dr. Nansen on his proposed North Polar expedition. Mr. Joseph Thomson will follow with an account of his expedition to Lake Bangweolo, and Capt. Bower will describe his journey across Tibet. Prof. Milne and Mr. Savage Landor have promised papers on Yesso, Major Rundell on the Siyin Chins, Mr. H. O. Forbes on the Chatham Islands, and Capt. Galloway on Benin. It is hoped that Mr. Conway will return to describe his adventures in the Karakoram mountains. Apart from the records of travel, to which the ordinary meetings have usually been mainly devoted, there will be papers dealing with the more general and scientific aspects of geography. The Prince of Monaco will probably describe his experiments on the Atlantic currents, Sir Archibald Geikie will lecture on types of scenery, Prof. Bouney on the work of glaciers, Mr. J. Y. Buchanan on the windings of rivers, and Dr. Schlichter on his new photographic method of determining longitude.

THE first series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday, October 23, in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 p.m., when Dr. Andrew Wilson will lecture on "The Distribution of Animals and what it teaches." Lectures will subsequently be given by Mr. Willmott Dixon, Prince Kropotkin, Mr. R. Brudenell Carter, Mr. Arthur W. Clayden, Prof. H. Marshall Ward, and Dr. E. E. Klein.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS.

DR. PLEYTE, of Amsterdam, is editing the collected writings of the late Prof. G. A. Wilken, of Leyden, whose knowledge of the anthropology of the Dutch East Indies was unrivalled. The first volume will shortly be published by Mr. Brill, of Leyden.

MR. HENRY BALFOUR, the curator of the Pitt-Rivers collection at Oxford, has written an essay upon The Evolution of Decorative Art, which will be published immediately by Messrs. Percival & Co. The object of the author is to record the evidence for the development of the complex out of the simple, and to trace the history of art back to the earliest efforts of primitive man.

THE last part of the Internationales Archiv für Ethnographie (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains the first part of an elaborate paper on the Natives of the Nicobars, by Dr. W. Svoboda, based upon his own personal observations as well as upon the published studies of Mr. Horace Man. It is illustrated with two coloured plates, besides cuts in the text.

WE quote the following letter by Canon Isaac Taylor, upon "The European Origin of the Aryans," from Science:—"My attention has been called to Dr. Brinton's note in Science for June 20 as to the claim of Omalius d'Halloy to have preceded Latham in calling in question the theory of the Asiatic origin of the Aryans. In 1890, when, in his lectures on Races and Peoples, Dr. Brinton advanced the claim of d'Halloy, I carefully read over Halloy's articles, as cited by Dr. Brinton on p. 146 of his book; and I came to the conclusion that d'Halloy was not acquainted with the theory he is said to have controverted. The dates confirm this conclusion. The articles in question were published in the Bulletins of the Belgian Academy during the years 1839 to 1844, and were recapitulated in 1848. The theory of the migration of the Aryans from Central Asia first found definite expression in an article by Pott, buried in a volume of Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopædia, which was published in 1840; but it attracted no attention till taken up by Lassen in 1847, and by Jacob Grimm in 1848. This was the theory against which Latham contended; whereas d'Halloy's very confused and misty arguments seem to refer, if they refer to anything, to the Caucasian theory broached by Blumenbach in 1781, with the modifications proposed by Adelung in his Mithridates, 1806-1816. I think, therefore, we are still justified in asserting that Latham was the first to question the comparatively modern theory that the Aryan race originated in the highlands of Central Asia, a theory of which d'Halloy does not seem to have heard; and consequently, in the second edition of my Origin of the Aryans, published in 1892, I did not think it necessary to modify my former statements as to Latham's priority."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE October number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) is the first after an interval caused by the summer holidays. Perhaps the most important article is that in which Mr. Herbert Richards examines the use of κ with the future in Attic Greek. After excluding two classes of cases—(1) where there is a predominance of MS. authority against the use; (2) where the change of a letter or two gives another tense in place of the future—he quotes a list of passages, nineteen in all, where the MS. authority for κ with the future is uncontradicted, preponderating, or at least good. He then goes on to explain many of them away by the theory that AN is a MS. blunder for Δ H; and finally suggests other passages where the same blunder may have occurred. Mr. J. A. R. Munro discusses the chronology of the career of Themistocles, in view of the statements in the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία, arguing that there were in ancient times two distinct systems of chronology, separated by an interval of ten years. Mr. A. Tilley deals with the obscure subject of the ludus lutrunculorum, partly from the evidence supplied by pieces that have been found in tombs; and concludes that any successful attempt to explain the working of the game must be based on analogies, not from draughts or chess, but from the Roman army or camp. As usual, the reviews are an important feature of the number. We may specially mention: Platt's new edition of the "Odyssey," by D. B. Monro; Batiffol's work on the Athanasian "Syntagma Doctrinae," by A. Robertson; Mahaffy's "Problems in Greek History," by R. W. Macan; Smith's Catalogue of Greek and Roman Sculpture in the British Museum, by Miss Eugénie Sellers; and Murray's Handbook of Greek Archaeology, by Prof. J. H. Middleton.

WE have received a print of a paper on "The Greek Indirect Negative," recently read before the London Philological Society by Mr. E. R. Wharton, of Jesus College, Oxford. In this he endeavours to show, by a classified series of examples—(1) that primarily and essentially $\mu\eta$ is not a negative or prohibitive particle, but an interrogative; (2) that many $\mu\eta$ -sentences which are at present printed as assertions might better be printed as questions; and (3) that even in other cases the apparent negation contains or pre-supposes an interrogative meaning. As he observes, "the Greeks increasingly loved dubitantius loqui—to view facts as possibilities." And thus he would explain the well-known line (Soph. Aj. 1231), $\delta\tau' \alpha\upsilon\delta\acute{\iota}\nu \epsilon\nu \tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron \mu\eta\delta\acute{\iota}\nu \alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\tau\eta\varsigma \upsilon\pi\epsilon\tau$ as containing both the assertion, "You were worth nothing," and the question, "Was he worth anything?" Incidentally, Mr. Wharton throws out the suggestion that $\mu\eta$ and $\mu\eta\nu$ were originally by-forms, like $\nu\acute{\iota}$ and $\nu\acute{\iota}\nu$, $\epsilon\gamma\acute{\omega}$ and $\epsilon\gamma\acute{\omega}\nu$, since $\tau\acute{\iota} \mu\eta$ and $\tau\acute{\iota} \mu\eta\nu$ equally mean (like our "Why now?") introducing a sentence "of course"; but in practice $\mu\eta$ was confined to questions, $\mu\eta\nu$ was not. He is not disposed to adopt the view that $\mu\eta$ is identical with the accusative of the pronoun of the first person, used (as in Virgil's me, me, adsum qui feci) to call attention to the speaker.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

HELLENIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, Oct. 17.)

PROF. JENN, president, in the chair.—Miss Eugénie Sellers read a paper on three Attic lekythi, found at Eretria, and now in the National Museum at Athens. They were of the finest workmanship, and extremely interesting from the point of view of mythology, the subjects being Homeric Odysseus and the Sirens, Odysseus and Circe, and Hercules and Atlas. The paper, which will appear in the next number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies, dealt fully with the vases themselves, and with their relation to other vases, and to works of sculpture treating of the same subjects. In the discussion which followed Mr. Cecil Smith expressed the opinion that the Sirens in Greek art were frequently mistaken for Harpies, and put forward the view that the winged figures in the so-called Harpy tomb in the British Museum were more probably Sirens.—The hon. secretary read a paper by Mr. F. B. Jevons, on "Iron in Homer," which went to show—(1) that it is opposed to the facts of the case to say that iron is more common in the Odyssey than in the Iliad or in the later lays of the Iliad than in the older; (2) that the Homeric poems must be placed in the Iron Age, but at the very beginning of it; (3) that if Homer lived in the Mycenaean period iron must have been known in that period; and (4), that if iron was not known in that period, then even the oldest lays must be of later date. Sir Frederick Pollock expressed approval of the common-sense line taken in the paper, and maintained the view that Homer was certainly written in the Iron Age. As to the distance between the Trojan War and the age of the poems, it might be compared with the distance between the age of Charlemagne and writers of the Charlemagne legends. It was possible that the frequent reference to bronze weapons in the poems was conventional, and a survival of poetic tradition. Mr. Frank Carter referred in some detail to the passages where iron is mentioned respectively in the Iliad and the Odyssey, and argued that the later date of the Odyssey might be inferred from them. It was clear that the poet of the Iliad regarded his audience as not acquainted with the working of iron to any degree of finish or in large masses. Dr. Leaf expressed his general concurrence in Mr. Jevons's views, but contended that the fact of no iron being found in the shaft-graves at Mycenae did not necessarily imply that the Homeric poems had no relation to Mycenaean discoveries, his view being that, though certainly later than the shaft-graves, the poems were yet contemporary with the later Mycenaean period when iron had come into use. Sir Charles Newton, Prof. Lewis Campbell, and Mr. Penrose also took part in the discussion.

VIKING CLUB.—(Thursday, Oct. 13.)

THE Herfat Foy (Harvest Festival), the first Thing of the first session of the Viking Club—a social and literary society of Orcadians and Shetlanders was held in the King's Weigh House Rooms, Thomas-street. The Honorary Jarl, Dr. John Rae, presided, and, in a few spirited remarks, declared the club opened. Although an Orkney man by birth, he could not claim Viking descent, but had, nevertheless, shown their spirit of discovery and daring in his several arduous expeditions to the Arctic regions, which, he trusted, was a sufficient qualification to fill the post of Jarl of the Viking Club.—Mrs. Jessie M. E. Saxby, the Shetland novelist and writer, then read a paper on "Birds of Omen," confining her remarks to the two birds best known in Shetland—viz., the corbie or raven and the katyogle or owl, illustrating her subject with numerous instances of Orkney and Shetland folklore regarding these two birds. The raven was sacred to the Allfather Odin, and was the device on the banner of Jarl Sigurd at the battle of Clontarf in Ireland. The owl was consecrated to the Goddess of Wisdom. From Odin came the strong hand which made the sea-kings masters of men; from Pallas Athena came the mighty mind which made the Greeks a living power for all time. The raven in Shetland is supposed to be able to assume any form, and the owl to be the inhabitant of another world in disguise. When ravens are seen fighting in the air and calling "corp, corp," it is expected that some one is going to die. The owl is considered a bird of ill omen. In conclusion, Mrs. Saxby made an appeal that, for the sake of associations revered and cherished, the raven and owl should be spared to haunt the hills and rocks, and add the poetry of superstitious legend to the wild beauty of our Isles.—Among the papers to be read during the session may be mentioned "Udal and Feudal," by Mr. C. H. E. Carmichael, foreign secretary of the Royal Society of Literature; "Scandinavian Art in Great Britain," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen, Rhind Lecturer in Archaeology; and "Shetland Folklore and the Old Creed of the Teutons," by Dr. Karl Blind.

FINE ART.

The History and Practice of Illuminating. By Prof. J. H. Middleton. (Cambridge: University Press.)

IT would perhaps not be a very high compliment to this, the latest book on the subject, to say that it is in many respects the best that has yet appeared in English. The French and Italian works on illuminated MSS., though occasionally excellent, and for the most part accurate, are not sufficiently comprehensive. This one is remarkably comprehensive, as might be expected from the well-known tastes and acquirements of the author, and, considering the vast mass of materials with which it has to deal, remarkably accurate. The subject, usually considered to be a very special one, has been made observably wider than its title, so as to include, indeed, much that preceded and led up to it. The distinction between illustration and illumination, however, might have been drawn a little more carefully, as the two subjects are really not quite synonymous or co-extensive. It is true there is an intimate relationship between the words. Both signify an act of throwing light upon some object, yet in point of historical fact the difference in their application is enormous. The whole department of knowledge relating to the art of writing is very extensive, and has been exhaustively, and in certain directions exhaustively, dealt with. Books are but one section, and MSS. but a portion of this section, and illuminated MSS. again merely a species of the latter. All illustrated MSS. are by no means to be considered as within the category of illuminated MSS. For this reason it may be objected that however interesting the history of Egyptian, or Greek, or ante-Imperial book-illustration may be, it does not correctly fall within the province of this work. To speak of illumination in classical times is, to say the least of it, to put a strain upon the definition of illumination. The mere light throwing of pictorial illustration in colours, and even the occasional finishing with dull gold and silver inks, does not mean illumination in the sense implied by Theophilus or Cennini or Le Bègue. Nor is it by any means proven from any extant examples that the ancients, as we call those highly civilised nations who lived in pre-Christian times, really practised the art:

"Ch' alluminare è chiamata in Parisi."

Allowing, however, the author's definition to cover this distinction, and, therefore, to efface the objection, still we may ask: Why in an otherwise profusely illustrated book, the chapters relating to the important and deeply interesting subject of ancient books and modes of writing should be left utterly without illustrations. Surely they have an equal claim with the rest to such an indulgence. It was hardly fair to the author's whole subject that the most archaistic and therefore presumably least familiar portion of it should be thus ignored by the artist. It should have been treated at least as respectfully as the rest of the book. Indeed, on the ground of antiquity alone, it has a claim to the greater deference and attention. If neglect of this portion be disrespectful, the kind of attention shown to the rest is not flattering. We should scarcely have expected, in a work issued from the press of a great university, and written by an author who occupies the position of a teacher in that university, that the mode of illustration by a crambe biscotum of second-hand blocks would have been tolerated. The work absolutely demanded illustration of the best class, by the latest and most approved processes, facsimiles, and auto-types, which should render it the standard work on the subject. Instead of this, we have a series of ordinary engravings, neither facsimiles nor specially scholarly productions, already well known, borrowed from a still more popular work. We do not recommend chromolithography, because of its frequent and deplorable insufficiency. Yet the works of Bastard, Louandre, Labarte, Mantz, and others, do give some notion of illuminated books. They at least enable the student to form a tolerably just idea of different schools, if not of technical details—of Byzantine work of the tenth century, English of the eleventh, German of the twelfth, French of the fourteenth, Netherlandish or Italian of the fifteenth—when, perhaps, these schools were typical, and so do really afford considerable help to the student. Still it is an expensive and uncertain method. But in these days of facsimile reproduction, with Armand-Durand, Dujardin, Dixon, and other processes, most of which are excellent, and already employed by the greatest authorities for similar work, and with, moreover, the inexhaustible stores of our public libraries within reach, it does seem a pity that a standard and scholarly work should not have had illustrations suitable to its rank. No doubt, those engravings were right enough in their place as popular embellishments to a popular history; but here we need something better. It is disappointing, after what the author says of the importance of English illumination several times in the course of its career, not to see some typical and well selected examples of it, taken from the stores of our great national and cathedral libraries.

Coming to the writer's more especial province, we are convinced of his more than necessary qualifications for the task of dealing with it. What faults he has lie on the bookish side. He has now and then in the matter of illumination trusted some of his authorities a little too implicitly. He has done a great deal in the personal examination of MSS., which is an indispensable qualification in a writer about them. But, after all, it is in the literary antiquities that he is most at home. He instructs us from ancient and classical sources with good effect: for example, when he tells us that Pliny's story about Eumenes of Pergamos being the inventor of parchment (pergamena) is an error. Pliny is responsible for, we fear, many other errors. It is almost as hard to unbelieve the old story of the jealousy of Eumenes against Ptolemy as to believe that the Alexandrian library was not burnt by Omar. Yet it is now generally agreed that this also is a venerable canard.

When Prof. Middleton expresses an opinion of his own, it is generally such as we can all, or nearly all, agree with. For example, in the case of the Victoria Psalter. No one can feel anything but respect for the industry, enthusiasm, and skill of the late Owen Jones; but our author's criticism of the Psalter is perfectly just. Prof. Middleton alludes to the ancient Roman practice of keeping books in boxes or presses, not visible, as in our modern bookcases. He speaks of its continuance in the one great library in Europe which all travellers desire to see, and which they so often visit without seeing, or without being rightly aware that they have seen. In fact, all the printed books and MSS. in the Vatican are still preserved in presses, or drawers, or cases with richly decorated fronts and covers—kept closed, so that the visitor only sees a superbly ornamented apartment or suite of apartments—the great features of which are painted ceilings, enriched panels, statues, and pictures, but not books and MSS. Even the exhibition cases are usually covered so as to look like richly inlaid tables, and are passed by, though they contain treasures such as the Codex Vaticanus and the illuminated Dante. Only when one of these covers is lifted does the visitor to the Vatican Library truly realise that it is the great historic treasure-house of which he has read. Persons have gone to Rome almost for the purpose of seeing the books, and have traversed the whole library without the remotest idea of its locality.

Prices of ancient books are referred to. Thus, Aristotle gave the value of £750 in Attic gold for an autograph MS. of Speusippus; and another MS., supposed to be in the handwriting of Virgil, was sold in early Imperial times for £20. It would be exciting to see the competition for the latter if it should ever turn up at Sotheby's, Christie's, or elsewhere. It would put Mr. Quaritch on his mettle. The old and long-continued practice of dictating an author to a room full of copyists (slaves at Rome, monks in the mediæval scriptorium, and paid clerks in the sixteenth century) enabled prae-typographic publishers to bring out considerable editions of a popular author at a moderate cost. Thus a copy of Martial's Epigrams was published by Tryphon & Co., the great firm whose well-frequented shop was the attraction of Roman dilettanti, for about eightpence. Even still cheaper work was done. As to amount of production, the Emperor Augustus is said to have suppressed an edition of Ovid's poems consisting of a thousand copies. At a later time—the sixteenth century—Vespasiano de' Bisticci, an Italian book agent and contractor for the supply of MSS., who, indeed supplied the great amateurs and princes of his time, relates that in twenty-two months, by the labours of forty-five copyists, he furnished no fewer than two hundred important volumes for the Medicean Library. Upon the question of the antiquity of paper, Prof. Middleton justly holds Pliny again guilty of an error. We are constantly finding Pliny in this predicament as to matter of fact. Yet for all that, we could ill spare the wonderful collection of old-world traditions, beliefs, and legends from a still more remote antiquity, which we know and pore over as the Natural History of industrious, but uncritical, C. Plinius Secundus, who, by the way, was Pliny the First, or the elder. The younger Pliny, who writes the letters to Tacitus and others, was his nephew. Paper, as we learn from recent discoveries, was in use in Egypt as far back as 2300 B.C., and not merely, as old Pliny thought, from the time of Alexander the Great. The ancients, it appears, knew more about pens and inks than they usually have credit for. The Greeks made silver and other metallic pens, and Latin MSS. show a great variety of inks—red, purple, green, blue, silver, and gold. The great Floreffe Bible in the British Museum shows the skill of the penman in the twelfth century in the use of this mode of decoration; and in somewhat later times it was no unusual thing for scribes to annotate their texts in coloured inks, red, green, violet, blue, using each colour for a distinct class of notes, historical, biographical, geographical, &c. Scientific works are often made exceedingly attractive by coloured diagrams, chronologies by architectural arcades and ornamental panels.

Of course it is not our business to go minutely through this vast collection of notes on illumination and miniature art. We may agree to differ from Prof. Middleton as to the definition of illumination, and we may be allowed to look upon illumination and miniature as distinct arts—which have been often combined—but the history of either of which does not completely cover that of the other. Mr. Middleton's notes are so very copious that it is scarcely wonderful if now and then he is led astray. He speaks of the Bedford Missal. He certainly knows that the MS. he refers to is not a missal at all. It is time to cease from the ignorant blunders of the eighteenth century. Jacquemart de Hesdin is made by the misspelling of his surname to perpetuate the mistakes of Waagen and Father Cahier. It might have been stated that the Triptych possessed by Mr. Willett is actually a miniature painting on vellum. Cardinal Marino Grimani was the nephew, not the brother, of Domenico. It appears, from the mention of Jarry, as if the author thought he was a miniature painter; whereas Robert, or some other miniaturist, usually executed the flowers in his MSS., Jarry only doing the pen-work, which, in its way, is faultless.

But fault-finding is disagreeable. With regard to the technical part of the volume, as it consists almost entirely of transcripts from Mrs. Merrifield, Jehan le Bègue, Theophilus, Cennini, and other books well known to the student, to criticise it would be simply to criticise them. They are useful, but it would have given an additional interest to this section if the writer had brought forward new matter—had, for example, pointed out MSS. which are instructive to the student as showing, from the actual condition of the miniatures or illuminations themselves, the method followed by the artist. As for instance, the Mandoville grisailles, or the Roman de Moliadis in the British Museum, or the many other MSS. which the catalogues of that library, the Bodley, and our university libraries refer to as unfinished, in order that with the very work before him he might realise or contradict the statements of his authors, and learn solidly and practically for himself.

We might have given more reasons for such objections as have been made to Prof. Middleton's view of the antiquity of illumination, and also to his definition of the term, but this would have necessitated the presentment of alternatives and des pièces justificatives, for which the present is not the place. Notwithstanding, however, a few blunders, we gladly acknowledge the very interesting and instructive character of this compendious essay; and, to recur once more to Pliny, we are reminded of certain words bearing on the difficulties and labour of such undertakings. In his Preface to the Natural History, he says: "Res ardua vetustis novitatem daro, novis auctoritatem, obsoletis nitorem, obscuris lucem, fastiditis gratiam, dubiis fidem." We believe, however, that the author is equal to the task; and hence we may trust that, when revised and reprinted with suitable and worthy illustrations, this History of Illumination may become, in his very capable hands, what the student has a right to expect—a reliable and standard work on the subject.

JOHN W. BRADLEY.

OBITUARY.

JOSIAH GILBERT.

THERE died a few weeks ago—and his death, in the dull season, passed with singularly little comment—a writer on art of very serious merit, one who relied for his influence, not upon fluency or sentiment, but upon learning and discrimination. His influence was therefore slight; it was not given to Josiah Gilbert to exercise that fascination over the public which has been used conspicuously by writers far less solidly endowed. Josiah Gilbert, who lived and died in the Eastern counties—his house was Marden Ash, Ongar—was the son of Ann Taylor, and the nephew of perhaps the most famous of the several famous Isaac Taylors. He was one of the few instances of an orthodox dissenter with a serious care for pictorial or other art. One or two books of his, connected as much with travel as with art, made him known in a measure at the circulating libraries; Cadore; or, Titian's Country was interesting alike to the lovers of Nature and the students of great painting. But it is especially by his little recognised book on Landscape that he deserves to be remembered. With modern landscape it does not deal at all, but its study of early Flemings, early Germans, the Italians themselves even, down to Titian, is valuable and exhaustive. Temperate in expression, and not a page of it dictated by violent prejudice or unreasoning prepossessions, Josiah Gilbert's Landscape will outlast some treatises on the subject which for a generation have been popular. The writer, who amassed his material in quietude and dealt with it at leisure, died at a ripe age. He was eight-and-seventy.

F. W.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PITHOM, RAAMESSE, AND (OR) ON.

London: Oct. 10, 1892.

Although the Hebrew text of Exodus i. 11 gives two "store cities," Pithom and Raamesse, the Greek version adds—"On, which is called Heliopolis." At the recent Congress of Orientalists, Prof. Muhalloff drew attention to this fact, as clearly intended to localise the region in which the Israelites were employed. Manetho assigns their work in the quarries of Turra. Josephus describes them as constructing the pyramids. In no case is there any allusion to the North-eastern Delta.

There is a very interesting MS. map in the British Museum, ascribed to the well-known patriarch Chrysanthus. It is bilingual—Arabic and Greek. Μεμφις is el Gizeh; Παβυλων = Masr; Ηλιουπολις = el-Matarieh. The name Ραμεσση appears twice—on the west side of the Nile, opposite Babylon, and again on the east side, about ten miles to the south of Old Cairo. This part of the map, about 5 × 7 inches, can be found reproduced by me in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology (December, 1885). In spite of the evidence thus offered for an independent Raamesse, it seems to me that the Greek of the Septuagint (L. c.)—τὴν τε Πειθὸν καὶ Ραμυσσὴν καὶ Ὀν, ἥ ἐστὶν Ἡλιούπολις—refers to only two places, not to three. The καὶ after Ραμυσσὴν introduces the geographical gloss, which may, indeed, have been added to the text in the earliest centuries of the Christian era. It should be preceded by a comma. The two names, Pithom and Raamesse, were Egyptian. It was natural to explain the second as "On, which is called Heliopolis," for the benefit of Hellenistic Jews or early Christians, to whom one of these names would carry no distinctive meaning. In the same way this map of Chrysanthus gives three names for Medinet el-Fayoum, adding to the Arabic both Κροκοδείλων Πόλις and Αρσινοη.

In regard to Pithom, there is no question that Hebrew tradition, as represented by Saadia, born in the Fayoum in A.D. 892, and the Rabbi Benjamin of Tudela, who visited it in A.D. 1173, identified this "lake-district," its canal of Joseph, and grain-reserves with the city or province Pi-Tum. Whether this tradition was as old as the Hebrew text of Exodus in its present form, or a later invention, may be matter for discussion. At all events, the literary wealth of this region, which has furnished scholars with thousands of papyri from the earliest epochs to the tenth century A.D., has fixed the attention of the world on its unique physical features and topographical advantages.

A new map of the Fayoum, on the scale of 1 to 100,000, has been published by the Public Works Ministry of Egypt at the moderate price of four shillings. My friend, Lieut. Col. Ross, must forgive my expression of doubt whether the novel form in which many names appear will be accepted by European geographers, but scholars will appreciate his careful translation.

COPE WHITEHOUSE.

ÆGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: Oct. 18, 1892.

In his last letter Mr. Petrie suggests that "the subject may now rest"; but, in that letter, he makes three statements which ought not to pass without comment:

"The answers to Mr. Torr's last paragraph have appeared in previous letters of mine."

That is not so. If any of your readers care to look through the correspondence, they will see that Mr. Petrie has not answered the questions which I repeated in that paragraph.

"The dating of vases which I laid down in Uahun, and have since reaffirmed in a recent letter, has been challenged by the quotation of one other vase."

As a matter of fact, that dating has been challenged on four grounds—(1) Because Mr. Petrie's premises do not necessarily lead to his conclusions; (2) because false-necked vases with patterns on them are represented in the tomb of Ramessu III., and must, therefore, have been in use two centuries after the date assigned by Mr. Petrie to all similar false-necked vases; (3) because one of these vases was found in the tomb of a grandson of Pinetchem, and must therefore have been buried four centuries after the said date; (4) because Mr. Petrie takes no account of the close connexion between these vases and the genuine Greek vases of the seventh century B.C. Mr. Petrie's statement implies that the dating has been challenged on the third ground only.

"We now learn that the beadful history of this vase cannot, or must not, be stated."

The history of this vase is that it came from the tomb of one of the grandsons of Pinetchem. This has been stated; all that has not been stated is the name, or names, of the person, or persons, who took the vase out of the tomb and brought it to England. And there are reasons why the name, or names, should be withheld. Nobody would imagine that the beadful history of a vase consisted of somebody's name.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibitions to open next week include those of Messrs. Tooth and Mr. McLean, next door to one another in the Haymarket; and a collection of Early Flemish and Dutch Masters, at the Japanese Gallery, in New Bond-street.

THE new fine art annual, European Pictures of the Year, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. early in November. The work will contain about 120 reproductions of the principal continental pictures of 1892, forming a companion to Royal Academy Pictures.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. announce a volume of Technical Essays, by members of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society, with a preface by Mr. William Morris.

MR. STANLEY LITTLE not long ago republished, from the enterprising Sussex newspaper in which it first appeared, an essay upon a group of painters whom he denominates "The Wealden School." This appellation is bestowed by the thoughtful and likewise enthusiastic essayist, in virtue partly of the place of residence of the landscape painters selected, and in virtue also of what he considers to be their common aim, or at all events their common subject. Mr. Aumonier, Mr. Mark Fisher, and Mr. Léon Little are naturally prominent members of the "school" described. Doubtless they have something in common; but it is a question whether Mr. Stanley Little, in his interesting papers, attaches quite sufficient importance to what we may describe as their common derivation from that French landscape school which happens at the moment to be fashionable, and which possesses a certain legitimate attractiveness, far from exhaustive and final though its achievements may be.

AMONG the exhibitions with which the picture season has opened, somewhat prematurely, that of Miss Dering Courtois, at the Maddox-street Galleries, has been almost the only one that has had any individuality or interest; and Miss Courtois's, we are bound to say, would have gained very considerably in importance and artistic value had she waited to include a larger number of works in which something beyond quickness of observation and dexterity of handling were noticeable. In other words, it would have been better if Miss Courtois had bided her time, and put before us at last an array of thoroughly considered canvases rather than of merely engaging impressions. The lady has gifts; and among them is the faculty of indicating, even in her slightest sketches, the aspect and gesture of gentlewomen. One sketch of a young woman seated at a piano has been found to combine, in a rare degree, actualité and good taste. Only two really important works graced the somewhat hasty exhibition of the works of this interesting artist: one of them a rural subject that had been seen at the Paris Salon, and another the very realistic and thoroughgoing canvas of a hospital ward at Lincoln, which won the conspicuous encomiums of a great daily paper directly the work was on view in last year's Royal Academy. Miss Dering Courtois will be heard of again; but that she may be heard of to her advantage, it is necessary that her efforts shall proceed beyond the stage of the sketch.

THE STAGE.

THE turn of the month is the period fixed upon for the production of "King Lear," which it need hardly be said must be the leading event of the theatrical season, not only or even chiefly because of the effects made to ensure a spectacular success, but more especially by reason of the opportunity the play affords to the artist who, whatever may be the variations in his own performances or in the public taste, cannot possibly be accounted other than the greatest English actor of his time. The Lear of Mr. Irving may be expected to compare favourably with that which was a really notable performance of the past at the Princess's a round dozen of years ago—we mean the representation of Lear by a leading legitimate actor of America, Mr. Edwin Booth.

WE have been informed that there is about to be organised in the elegant and charming Princes Hall, in Piccadilly, a series of music-hall performances, given under conditions of reasonable refinement. Afternoon tea, in other words, is to take the place of spirits and tobacco. The pot-house element will be banished—the very thing that still makes a visit to the ordinary music hall an adventure not agreeable in all respects to many men, and agreeable to no women except to those—the piteously deluded—who imagine themselves most fashionable when they are most unsexed. This contemplated innovation will be extremely welcome, and is entirely sensible. There is no shadow of reason why we may not enjoy the humane and finished art of Mr. Chevalier, the grace of Miss Florence Levey, the magnetism of Miss Lottie Collins, without being obliged to seek them in an atmosphere as vitiated and intolerable as that of a painter's smoking party.

WITH reference to a note in the ACADEMY of last week, a correspondent writes to us that the drama entitled "The Home Wreck," written by the late Stirling Coyne upon the story of Enoch Arden, which was first produced at the Surrey Theatre in 1869, was revived at the Holborn Theatre in the spring of 1873, with Mr. Creswick in the part of the hero, and Miss Carlisle in that of the heroine. So far as our correspondent knows, it has not been produced since—at any rate, not in London.

MUSIC.

"EUGENE ONEGIN."

THE production of Tchaikowski's "Eugene Onegin" at the New Olympic Theatre on Monday night, as the opening opera of Signor Lago's season, was an event of some interest. The composer has written much for the stage, but with the exception of his "Mazeppa," played once or twice in the provinces by a small Russian company some few seasons back, no opera of his has been heard in England. It is curious to note, too, that, while he has written at least five symphonies, not one has been given here, although the composer paid us a visit in 1888, and again in 1889, and had the Philharmonic orchestra at his disposal. Tchaikowski ranks among the principal composers of young Russia, and the opportunity of hearing his opera was therefore welcome. "Eugene Onegin" was originally produced at St. Petersburg in 1884. The libretto, an English version of which has been prepared—though it was not strictly followed—for the London performance by Mr. and Mrs. Sutherland Edwards, is derived from a poem by Pushkin, which enjoys a certain reputation. Judged from a high dramatic standard, the libretto is weak; but then it must be remembered that Tchaikowski describes his work only as "Lyrical Scenes." Really, however, it must be regarded as an opera. The story is a simple one. Tatiana, the heroine of the tale, falls desperately in love with Onegin: that is the substance of the first act. In the second, Onegin fights a duel with his friend Lenski, in consequence of a mild flirtation with Olga, fiancée of the latter; the duel scene is the one dramatic moment of the act. In the third and last act, Onegin finds Tatiana married to another; and an interview between the two, in which duty conquers emotion and the unhappy lover is dismissed with an eternal farewell, forms again a highly dramatic close. As for the rest of the opera, there are songs, concerted music, and choruses; these, however, do not retard the action of the piece, which as a matter of fact does not exist. Much of this music is of excellent character. The melodies have a melancholy Slavonic cast. The harmonies and rhythms are quaint and clever, and the orchestration is always picturesque; but at certain moments, as for example the sentimental song sung by Lenski before the duel, and the tawdry ballad sung by Prince Gremio, Tatiana's husband, in the last act, one is carried back to the days of the old-fashioned opera. Nous avons changé tout cela: Wagner taught composers the proper province of music in connection with the stage; and Tchaikowski, though in no sense an imitator of the great reformer, shows in his best moments how well he understands and feels what ought to be done. The "Tatiana duel" and closing scenes are admirable in structure, development, and feeling. Tchaikowski seems like a man who has not quite made up his mind. While pressing forward, he cannot help, like one of old, casting a lingering look backwards, and the result, in consequence, is not satisfactory. The composer, however, by means of his great talent and skilled pen, has contrived to make his acts end well—and more than that, to make each in turn more exciting. The consequence of this is that, though there are dull moments in the opera, yet, as a whole, it is certainly not dull. And, again, it is the work of an accomplished and spirituel composer, and, as a specimen of modern stage music, well deserves a hearing. The performance was not all that could be desired, especially as regards the orchestral playing. Miss Fanny Moody is not altogether suited to the rôle of Tatiana; but she sang and acted with commendable taste and earnestness. Miss Lily Moody looked extremely well as the light-hearted Olga. Mr. Iver McKay was over-weighted in his part. M. Oudin as Eugene was excellent: his acting was forcible, yet not exaggerated, and he sang well, though, possibly from arduous rehearsals, his voice had not its proper brilliancy. The orchestra was under the careful direction of Mr. H. J. Woods.

J. S. SNEEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts commenced on October 15, when the programme included two novelties. The first was Mr. C. A. Lidgey's Ballade for Orchestra (Op. 7), after Doré's picture, "A Day Dream." The youthful composer has produced a tone-picture of pleasing character, and effective in its lights and shades. The so-called "Love" theme is decidedly graceful. That Mr. Lidgey should have been inspired by a painting is all very well, but modern composers are too fond of calling attention to the source of their inspiration. Chopin gave no clue to his four Ballades. Mr. Lidgey's promising work was well received. The other novelty was M. André Wormser's Symphonic Poem, "Les Lupercales," in which by the aid of tones he seeks to portray processions of priests, and vestals, and devotees armed with whips, scourging all whom they meet. Music has been pressed into many a strange service by French composers since the time of Berlioz, whose genius always saved him in his most dangerous flights. M. Wormser's music is characteristic and decidedly clever, but scarcely art in the highest sense. M. Vladimir de Pachmann performed Beethoven's Concerto in C minor, but spoilt much of it by his tricky playing, and by the use of the soft pedal contrary to the composer's directions. And why did he interpolate something between the 1st and 2nd movements, and spoil Beethoven's bold key-contrast of C minor followed by E major? For solos he played Chopin's Nocturne in G minor (Op. 37, No. 1) and Rondo (Op. 16); the latter is one of the few commonplace productions of Chopin. M. de Pachmann displayed his usual delicate touch and finished technique, and was enthusiastically received. M. Oudin was the vocalist, and sang tastefully songs by Gounod, Grieg, and Chaminade. The programme included Sir A. Sullivan's, "In Memoriam," and Beethoven's Symphony, No. 8, both of which were admirably rendered under Mr. Manns's able direction.

M. SLIVINSKI gave a Pianoforte Recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. The programme was by no means a hackneyed one. It commenced with Paderewski's difficult A minor Variations, which were rendered with much delicacy and feeling. The reading of Chopin's D flat Nocturne was correct but cold, and that of the A flat Valse (Op. 34) lacked brilliancy. The C sharp Scherzo was, however, played in a most effective manner; the middle "Chorale" section with its delicate figuration was given with proper repose and dream-like delicacy. Eight numbers of Schumann's Fantasiestücke followed: of these the most satisfactory were "In der Nacht" and "Fabel." The programme included pieces by Handel, Schubert, and Liszt. As an exponent of the last-named composer, M. Slivinski has already displayed his skill.

NATIONAL		APPROACHING DIVISION OF PROFITS.
FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.	PROVIDENT	PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED, £4,000,000.
INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.		INSTITUTION.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.		48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C
The Next Division of Profits will be made us at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

NEW BOOKS.

SKETCHES from EASTERN HISTORY. By THEODOR NOLDEKE, Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Strassburg. Translated by JOHN SUTHERLAND BLACK, M.A. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

The MEMORABILIA of JESUS, commonly called the GOSPEL of ST. JOHN. By WILLIAM WYNNE PEXTON, Minister of Free St. Luke's, Broughty Ferry, N.B. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

HYMNS: their History and Development in the Greek and Latin Churches, Germany and Great Britain. By ROUNDELL, Earl of Selborne. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

DRAWING and ENGRAVING. A Brief Exposition of Technical Principles and Practice. By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, R.P.E. With numerous Illustrations selected or commissioned by the Author. Fcap. 4to, cloth. [In the press.]

A HISTORY of SOCIALISM. By THOMAS KIRKUP. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

JUKES' SCHOOL MANUAL of GEOLOGY. Sixth and Cheaper Edition. Edited by A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S. Illustrated. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

MARRIAGE and FAMILY RELATIONS: a Manual of Practical Law. By NEVILL GEARY. Large crown 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

RAILWAYS: a Manual of Practical Law. By F. M. PRESTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

A STRING of BEADS: Verses for Children. By LADY LINDSAY. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

NEW NOVELS.

THE LAST TOUCHES, and other Stories. By Mrs. W. K. CLIFFORD. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. [Ready on 24th.]

A TANGLED WEB. By Lady LINDSAY. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, price 21s. [In the press.]

ALADDIN in LONDON: a Romance. By FERGUS HUME. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. [In the press.]

THE DIVERS: a Romance of Oceania. By HUME NISBET. Illustrated with Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

STORIES. By Ascott R. Hope. Illustrated with Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s. [In the press.]

NEW GUIDES.

O'SHEA'S GUIDE to SPAIN and PORTUGAL. Ninth Edition. Completely Revised by JOHN LOMAS. Illustrated with Maps, Plans, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

APPLETON'S GENERAL GUIDE to the UNITED STATES and CANADA. Illustrated. 1892 Edition. Crown 8vo, leather, price 16s. 6d.

THE DRYBURGH EDITION

OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

To be completed in Twenty-five Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, and published Monthly, commencing 1st November, 1892.

Price 5s.

EACH VOLUME CONTAINING A COMPLETE NOVEL.

This Edition will contain the latest Revised Text, with ample Glossaries and Indices and will be Illustrated with 250 Wood Engravings, specially drawn by the following Artists:—

CHARLES GREEN.
GORDON BROWNE.
PAUL HARDY.
WALTER PAGET.
FRANK DADD.

HUGH THOMSON.
H. M. PAGET.
JOHN WILLIAMSON.
GODFREY C. HINDLEY.
WILLIAM HOLE, R.S.A.

LOCKHART BOGLE.
GEORGE HAY, R.S.A.
C. M. HARDIE, A.R.S.A.
W. H. OVEREND.
STANLEY BERKELEY.

There will be a Large-Paper Edition, strictly limited to 300 Copies for England and America, specially printed on Hand-made Paper, price 15s. net each volume.

Prospectuses, Handbills, Showcards, &c., may be had on application to the Publishers.

IN spite of the numerous issues and re-issues of the Waverley Novels that have been brought before the public, it has been for a long time a cherished intention of the Publishers to produce a STANDARD EDITION of the character and form now embodied in the Dryburgh Edition.

The Novels having been so frequently reprinted, it is not surprising that in previous editions errors have crept in unobserved; and that in passing through many hands (both of Editors and Printers) certain supposed improvements and alterations have been made upon the text. To produce in perfect correctness SCOTT's own authorised text has been the object aimed at in the present edition, involving in its execution the most careful collation—in fact, word for word—with the INTERLEAVED COPY on which SCOTT made his last corrections. This copy, in twenty-five large octavo volumes, was acquired along with the Copyright in 1851, and is now in the Publishers' possession.

The ILLUSTRATIONS form a special feature of this Edition, each Novel having been entrusted to one Artist, in order to secure that harmony and continuity of expression so essential to successful illustration. They are all engraved on wood under the superintendence of Mr. J. D. COOPER.

As regards TYPOGRAPHY, the printing is from the well-known press of Messrs. R. & R. CLARK, of Edinburgh, and a clear and legible type has been specially cast for this edition.

Each volume will contain all the AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES, and the Additional NOTES, which are copyright, contributed by the late DAVID LAING, LL.D., a friend of the Author and a well-known antiquary.

Besides these, a GLOSSARY AND INDEX will be appended to each volume. The former has been prepared with great care, and with much valued help from several eminent literary men, and will be found to throw much light on the Scottish Idioms, and old and bygone phrases, frequently used by the Author of Waverley.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING WORKS.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY LORD TENNYSON.

In a few days, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE DEATH OF OENONE, AKBAR'S DREAM, AND OTHER POEMS.

By ALFRED LORD TENNYSON.

NEW MINIATURE EDITION ON INDIA PAPER.

Now ready, in cloth box, 40s. net.

POETICAL AND DRAMATIC WORKS OF ALFRED LORD TENNYSON.

Miniature Edition printed at the Clarendon Press, Oxford, on India Paper, in 8 vols., bound in cloth.

MAN in ART. By Philip G. Hamerton. Illustrated by Etchings and Photographs from Pictures by Sir F. Leighton, Alma Tadema, Watts, Sir John Gilbert, Luke Fildes, Dicksee, G. Leslie, Gonzalo Coques, Philippe de Champaigne, Maes, Schalken, Murillo, Ghirlandajo, Ary Scheffer, Moreau, Botticelli, Pisano, Giovanni Bellini, Borgognone, Waleno, Woolner, M. D. Roton, Macklin, Rude, Luca Della Robbia, Tassanet, Bellangier, Frs Angelico, Albert Dürer, Lucas of Leyden, Rembrandt. Etched or Photographed by Norman Hirst, Rhead, C. O. Murray, M. Manesse, Didier, Firmeng, Goupil Process, Dujardin, Anan & Swan, Armand Durand, Guillaume, Pierre Gusman, Printed on John Dickinson & Co.'s hand-made paper. Columbian 8vo.

 EDITION DE LUXE (limited to 175 copies, 50 of which are for America) printed on John Dickinson & Co.'s hand-made paper, and the Illustrations on Japanese vellum, £10 10s. net.*

SCENES in FAIRYLAND; or, Miss Mary's Visits to the Court of Fairy Realm. By the Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York, and Vicar of Danty-in-Cleveland. With about 40 Illustrations by C. E. Brock. Crown 8vo.

DAYS with SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY. Reprinted from the Spectator. With Illustrations by Hugh Thompson. Crown 8vo, elegant, 6s. Uniform with "Cranford" and "The Vicar of Wakefield."

THE LIBRARY. By Andrew Lang. With a Chapter on Modern English Illustrated Books by AUSTIN DOBSON. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

 EDITION DE LUXE (limited to 300 copies, 75 of which are for America) printed on hand-made super-royal and bound in buckram, 21s. net.*

THE MAKERS of VENICE. Doges, Conquerors, Painters, and Men of Letters. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With Illustrations by R. R. Holmes, F.S.A., and 20 additional Illustrations. Medium 8vo, bound in half-buckram, elegant, to match "The Makers of Florence," published in 1891. 21s. net.

 This Edition is limited to 500 copies.*

THE DREAM of MAN. By William Watson. Fcap. 8vo.

THE POEMS of WORDSWORTH. Chosen and Edited by Matthew ARNOLD. With Steel Portrait engraved by C. H. Jeens. Printed on India paper, and mounted on title. The Text printed on Dutch hand-made. Bound in buckram (uniform with Palgrave's "Golden Treasury," &c.). 10s. 6d. net.

 This Edition is limited to 250 copies, 50 of which are for America.*

THE WORKS of COLERIDGE. Edited, with Introduction, by J. DYKES CAMPBELL. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, uniform with Tennyson, Wordsworth, &c.

THE PURGATORY of DANTE ALIGHIERI. An Experiment in Literal Verse Translation. By CHARLES LANCELOT SHADWELL, M.A., B.C.L. With an Introduction by WALTER PATER. Extra crown 8vo.

STRAY STUDIES from ENGLAND and ITALY. By John Richard GREEN. New Edition. Globe 8vo, 5s.

NEW NOVELS.

HELEN TREVERVAN; or the Ruling Race. By John Roy. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

NOTES.—"The story is bright and interesting. Indian life and scenery and Anglo-Indian types are described with life-like sincerity and a convincing air of first-hand knowledge."

THE HEIR-PRESUMPTIVE and the HEIR-APPARENT. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

DON ORSINO. By F. Marion Crawford. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

UNDER PRESSURE. Scenes from Roman Life. By the Marchesa THEODOLI. 2 vols., Globe 8vo, 12s.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"A singularly fresh and well-written novel. A very distinct air of reality pervades the entire book."

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

THE RAILWAY MAN and his CHILDREN. By Mrs. Oliphant.

THE MARRIAGE of ELINOR. By Mrs. Oliphant.

THAT STICK. By Charlotte M. Yonge. Illustrated by J. W. Hennessy.

DOMBEY and SON. By Charles Dickens. 52 Illustrations. [Ready]

CHRISTMAS BOOKS. By Charles Dickens. 65 Illustrations. [Oct.]

SKETCHES by BOZ. By Charles Dickens. 44 Illustrations. [Nov.]

AMENOPHIS, and other Poems, Sacred and Secular. By Francis TURNER PALGRAVE. With Vignette after Raphael. Post 8vo.

THE BEAUTIES of NATURE, and the Wonders of the World we Live In. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE GLOBE LIBRARY."

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON. Edited by Mowbray Morris. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE "ENGLISH CITIZEN" SERIES.

A New Edition, thoroughly Revised, will be issued in Monthly Volumes from October, 1892, 2s. 6d. each.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT. By H. D. Traill. [October.]

THE ELECTORATE and the LEGISLATURE. By Spencer WALPOLE. [November.]

NEW VOLUME OF MACMILLAN'S SHILLING PRIMERS.

A PRIMER of DOMESTIC ECONOMY. By Edith A. Barnett and H. C. O'NEILL. 18mo, 1s.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY" SERIES.

LYRIC LOVE: an Anthology. Edited by William Watson. With a Steel Vignette after Stothard, Engraved by W. Ridgway. 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

MEMOIRS of my INDIAN CAREER. By Sir George Campbell. 2 vols., 8vo. With Portrait and Map.

THE HISTORY of EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE. Being the History of English Poetry from its Beginnings to the Accession of King Alfred. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A. With a Map. 2 vols., 8vo.

A TRIP to ENGLAND. By Goldwin Smith. 18mo, 3s. [Ready.]

TIMES.—"A miracle of condensation attained without sacrifice of literary grace."

HORÆ SABBATICÆ. Third Series. By Sir James Stephen. Globe 8vo.

FOOTPRINTS of STATESMEN during the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY in ENGLAND. By the Hon. REGINALD B. BRETT. Crown 8vo.

ROUND LONDON DOWN EAST and UP WEST. By Montagu WILLIAMS, Q.C. 8vo.

ANNALS of an OLD MANOR HOUSE, SUTTON PLACE, GUILDFORD. By FREDERIC HARRISON. Illustrated from Original Drawings by Wm. Luker, Jun., W. Niven, and C. Foster Hayward, F.R.I.B.A. Demy 4to.

THE OREGON TRAIL: Sketches of Prairie and Rocky Mountain Life. By FRANCIS PARKMAN. Illustrated by Frederic Remington. Medium 8vo.

THE CITY-STATE of GREEK and ROMAN ANTIQUITY. By W. WARDE FOWLER, Sub-Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. Crown 8vo.

ATLAS of CLASSICAL ANTIQUITIES. By Th. Schreiber. Edited, for English Use by Prof. W. C. F. ANDERSON, Yorkshire College, Leeds. Oblong 4to.

PAGAN and CHRISTIAN ROME. By Rodolfo Lanciani, LL.D. Harv., Author of "Ancient Rome in the Light of Recent Discoveries."

COUNSEL to ENGLISH CHURCHMEN ABROAD. Sermon by the Right Rev. C. W. SANDFORD, D.D., Bishop of Gibraltar. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

LIFE and LABOUR of the PEOPLE in LONDON. Edited by CHARLES BOOTH. In Four Monthly Volumes. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

Vol. I.—East Central and South London.

Vol. II.—Streets and Population Classified.

Vol. III.—Blocks of Buildings, Schools, and Immigration.

Vol. IV.—East London Industries.

THE THEORY of WAGES and its APPLICATION to the EIGHT HOURS QUESTION and other LABOUR PROBLEMS. By HERBERT M. THOMPSON, M.A. Crown 8vo.

TALES from TENNYSON'S IDYLLS of the KING. Retold in Prose by the Rev. ALFRED CHURCH. Globe 8vo.

THE GIRLS and I. By Mrs. Molesworth, Author of "Carrots," &c. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

PIONERS of SCIENCE. By Professor Oliver Lodge. With Portraits and other Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo.

FINGER PRINTS. By Francis Galton, F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo.

HEREDITARY GENIUS: an Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences. By FRANCIS GALTON, F.R.S. New Edition. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. net.

[Ready.]

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1069.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready at all Libraries.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892.

From the Original Manuscripts of Father JOSEPH OHRWALDER, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped with two Sisters of Mercy, on camels, from the Sudan.

By MAJOR F. R. WINGATE, R.A.,

Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan, Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 500 pp., cloth extra, 21s.

* The First Edition is entirely exhausted. A SECOND EDITION will be ready next week.

"This simple narrative has many points of interest. As a thrilling tale of suffering and horrors it has not been surpassed in recent years. Major Wingate has done well to induce Father Ohrwalder to fill in the rough sketch with abundance of details which are sure to appeal to a wide public. Apart from the intrinsic interest of the story of the captivity of the faithful missionary and his companions, male and female, the work gives us a clearer account of the origin and real character of the Mahdist movement than we have seen elsewhere. Its picture of the actual condition of the Sudan, and of the horrors that followed abandonment, comes most opportunely at the present moment, when all friends of Africa and of civilisation are in dread lest the British Government should decide that the Great Lake region which England has annexed may also be abandoned to a savagery even more merciless than that which dominated the former Egyptian Sudan."—Times.

"Father Ohrwalder's account is the first trustworthy revelation of the state of matters in the Sudan during the ten years of his cruel slavery; a slavery so hard, indeed, that the wonder is how he and his comrades survived it. The tale he has to tell is full of human interest."—Standard.

"Throughout the narrative is clear and graphic, and the illustrations, with which the work is plentifully interspersed, add much to its general attractiveness."—Daily Telegraph.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL in NORMANDY, BRITTANY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By Henry Blackburn, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

SPORT and WORK on the NEPAUL FRONTIER, with which is incorporated "TENT LIFE in TIGER LAND." Being Twelve Years' Sporting Reminiscences of a Pioneer Planter in an Indian Frontier District. By the Hon. JAS. INGLIS ("MAORI"), Minister for Public Instruction, Sydney, Author of "Our New Zealand Cousins," &c. With 22 Illustrations in Chromo-Lithography. 1 royal 8vo vol., 700 pp., cloth extra, ONE GUINEA.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in MADEIRA. By A. E. W. Marsh. With many Full-Page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THROUGH the LAND of the AZTECS: Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico. By a "Gringo." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"In its account of the recent progress made by the Mexicans in commerce, the adjunct of civilisation, the book possesses a really practical value."—Times.

A TRAMP ACROSS the CONTINENT: from Ohio to California on Foot, 3,507 Miles. By Charles F. Lummis, Author of "A New Mexico David," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography. By Charles Willeby. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

The aim of this book is to give a true, concise, and unexaggerated account of the 'Raphael of the Piano,' as Heine called Chopin, as well as to point out some of the most characteristic features of his work as a musician.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.—New Volumes just ready.

Uniform crown 8vo Volumes, with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

CHRIST IS ALL. By the Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, PLAIN WORDS on GREAT THEMES. By the Rev. J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D., Principal of the English Presbyterian College, London.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE TERRIBLE CZAR: a Romance of the Times of Ivan the Terrible. By Count A. K. Tolstoi. Translated by Capt. FILMORE of the "Black Watch." Second Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Not a superfluous word will be found in the entire book, and from the point of view of literary workmanship, vivid word-painting, and sharp relief, it is a model of what a novel should be.....Seldom has it been our good fortune to meet with so excellent a rendering of Russian into English."—Athenaeum.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus Hume, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "A Creature of the Night," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. Kennedy, Author of "Blacks and Bushrangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J. Hyne, Author of "Four Red Nightcaps," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

WILLIAM BLACK'S NOVELS.—2s. 6d. per Vol. STANDARD BOOKS FOR BOYS.

New, Uniform, and Completely Revised Issue.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE NOW READY:—

A DAUGHTER of HETH. With Portrait of the Author.

THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a PHAETON.

A PRINCESS of THULE.

IN SILK ATTIRE.

KILMENY.

MADCAP VIOLET.

THREE FEATHERS.

THE MAID of KILLEENA.

GREEN PASTURES and PICCADILLY.

MACLEOD of DAKE.

LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.

[Just ready.]

* Complete List of the Volumes on application.

NEW VOLUMES FOR 1892-1893.

In very handsome cloth binding. Fully Illustrated.

Uniform crown 8vo volumes, 2s. 6d. each; gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

THE AZTEC TREASURE HOUSE. By T. A. Janvier.

THE COBBLER of CORNIKERANUM. By Rev. A. N. Malan, Author of "Uncle Towser," &c.

ROGER INGLETON, MINOR. By Talbot Baines Reed, Author of "Sir Ludar," &c.

HOW MARTIN DRAKE FOUND his FATHER; or, Wanderings in the West. By G. NORWAY. Illustrated by Lancelot Speed.

STRANGE STORIES of ADVENTURE. By Captain Mayne Reid, and others.

ROB ROY on the BALTIC. By John Macgregor, M.A.

BEVIS: a Story for Boys. By Richard Jefferies. Edited by G. A. HENTY.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Mrs. Ritchie's Records of TENNYSON, by J. A. Noble	381
Sir James Ramsay's LANCASTER AND YORK, by G. Gregory Smith	382
The RACING LIFE OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK, by J. I. Minchin	383
JUNKER'S TRAVELS IN AFRICA, by W. Wickham	385
NEW NOVELS, by W. Wallace	385
THREE BISHOPS ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM	386
NOTES AND NEWS	387
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	388
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE STREAM OF LIFE," by Prof. Skeat	388
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	388
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	388
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Convalescence," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; "A Funeral Custom in the County of Wexford," by Miss Margaret Stokes; "The Story of Namuki," by Andrew Lang	389
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	390
THE RACE AND LANGUAGE OF THE HITTITES. By Prof. Sayce	390
OBITUARY: Dr. C. Schütz	391
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"The Date of the Fourth Egyptian Dynasty," by G. F. Hardy	391
SCIENCE NOTES	391
PHILOLOGY NOTES	391
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	392
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Models of the Mahabodhi Temple," by Major Temple	392
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	393
"The Duchess of Malfi," by F. Wedmore	393
OBITUARY: ROBERT FRANZ, by J. S. Sherbrooke	391
MUSIC OF THE WEEK	394

EXCEEDINGLY rare OLD OAK FURNITURE, viz., Bureau Secrétaire, Grand Table with quaint shaped legs, and Corner Cupboard; each article richly carved; 10 guineas the lot, or separate; particulars forwarded.—Apply "Lady," Cornwell House, Morton, near Northampton, Yorkshire.

BARRISTER (Honours Lit. Hum., Oxford), employed on leading Weekly Review, REQUIRES MORNING or AFTERNOON WORK as Secretary, Tutor, or Publisher's Reader.—K., Inner Temple Reading Room.

A GENTLEMAN, 24, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT for SECRETARIAL WORK. Highest References. Shorthand, and Typewriter with own Machine. Salary about £120.—Address, N.X., care of Everett & Son, 17, Royal Exchange, E.C.

FREDERICK HOLLYER'S EXHIBITION of Platinotype Reproductions of the Works of E. BURNE JONES, A.R.A., D. G. ROSSETTI, G. P. WATTS, R.A., and other important pictures, the DUDLEY GALLERY, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, W. Open daily, 10 to 6. Admission 1s.

AUTOGRAPHS.

SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED AUTOGRAPH CATALOGUE or Collector's Guide to the present value of Autographs, 80 pages, crown 4to, on antique paper, containing over 2,000 letters, including the finest collection of Mendelssohn's original Music Manuscripts and Letters ever offered for sale—the earliest known Dickens Manuscript—Letters, &c., by Thackeray, George Eliot, Tennyson, Browning, Bach, Beethoven, Haydn, Cromwell, Queen Elizabeth, Charles I., James I., Nelson, &c., illustrated with a number of interesting Facsimiles.

Post-free, 1s. 2d.
NOEL CONWAY & Co., 50b, New-street, Birmingham.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASH-WORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES.—Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—Miss C. HYDE WATKINS, 31a, Strand, W.C.

THE CURRENCY, BANKING, ASSURANCE, ANNUITIES, TRADE, WINES, BREWING, FARMING, &c.

Catalogue of Scarce Works on Political Economy just published.
JAMES SKILLIE, 19, George Street, Edinburgh.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE 235 just out.—SPANISH BOOKS and BOOKS relative to SPAIN. 1,123 Nos. (Bibliography—Literature—History—Genealogy—Spanish Protestants—Fine Arts—Music—Discoveries and Possessions in America and the Philippine Islands, &c.).—MARTINUS NIJHOFF, The Hague (Holland).

PROF. LOISETTE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics. Lost memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better. Any book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A self-teaching method for all subjects. Invaluable to the legal, medical, clerical, musical, dramatic, and all other professions and businesses. Last Edition contains ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS!!!

MEMORY AND SUCCESS
PROSPECTUS POST FREE.
With opinions of Mr. R. A. PROCTOR, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.
Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING. Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.
PROF. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.
INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Next Division of Profits will be made as at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

THE HAUSA ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Committee of the HAUSA ASSOCIATION invite APPLICATIONS for a ROBINSON STUDENTSHIP of the value of £200 per annum.
The Student will be required to devote himself to the study of the Hausa language and people, at first at Tripoli and afterwards in the interior.
Applications will be taken into consideration at a meeting on December 2nd.
All communications should be addressed to the Rev. J. O. F. MURRAY, Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

BURNETT LITERARY TRUST.

The Rev. WILLIAM L. DAVIDSON, LL.D., Minister of the Parish of Bonhill, Aberdeenshire, the Lecturer recently appointed by the Burnett Trustees, will deliver his FIRST COURSE, consisting of SIX LECTURES, in connection with the University of Aberdeen, and in the HALL of MARISCHALL COLLEGE there, on the afternoons of the 7th, 9th, 12th, 14th, 16th, and 19th days of NOVEMBER next.

SUBJECT OF THE LECTURES—
"THEISM, AS GROUNDED IN HUMAN NATURE, HISTORICALLY AND CRITICALLY HANDLED."

ALEX. WEBSTER, Secretary of the Burnett Trustees.

Aberdeen, October, 1892.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall

Street, E.C.—A COURSE OF LECTURES on the "LAWS OF CHANGE in their RELATION TO THOUGHT AND CONDUCT" will be delivered by KAIL PEARSON, M.A., Gresham Professor of Geometry, on the Evenings of TUESDAY, November 1, Wednesday, November 2, Thursday, November 3, Friday, November 4. The lectures, which will be of an introductory and elementary character, are free to the PUBLIC, and commence at 6 o'clock p.m.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY, 22, Albemarle Street, W.

The FOURTEENTH SESSION, will OPEN on MONDAY, November 7th, at 8 p.m. The President Mr. SHADWORTH, LL. DODGSON, M.A., LL.D., will deliver the ANNUAL ADDRESS. Subject, "MIND."

H. WILSON CARR, Hon. Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COURT of ST. ANDREWS

The Court propose to appoint a LECTURER on the FRENCH LANGUAGE and LITERATURE. The appointment will be for a term of three years; salary £250 per annum, with such portion of the Class Fees as may be sanctioned by the Universities Commissioners. Applications, with twenty copies of Testimonials, will be received by Mr. STUART GRACE, Secretary of the University Court, until the 12th of November next.

St. Andrews, 21st October, 1892.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulles, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Gny's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcott; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Messrs. Penley, W. Wyes, Sam Sothorn, J. Nelson, C. Thornbury, Ernest Percy, W. Heriot, and Charles Hawtrey; Misses Ethel Matthews, V. Armbruster, G. Harrison, Ewell, A. Yorke, C. Elton, &c. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Counts, R. Nainby, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Elliston, Irene Rickards, and Caroline Hill. 8.30, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Little, Nainby, and Miss S. Grey.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Signor Lago's Royal Opera.
THIS EVENING, at 8, MARITANA.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.
THIS EVENING at 8.15 p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, CIGARETTE. At 7.50, CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING. Messrs. Collette, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Fair, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Geraldine Ulmar, Amadi, Marion Eric, May Lawrie, M. Collette, H. Vicary, C. Loeby, J. Bradford, and Albu.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.
THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton. At 7.45, THE WOODEN SPOON. Mesdames Violet Robinson, Millie Vere; Messrs. W. Philp and Leonard Russell.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

PREFERENCES in ART, LIFE, and LITERATURE. By Harry Quilter, M.A.,
Trinity College, Cambridge. Illustrated by 61 Full-page Plates. Printed in the best style of Parisian Art, under the supervision of the Author.
Imperial 8vo, uniquely bound. [Ready November 15th.]

The Text includes—A Contribution to the History of Pre-Raphaelism, An Essay on Contemporary English Art (1872—1890); Other Essays (chiefly reprinted, though revised, and in most cases re-written).

THE ILLUSTRATIONS INCLUDE IMPORTANT WORKS BY

G. D. LESLIE.
SIR J. GILBERT.
ADRIAN STOKES.
SIR J. MILLAIS, R.A.
PHIL MORRIS, A.R.A.
D. G. ROSSSETTI.

WILLIAM HUNT.
DAVID COX.
G. A. STORY, A.R.A.
ALBERT MOORE.
BLAIR LEIGHTON.
W. W. OULES, R.A.

C. E. PERUGINI.
SEYMOUR LUCAS, A.R.A.
J. PETTIE, R.A.
G. F. WATTS, R.A.
E. J. POYNTER, R.A.
J. WATERHOUSE, A.R.A.

GEORGE PINWELL.
F. WALKER, A.R.A.
J. McWHIRTER, A.R.A.
E. WATERLOW, A.R.A.
WYKE BAYLISS.
HENRY MOORE, A.R.A.

ERNEST PARTON.
E. K. JOHNSON, R.W.S.
SAMUEL PROUT.
SIR F. BURTON.
ALFRED EAST.

CLARA MONTALBA,
R.W.S.
HENRY WOODS, A.R.A.
PETER DE WINT,
And others.

The whole will form one of the most important and most luxurious books of the season. Only 1,615 copies are printed for both the English and American markets.

Also, a Large Paper Edition, limited to 275 copies. 84s. net [Subscriptions up to November 15th, £3 3s. net].

TWO NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

[Shortly.]

1. FROM ADAM'S PEAK to ELEPHANTA (CEYLON and INDIA). By EDWARD CARPENTER. Fully illustrated.

2. SKETCHES of LIFE and CHARACTER in HUNGARY. By MARGARET FLETCHER. Illustrated by Rocco le Quesne.

THE STORY of KASPAR HAUSER. By ELIZABETH E. EVANS. With Portrait. 4s. 6d.

The story of the abducted Prince of Baden, which is still believed in by thousands of intelligent persons in Germany, impartially narrated, with much circumstantial evidence in support of it. The tragedy is still the skeleton in the Grand Ducal cupboard.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

JUMP to GLORY JANE. By George Meredith.

With a Note on Meredith's Writing by HARRY QUILTER. Forty-four Designs and Plates, invented and drawn by Lawrence Houseman. Parchment, 7s.

The Edition de Luxe is entirely exhausted and at a premium.

A NEW GIFT-BOOK.

THE WILD PIGS. By Gerald Young. Fully illustrated by full-page Plates and Cuts by W. Parkinson. Cloth gilt, gilt top, 3s. 6d. "A thoroughly fascinating story. Tusko, Grumpy, Fussy, Snout, and Chunk deserve immortality."—VANITY FAIR.

WITH A PREFACE BY EDNA LYALL.

HAD I BUT KNOWN. By Ella Fordyce. 3s. 6d. "Miss Fordyce tells her story well."—ATHENÆUM.

WILL-o'-the-WISP. By Maria Petersen.

Translated by Mrs. BRATHWAITE SKEETE. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. "The refined conception of this story is certain to insure for it a large number of readers."—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. "A neat little volume, extremely well printed and bound."—WARRINGTON GUARDIAN.

TWO NEW AUSTRALIAN NOVELS.

1. MATTHEW REDMAYNE. By Oliver H. GROWDEN. 3s. 6d.

2. MAKING HIS PILE: An Australian Story. By JUSTIN C. MCCARTIE. Picture boards, 2s.

NEW BOOK OF AUSTRALIAN VERSE.

VOICES from AUSTRALIA. By Phillip Dale and CYRIL HAVILAND. 3s. 6d. "Many of them possess a considerable gift of expression, and the volume is a welcome addition to the poetic literature of Australia."—JL. OF ROY. COLONIAL INST.

TEXT-BOOK of ELEMENTARY BIOLOGY.

By H. J. CAMPBELL, M.D., Senior Demonstrator of Biology in Guy's Hospital. 135 Cuts, 6s. [This day.]

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY: Introduction to. By Dr. THEODOR ZIEHEN, Professor in Jena. Translated by C. C. VAN LIEW and Dr. OTTO BEYER. Crown 8vo, with 21 Illustrations, 6s. "We want such a book badly. We can recommend Ziehen as exceedingly well adapted to give the student a clear idea of the scope and the methods of the new science of physiological psychology."—NATURE.

TEXT-BOOK of PETROLOGY: A Description of the ROCK-FORMING MINERALS, and a SYNOPSIS of the CHIEF TYPES of IGNEOUS ROCKS. By F. H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S., of the Geolog. Survey of U.K. With 86 Cuts, 7s. 6d.

THE SCIENCE of EDUCATION. By J. F.

HERBERT. Translated, with a Biographical Introduction by H. M. and E. FELKIN, and a Preface by OSCAR BROWNING, M.A. Portrait 4s. 6d. "A book for every teacher to read with profit."—EDUCATIONAL REVIEW

A STUDENT'S CHURCH HISTORY.

HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH, A.D.

1-600. By Dr. W. MOELLER. Translated by ANDREW RUTHERFURD, B.D. 558 pp., 8vo, 15s. "It will serve as an excellent handbook for students, and will be valued by all who wish to follow in an unbiased narrative the development of Christianity."—GLASGOW HERALD. "A distinct advance on Kurtz."—REVIEW of the CHURCHES. "The kind of book a student delights in—loves to handle, loves to conquer, and to know."—EXPOSITORY TIMES. "In the days when we were divinity students we put our trust in Kurtz. This confidence is now numbered among our early illusions; there is Moeller now to flee to and be secure."—MODERN CHURCH.

HISTORY of ÆSTHETIC. By Bernard

BOSANQUET, M.A. (Oxon), Hon. LL.D. (Glasgow), formerly Fellow of University College, Oxford. 510 pp., large 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Really a great work, masterly in systematisation, accurate in learning, and full of great suggestion, of immense scope, dealing critically with the theories of the beautiful from Socrates to William Morris."—Prof. MINTO in the "Bookman," Oct. 1. [LIBRARY of PHILOSOPHY.]

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED

INTEREST: CUSTOMS, LAWS, AGRICULTURE. By RUSSELL M. GARNIER, B.A. (Oxon). 424 pp., 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Full of careful and far-reaching evidence, and falls into line with the works of Prof. Rogers, Mr. Prothero, and Mr. Ashley."—SCOTSMAN. "Eminently readable. An important contribution to economic history."—GLASGOW HERALD.

PHILOSOPHY AT HOME SERIES.

6. OUTLINES of the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By

HERMANN LOTZE. Edited by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A. (Oxon). 2s. 6d. "A final word must be added on the opportuneness and value of this thoughtful treatise. I have no hesitation in commending it as one of the most suggestive and enlightening books that our age has been privileged to welcome."—Rev. JOHN OWEN in the "Academy," October 1st, 1892.

7. THE PROBLEM of REALITY. By E. Belfort Bax, Author of "A Handbook to the History of Philosophy" in "Bohn's Library." 2s. 6d.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES. NEW VOLS. Each 2s. 6d.

57. LAND NATIONALISATION. By Dr. Alfred Russel WALLACE.

56. SOCIALISM: SCIENTIFIC, and UTOPIAN. By FREDERIC ENGELS.

55. THE SOCIAL HORIZON. By the "Daily News" COMMISSIONER.

54. EFFECTS of MACHINERY on WAGES. By Prof. J. S. NICHOLSON.

EMPIRE and PAPACY in the MIDDLE AGES:

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of MEDIEVAL HISTORY. By ALICE D. GREENWOOD. Maps. 4s. 6d.

AN ANGLO-SAXON READER. By James W.

BRIGHT, Ph.D., Associate Professor of English Philology in the Johns Hopkins University. With Notes and Glossary. 6s. 6d.

PARALLEL GRAMMAR SERIES.—New Volumes. Edited by Professor E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon).

GREEK ACCIDENCE. By the Editor. 2s.

SPANISH GRAMMAR. By H. B. Clarke, B.A. (Oxon). 4s. 6d.

FIRST SPANISH READER and WRITER. By the SAME. 2s.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

WALTER SCOTT'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW SERIES.

Cloth Elegant, large crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. per Vol.

INTERNATIONAL HUMOUR. Edited by W. H. DIRCKS.

In each of these volumes the object will be to give an anthology of the humorous literature of the particular nation dealt with. France, Germany, Italy, Russia, Spain, and Holland will each have their respective volumes; England, Ireland, and Scotland will each be represented, as will also America and Japan. "From China to Peru" the globe will be traversed in search of its jokes, in so far as they have recorded themselves in literature. The world of Humour admits of many interpretations: for the purposes of this Series it has been interpreted in its broadest generic sense, to cover humour in all its phases as it has manifested itself among the various nationalities. Starting from the early periods of each literature—in Italy, for instance, from the fourteenth century, with Boccaccio, Sacchetti, and Parabesco; in France with the amusing Fabliaux of the thirteenth century; in Germany from Hans Sachs; characteristic sketches, stories, and extracts from contemporary European and other writers whose genius is especially that of humour or esprit will be given. Proverbs and maxims, folk-wit, and folk-tales notable for their pith and humour, will have their place; the eccentricities of modern newspaper humour will not be overlooked. Each volume will be well and copiously illustrated; in many cases artists of the nationalities of the literatures represented will illustrate the volumes. Each volume will contain an Introduction and Notes biographical and explanatory.

Large crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, 3s. 6d.; roan, gilt edges, boxed, 6s. Each containing 400 to 500 pages, with numerous illustrations.

Now ready.

THE HUMOUR of FRANCE. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by ELIZABETH LEE. With numerous illustrations by Paul Fézensy.

THE HUMOUR of GERMANY. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by HANS MÜLLER-CASENOV. With numerous illustrations by C. E. Brock.

Ready early in December.

THE HUMOUR of ITALY. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by A. WERNER. With 50 illustrations and a Frontispiece by Arturo Faldi.

Other Vols. to follow.

AUTHORISED VERSION.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

PEER GYNT: A Dramatic Poem. By Henrik IBSEN. Translated by WILLIAM and CHARLES ARCHER.

This Translation, though unrhymed, preserve throughout the various rhythms of the original.

"... 'Peer Gynt' is a fantastical satirical drama of enormous interest, and the present translation of it is a masterpiece of fluent, powerful, graceful, and literal rendering." The Daily Chronicle.

THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL. A Russian Comedy. By GOGOL. Translated by ARTHUR A. SYKES. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"A delightful comedy, verging a little too often perhaps for modern tastes upon knock-about farce, but fresh, ingenious, stimulating, seldom out of touch with the realities of life. This story has the simplicity of the true classic."—SPECTATOR in The Star.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES. (20 Vols.)

PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEMS. By Dr. John F. J. SYKES, B.Sc. Public Health, M.B. (Edin.) Medical Officer of Health for St. Pancras, London, and Honorary Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Medical Officers of Health. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY. (76 Vols.)

THE NEW SPIRIT. By Havelock Ellis. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

THE CANTERBURY POETS (77 Vols.)

POEMS of the HON. RODEN NOEL. A Selection.

With an Introduction by ROBERT BUCHANAN. Square 8vo, cloth, cut and uncut edges, price 1s.

GREAT WRITERS. (38 Vols.)

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By F. Espinasse. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

AMONG the CAMPS; or, Young People's Stories of the War. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. With Eight Full-page illustrations. Crown 4to, cloth elegant, price 6s.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, 24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW LIST.

Demy 8vo, 422 pp., 10s. 6d., with Photogravure.

RECOLLECTIONS of GEORGE BUTLER By his Wife, JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

ARROWSMITH'S NOTE-BOOK (NEW) SERIES.

Oblong, cloth, 1s. 6d.

WEEDS. A Story in Seven Chapters. By K. McK. "Everybody is as God made him, and often-times a great deal worse."

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES. Vol. XII.

FLYING VISITS. By HARRY FURNISS. "The book is full of fun from beginning to end."—Times. "Both text and drawings are in Mr. Furniss's happiest vein."—Saturday Review. "A great success."—Sunday Times.

ARROWSMITH'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL, 1892, 1s.

THE GREAT SHADOW. By Dr. A. CONAN DOYLE. Ready October 21st.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

IN PART to BLAME. By HAINE WHYTE. "Quite the volume for a railway journey, or a passage across from Dover to Calais."—Sunday Times.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.

Thick 8vo, pp. 318, price 7s. 6d.

FROM THE CAVES AND JUNGLES OF HINDOSTAN.

By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

A translation of Mme. Blavatsky's famous letters from India to the Russian Messenger of Moscow, in 1879; full of strange secrets of Indian Life, and gorgeous pictures of Oriental nature. A few of the subjects are:—A Rajput Adept; Gulab Lal Sing; a Yogi's Cave; a Subterranean Palace; Secret Libraries; Saved by a Sadhu; the Karli Caves; a Dead City; a Witch's Den; Fire and Cauldron; the Seven Sisters; a Magic Flower; the Golden Lake; Infant Brides; the Jesuits of India; a Bewitched Tiger; a Secret Passage; Saved by Gulab Lal Sing; Hercules and Egypt; an Enchanted Island; the Rajput Sphinx; an Avenue of Fakirs; Mystic Trances; Seymour Sannyasi; Himilayan Sages, &c.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY,
7, DYKE STREET, ADELPHI, LONDON, W.C.

New Novel by the Author of "Stephen Ellicott's Daughter."

PASSING THE LOVE OF WOMEN.

By Mrs. J. H. NEEDELL.

3 vols., in crown 8vo.

New and Cheaper Edition.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

STEPHEN ELlicOTT'S DAUGHTER

By Mrs. J. H. NEEDELL.

"Mrs. Needell has done good work before, but it may be doubted whether she has done anything that will serve to prepare readers for a novel exhibiting such a combination of vigour and beauty as is to be found in 'Stephen Ellicott's Daughter.'"—Academy.

"From first to last 'Stephen Ellicott's Daughter' is an exceptionally strong and beautiful story."—Spectator.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

Just issued, price 3s., post free.

LIFE of JESUS. A New Translation. By RENAN.

London: WILLIAM GROVE, 6, Wine Office Court, Fleet Street.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

SIR WM. SMITH'S DICTIONARIES

CLASSICAL.

DICTIONARY of GREEK and ROMAN ANTIQUITIES. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 31s. 6d. each.

This New Edition contains 800 pages more than the old Edition. One-third of the articles have been entirely rewritten. The remaining two-thirds have been in all cases greatly altered; scarcely twenty have been reprinted as they originally stood. There are, besides, about two hundred articles which did not appear in the old Edition, many of considerable length and importance, with 450 additional illustrations.

DICTIONARY of GREEK and ROMAN BIOGRAPHY and MYTHOLOGY. By Various Writers. With 564 Illustrations (3,720 pp.). 3 vols., medium 8vo, £4 4s.

This Work contains a History of the Ancient World, civil literary, and ecclesiastical, from the earliest times to the downfall of the Roman Empire.

DICTIONARY of GREEK and ROMAN GEOGRAPHY. By Various Writers. With 4 Maps and 531 Illustrations (2,512 pp.). 2 vols., medium 8vo, £2 16s.

This Work presents the Researches of Modern Scholars, and the Discoveries of Modern Travellers, including an Account of the Political History of both Countries and Cities, as well as of their Geography.

CLASSICAL DICTIONARY of BIOGRAPHY MYTHOLOGY, and GEOGRAPHY, for the HIGHER FORMS in SCHOOLS. Condensed from the above Dictionaries. Twenty-first Edition. With 751 Woodcuts. 8vo, 18s.

SMALLER CLASSICAL DICTIONARY for JUNIOR CLASSES. Abridged from the above Work. Twenty-fourth Edition. With 200 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SMALLER DICTIONARY of ANTIQUITIES for JUNIOR CLASSES. Thirteenth Edition. With 200 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THEOLOGICAL.

DICTIONARY of the BIBLE: its Antiquities, Biography, Geography, and Natural History. With Illustrations. 3 vols., medium 8vo, £5 5s.

CONCISE BIBLE DICTIONARY. Condensed from the above Work, for Families and Students. Eleventh Edition. With Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s.

SMALLER BIBLE DICTIONARY. Abridged from the larger Work, for Schools and Young Persons. Fourteenth Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITIES. The History, Institutions, and Antiquities of the Christian Church. By Various Writers. Edited by WM. SMITH, D.C.L., and Archdeacon CHEETHAM, D.D. With Illustrations. 2 vols., medium 8vo, £3 13s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, SECTS, and DOCTRINES. By Various Writers. Edited by WM. SMITH, D.C.L., and HENRY WACE, D.D. 4 vols., medium 8vo, £5 16s. 6d.

LATIN.

A COMPLETE LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. Twenty-first Edition. 1,250 pp., medium 8vo, 16s.

SMALLER LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. Thirty-third Edition, thoroughly Revised and partly Rewritten. By Dr. WM. SMITH and Professor F. D. HALL, M.A. 730 pp., square 16mo, 7s. 6d. The Etymological Portion by JOHN K. INGRAM, LL.D., of Trinity College, Dublin.

This Edition is to a great extent a new and original work. Every article has been carefully revised.

A COPIOUS and CRITICAL ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY. Compiled from Original Sources. Fifth Edition. Medium 8vo, 16s.

SMALLER ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY for JUNIOR CLASSES. Abridged from the above Work. Fifteenth Edition. Square 12mo, 7s. 6d.

A NEW GRADUS AD PARNASSUM.

SECOND EDITION, 448 pp., crown 8vo, 9s.

AN ENGLISH-LATIN GRADUS, or VERSE DICTIONARY. By A. C. AINGER, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, and the late H. G. WINTLE, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, Assistant Masters in Eton College.

This Work is on a new plan, intended to Simplify the Composition of Latin Verses, by Classified Meanings, Selected Epithets, Synonyms, &c.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MESSRS. ISBISTER'S NEW LIST.

EDNA LYALL. A new three-volume story, entitled "TO RIGHT the WRONG," by EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," "In the Golden Days," &c., will begin in "Good Words" for January (the first part of a new volume), and be continued each month throughout the year.

CLOISTER LIFE in the DAYS of CEUR DE LION. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester, Author of "Dreamland in History," &c. With Illustrations by Herbert Railton. In handsome binding, imperial 8vo, 21s. [In November.]

BOOK by BOOK. Popular Studies on the Canon of Holy Scripture. By the Bishop of RIPON, the Bishop of WORCESTER, the Dean of GLOUCESTER, Canon McCLEARY, D.D., Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D., Prof. G. SALMON, D.D., Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D., Prof. WM. SANDAY, D.D., Prof. J. ROBERTSON, D.D., the late Prof. W. G. ELMSLIE, D.D., Prof. A. R. DAVIDSON, D.D., Prof. STANLEY LEATHES, D.D., and Prof. WM. MILLIGAN, D.D. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. [In October.]

THE PRIVATE LIFE of some GREAT COMPOSERS—Bach, Beethoven, Chopin, Donizetti, Gluck, Handel, Haydn, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Mozart, Rossini, Schubert, Wagner, &c., &c. By J. F. ROWBOTHAM, Author of "The History of Music," &c. With Portraits. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d. [In November.]

CHRIST and SOCIETY, and other Discourses. By the Rev. DONALD MACLEOD, D.D., One of H.M. Chaplains. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 3s. 6d. [In November.]

PEARLA. A Story of Family Life. By M. BETHAM-EDWARDS, Author of "Dr. Jacob," &c. With numerous Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [In October.]

SPEECHES and ADDRESSES. By the late W. C. MAGEE, D.D., Archbishop of York. Edited by his Son, CHARLES S. MAGEE. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Altogether, the volume is a very notable one, and deserves, as it is sure to obtain, a wide circulation."—Times.

QUESTIONS of FAITH and DUTY. By A. W. THOROLD, D.D., Bishop of Winchester. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"A truly excellent work....large-hearted and wise, intensely sympathetic, and full of kindness."—Church Bells.

THE VOICE from SINAI: a Series of Discourses on the Ten Commandments. By the Ven. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Archdeacon of Westminster.

"Contains much powerful and noble teaching, clearly conceived and definite, expressed in glowing and gorgeous diction."—Literary Churchman.

IN STARRY REALMS: the Wonders of the Heavens. By Sir R. S. BALL, LL.D., &c. With numerous Illustrations, medium 8vo, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

"The style of popular exposition throughout is indeed admirable, the illustrations are excellent, the binding is tasteful, and the print good."—Saturday Review.

THE IMPREGNABLE ROCK of HOLY SCRIPTURE. By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Vastly important and difficult subjects, which Mr. Gladstone discusses with consummate ability, and in excellent taste."—Church Quarterly.

TWO SPLENDID CHRISTMAS STORIES.

GOOD CHEER, 1892.

The CHIEF FACTOR ("Good Words" Christmas Story). By GILBERT PARKER. With Illustrations by A. Pearse. Price 6d.

Ready in a few days.

In handsome binding, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

GOOD WORDS.

VOLUME 1892.

Edited by DONALD MACLEOD, D.D.

And Containing

New Stories—

By WILLIAM BLACK—L. B. WALFORD—G. MANVILLE FENN—HELEN SHIPTON—LUKE SHARP—G. B. BURGIN, and others.

Important Contributions—

By the BISHOP of WINCHESTER—Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D.—Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.—The DEAN of ST. PAUL'S—Major C. R. CONDER, D.C.L.—The DEAN of GLOUCESTER—AUGUSTUS J. C. HAKE—Lady MAGNUS—Prof. A. H. GREEN, F.R.S.—The MARQUIS of LORNE—Prof. R. FLINT—PHIL ROBINSON—NEWMAN HALL, D.D., and others.

Illustrations—

By JOHN HOPPNER, R.A.—J. MACWHIRTER, A.R.A.—LINTLEY SAMBOURNE—WALTER CRANE—GORDON BROWNE—W. LOCKHART BOGLE—W. H. OVEREND, and others.

Ready in a few days.

In handsome binding, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE.

VOLUME 1892.

Edited by the Rev. BENJAMIN WAUGH.

And Containing

New Stories—

By HESRA STRETTON—CARMEN SYLVA (Queen of Roumania)—L. T. MEADE—DARLEY DALE—Mrs. MOLESWORTH, and others.

Important Contributions—

By The BISHOP of RIPON—Archdeacon FARRAR—Canon SCOTT HOLLAND, M.A.—Baroness BURDETT COUTTS—Canon TALBOT, M.A.—Lady HENRY SOMERSET—Preb. HARRY JONES, M.A.—Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, M.A.—H. MONTAGUE BUTLER, D.D.—R. W. DALE, LL.D.—GEORGE MACDONALD, D.D., and others.

Illustrations—

By EDWIN LONG, R.A.—PETER GRAHAM, R.A.—HERBERT RAILTON—R. BARNES—J. F. MILLET—E. MORGAN—E. F. BREWTON—F. H. TOWNSEND, and others.

PATHS OF PEACE, 1892.

JILL: a Flower Girl ("Sunday Magazine" Christmas Story). By L. T. MEADE, Author of "Daddy's Boy," &c. With Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Price 6d.

ISBISTER & COMPANY, LIMITED, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

A Poem by A. C. SWINBURNE, with an Illustration by W. E. F. Britten, appears in the MAGAZINE OF ART

FOR NOVEMBER,

Now Ready, price 1s., forming the FIRST PART OF A NEW VOLUME,

The Frontispiece to which consists of a beautiful Photogravure, "The Return," by Marcus Stone, R.A.

AMONGST THE CONTENTS ARE:

DRAWINGS at the BRITISH MUSEUM. By WALTER ARMSTRONG. With Twelve Illustrations.

ART in its RELATION to INDUSTRY. By L. ALMA-TADEMA, R.A. With a Portrait of the Author, by Himself.

A WORD to YOUNG ENGLISH PAINTERS. By Mons. FERNAND CORMON.

THE LEICESTER CORPORATION ART GALLERY. By S. J. VICCARS. With Seven Illustrations.

"THE RETURN." Note on the Frontispiece. ORIGINALITY in PEN DRAWING and DESIGN. By HARRY FURNISS. With a Portrait of the Author.

"THE PRIX de ROME" at the ÉCOLES des BEAUX-ARTS, PARIS. By A. V. PARMINTER. With Three Illustrations.

TITIAN'S SUMMER PILGRIMAGE. By LEADER SCOTT. With Five Illustrations.

OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTE-BOOK. With Four Illustrations.

THE CHRONICLE of ART: Art in October

A COMPANION WORK TO

"ROYAL ACADEMY PICTURES." Ready Early in November.

Price 2s. 6d.; or handsomely bound in cloth gilt, 4s.

"European Pictures of the Year." Containing Beautiful Reproductions of upwards of One Hundred of the Best Continental Pictures of 1892.

CASELL & CO., Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

No. 397, NOVEMBER, 1892.

CONTENTS.

- 1.—DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. XXVI.—XXVII
- 2.—BINDON HILL. By W. WARDE FOWLER.
- 3.—THE AWKWARD SQUAD.
- 4.—AN OLD FRENCH PRINTER. By H. C. MACDONALL.
- 5.—THE STORY of a FREE LANCE. By CHARLES EDWARDS.
- 6.—ROUSSEAU'S THEORY of EDUCATION. By A. E. STREET.
- 7.—A DEBT of HONOUR.
- 8.—THE TWO FOUROYANTS.
- 9.—THE DEATH of TENNYSON. By the Rev. Canon AINGER.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For NOVEMBER, 1892, price Sixpence, contains—

- 1.—ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER after the Picture by G. F. WATTS, R.A. Frontispiece.
- 2.—HOW I FOUND the OUTCAST SIBERIAN LEPERS. An Interview with Miss KATE MARSDEN.
- 3.—SALLY DOWS. Chaps. II., III. (To be continued.) Bret Harte. Illustrated by W. D. ALMOND.
- 4.—OTTER HUNTING. W. C. A. BLEW. Illustrated by H. FIDLER.
- 5.—ON a GRAIN of MUSTARD SEED. JOSEPH HATTON. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.
- 6.—THE GREEN ROOM of the COMEDIE FRANCAISE. FREDERICK HAWKINS. Illustrated.
- 7.—THE FATE of GUY DARRELL. R. M. STRONG.
- 8.—THE CRIES of LONDON. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA. Illustrated.
- 9.—NEW YORK as a LITERARY CENTRE. DOUGLAS SLADEN. With Portraits.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

Now ready, Part IV., OCTOBER, 1892. Quarterly, price 1s. 6d. net; or, 1s. Yearly if paid in advance

THE ESSEX REVIEW: an Illustrated Quarterly Record of Everything of Permanent Interest in the County of Essex.

Edited by E. A. FITCH, F.R.S.

Chelmsford: EDMUND DUNNANT & Co.; London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law. By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

ARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

THEORY of NUMBERS. Part I. By G. B. MATHEWS, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Professor of Mathematics in the University College, North Wales. 8vo, 12s.

A TREATISE on PHYSICAL OPTICS. By A. B. BASKET, M.A., F.R.S. 8vo, 16s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR,

A TREATISE on HYDRODYNAMICS. With numerous Examples. Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d. "This book deserves to be most warmly received by all who are interested in this branch of Mathematics."—Nature.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on HYDRODYNAMICS and SOUND. 7s. 6d.

"Mr. Basset is to be congratulated on having produced a work that ought to achieve success."—Academy.

ANCIENT and MODERN GEOMETRY of CONICS, AN INTRODUCTION to the. With Historical Notes and Prolegomena. By C. TAYLOR, D.D., Master of St. John's College, 12s.

ARITHMETIC PAPERS Set at the Higher Local Examinations, Cambridge, 1869 to 1887. With Notes on Arithmetic. By S. J. D. SHAW, Mathematical Lecturer of Newnham College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

SOLUTIONS to the above, 4s. 6d.

"The notes are taken from lectures delivered to the students of Newnham College, and are a very useful accompaniment to the papers. Mrs. Shaw has produced a little book which we can commend to teachers and other students."—Academy.

CHEMICAL EQUILIBRIUM the RESULT of the DISSOCIATION of ENERGY. By G. D. LIVING, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Professor of Chemistry, Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

"This admirable essay embodies the substance of a short course of lectures delivered by Professor Living in the University of Cambridge."—Athenaeum

CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.
LONDON: G. BELL & SONS.

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

Just ready.

THOMAS NASH'S LIFE of JACK WILTON. With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash. By EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

Previously published.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE to LISBON. By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition: 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.]. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

Other volumes in preparation.

Ready November 1st.

SOME NOTES on BOOKS and PRINTING: a Guide for Authors and Others. By C. T. JACOBI, Manager of the Chiswick Press, and Examiner in Typography to the City and Guilds of London Institute. With many typographical specimens and samples of papers. Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

London: C. WHITTINGHAM & Co., 20, Took's Court, E.C.

CULTURE in EARLY SCOTLAND.

By JAMES MACKINNON, M.A., Ph.D. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 29, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

PUBLICATIONS of the ESOTERIC CHRISTIAN UNION.

Price 1s. each net; by post, 1s. 1½d.

THE NEW GOSPEL of INTERPRETATION. Revised and Enlarged Edition. Pp. 93. And A MESSAGE to EARTH. Pp. 88.

LAMLEY & Co., 1 and 3, Exhibition Road, S.W.; and at all Booksellers.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 925.—NOVEMBER, 1892.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—LORD GEORGE BENTINCK ON THE TURK.—

THE VALLEY OF ROSES.—CLOTHES, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart, M.P.—THE BACILLUS of LOVE.—MORE OLD ELECTIONS, by Lord Brabourne.—AN ENGLISH OFFICER AMONG THE APULIAN BRIGANDS, from Unpublished Papers of the late General Sir R. Church, by E. M. Church.—SINGULARLY DELUDED, chaps. xvi.—xviii.—LONDON AFTER THE GREAT FIRE, by C. Creighton.—TENNYSON.—TENNYSON AND "CYMBELINE," by Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B.—LEAVING ALDWORTH, by H. D. Rawnsley.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

LEADING WOMEN of the RESTORATION.

By GRACE JOHNSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. with Portraits. The National Observer says: "The book is written carefully and after much research. The memoirs contain many valuable anecdotes. The writing is very well." The Guardian says: "Written with considerable sympathy and feeling. The portraits are excellent."

WHERE HONOUR SITS. By W. B. Home-GALL. Cloth extra, 6s.

The Academy says: "The war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole 'Where Honour Sits' may certainly be pronounced readable."

The Manchester Courier says: "Much true and manly feeling, much real humanity, and decided ability in this volume....The book is eminently readable."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN SIN OR FOLLY." SYRINGA. By Arthur Nestorien. Cloth extra, 6s. [Just out.]

TRUE to the PRINCE: a Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By GERTRUDE BELL. Cloth extra, 6s. The Saturday Review says: "She can relate well and clearly, and carries her readers along easily and pleasantly."

SECOND EDITION.

OUR TRIP NORTH. By R. Menzies FERGUSON, M.A., Author of "Rambles in the Far North," "Quiet Folk," &c. Full-Page Illustrations. Cloth extra, 3s. 6d. The Saturday Review says: "It is pleasantly written and well illustrated by Messrs. Ivanov Adam and Austen Brown." The Globe says: "An agreeable narrative, written in familiar style. The illustrations are much above the average."

JUST READY, SIXTH EDITION, NEW AND REVISED, WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. By PERCY RUSSELL.

WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE, WHO HAS READ AND APPROVED THE VOLUME. Cloth extra, 5s.

The Spectator says: "The aspirant to literature may certainly read Mr. Russell's book with profit." Miss M. E. Braconot writes: "Your counsel, both to the journalist and imaginative writer, is full of wisdom."

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read with promptitude, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. New Catalogue of Books post free.

Address—DIGBY, LONG & Co., Publishers, 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process, For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled: JAMES EPPS & CO., Homeopathic Chemists, LONDON

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

Medium 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

CASTOROLOGIA; or, the History and Traditions of the Canadian Beaver. By HORACE T. MARTIN, F.Z.S., &c. An exhaustive monograph popularly written and fully illustrated.

CONTENTS: Mythology and Folk-lore—Testimony of the Rocks—Geographical Distribution of Castor Fiber—Traditions from Europe—Geographical Distribution of Castor Canadensis—Concise American Relations—Life History of the Canadian Beaver—His Wonderful Engineering Accomplishments—Ethnological Considerations—First Acquaintance with the "Pale Face"—Experiments in Domestication—Anatomy—Osteology—Taxidermy—Chemical, Medical Properties—Importance in Trade, Commerce, and Manufactures—The Beaver in Heraldry.

Second Edition, large post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

TANGANYIKA: Eleven Years in Central Africa. By EDWARD COODE MORE, Master Mariner. With Portrait, Maps, and a number of original Illustrations.

"A simple, straightforward narrative of missionary enterprise and endeavour, and a vivid picture of actual life in Central Africa."—Times.

"The Christian interested in missions, the statesman, the trader, and the scientist will alike find matter of interest in this book."—Christian World.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

BORNEO: its Geology and Mineral Resources. By Dr. THEODORE POSEWITZ, Member of the Royal Hungarian Institute, Budapest. Translated from the German by FREDERICK H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With Maps and Illustrations.

"Dr. Hatch has done his work most conscientiously, and the translation is likely to be much appreciated by students of geology and mineralogy, and by all who have any reason for being specially interested in the material resources of Borneo."—Nature.

A MENDIP VALLEY: its Inhabitants and Surroundings. Being an Enlarged and Illustrated Edition of "Winscombe Sketches." By THEODORE COMPTON. With 50 Original Illustrations by E. T. Compton. Also a Large-Paper Edition, with Portrait and Autograph (limited to 100 copies), crown 4to, 21s. net.

"The beauty of the illustrations and the affectionate care bestowed by the author upon the scenery, the folk, the antiquities, and the natural history of his beloved valley, should secure for this volume a popularity at least equal to that of its predecessor, which has run through two editions."—Times.

"A delightful picture of rural life....The illustrations, fifty in number, add much to the charm of this delightful volume."—Daily News.

Crown 8vo, boards, 7s.

GUIDE to PROMOTION: an Aid to Officers of all Arms in Preparing for Examination in Regimental Duties. Part I. Ranks of Lieutenant, Captain, and Major. By Lieutenant-Colonel SIBSON C. PRATT (late R.A.), Author of "Military Law: its Procedure and Practice," &c.

"A new Guide to Promotion on the lines of that which, under Colonel Bannatyne's editorship, held its own for years against all rivals. It was a happy idea to base this Guide on so excellent a model, and it is pretty certain to meet with success."—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE OPPOSITION OF JUPITER.

JUPITER and HIS SYSTEM. By ELLEN MARY CLERKE. Demy 8vo, wrapper, 1s.; per post, 1s. 1d.

"A very able paper."—Morning Post.

"Most clear and perspicuous."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"Presents the results of observations up to date."

Manchester Examiner.

Just published, price, mounted on roller, 21s.

STANFORD'S CONTOURED MAP of the COUNTY OF LONDON. On the scale of 3 inches to 1 mile, showing County and School Board Boundaries, Leading Streets, Roads, Railways, Rivers, Canals, Docks, Public Works and Buildings, Parks, Woods, and Open Spaces. Contour lines are drawn in colour at intervals of 25 feet, the alluvial level below the lowest contour being distinguished by tint. The light is supposed to come from the N.W. corner of the map, leaving all the South and East edges of the contours in shadow.

Also just published.

STANFORD'S SCHOOL BOARD MAP of LONDON. On the scale of 6 inches to 1 mile. New and Revised Edition, 1892. The Board Schools are marked in red, and all efficient Voluntary Schools in blue. 16 sheets, 42s. 6d.; or, mounted to fold, in Morocco case, £5 5s. The Maps of the 11 districts are also sold separately, and form cheap and excellent residential maps, the scale being large enough to show every street. Prospectus sent free on application.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, CUCKSPUR STREET, CHANCING CROSS, S.W.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Super-royal 4to, sumptuously printed at the Chiswick Press, white buckram, £3 3s.

EDWARD BURNE-JONES: a Record and Review. By Malcolm BELL. Illustrated with over 100 Reproductions by Photogravure and other Facsimile Processes, of the most Popular Pictures by the Artist.
"A magnificent volume."—Saturday Review.

Pott 8vo, hand-made paper, printed at the Chiswick Press, cloth extra, 5s.

THE STORY of MY HOUSE. By G. H. Ellwanger, Author of "My Garden's Story." With Head and Tail Pieces by Alan Wright. Also an Edition de Luxe, 19 copies only for sale, on Japanese vellum paper, in vellum and yellow satin binding, 21s. net.

Pott 8vo, buckram, 4s. 6d. (uniform with Long's "Marcus Aurelius").

PLATO'S DIALOGUES RELATING to the LIFE and DEATH of SOCRATES: Euthyphro, The Apology, Crito, and Phædo. Translated by WILLIAM WHEWELL, D.D. Printed on Hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press.

New Volumes in Bohn's Libraries.

ARTHUR YOUNG'S TOUR in IRELAND, with General Observations on the State of the Country during the Years 1776-79. Edited by A. W. HUTTON, Librarian of the National Liberal Club. With a Biography by JOHN P. ANDERSON. Index and Map. 2 vols., small post 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

This Edition is the first complete reprint of the whole book since 1780, and includes also all that the author wrote about Ireland subsequent to that date.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK of PHYSICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE. With numerous Diagrams and Illustrations. Second Edition, Revised and greatly Enlarged. Small post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SELECT HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS of the MIDDLE AGES. Including the most famous Charters relating to England, the Empire, the Church, &c., from the Eleventh to the Fourteenth Centuries. Translated and Edited, with Introductions, by ERNEST F. HENDERSON, Ph.D. Small post 8vo, 5s.

HOFFMANN'S TALES (The SERAPION BRETHREN). Translated from the German of E. T. W. HOFFMANN, by Lieutenant-Colonel EWING, A.P.D., Translator of J. F. Richter's "Flower, Fruit, and Thorn Pieces." In 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

To be completed in 3 vols. Vol. I. now ready, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BRITISH FUNGUS-FLORA: a Classified Text-Book of Mycology. By GEORGE MASSEE, Author of "The Plant World." With numerous Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HORÆ EVANGELICÆ; or, the Internal Evidence of the Gospel History. Being an Inquiry into the Structure and Origin of the Four Gospels, and the Characteristic Design of each Narrative. By the Rev. T. R. BIRKS, M.A., late Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy at Cambridge, and Hon. Canon of Ely. Edited by the Rev. H. A. BIRKS, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Wide fcap. 8vo, 2s.

ANIMALS' RIGHTS, considered in Relation to Social Progress. With a Bibliographical Appendix. By H. S. SALT, Author of "The Life of H. D. Thoreau," &c.

A NEW EDITION, 2 vols., pott 8vo, 10s.

LEGENDS and LYRICS. By Adelaide Procter. With Portrait. Printed on Hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, and bound in buckram, full gilt.

New Volumes of "The Aldine Poets."

WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS. Edited, with Memoir, Notes, and Bibliography, by Professor EDWARD DOWDEN. 7 vols. Now first added to the Series. Also 150 copies on Large Paper, crown 8vo. 7 vols., 35s. net. [Vol. I. in November.

PRIOR'S POETICAL WORKS. Newly Edited with Memoir by REGINALD BRIMLEY JOHNSON. 2 vols., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

COVENTRY PATMORE'S WORKS.

POEMS. Collective Edition in 2 vols. (Fourth Edition), fcap. 8vo, 9s.

THE ANGEL in the HOUSE. Sixth Edition, fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE UNKNOWN EROS, and other Poems. Third Edition, fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FLORILEGIUM AMANTES, a selection from Coventry Patmore's Poems. Edited by RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D. 2s. 6d.

PRINCIPLE in ART. Second Edition, fcap. 8vo, 5s.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER, 1892.

- I. GOD'S FOOL. By MAARTEN MAARTENS. CHAPS. XLV.—XLVII.
- II. WASHINGTON IRVING.
- III. GONE AWAY. By CLIFFORD KITCHIN.
- IV. OLIVER CROMWELL AS A SOLDIER. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS.
- V. NIAGARA. By JOHN SNOODGRASS.
- VI. A MOSLEM SHRINE AND A FUNERAL.
- VII. PIZZICA, PIZZICA.
- VIII. CREATURES OF TRANSITION.
- IX. "THE GATES OF THE REIE." By C. J. K. F.
- X. AMONG THE ALEUTS.
- XI. MRS. BLIGH. By RHODA BROUGHTON. CHAPS. IX.—XII.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

CONVERSATIONS OF DR. DOLLINGER.

Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELL, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE GOULD.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

IN SAVAGE ISLES AND SETTLED LANDS.

A Record of Personal Experiences in Europe, Egypt, Ceylon, India, Australia, New Zealand, Java, &c., in 1888-91. By R. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and Illustrations, 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

EGYPT TO-DAY.

The First to the Third Khedivo.

By W. FRASER RAE.

1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

NOW READY.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND.

A Visit to Cyprus in 1889. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c. A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

THIS DAY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NANCY."

MRS. BLIGH.

By RHODA BROUGHTON,

In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN OLD MAID'S LOVE."

GOD'S FOOL.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,

Author of "The Sin of Joost Avelingh,"

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"God's Fool" is the best of Maartens' novels we have seen. It is a cleverly constructed story of life in a Dutch city, dramatic, interesting, and full of good writing." Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY.

Author of "Wee Wife," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA. By Mrs.

ALICK MACLEOD. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

NOVEMBER.

AN APOLOGETIC IRENICON. By Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S.
OUR MOLTEN GLOBE. By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE.
MR. MOILEY'S TASK IN IRELAND. By WILLIAM O'BRIEN, M.P.
A FUTURE SCHOOL OF ENGLISH ART. By the DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.
BURMESE TRAITS. By HENRY CHARLES MOORE.
FRUIT-GROWING in CALIFORNIA. By WILLIAM ROBERTS.
THE WOMAN'S ART EXHIBITION in PARIS. By A FRENCHWOMAN.
OUR OLDEST SCHOOL. By ARTHUR F. LEACH.
THE INSURRECTION OF WOMEN. By J. B. BURY.
THE LIFE OF RENAN. By Mrs. EMILY CRAWFORD.
A CHAT about RENAN. By ALBERT D. VANDAM.
TABLE-TALK OF RENAN. By HUGUES LE ROUX.
BRITISH OFFICIALS and FRENCH ACCUSATIONS. By Captain LEGARD.
CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REV. H. N. HUTCHINSON.

EXTINCT MONSTERS. By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON. With numerous Illustrations by J. Smit and others, and a Preface by Dr. HENRY WOODWARD, F.R.S. Demy 8vo.

[Next week.]

An ENGLISHMAN in PARIS:

Notes and Recollections during the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire. 2 vols.

[Seventh Thousand in the press.]

SAMUEL LAING.

HUMAN ORIGINS: Evidence

from History and Science. By SAMUEL LAING. With Illustrations.

[Seventh Thousand in the press.]

PROBLEMS of the FUTURE, and ESSAYS. By SAMUEL LAING.

[Ninth Thousand in the press.]

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU.

PAPACY, SOCIALISM, and

DEMOCRACY. By ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU, Member of the Institute of France. Translated by B. L. O'DONNELL. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

H. D. WINDT.

FROM PEKIN to CALAIS by

LAND. By H. DE WINDT. With numerous Illustrations by C. E. Fripp, from Sketches by the Author. Second and Cheaper Edition, demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[This day.]

ERNEST RENAN.

RECOLLECTIONS of MY

YOUTH. Translated from the French, and Revised by Madame RENAN. A New Edition, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

W. H. MALLOCK.

A HUMAN DOCUMENT. By

W. H. MALLOCK. New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo.

[Next week.]

HANNAH LYNCH.

ROSNI HARVEY. By Hannah

LYNCH. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

[This day.]

PUSHKIN'S TALES.

The QUEEN of SPADES, and other STORIES. With a Biography. Translated from the Russian by Mrs. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Illustrated, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HON. MARGARET COLLIER.

RACHEL and MAURICE, and other TALES. By the Hon. MARGARET COLLIER (Madame Galetti di Cadilliac). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

[This day.]

CAPTAIN L. ANDERSON.

The STORY of ALLAN

GORDON. By Captain LINDSAY ANDERSON, Author of "A Cruise in an Opium Clipper." Crown 8vo.

[Next week.]

CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, London.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS

OF

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

CHESTERFIELD (Lord).—LETTERS and WORKS of. An Exact Reprint of Lord Mahon's Edition. Printed in piea type, on superior paper. With 5 Portraits. 5 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £3 3s.

* By the kind permission of the owners of the copyright the Publishers have been allowed to include in this edition all the copyright matter which has necessarily been omitted from all other reprints of these famous letters.

WASHINGTON (General).—ITINE-

RARY of, from June 15, 1775, to December 23, 1783. With Portrait. By WILLIAM S. BAKER. Compiled from Letters, Diaries, Newspapers, and Orderly Books. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

"As day by day we follow Washington through the pages of the 'Itinerary,' we become more and more impressed with the earnestness, steadfastness, and truthfulness of his character."

ABBOTT (Dr. C. C.).—RECENT RAM-

BLES; or, in Touch with Nature. A Series of Essays which are the outcome of Two Years of Rambling. Elegantly printed on fine paper. With 19 Illustrations, post 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"In the literature of Nature Dr. Abbott's books hold a peculiar place. With all their close observation they are not too technical, and their charm for the general reader is the more potent in that this is so."

WRIGHT (Dr. T. F.).—THE HUMAN, and its RELATIONS to the DIVINE. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The author has here endeavoured to solve, by means within the reach of all, the problems which present themselves to him who seeks to know man and his relation to God."

DUHRING (JULIA).—AMOR in SOCIETY: a Study from Life. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Frankness of expression, combined with clear insight into the physical and physical results of the passion of love, are the chief characteristics of this entertaining volume."

ALLIBONE (S. A.).—CRITICAL DIC-

TIONARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE and BRITISH and AMERICAN AUTHORS. SUPPLEMENT to this Work by JOHN FOSTER KIRK. 2 vols., imperial 8vo, cloth, £3 3s.

"Holds the field amidst a host of similarly well-intentioned but inadequate volumes."—Saturday Review.

"Invaluable for purposes of rough-and-ready criticism." Athenaeum.

"Has been performed with great ability."—Bookman.

* The Original Work, in 3 vols., imperial 8vo, may still be had, price £4 14s. 6d.

NEW SCIENTIFIC WORKS.

HAND-BOOK of INDUSTRIAL OR-

GANIC CHEMISTRY. For the Use of Manufacturers, Chemists, and all interested in the Utilisation of Organic Materials in the Industrial Arts. By S. P. SADTLER. Numerous Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, £1 5s.

"As regards the subject-matter of the work, its general character is correctness.... Great care has evidently been expended in getting up the statistical appendices." Chemical News.

CHEMICAL ANALYSIS of IRON. A

Complete Account of all the Best-known Methods for the Analysis of Iron, Steel, Pig-Iron, Iron Ore, &c. By A. A. BLAIR. Numerous Illustrations. 8vo, half-bound, 16s.

"The work should be in the possession of every metallurgical chemist and analyst."—Ironmonger.

THE TANNINS, a Monograph on the History, Preparation, Properties, Methods of Estimation, and Uses of the Vegetable Astringents. By H. TRIMBLE. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A monograph of a very complex and important department of vegetable chemistry."—Chemical News.

THE EXTERIOR of the HORSE. By

GOUBAUX and BARRIER. Translated and Edited by S. J. J. HARGEL, V.M.D. With 346 Figures and 34 Plates by Nicolet. Thick 8vo, cloth, £1 10s.

"By a careful study of this book the reader can appreciably shorten the period required to become a judge of a horse by the eye alone.... To the person who takes a scientific interest in the use, breeding, and exhibition of horses this translated work will offer great attractions."—Field.

"May be confidently recommended to all owners and breeders of horses."—Morning Post.

"Has no equal on the same subject in any language." Journal of Comparative Pathology.

Published by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, of Philadelphia,
And Sold at their London Agency,
10, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1892.

No. 1069, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning.
By Anne Ritchie. (Macmillans.)

THERE is a peculiar charm, which is almost too elusive for even approximate description or definition, in every book from the pen of Mrs. Richmond Ritchie. We might call it the charm of urbanity, were it not that urbanity seems a masculine rather than a feminine quality, and all Mrs. Ritchie's work is essentially and recognisably womanly, having an instinctive refinement, a pervading tenderness of grace, and a quick responsive sympathy, in which merely urbane work may be, and often is, deficient. This peculiar and delightful fascination is felt very strongly as we turn over the pages in which she summons to "the sessions of sweet silent thought" the pleasant "remembrance of things past" in her intercourse with the four distinguished friends of whom she writes in this volume; and I say four, because the last paper is devoted to memories not only of Robert, but also of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

At the present moment it is natural that a special interest should attach to the pages devoted to the great poet whom we have so lately lost; and here, as elsewhere, the attractiveness of the theme is re-enforced by the attractiveness of the treatment. One warning it may perhaps be well to give at the outset, though for those who have learned to know Mrs. Ritchie through her books it is probably unnecessary. This is not a volume of gossip, in the sense in which that term can be applied to various recent collections of personal reminiscences. It is emphatically not an "anecdotal" book: it does not even contain a large amount of "information"; there is not a single paragraph from cover to cover which the editor of a society journal would consider "crisp" enough for admission into his vivacious columns. Even facts are utilised so reticently, that we apprehend them less as facts than as fine delicate impressions, each record being, as it were, a sensitised plate on which the figure appears with a certain vagueness of actual outline, but with every shade of really characteristic expression. The book is one from which every reviewer must wish to quote largely, in order that his own enjoyment may be visibly justified; but work of this kind does not lend itself to really representative quotation, because its perfectness consists in the entire subordination of each separate impression to the total fidelity of the whole portrait. Here is one little vignette, partly anecdotic and partly descriptive, which may be taken from its setting.

"Tennyson was reading the poem ["Maud"] to a silent company assembled in the twilight, and when he came to the birds in the high hull garden calling Maud, Maud, Maud, Maud, he stopped short, and asked an authoress who happened to be present what birds these were. The authoress, much alarmed, and feeling that she must speak and that the eyes of the company were upon her, faltered out, 'Nightingales.' 'Pooh,' said Tennyson, 'what a cockney you are. Nightingales don't say Maud. Rooks do, or something like it. Caw, caw, caw, caw, caw, caw.' Then he went on reading. Reading, is it? One can hardly describe it. It is a sort of mystical incantation, a chant in which every note rises and falls and reverberates again. As we sit around the twilight room at Farringford, with its great oriel window looking on the garden, across fields of hyacinth and self-sowed daffodils towards the sea, where the waves wash against the rock, we seem carried by a tide not unlike the ocean's sound; it fills the room, it ebbs and flows away; and when we leave it is with a strange music in our ears, feeling that we have for the first time, perhaps, heard what we may have read a hundred times before."

A description of sound can hardly, perhaps, be called a picture, but the rendering is made all the more realisable by its pictorial accessories; and we hear the Laureate's voice as distinctly as we hear the voice of another dead singer in that wonderful description of the preaching of Coleridge which is to be found in Hazlitt's essay, "On my first acquaintance with poets." Here is another little cabinet picture, painted in the same key of quiet, tender colour.

"There used to be one little ceremony peculiar to the Tennyson family, and reminding one of some college custom, which continued for many years. When dinner was over the guests used to be brought into a second room, where stood a white table upon which fruit and wine were set, and where a fire burned bright, and a pleasant hour went by while the master of the house sat in his carved chair and discoursed upon any topic suggested by his guests. He would talk of books, or reminiscences of early Lincolnshire days, or of facts belonging to the lives of men and women who have been his friends. There was Rogers among the rest, for whom he had a great affection, with whom he constantly lived during that lonely time in London. 'I have dined alone with him,' I heard Lord Tennyson say, 'and we have talked about death till the tears rolled down his face.'"

This is a glimpse of a familiar literary acquaintance in the unfamiliar rôle of a man of sensibility; and similar glimpses of notabilities, other than the principal figures, are pleasantly frequent. It has been already said by implication that the world's scanty store of Tennysonianana is not largely replenished by Mrs. Ritchie's volume; but it is interesting to know that the song "Tears, idle tears," was, like one of the most precious of the poems of Wordsworth, suggested by the sight of Tintern Abbey, and that one of the stateliest lyrics in the Idylls, "Blow trumpet, for the world is white with May," came to the poet during a walk over the prosaic and uninspiring expanse of Clapham Common. Even to the literature of anecdote pure and simple, we have one contribution, in the record of what Mrs. Ritchie describes as "perhaps the best compliment that Tennyson ever received." The laureate was one day walking in Covent Garden, when he was suddenly stopped by a rough-looking man, who held out his hand and said, "You're Mr. Tennyson. Look here, sir, here am I. I've been drunk for six days out of the seven, but if you will shake me by the hand, I'm d——d if I ever get drunk again." A curious practical vindication, this, of Matthew Arnold's famous definition of poetry.

The paper dealing with Mr. Ruskin is slighter than its two companions: very winning and pleasant in its way, but less a paper of personal reminiscence than of finely sympathetic comment upon the great writer's own published recollections of "things memorable" in his life. One gets, however, a very delightful impression of Brantwood and its master. One morsel of personal story, though given at second-hand, is worthy of preservation, as exhibiting the kindly side of a great man whose kindliness was certainly not the quality by which he is best remembered:

"I heard a pretty account once from Mr. Alfred Lyttelton of a visit paid by Ruskin to Carlyle in the familiar room in Cheyne Walk [Row?] with the old picture of Cromwell on the wall, and Mrs. Carlyle's tables and pretty knickknacks still in their quiet order. Mr. Ruskin had been ill not long before, and as he talked of something that he cared about, Mr. Lyttelton said his eyes lighted up and he seemed agitated and moved. Carlyle stopped him short, saying the subject was too interesting. 'You must take care,' he said, with that infinite kindness which Carlyle could show; 'you will be making yourself ill once more.' And Ruskin, quite simply, like a child, stopped short. 'You are right,' he said, calling Carlyle "master," and then went on to talk of something else, as dull, no doubt, as anything could be that Ruskin and Carlyle could talk about together."

Mrs. Ritchie has been able to include in her record a little group of letters addressed by Mr. Ruskin to Mr. Watts and Mr. Burne Jones, which are very characteristic, and specially interesting, as disclosures of these writers' strong feeling for that technique of art which certain superficial critics accuse him of ignoring or undervaluing. There is, of course, in Modern Painters and elsewhere, much criticism of pictorial work from the ethical and emotional sides which might have been written by an inspired amateur; but no amateur, however inspired, could display the actual knowledge shown in the analysis of Titian's working methods, or in the directions for the attainment of perfection of modulation and purity of local colour. After speaking of the mottled and broken execution induced by much work with chalk point, and recommending the study of "a piece of absolute modulation," such as the head of the kneeling figure in Sir Joshua's "Three Graces," Mr. Ruskin continues:—

"Again, the chalk drawing has materially damaged your perception of the subtlest qualities of local colour. When a form is shown by a light of one colour and a reflex of another, both equal in depth, if we are drawing in chalk we must exaggerate either one or the other, or the form must be invisible. The habit of exaggeration is fatal to the colour vision; to conquer it you should paint the purest and subtlest coloured objects on a small scale, till you can realise them thoroughly. I say on a small scale; otherwise the eye does not come to feel the value of points of hue."

It would not be easy for a Slade Professor or other hortatory person to put a greater weight of practical instructiveness into four short sentences.

When Mrs. Ritchie wrote her records not only Mr. Ruskin but Lord Tennyson were still with us. The Brownings had, however, passed away, and it is therefore natural that in the pages devoted to them the personal note should be more plainly audible than in the other papers. Mrs. Ritchie's friendship with the married poets was long as well as intimate; for she remembers Mr. Browning in his comparatively young days when he was still writing for a British public who loved him not—a short dark man, with a frank, open countenance, long hair, which even then was streaked with grey, noticeably white teeth, and a habit of opening his mouth wide when he spoke, which is often noticed as an instinctive physical indication of an opulent and lavish nature, with no small reticences or calculating economies. "He was always young," writes Mrs. Ritchie, "as his father had been before him"; and every touch in her portrait deepens the impression left by the seventeen volumes of his poetry of a robust and eager vitality that belongs essentially to adolescence and early maturity. With this perpetual youthfulness he had also the prevailing sanity of nature, which prevented his being infected by the intellectual epidemics to which so many of his contemporaries fell victims. Mrs. Ritchie tells us that the earliest memory of Browning which remains with her is of a certain morning when "He and my father and Mrs. Browning were discussing Spiritualism in a very human and material fashion, each holding to their own point of view, and my sister and I sat by listening and silent. My father was always immensely interested by the stories told of Spiritualism and table-turning, though he certainly scarcely believed half of them. Mrs. Browning believed, and Mr. Browning was always irritated beyond patience by the subject. I can remember her voice, a sort of faint minor chord, as she, lisping the 'r' a little, uttered her remonstrating 'Robert!' and his loud, dominant baritone, sweeping away every possible plea she and my father could make; and then came my father's deliberate notes, which seemed to fall a little sadly—his voice always seemed a little sad—upon the rising waves of the discussion."

It need hardly be said that Mrs. Ritchie gives no countenance to the silly rumour that the married happiness of Browning and his wife was seriously embittered by difference of opinion concerning the raps, turnings, and other so-called "spiritual" manifestations. Probably the canard never came her way, for these things have a trick of evading the quarters in which they might meet with authoritative contradiction. All testimony bears witness to the fact that this marriage was in very deed one of those perfect unions which are generally accounted rarer among writing men and women than in the outside unliterary world. The presiding spirit of the home makes a winning appearance in a passage which must serve as a last quotation from a book of rare and captivating pleasantness.

"All the more vivid is the recollection of the peaceful home, of the fireside where the logs are burning while the lady of that kind hearth is established in her safe corner, with her little boy curled up at her side, the door opening and shutting meanwhile to the quick step of the master of the house, to the life of the world without as it came to meet her in her quiet nook. The hours seemed to my sister and me warmer, more full of interest and peace, in her sitting-room than elsewhere. Whether at Florence, at Rome, at Paris, or in London once more, she seemed to carry her own atmosphere always; something serious, motherly, absolutely artless, and yet impassioned, noble, and sincere. I can recall the slight figure in its thin black dress, the writing apparatus by the sofa, the tiny inkstand, the quill-nibbed pen—the unpretentious implements of her magic. 'She was a little woman; she liked little things,' Mr. Browning used to say. Her miniature editions of the classics are still carefully preserved with her name written in each in her delicate, sensitive handwriting, and always with her husband's name above her own, for she dedicated all her books to him; it was a fancy she had. Nor must his presence in the home be forgotten any more than in the books—the spirited domination and inspired common sense which seemed to give a certain life to her vaguer visions. But of these visions Mrs. Browning rarely spoke; she was too simple and practical to indulge in many apostrophes."

I did not intend to add another word, but I must note the perfect felicity of one phrase of characterisation. "Inspired common sense"—that is the note of all great and abiding poetry. We find it in Homer, in Virgil, in Shakspeare, in Browning, in Tennyson. Some readers of this notice will know that the writer of it is not merely echoing the opinion of the hour when he says that he finds it also in the work of a poet who is, happily, still with us—Mr. William Watson.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Lancaster and York. A Century of English History (A.D. 1399-1485). By Sir James H. Ramsay of Bamff, Bart. In 2 vols. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

SIR JAMES RAMSAY has vowed himself to the task of writing a "verified connected narrative of the first 1500 years of the history of England," and he now presents us with an instalment dealing with the last century of his choice. There is evidence of no ordinary enthusiasm in the collection, verification, and arrangement of the multitudinous details which crowd the pages of his handsome volumes, and of a certain humility of purpose in confining himself to the mere statement of these. What of opinion there may be in the book is almost without exception taken from worthy authorities, old and new, and the reader is as carefully referred to its origin as if it were a doubtful date or a disputed itinerary. Lancaster and York is essentially a book of reference, to be at the elbow of every careful student who would know the honest fact, or would be saved indefinite quest through a score of records. Let us call it a triumph of painstaking research, and say that few books can inspire such confidence in the care and sincerity of modern historical work.

We must admit that it is not a readable book, though this will be no disqualification in the eyes of the stricter scientific sects. It is altogether too statistical and antiquarian to admit of literary effect; the details of coronations and campaigns and of taxes and treaties press upon us in the unrelenting manner of a year-book; and there is sufficient weight of footnote erudition to counteract any tendency to rise to bird's-eye-views of things. Sir James's love of antiquarian detail is the cause of needless repetitions. How often are we told of the tubbing which a would-be knight had to endure! And might not descriptions like that of the degradation of William Sawtre from priest down to plain ostiarus be left to Addis and Arnold, or to the credit of the reader? Sir James does not, however, do this in any superior spirit, for he is even harder on himself. Thus, when speaking of the engagement on the Seine in 1416 (I., p. 239) he sums up in these words: "Success depended upon courage and physical strength; and in such contests the English have almost always been successful"; which words, we are told in a footnote, were penned by Sir H. Nicolas, at p. 421 of the second volume of his History of the Royal Navy. We doubt if Sir Harris Nicolas would have claimed copyright in this reflection, or in others equally colourless. A multitude of such quotations make the style jerky. It is an unfinished macadam of inverted commas and references. If the excellent material were but broken down a little, we could jog along in a calmer mood. Could anything be more monotonous than twenty-eight chapters, each with the heading, "Henry VI. continued," doing service like regulation mile-stones on a long straight road?

If the method of the work be open to criticism, so, too, is its scope. The title and sub-title bid us expect something more than the careful story of princes and their wars, though Sir James hints that he may be but a "drum and trumpet historian." His defence of a painstaking study of march and countermarch is quite justifiable, even if the only result had been his beautiful and accurate maps; but other matters of greater historical value have not found favour in his eyes. He raises hopes of good things in his enumeration of topics which the Bishop of Oxford was compelled to pass by; but from first to last we get little, if anything, about the social and economic history of the people. The greater pity this, for Agincourt and Barnet are not the whole tale. We wish more light upon the internal processes which were preparing the way for the new national life under the Tudors. If Sir James will refuse to digest the material which is already to hand, he might at least give his invaluable aid in further exploration. He is so heedless of "literature," be it in the form of letters or of ballads, that he makes practically no use of the Paston Letters. Twice, in chap. xxiii., has he ventured on a stanza of the Kings Quair, but he does it so abruptly that the music of the verse jars upon our hardened ear. A scrap of a French ballad on Joan of Arc and a bit of Hardyng are more in place, though just as rare. This we might pardon; but we should have more of the Paston gossip, and something from the rich stores which the Historical MSS. Commission are bringing to light. The latter source is not even mentioned in the exhaustive "list of authorities" prefixed to each volume.

Though the book falls seriously short of our expectations both in method and in scope, we should do it an injustice were we to convey only the notion of disappointment. It refuses opportunities and has no ambition to interpret, but what it really pretends to do it does most thoroughly. The military antiquary could not wish for a more careful account of the campaigns of Henry V. or more attractive maps; and even the general reader, who may not be tempted by the volumes, will find some wholesome fare in the chapters on Joan of Arc and the supplementary note on the Princes in the Tower. The volumes are strong in finance. We have a minute analysis of many Exchequer documents hitherto unexamined or indifferently studied. There is a financial review of each reign, but notably of the reigns of Henry IV. and Edward IV., in the former of which the author ventures on a bit of theory. In referring to the debasement of the currency, he takes exception to common notions on the subject, and says:

"There seem to be grounds for believing that currencies were altered simply for the sake of the profit to be made by recoining through the seigniorage charged for doing so, and that the alteration of currency took the shape of a debasement, because it was found that a debasement forced all holders of the old currency to bring it in for recoinage" (I. 153).

It is perhaps in the financial portions of the volumes that most of the new facts will be found, though there is not a chapter that does not contribute to our store of historical items, both great and small. Sir James's next instalment will assuredly be welcome, even though it disappoint us by a like restraint in aim and a like asceticism in manner.

G. GREGORY SMITH.

Racing Life of Lord George Cavendish Bentinck, M.P. By John Kent. Edited by the Hon. Francis Lawley. (Blackwoods.)

In the year 1852 the late Lord Beaconsfield published not the least interesting of his works, The Political Biography of Lord George Bentinck, which he closed with the following eloquent tribute to his hero:

"One who stood by his side in an arduous and unequal struggle; who often shared his councils and sometimes perhaps soothed his cares; who knew well the greatness of his nature, and esteemed his friendship among the chief of worldly blessings; has stepped aside from the strife and passion of public life to draw up this record of his deeds and thoughts, that those who come after us may form some conception of his character and career, and trace in these faithful though imperfect pages the portraiture of an ENGLISH WORTHY."

That biography was strictly political, and Lord Beaconsfield seems to have studiously avoided all allusion to the private life of his friend. He states, of course, that at the call of duty Lord George Bentinck at once gave up a pursuit which had previously been the passion of his life, and in which he had obtained extraordinary success; but he had probably no sympathy with his career in a sport of which he knew nothing, and thus he failed to appreciate the sacrifice which his friend had made, and his book shows one side only of his friend's noble character. After a lapse of forty years, Mr. Kent's reminiscences complete the statesman's portrait of an English worthy, and show us Lord George Bentinck as he lived and moved in the strange world of sport which he did so much to purify, and in which his grand figure appears as the veritable leader in the sport of kings.

The most charming characteristic in Mr. Kent's book is his grateful affection for the memory of his old master, and the loyal admiration for his character that breathes in every page. But quite independently of this beautiful trait, I have no hesitation in setting down this book as the most interesting contribution to the history of racing that has been ever penned. Mr. Kent's personal recollections of the turf, as a trainer under his father, go back for a period of sixty years.

"I have seen all the best horses," says he, "that have flourished and had their day for more than sixty years past, and I now repeat my well-considered opinion that Priam was the most perfect racehorse I ever saw. I well remember how often I rode him at exercise when, in 1831, he came to our stables to run for the Goodwood Cup of that year, which, as a four-year-old, he won in a canter, carrying 9 st. 5 lbs. two miles and a half. That was sixty-one years ago, and I question whether there is any other man still living who ever crossed the back of that bright particular star among horses, the beautiful and incomparable Priam" (p. 306).

In those days horses walked all over the country from their training quarters to the different racecourses; and Lord George induced the owner of Priam to send his horse direct from Ascot to Kent's care at Goodwood to be trained for the Cup instead of returning to Newmarket. His admiration for Priam was such that to secure his blood he bought, in 1837, the brood mare, Octaviana, with her filly foal by Priam, the dam being twenty-two years old, and the filly as weak, narrow, and funny a thing as could well be seen. So for sixty-five guineas Lord George became the owner of Crucifix, the most extraordinary animal he ever possessed, an Oaks winner, and herself the dam of Surplice, a winner of the Derby and Leger in the memorable year when Lord George Bentinck died. It was not till 1841 that the connexion between Lord George and John Kent commenced, when the former removed his horses from Danebury to Goodwood, where John Kent and his father were private trainers to the Duke of Richmond; and in the Goodwood stable his most remarkable triumphs were obtained, when for a period of five years he held the acknowledged position of Dictator of the Turf. No man has ever done more to purify the sport which he loved, and his energy and determination detected and exposed the notorious case when the Derby of 1844 was won by the four-year-old Running Rein. This horse

"ran nominally as a two-year-old at Newmarket, in 1843, for a two-year-old Plate, which he won, beating the Duke of Rutland's Crinoline and ten others, and the Duke objected to him on the ground that he was three instead of two years old. The case was investigated by the stewards, who dismissed it with the remark that the Duke had not proved him to be three years old. When, however, the same horse started subsequently for the Clearwell, in which, although backed heavily by the public, he was beaten, Lord George's keen and vigilant suspicions were aroused by something that reached his ears. During the winter, therefore, he quietly obtained information which greatly strengthened his doubts as to Running Rein's real age. Scarcely had the horse been placed first for the Derby of 1844 before Lord George mentioned the facts which he had accumulated to Colonel Peel, the owner of Orlando, who finished second to Running Rein, and advised him strongly to make an objection, which he did at once, and claimed the Derby Stakes. The Stewards of Epsom Races directed Messrs. Weatherby to pay the stakes into the Court of Exchequer, and to leave the law to settle who was their rightful owner. Under these circumstances an action was brought by Mr. Wood, the nominator of Running Rein, against Col. Peel. It was tried on July 1 and 2, 1844, and resulted in a verdict for Col. Peel" (p. 153).

A handsome testimonial was at once raised in the racing world, to testify the general recognition of Lord George's services in this matter; and as he refused to accept anything personally, the money subscribed was devoted, under the name of Bentinck Benevolent Fund, to the benefit of the widows and children of deserving trainers and jockeys.

The betting of jockeys has always been a malpractice most difficult to prevent, and, in spite of the severe action of the Jockey Club last year, is probably now as rampant as ever. It is a common remark regarding a leading fashionable jockey of the present day, when he fails to win some race in which he has ridden a favourite, that it is clear his monkey was not on. The conduct of Lord George, as described by John Kent in a like case, might be a lesson to our racing magnates. He had throughout the winter been backing a horse named Ratan for the Derby of 1844, having grounds on public form for believing that he ought to win the race.

"Still there was such an unmistakable disposition to lay against Ratan in certain dangerous quarters, that Lord George began to suspect something was amiss; but, as the horse was doing regular work, he could not understand the market, and was determined to find out what was the matter. By some unaccountable means, which he disclosed to no one, he discovered that Sam Rogers had bets with Mr. Gully and others, in which he had backed the Ugly Buck upon such favourable terms that his Lordship's misgivings were aroused. He lost no time, therefore, in communicating his information to Sam Rogers, who was much confused upon finding that Lord George had acquired so much knowledge of the matter. Next day Sam Rogers brought his Lordship a book which contained, or purported to contain, all his bets. There were some very suspicious names and bets entered there, which partly confirmed his Lordship's suspicions; and in conformity with the usual custom, Lord George proceeded to call over and compare Sam Rogers's bets, selecting the Spread Eagle Inn at Epsom for that purpose. Lord George, ascending the steps in front of the inn, said: 'Gentlemen, I am going to call over my jockey. Sam Rogers's book, and will thank you to answer to your names and bets.' He began by calling out Mr. Gully's name. 'Here,' replied Mr. Gully, quietly removing the cigar from his lips. 'You have betted Samuel Rogers 350 to 25 against Ratan, I perceive,' said Lord George in an interrogating voice. Mr. Gully gave a nod of assent. 'I see,' continued his Lordship, 'that Rogers stands £50 with you on the Ugly Buck, no terms or price being named.' Again a nod from Mr. Gully. 'Are those all the bets you have with Rogers, Mr. Gully?' inquired his Lordship. 'If you have any more in my name, my Lord, and will specify them, I shall be better able to answer you,' replied Mr. Gully cautiously. Lord George then read out the whole of the book, dwelling particularly on some of the bets he was anxious to emphasise. He then closed the book, and withdrew into the inn, leaving the crowd of listeners by whom he was surrounded no wiser as to his secret thoughts and future intentions" (pp. 156-158).

The result was that, though fate pursued the erring jockey pede claudo, during the October Meeting at Newmarket in the same year Sam Rogers and his confederate were warned off the course, and declared unfit to ride or train for any member of the Jockey Club. It would be a striking scene, if at the present day some leading owner were to read out at Sandown or Kempton, in front of the rails, a list of the bets made by his jockey either for or against his mounts.

Among the various Turf reforms introduced by Lord George, besides purifying it from defaulters, was the employment of official judges and starters, and the use by the latter of an assistant with an advance flag as now carried out. The tales told by Kent remind me of my own Indian experiences, when I well remember on one occasion an officer we had placed in the judge's box deliberately gave the second horse as the winner. One of Mr. Kent's judges, after giving a dead heat, replied to his remonstrance, "I hope you are not offended, but we wanted to make all the sport we could!" Starting is still a chronic difficulty, as must always be the case, when to the restiveness of a large field of half-broken two-year-olds is added the determination of many unprincipled jockeys to create false starts against some pronounced favourite, in the interest of whose opponents they are acting. The case must have been far worse, however, before Lord George's reformed system was introduced, and the horses were started by word of mouth. John Kent gives an amusing anecdote of what once occurred at Goodwood under the old practice:

"The person deputed to start the horses at Goodwood in 1830 had an impediment in his speech, and when he became excited it was with great difficulty that he could articulate a word. For the Duke of Richmond Plate that year there were a number of false starts, which delayed the actual start for a long time. After the race, William Arnold, the oldest jockey who took part in it, and one upon whose word full reliance could be placed, was summoned by the stewards to explain the cause of the long delay. He replied: 'Some of the horses were no doubt restive, but in my opinion the fault lay chiefly with the starter. He is just like an old firelock, which fizzles e'er so long in the pan before it goes off, and when he did get the word out, there was no knowing whether he said Go! or No!'" (pp. 303-4).

It is difficult for owners and trainers of the present day, when a valuable horse, trained to the hour, can be sent anywhere to meet an engagement within twenty-four hours, to appreciate the difficulties felt by their predecessors before railways were introduced. In those days horses were marched over the country at the rate of ten miles a day, and a winner of the Oaks in 1836 was despatched at once from Epsom to take part in the Newcastle Plate, with a full month spent on the journey. Lord George Bentinck's enterprise devised a plan by which racehorses were placed in a van, a sort of travelling stable, and taken by post-horses all over the kingdom. The first occasion on which this new machine was employed was when Elis was sent from Goodwood to take part in the St. Leger in 1836, when the horse had been left temporarily in charge of John Kent's father. His successes at Goodwood and Lewes had induced Lord George to back him heavily for the Leger; but just before the race he found that some parties were helping themselves largely on his horse, and he made it known that unless his commissioner was accommodated with a bet of £12,000 to £1000 he would not start him. The bet was laid, as John Kent suggests, because it was believed at that period to be impossible to get Elis to Doncaster in time for the race. However, Lord George's newly-invented van was brought into requisition, and, on the Friday before the race was started, laden by Elis and his schoolmaster the Drummer. The distance of 250 miles was divided into three sections of about eighty miles each, and on the Sunday morning the two horses were galloped on the Lichfield racecourse. On the Monday evening Elis was safely stabled in Doncaster, the cost of the journey having been about £100. On the Wednesday he won the Leger, and Lord George was well repaid for this expenditure. When he finally joined the Goodwood stable, Lord George had six such vans employed by John Kent and his father, and doubtless this invention had much to do with the success of his stable.

Among the chief measures that led to such success, of the details of which John Kent gives what to every racing man must be a most interesting account, the immense improvements effected by Lord George in the training grounds at Goodwood, on which vast sums were spent, must hold the first place.

It is impossible, within the limits of an article, to enter on these details. In 1845, when Lord George's turf career culminated, he had sixty horses in training, and won fifty-eight races of the value of about £18,000. His expenses, including stakes, forfeits, jockeys' fees, and trainer's bill for this year were not less than £40,000, and it was only by successful betting that such a stud could be made to pay. Except by the closest attention to details, trials, and the public running of his own and other horses, it was impossible for any man to win by betting. When, therefore, in the beginning of 1846, Lord George Bentinck found that his whole time must be given up to politics, or the great battle on which he had entered with his accustomed energy be abandoned, he determined to part with his whole stud at a nominal price, and give up at once the pursuit which had been the delight and glory of his life. When this determination was known, a syndicate of bookmakers and others was got up by Mr. Padwick to pay the price asked, £10,000 for the whole breeding stud, horses in training, and all the paraphernalia of the stable, including the celebrated apprentice light-weight jockey Kitchener. The syndicate at once fell through, as Lord George informed his trainer that nothing would induce him to sell to a set of bookmakers. On the 16th August, 1846, Lord George announced to John Kent that Mr. Mostyn had accepted his offer, and stood henceforth in his shoes. It was well known to him that John Kent was satisfied that at that time he possessed in Surplice the best yearling he had ever bred, and that in all probability the crowning prize of the Derby, the only great race he had never won, was within his grasp. We all know the story of Mr. Disraeli meeting Lord George in the library of the House of Commons on the evening of the Derby won by Surplice, of the superb groan, and the Blue Riband of the Turf. In that year, owing to his resignation of the leadership of the country party on account of the vote given by him to allow Jews to sit in parliament, in opposition to the views of the more bigoted of his followers, the pressure of his parliamentary duties became less, and he was sometimes able to return to the scene of his former triumphs. He was present at Newmarket in 1848 to see the Guineas run for; on the day of the race he was as usual on horseback, and in the afternoon he rode up to the carriage in which those two beautiful sisters, the Countess of Chesterfield and the Honourable Mrs. Anson, were seated. Mrs. Anson looked at Lord George long and wistfully, and rising in her seat, and throwing her whole heart into her voice, exclaimed, "George, come back to us, and leave those dreadful politics alone, or, take my word for it, they will kill you before another year has passed away!" (p. 436). On September 13 he saw his favourite colt Surplice win the Leger, and on the 21st of the same month his striking career closed: while walking from Welbeck Abbey to visit Lord Manvers at Thoresby Park in apparently perfect health, he was seized with spasm of the heart and died unvisited and alone.

To those who have never felt the strange fascination which the sport of racing affords its votaries, there may be little to rouse sympathy in Lord George Bentinck's career, as detailed by his faithful trainer John Kent. But to all initiated in its mysteries, who thrill at the music of the rustling silk, and the swing of the rushing gallop, who regard the thoroughbred as the most beautiful creature in creation when in repose and still more beautiful in action, who have felt the uncontrollable excitement of the contested race and the fierce rapture of victory, such men will know that there is not recorded in the pages of history a more splendid example of self-sacrifice than that offered by Lord George Bentinck on the altar of public duty.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

Travels in Africa during the Years 1882-86.

By Dr. Wilhelm Junker. Translated from the German by A. H. Keane. (Chapman & Hall.)

THIS, the third and last volume of Dr. Junker's travels, presents a sad record of suffering from bad health, and of power and energy wasted through the ignorance and vacillation of the British Government. It was doubtless in these journeys that he contracted the insidious disease which put an end to his valuable life in February last at the comparatively early age of fifty-one. It certainly is a curious thing that the first country in which Dr. Junker travelled was Iceland, recalling the career of John Davis, who, being one of the most celebrated of Arctic explorers, died in the Indian Ocean.

The opening chapter of the present volume finds Dr. Junker in the month of January, 1882, with Prince Bakangai, one of the most interesting personalities he ever met in the heart of Africa. The years 1882-83 were spent in exploring the region of the Welle-Makua, sometimes retracing his steps and visiting again Ndoruma's territory and his former station of Lacrima. During these two years of travel his difficulties were ever increasing. His health was failing, and the natives became more troublesome and unmanageable. At the end of 1883 the revolt in the Sudan compelled him to retreat to Emin's settlement at Lado, on the banks of the Nile, which he reached in January, 1884. Emin was settled in comparative comfort, and received his friend with the utmost kindness, and invited him to be his guest till the expected steamer should sail for Khartum. Such comforts as Emin could afford were veritable luxuries to Junker; a clean soft bed he had not enjoyed for years, and when he did get it it prevented his sleeping. The long-expected steamer never arrived, but instead came alarming rumours, to be gradually confirmed. In March they heard of the death of General Hicks and the complete destruction of his army. The officials and hangers-on at Lado became demoralised, and prices rose to an absurd but very inconvenient figure; and in June all hope of returning by the northern route was finally abandoned.

Dr. Junker made an abortive attempt to get away by the south, and got as far as Dufleh on the Bahr el-Jebel; but there his own suffering and constant illness among his people compelled him to return to Lado, after three months' absence, and he remained there till January, 1885. In that month he took his final leave of Emin, and started for Zanzibar, a journey which, owing to an enforced residence of eight months in the territory of Anfina, occupied a year. He received assistance from the famous Tippe Tib, of whom he gives a portrait, and maintained all through friendly relations with him. On leaving Lado the Doctor was compelled to abandon his collections, and his feelings are best described by himself:

"Everything that could be dispensed with was left behind, including the large, beautiful collection of native articles, numerous loads of skeletons, skulls, well-dressed hides, seeds, ethnological objects, &c., which I had conveyed hither from Zemio's with so much trouble. Everything I had to leave and give up as lost, like my collections in the Bahr el-Ghazal. Few will be able to imagine the bitterness of such a renunciation. It was not merely the work of five years which could be done again, but the work of five years in Central Africa, the fruit of which was lost once for all. The main point now was to preserve my own skin and my case of writings, if only I could deposit the latter unharmed with Mteza. If the rebels in the Bahr el-Ghazal had burned the Government books, I could expect no better fate for my writings."

As in the previous volumes, Dr. Junker's observations on natural history and on the character and habits of the native tribes are almost more important than his geographical discoveries. He was a man of most acute powers of observation, and always on the watch to collect information of every sort. At Ali Kobbo's, on the Welle-Makua, he remarks: "In these lands there are no large kingdoms, but the whole region is parcelled out among an ever-increasing number of petty states, a sure symptom of decadence." He draws the following interesting contrast of the merits of the French and Anglican missionaries:

"The French Roman Catholic stations differ greatly from those of the English missions. Outwardly they affect the form of the tembe, a native settlement, and constitute a sort of caravanserai, all comprised within a separate enclosure. Here signs of activity were everywhere visible—a little church in progress, a carefully built boat almost finished, plantations, fields, and gardens laid out. The Catholic missionaries are far better adapted to this practical work than the theological students turned out by Oxford and Cambridge. But, on the other hand, the generosity and philanthropic spirit of England supports the Protestant missions so much more liberally that the volume is redressed to their advantage. Nearly everything is performed at the English stations by hired and paid labour, and especially by Swahili from the Zanzibar coast; whereas their rivals, compelled by poverty, do a great deal of the work themselves, and thus become real teachers of the native youth in the mechanical arts."

He found papyrus put to a new use in the district of the river Kafu. There the sluggish streams are mostly overgrown with it, and the natives use it for making rafts. The accounts of both Dr. Junker's and Emin's pets are interesting and amusing, but they generally came to sad ends. One is struck with the facility with which so many animals, and especially birds, are tamed. Emin had an African eagle for five years, perfectly tame, which walked about as it liked, and was pleased to have its head stroked and to be fed with bats. Dr. Junker tells a melancholy tale of a parrot dying of grief for the loss of its mate.

This volume, like its predecessors, is profusely illustrated, and contains a preface by the translator, as well as a good index.

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

Out of the Jaws of Death. By Frank Barrett. In 3 vols. (Cassells.)

Bob Martin's Little Girl. By David Christie Murray. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Sir Anthony. By Adeline Sergeant. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Shifting of the Fire. By Ford H. Huoffer. (Fisher Unwin.)

Susie. By Frank F. Angus. (Forfar: Nicholson.)

The American Claimant. By Mark Twain. (Chatto & Windus.)

Told in the Verandah. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

RATHER unfortunately for Mr. Frank Barrett, the rival forces of Nihilism and "the long arm of the Czar" have been too much in evidence of late, at all events in fiction; otherwise this very clever story of his would have been even more generally welcomed than it is likely to be. No plot could well be more intricate or better evolved than that of Out of the Jaws of Death, which ends in the marriage of the little London waif and the Russian artist and conspirator, Taras, Prince Borgensky. It is a kind of prize puzzle—how to find out the informer. But although the adventures of Taras's little friend and protector, and sundry other folks as well, in England, in Russia, and in Siberia, and the revenge on Kavanagh are all very exciting, this book is mainly notable as a study of almost Aurelian or Mazzinian nobility of soul in Taras himself. Mr. Barrett has, as yet, given us nothing better in the way of character-study than this. The healthy-minded Kingsleyan Englishman, George Gordon, and his Judith, are admirable foils to the man and woman who have in every sense to bear the burden and heat of the day. Altogether, Out of the Jaws of Death is greatly superior to the average story of incident and adventure written by the ordinary imitator of Mr. Rider Haggard.

Barring one or two studies of Australian trees and character, Mr. Christie Murray's new story is an unmitigated tour de force of crime and detectivism. John Hetheridge and George Redwood are "rivals for the hand" of Ellice Greenaway, a rustic beauty of the familiar type. She marries George; John threatens revenge. He goes to Australia, and after many adventures amasses a fortune, returns to England, and, under the name of a Frenchman whom he had met in the bush, entices George Redwood to his house and there murders him under circumstances of the most ingenious barbarity. How he is detected and hounded on, if not to death, certainly to drink and lunacy, it would not be fair to tell. It must suffice to say that one of the agents in effecting Hetheridge's ruin is a tramp whom he all but kills, and whose brain he severely injures by a murderous stroke from a waddy. This tramp, Sam Potter by name, his wife, the worthy Frenchman André Dom, and the girl who passes as Ellice Hetheridge, but who is really the "little girl" of Sam Potter's "pal," Bob Martin, are very well drawn; and in the closing scenes of the final volume Mr.

Christie Murray gives us a good deal of that almost Dickensian pathos which he has at such easy command. In short, this is the most exciting and the least characteristic novel that Mr. Murray has yet published.

It is not easy and is hardly necessary to say more of Sir Anthony than that it is a good story of the kind (and, on the whole, the excellent and wholesome kind), which Miss Adeline Sergeant publishes at intervals with almost mechanical regularity, and that, as the plot is everything and the characters are practically nothing, it might well have been shorter than it is by at least a volume. Sir Anthony is a very bad lot even for a baronet. Almost at the beginning of the story he introduces two mysterious children, Henry and Elfrida, into his house and compels his wife, whom he dislikes with a three-volume intensity, to protect and virtually adopt them. In due course he tells these children in his own vigorous Anglo-Saxon, "You two are my eldest son and daughter, lawfully begotten of my wife, once Mary Derrick, and known afterwards as Mary Paston. You will be Sir Henry Kesterton when I die, and Elfrida is heiress to her grandmother's money and jewels. Those brats of my lady's are penniless." Lady Kesterton overhears this terrible statement. He repeats it in a still more offensive form. Thereupon she gives him an overdose of chloral, and fights desperately, and with temporary success, for what she regards as the rights of her children, but especially of her son Gerard. Failure overtakes her, and Elfrida, though not poor Henry, comes by her own. The plot is good and thoroughly sustained from first to last. There are two love affairs in the story—that of Elfrida and Philip Winyates and that of Lady Betty and Lord Beaulieu. Neither is characterised by originality of any kind.

There is no question whatever as to the cleverness of The Shifting of the Fire, yet it is hardly possible not to refrain from the suspicion that the author is laughing at his readers and characters much as Mr. Grant Allen sometimes seems to do. He certainly taxes credence when he asks us—if, indeed, he asks us seriously—to believe that his heroine, Edith, would actually go so far as to marry the old and vindictive crypto-sensualist, Kasker-Ryves, for the purpose of repairing the fortunes of her young lover, Clement Hollebone, whom she is obviously bent on marrying from the first. Yet Hollebone's disgust and despair when he hears of what appears to be Edith's treachery are genuine enough; and his solicitude in regard to what looks uncommonly like the poisoning of old Kasker-Ryves by the woman whom he is bent at all hazards, and in spite of that suspicion, on securing as his wife, has a bona fide look. Edith is, however, the most provoking of heroines. At the beginning of her history, as told here, she is an English girl of the simple, superficial blue serge and houseboat sort; confronted after her first marriage with a serious crisis, she apparently develops into a strong woman, and indicates considerable powers of passive, if not of active, resistance to injustice and oppression. She looks, indeed, as if she had the making of a Cecilia Halkett in her. It is rather disappointing, therefore, to find her on her second marriage relapsing into her first estate, and chattering like a magpie on her honeymoon trip to Paris. Several of the ostensibly minor characters, such as a "dонтчерknow" peer, who on falling in love ceases to care for "fishy" French novels, and an earnest—an almost repulsively earnest—Dr. Hammond are admirably sketched. The Shifting of the Fire, however sceptical one may be as to its author's intentions in writing it, is, as a mere literary performance, the best thing that has as yet come from the author of The Brown Owl.

No good reason can be given why Susie should have been published. But since it has been given to the world, one may say of it that it is perfectly harmless, and written in a style of almost childish simplicity. The heroine is a girl living in a village bearing the quaint name of Padanaram, and close to Kirriemuir, though destitute of the spirit of Thrums, who, vexed with a conventional step-mother, and also accused unjustly of theft, deserts her home and finds her way to Edinburgh, where she secures a lover and a situation as a sort of assistant hospital nurse. Peace is re-established in the Padanaram household, and all ends well. The comedy of the story is contributed by a little sister of the lover of Susie, who—although there is no Nurse in the background—is quite a Juliet in the frank simplicity of her avowals, and obtains a very substantial Romeo in the shape of a hardworking young man who is generally known as "Mac." Unfortunately, however, there is too little of this comedy, and the story itself, though, as already said, it is harmless enough, is altogether of too slight a texture to justify criticism of any kind.

"Mark Twain" is, as a humourist, in the happy and assured position of having a congregation whose members laugh with him and at his jokes, and eagerly read whatever he writes. He occupies much the same position in comic literature, indeed, that Mr. Toole does in the theatrical world. The American Claimant is quite up to its author's usual standard. It is well balanced and well written, and the idea that runs through it—the surely not quite original one of two claimants, the one American and the other British, to the same peerage—is well worked out. Yet there is a good deal—a trifle too much, indeed—of monotony in the fun of The American Claimant, especially in that fun which is presumably peculiar to the United States. The tolerably simple love-making of the pseudo Howard Tracy and the real Sally Sellers is the best thing in the book.

Colonel Bowlong, who is supposed to narrate the stories "told in a verandah," is, as his name indeed implies, a rollicking Anglo-Indian Munchausen, whose fictions have already appeared in the Madras Mail. Sometimes the Colonel deviates into virtually serious narrative, as when he tells of his adventures with the Koh-i-noor, when he rau the gauntlet of Thugdom. Occasionally he becomes tedious, as when he relates his own "love tale." Once or twice he threatens, but only threatens, to descend into vulgarity of the modern kind, as in "The Seven Sisters." But as a rule, as in "The Colonel's Midnight Charge," he is impudently and jovially mendacious. Indeed, a more entertaining book of this particular kind has not been published since Sir Frizzle Pumpkin. When the heart of a man, especially if he is an Anglo-Indian, is oppressed with Rudyard Kipling cynicism, he could not do better than read Told in the Verandah at a sitting.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

THREE BISHOPS ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

Christus Comprobar. By C. J. Ellicott, D.D. (S.P.C.K.) We are here given seven addresses which formed portions of a Charge delivered to the clergy and laity of the Archdeacons of Gloucester and Cirencester. The second title, "The Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament," indicates the character of the volume. The bishop states what he calls the "rectified traditional" and the "analytical" views of the nature of the Old Testament books, and goes on to point out that the authors of Lux Mundi practically accept the "analytical" view. This he considers "sad and startling enough," and insists that an appeal must be made to Christ, who fully endorses the "rectified traditional" view. The Bishop is of opinion that "the over-hasty excursions" of the authors of Lux Mundi into views held by foreign scholars are "full of peril to simple and trustful souls," but he seems quite unconscious of the peril to honest souls of his own line of argument. He cannot tolerate the notion that the Chronicles were "falsified by Priests and Levites." As a matter of fact, his own conception of Old Testament history seems to a believer in the "analytic" view just such a falsification as is imputed to the ancient Levite. It becomes the critic to treat respectfully the work of a scholar who has diligently and zealously served his generation; but we are sorry that Bishop Ellicott should so emphatically rank himself with the opponents of an investigation of the Old Testament literature. Even to foreign scholars it is wise to be fair. It is to be feared they will find his appeal to Christ's authority merely dishonest. And their feelings in the matter are perhaps nearly as much worth considering as those of the "simple and trustful souls" for whose sake we are so continually advised to keep the skeleton Truth locked up in a cupboard. The man who declines to believe that two and two make five because he is told Christ endorsed the statement, believes more intimately in the God of truth than his fellow who accepts with blind reverence all the miracles of all the books of the Bible. We deprecate the tone of Bishop Ellicott's addresses. He does his cause no good by lecturing foreign scholars as if they were schoolboys or criminals. The "appeal to Christ" is so obviously a begging of the question that in the long run it must defeat itself. The foreign scholar for truth's sake does not appeal to Christ, but strives to untie the knot without cutting it; and in so doing, the foreign scholar has more of the mind of Christ than the English bishop.

Primary Witness to the Truth of the Gospel. By Charles Wordsworth, D.D. (Longmans.) We are constrained to leave on one side the valuable series of discourses which form the bulk of Bishop Wordsworth's book, and call attention especially to the "Charge on Modern Teaching on the Canon of the Old Testament." It treats the same subject as Bishop Ellicott's Charge, but in a tone which we venture to consider at once more rational and more Christian. The Bishop of St. Andrews gives an admirably just account of the authorities for and against the "modern teaching." His own arguments in deprecation of too hasty acceptance of analytical theories with regard to the composition of the books of the Old Testament will be listened to with attention and respect, for they are stated with humility and courtesy. He refers to the attack of F. A. Wolf on the integrity of the Homeric poems, and suggests that the similar attack on the integrity of the Pentateuch will similarly collapse. On this argument we have two remarks to make. First, that Wolf's theory has profoundly modified the traditional view of the poems; and scholars may hold even extreme views of their composite character without incurring accusations of intellectual dishonesty or extravagance, such as English divines are continually directing against Canon Cheyne or even Canon Driver. But, secondly, is Bishop Wordsworth's comparison quite fair? He ought to take some ancient historical work if he wishes to estimate the worth of modern historical criticism. A student who has passed through the classical or historical schools of Oxford or Cambridge is aghast at being asked to suppose that ancient Hebrew documents alone, in the history of the world, are to be taken for what they seem to be. He has criticised Livy; he has seen Prof. Freeman analyse early English Chronicles; his boyhood's belief in Tell and the apple has been taken from him; and he must feel that without continual and incomprehensible miraculous intervention something of the same sort, on just the same scale, must have obtained in Hebrew literature also. This is why Canon Driver's book is read with avidity. This eagerness is not innate depravity; it is mere obedience to instincts painfully acquired at school and college.

The Books of Chronicles in Relation to the Pentateuch and the "Higher Criticism." By Lord A. C. Hervey, D.D. (S.P.C.K.) Lord A. C. Hervey's book is an onslaught on the "Higher Criticism," yet fiercer than Bishop Ellicott's in Christus Comprobat. On the first page the spirit of the writer manifests itself: the analytic student shifts and separates the narratives of the Pentateuch "by the light of his own intelligence." This stupid taunt is followed by a short analysis of Wellhausen's and Kuenen's views on the composition of the Old Testament, which, we are told, "degrade the books of the Old Testament not only to the level of fallible human writings, but to that of wilfully false and misleading history; and this they do without one particle of historical evidence to support them." Presently we are informed that, "had the 'Higher Criticism' been confined to the regions of its birth in Germany, it might have been wise to leave it alone to perish by the law of its own origin." This sentence is significant. It means that, while Germany is giving to the world in every department of science and history the valuable and wonderful results of her patience and her skill, Lord A. C. Hervey and Christians like him will do their utmost to keep back from their fellow countrymen any results German scholars may have arrived at with regard to the literature of the Hebrews. Lord A. C. Hervey's book is sufficiently characterised and criticised by the mere quotation of the sentences we have extracted. We note with regret that the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge publishes the outrageous statement that the views of Wellhausen and Kuenen are "without one particle of historical evidence to support them."

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that a volume of the late Dean Church's Letters is to be published, with a short biography. Mrs. Church will be grateful to any possessors of her husband's letters who will send them to her at 41, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W., on the understanding that they are returned as soon as copies have been made. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish the volume.

MR. F. T. PALGRAVE will very shortly publish, through Messrs. Macmillan, a small volume of verse, containing "Amenophis," a tale founded upon the Egyptian version of the Exodus, a revised and much-enlarged edition of his Hymns, and a few miscellaneous pieces.

AN entirely new edition of Wordsworth's Poetical Works, prepared for the "Aldine Series" by Prof. Edward Dowden, will be issued immediately by Messrs. George Bell & Sons. In the seven volumes all published poems will be included (except the "Recluse," Part I, 1888). The lines of the longer poems will be numbered; and besides the original notes, and those dictated by the poet, new ones by the present editor will be given. In addition, a very complete chronological table, a bibliography, a portrait, a facsimile of one of the sonnets, and many other special features will make this edition an important one.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will publish next week Eton of Old—a sketch of the life and manners of Eton boys from 1811-22, a description of the old Long Chamber, and an account of Dr. Keate by one of his scholars, closing with a contrast of the Eton of our grandfathers with the Eton of to-day.

A HANDBOOK to English Book-Plates, by Mr. Egerton Castle, will be published shortly by Messrs. Bell. This work will contain over 120 examples of rare and typical specimens, printed in many cases from the original plates, in others reproduced in accurate facsimile. The subject is approached not merely from the point of view of a collector, but considered with regard to its general interest to book-lovers and its artistic past and future. Several plates hitherto unpublished will be included. A selection of the best modern plates will be a special feature of the book.

MR. WALTER HAMILTON, treasurer of the Ex Libris Society, has prepared for the same series a monograph upon French Book Plates, which will embody the information contained in the few French books on the subject, all of which are out of print and scarce, and supplement them with much matter needed by English collectors. About one hundred rare plates, mostly dated, and nearly all reproduced for the first time, will add to the value of the book as a book of reference, and increase its attraction to those who are neither specialists in heraldry nor collectors of Ex Libris.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. will publish immediately, as the first volume of a new series, to be called "Periods of European History," an historical summary of the period from 1789 to 1815, by Mr. H. Morse Stephens, the historian of the French Revolution, who is now reader in Indian history at Cambridge.

THE same publishers announce a History of the Theories of Production and Distribution in English Political Economy, from 1776 to 1848, by Mr. Edwin Cannan. One of his results is to show that the Ricardian system was of a much more practical character than is generally supposed.

THE next volume in the series of "Heroes of the Nations" will be John Wyclif: Last of the Schoolmen and First of the English Reformers, by Mr. Lewis Sergeant.

THE Archdeacon of London has written a volume of essays on Christian character and conduct in the present day under the title of The Servant of Christ. It will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock immediately.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish in a few days Playthings and Parodies, consisting of short stories by Mr. Barry Pain.

MESSRS. JAMES NISBET & Co. have in the press a Short Study of the Life and Works of Lord Tennyson, by the Rev. Arthur Jenkinson.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce the "Ariel" Shakspeare, each play in a separate volume, with reproductions of the designs by Frank Howard, first published in 1833.

MESSRS. EDEN, REMINGTON & Co. will shortly issue, in cheap one-volume form, under the title of "Love Knots," Miss May Crommelin's three-volume novel Cross Roads. This change is necessitated by the fact that the first title was not entered at Stationers Hall, and has since been adopted by another author.

THE forthcoming number of the Library Review will contain an appreciation of Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, by Mr. William Sharp; an article, entitled "The Dead Laureate," by Mr. J. Cuming Walters; and a paper on "Peer Gynt," by Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.

M. STÉPHANE MALLARMÉ has written an appreciation of Lord Tennyson, which will appear, in the original French, in The National Observer of October 29.

A NEW novel in three volumes, by the late Mrs. Lockett, of Sydney, entitled Judith Grant, will be published next week by Messrs. Hutchinson.

THE first edition of the "Yonge Library" having been sold before publication, a second edition is in preparation, and will be ready in a few days.

THE English Goethe Society will open its winter session by a meeting at the rooms of the Royal Society of British Artists, on Monday next, October 31, when Miss Hagemann will read a paper on "Goethe as a Minister of State." A new volume of Transactions is in the press. The secretary is Dr. Eug. Oswald, 49, Blomfield-road, Maida Hill.

THE first general meeting of the Bibliographical Society was held on Monday, October 24, at 20, Hanover-square, when the report of the committee, appointed in July, was read and adopted. Mr. W. A. Copinger was elected president; Lord Charles Bruce, Mr. W. A. Christie, and Dr. Garnett, vice-presidents; and Mr. Alfred H. Huth, treasurer. The programme for the opening session comprises a series of papers on various aspects of bibliographical work by the president, Mr. F. Madan, of the Bodleian Library, Mr. Aldrich, of the British Museum, Mr. William Morris, and others. The recommendations of the committee included the appointment of standing committees on early printed books, general literature, current literature, special bibliographies, and book printing and publishing. It was also decided to form a library of bibliographical works, and to hold occasional exhibitions of book rarities. Mr. Talbot Reed, of 4, Fann-street, E.C., is the hon. secretary.

THE second part of Mr. Bernard Quaritch's Dictionary of English Book-Collectors consists mainly of contributions by Mr. Michael Kearney. The first library he describes is that of Mary Queen of Scots, two of whose books can be traced with certainty. The cover of one of these, now in the possession of Lord Rosebery, is here reproduced, in one of Mr. Griggs's most skilful facsimiles, simulating the very texture of the original. Next we have an account of the Earl of Sunderland, who formed the famous collection called after his name, which remained at Blenheim Palace until a few years ago. It seems that he was comparatively indifferent to bindings, and never put his own arms on them. A list is given of the more valuable of his books, arranged in a classified order. Then follow notes—for they are little more—upon the library at Syston Park, Lincolnshire, formed at the end of last century by Sir John Thorold, and dispersed in 1884; upon the collection formed about the same time by Colonel Stanley, of Cross Hall, Lancashire, which was sold in his lifetime; upon the more famous collection of Henry Perkins, sold at Hanworth Park, near Feltham, in 1873; upon the library of John Rennie, the engineer; and upon the private collections of two brothers named Edwards, son of a bookseller at Halifax in the last century. Finally we have an article of some length upon the greatest collector of our own time, Mr. Henry Huth, together with a portrait. It is written by Mr. F. S. Ellis (now of Torquay) one of the compilers of the Huth catalogue, with an appendix by Mr. Alfred H. Huth. From the latter we learn that the collection now contains all the MSS. of the historian, Henry Thomas Buckle, and also the most interesting volumes from his library.

MESSRS. NOEL, CONWAY & Co., of Birmingham, have issued an illustrated catalogue of autograph letters and MSS., classified according to subjects. The most important lots are a collection of musical scores and other historic documents relating to Mendelssohn; and a page of an unpublished travesty of "Othello," written by Dickens in his twentieth year.

IT seems worthy of note that one New York publisher—who shall be nameless here—advertises no less than fifteen editions of the Works of Tennyson, some of which, we presume, differ only in their bindings. The cheapest, in half-leather, is priced at 75 cents (3s.). One of them, described as "boxed," bears the still more mystic title of the "Venetian Bamboo" edition.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Rev. John Dobie has been elected to the chair of Hebrew and oriental languages at Edinburgh, vacant by the death of Prof. Adams. Mr. Dobie, who is a Presbyterian chaplain on the Indian establishment, is quite a young man, though he has won a reputation by his journey in Southern Arabia, undertaken for the purpose of examining Himyaritic inscriptions and the literature of the Jews of Yemen.

PROF. G. H. DARWIN has been appointed to represent the University of Cambridge at the Galileo tercentenary, to be held at Padua in December.

PROF. JOWETT is lecturing at Oxford this term upon "The Pre-Socratic Philosophy."

MR. J. H. MIDDLETON, Slade professor of fine art at Cambridge, announces a course of four lectures on "Michelangelo."

THE Rev. W. Eustace Daniel, Grinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint at Oxford, proposes to deliver his terminal lecture upon "Zechariah and Malachi" upon Wednesday, November 23.

MR. F. MADAN will deliver a lecture on Thursday next, in connexion with the Oxford Association for the Education of Women, upon "Mediaeval Education in Oxford."

THE University of the Cape of Good Hope has applied for the privileges of incorporation at Cambridge.

THE Oxford Magazine for October 26 is a particularly interesting number. It contains a report of Mr. Gladstone's Romanes Lecture, with critical comments by H. R.; an obituary notice of the late Colonel Crowder, for eighteen years bursar of Corpus, by H. F. T., his travelling companion in the Levant; and a very elaborate tabular statement, showing the places of education, &c., of the successful candidates at the recent examination for the Indian Civil Service. Out of the first ten, it appears that eight were Oxford men; while, as to schools, Merchant Taylors and Bath are each represented by three.

THE total number of matriculations at Cambridge this term is 875, as compared with 862 last year. The following is the order of the larger colleges:—Trinity, 180; St. John's, 81; Pembroke, 59; Trinity Hall, 57; Clare, 53; Caius, 52; Emmanuel, 48; Christ's and Non-Collegiate, 46 each; Jesus, 41; and Corpus, 40.

IN supplement to our note last week on the matriculations at Oxford, we may now state that Christ Church has 62 freshmen, New College 58, Keble 51, Trinity 46, Magdalen 39, Brasenose and Exeter 33 each.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE STREAM OF LIFE.

LIKE a small streamlet on a mountain-side,
A white thread glancing in the summer sun,
Lightly down leaping with a joyous spring,
So passes happy childhood's playful hour.
Next, through green dells and 'neath o'ershadowing crags,
The growing stream with heedless flow winds on,
Now gladly lingering round some glowing isle
That smiles with heavenly beauty, and allures
With promise of perpetual delights;
Now fiercely dashing down some rough cascade
Where rushing waters split on hostile rocks,
Spouting aloft the iridescent spray
Drifted in sunless clefts by swaying winds;
So pass the years of youth. Our riper age
Is like the broadened river's stately march,
Whose current slackens, yet admits no pause,
But passes field and coppice, tower and town,
Not wholly 'scaping from defiling stains,
Yet toiling onward restlessly. Adown
Its smooth yet ever-sliding stream we haste,
Nor mark the progress of its quiet speed,
Till, faster rushing as it nears the end
It sweeps us onward in resistless course
Through the torrid rapids of disease and pain,
Till, plunging down the cataract of death,
We glide into a vast and unknown space,
The boundless ocean of eternity.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the current number of Mind, Mr. H. Rutgers Marshall continues his study of "The Field of Aesthetics Psychologically Considered." His object is to show that our aesthetic experience, while essentially hedonic, is differentiated from other non-aesthetic pleasures. The radical distinction, according to him, is the relative permanence—that is, the permanent revivability—of aesthetic as compared with other pleasures. The argument is ingenious, but is perhaps a little forced. Surely there are pleasures which attain to an exceptional degree of this kind of permanence—e.g., the joy of a great and only half expected personal success, which we should never think of bringing within the "aesthetic field." Mr. Marshall rightly protests against the idea that pleasures are in themselves complete psychical states or "psychoses." But he does not carry this view far enough. Aesthetic experience is undoubtedly a variety of pleasure; but it differs from other experiences much less through any peculiarities of its pleasure-element or phase than through peculiarities of its psychical entourage, such as its mode of production, its implication of a consensus of feelings, and the like. This is the fact which gives strength to the position that aesthetic experience is more than pleasure, and the hedonist cannot hope to turn this position by merely ignoring the rich complexity of the phenomena. Mr. A. Eastwood, in a second paper, comes down heavily on "Lotze's Antithesis between Thought and Things." There is no doubt that, in his characteristic attempt to mediate between the Realism of Herbart and the Objective Idealism of Hegel, Lotze was not always successful in maintaining an intelligible consistent position; and Mr. Eastwood, who seems to be a skilful dialectician, manages to expose a good deal of incongruity in Lotze's philosophy. The articles are an able piece of criticism from the Hegelian point of view, and are extremely well written. Other papers are "The Study of Crime," by the Rev. W. D. Morrison, which seems more suitable for a statistical than for a philosophical journal; and "On the Properties of a One-dimensional Manifold," by Mr. B. J. Gilman. Altogether the new number of the journal is well filled, and with matter of varied interest.

THE latest number of The American Journal of Psychology embodies the results of more than one piece of good experimental work. Prof. Donaldson seeks to throw new light on the extent of the visual area in the cortex of man by a study of Laura Bridgman's brain. The article is an excellent example of careful reasoning on carefully obtained facts. Mr. Dresslar traces out the influences of time of day, of muscular fatigue, and of mental activity on the rapidity of a series of tapping movements voluntarily carried out by the hands. It seems that, while we cannot tap as quickly as usual when muscularly fatigued, we tap more quickly after mental activity. Messrs. J. R. Angell and A. H. Pierce give the results of some new experiments in the field of simultaneous attention to disparate sensations, and bring out in an interesting way the complexity of the conditions which are at work when we try to seize at the same moment a visual and an auditory impression. A more popular element is supplied by Mr. B. J. Gilman's report of his experimental investigations into musical expressiveness. He bethought him, it seems, of an "experimental concert," in which the persons composing the audience should be invited to describe the impression, feeling, train of imagery induced by a particular piece of music. The answers given are curious, by reason of the degree of concrete definiteness of most of the impressions. One cannot help wondering, however, whether ordinary musical impressions reach this degree of concrete representativeness; and whether Mr. Gilman's audience, even though only amateurs, did not, as the result of this subjection to questioning, reflectively elaborate their impressions to a somewhat artificial point of definiteness.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAZIN, René. Scille: Croquis italiens. Paris: Cslmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
BODE, W. Altperische Knüpfteppiche. Berlin: Grote. 5 M.
CESAREO, G. A. Poesie e Lettere di Salvatore Rosa. Naples: Furchheim. 15 fr.
DUBARRY, Armand. Etoile de cirque à Ceyeux-sur-Mer. Paris: Empis. 3 fr. 50 c.
DUEHRING, E. Die Grüssen der modernen Literatur, populär u. kritisch nach neuen Gesichtspunkten dargestellt. 1. Abth. Leipzig: Naumann. 6 M.
EBERS, G. Sinnbildliches. Die kopt. Kunst, e. neues Gebiet der altchristl. Sculptur, u. ihre Symbole. Leipzig: Engelmann. 4 M.
GOUOET, E. L'Argot musical. Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.
LACHMANN'S, K. Briefe an Moriz Haupt. Hrg. v. J. Vahlen. Berlin: Reimer. 4 M.
LARROUMET, G. Le Salon de 1892. Paris: Boussod. 100 fr.
MALOT, Hector. Complices. Paris: Flammarion. 3 fr. 50 c.
MANUEL de Bio-bibliographie et d'iconographie des femmes célèbres. Paris: Nilsson. 30 fr.

- MÜLLER-GROTH, G. Die Malereien d. Huldigungsmales im Rathause zu Goslar. Berlin: Grote. 6 M.
 PASTOR, W. Vom Kapitalismus zur Einzelarbeit. Berlin: Puttkammer. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 SCHAEFER, W. L. Manuel de l'amateur de la gravure sur bois et sur métal au 15^e siècle. T. 2. Berlin: Cohn. 12 M.
 SOURIAU, P. La Suggestion dans l'art. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
 SOUVENIRS d'un médecin de l'expédition d'Égypte. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 5 fr.
 WEILL, Alex. Mes Poésies: le nouvel Israël. Paris: Sauvalro. 3 fr.

THEOLOGY.

- FALKER, R. Die Lehre v. der ewigen Verdammnis. Eisenach: Wilkens. 3 M. 60 Pf.
 WELLMANN, J. Skizzen u. Vorarbeiten. 5. Hft. Berlin: Reimer. 7 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BARDEY, E. G. Geschichte v. Nauen u. Osthavelland. Rathenow: Babenzien. 10 M.
 BILBASOFF, B. V. Geschichte Katharina II. Deutsch vom P. v. H. Berlin: Cronbach. 18 M.
 DOUAI, son histoire militaire: ses fortifications. Paris: May & Motteroz. 50 fr.
 HARNIER, K. Maria Josefa Amalia, Herzogin zu Sachsen, Königin v. Spanien. Dresden: Bensch. 4 M.
 LEHAUT, Ph. La France et l'Angleterre en Asie. T. 1. Indo-Chine: les derniers jours de la dynastie des rois d'Avra. Paris: Berger Levrault. 10 fr.
 LEIST, B. W. Altarisches jus civile. 1. Abth. Jena: Fischer. 12 M.
 LOIR, Maurice. La Marine royale en 1789. Paris: Colin. 3 fr. 50 c.
 URBUNDENBUCH der Abtei St. Gallen. 4. Tl. 1. Lfg. 1860—1870. St. Gallen: Huber. 10 M.
 WESTERKAMP, J. B. Staatenbund u. Bundesstaat. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 14 M.
 WINCKELMANN, O. Der Schmalkaldische Bund 1530—1532 u. der Nürnberger Religionsfriede. Strassburg: Heitz. 6 M.
 WYSS, F. V. Abhandlungen zur Geschichte d. schweizerischen öffentlichen Rechts. Zürich: Orell Füssli. 8 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BÉNARD, Ch. Platon: sa philosophie. Paris: Alcan. 10 fr.
 PLANMARION, C. La Planète Mars et ses conditions d'habitabilité. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 12 fr.
 KNOR, A. Der Kaiserstuhl im Breisgau. Leipzig: Engelmann. 17 M.
 KNUTH, P. Geschichte der Botanik in Schleswig-Holstein. 2. Tbl. Kiel: Lipsius. 4 M.
 LANG, A. Lehrbuch der vergleichenden Anatomie. 3. Abth. Jena: Fischer. 6 M. 50 Pf.
 PINNA, A. Die Imidothier u. ihre Derivate. Berlin: Oppenheim. 7 M.
 RAWITZ, B. Der Mantelrand der Aephalen. 3. Tl. Sipponista. Jena: Fischer. 18 M.
 SACHS, J. Gesammelte Abhandlungen über Pflanzen-Physiologie. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Engelmann. 18 M.
 SCHUMANN, K. Morphologische Studien. 1. Hft. Leipzig: Engelmann. 10 M.
 SELENKA, E. Studien ub. Entwicklungsgeschichte der Tiere. 5. Hft. 2. Hälfte. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 20 M.
 WOLFF, J. Das Gesetz der Transformation der Knochen. Berlin: Hirschwald. 38 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- FÖRSTERMANN, A. W. De vocabulis quae videntur esse apud Herodotum poetis. Magdeburg: Creutz. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 GEYER, P. Kritische u. sprachliche Erläuterungen zu Antonini Placentini Itinerarium. Leipzig: Pock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 GRESMANN, P. De metro paeonice sive cretica apud poetas graecos. Breslau: Preuss. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 HANOSCHKE, die, der grossherzogl. badischen Hof- u. Landesbibliothek in Karlsruhe. II. Orientalische Handschriften v. W. Brambach. Karlsruhe: Groos. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 HUTH, G. Geschichte d. Buddhismus in der Mongolei. Aus dem Tibet. d. o. Jigs-med nammk'a hrg., übers. u. erläutert. 1. Tl. Strassburg: Trübner. 20 M.
 NALLINO, C. A. Chrestomathia Korani arabica. Leipzig: Gerbard. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 PLANTA, R. V. Grammatik der oskisch-umbrischen Dialekte. 1. Bd. Strassburg: Trübner. 15 M.
 ROSEN, F. Die Indarsabha d. Amānat. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 8 M.
 TIRFON de Smyrne. Exposition des connaissances mathématiques utiles pour la lecture de Platon, traduite par J. Dupuis. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"COUVADE"—THE GENESIS OF AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL TERM.

The Scriptorium, Oxford: Oct. 24, 1892.

On coming to deal with couvade in the Dictionary, I was much surprised to find that this word, so French in form, is not recognised by Hatzfeld, Darmsteter, and Thomas, in their scholarly Dictionnaire Général de la Langue Française, now in course of publication. My surprise was increased when I found that no more had it been known to Littré, either in his original work, or in the Appendix of additions and corrections issued with the last volume. And I can scarcely say that surprise was lessened when, on finding it in Littré's later Supplement, it appeared with no genuine French authority, but merely with a reference to the French translation of Prof. Max Müller's Essays on Comparative Mythology, in which the translator had of course simply taken over the word, as a technical term, from the English text. Investigation soon showed that all the references I had to the term, either in English or French, went back to Dr. B. B. Tylor's Early History of Mankind, published in 1865. And there, indeed, in chapter x., we have the first suggestion of the name, in the sense in which it is now commonly applied by students of anthropology and folklore, i.e., as a general term to comprehend a series of customs, according to which, on the birth of a child, the father performs certain acts, or simulates certain states, natural or proper to the mother, or at least acts as an invalid, or abstains from certain foods or actions for a time shorter or longer, as if he were physically affected by the birth. Prof. Max Müller has already, in the Essays above named, uttered a needed caveat as to the danger of assuming that these various customs have any common origin, and can safely be labelled with a common name, which, to a certain extent, begs the question of their connexion. I have here the humbler function of inquiring, as a mere historian of language, into the genesis of the suggested common name couvade itself.

Dr. Tylor says (op. cit. pp. 287-8): "One of these practices has an existing European name, the couvade or 'hatching,' and this term it may be convenient to use for the whole set." On p. 295, the authority for this 'European name' is given as Legrand d'Aussy, who is cited to the effect that the practice in question is said still to exist in some cantons of Béarn (French Navarre), where it is styled faire la couvade; and a footnote refers the reader to Legrand d'Aussy's Fabliaux du xii. et xiii. siècle, ed. 3, Paris, 1829. Being curious to see farther into the history of this word, which, although said to be used by Legrand d'Aussy, is unknown to modern French lexicographers, I turned up the passage referred to; and as Legrand d'Aussy died at the end of the eighteenth century, I took the necessary precaution of turning up the place in the two editions of his Fabliaux published during his lifetime (both in 1781), as well as in the third edition published thirty years after his death in 1829. Sharp experience has taught me that an author cannot be safely quoted from a posthumous edition, until the latter is compared with those published in his lifetime. I then found that Legrand d'Aussy himself said nothing about faire la couvade; that the passage referring to the custom in question had been greatly amplified and interpolated by the editor of the edition of 1829, A. A. Renouard, who, and not Legrand d'Aussy, ought to have been given as the immediate authority for the expression faire la couvade. It is worth while to quote the passage as it appears in the two editions of 1781, and then as edited by Renouard in 1829:

"Edd. 1781.—On l'a trouvée . . établie chez les Caraïbes d'Amérique; et l'on prétend qu'elle a existé chez les peuples de Béarn."

"Ed. 1829.—On l'a trouvée . . établie chez les Caraïbes d'Amérique. Elle était autrefois en usage en Espagne, chez les Celtibériens. C'est des Espagnols, sans doute, que l'on pris les Béarnois, chez lesquels on prétend qu'elle subsiste encore dans quelques cantons, ce qu'ils appellent faire la couvade."

It is to be noticed how remarkably the vague allegation of past history in Legrand d'Aussy is converted into an allegation of present fact by his editor; of which more anon. At present I have to call attention to the statement that faire la couvade was the appellation of the practice in Béarn in 1829. If so, the phrase must be either French or Béarnese. The latter, although politically and geographically a French dialect, is linguistically a distinct language, side by side with French, Provençal, Catalan, and Castilian—which, if Navarre had survived as an independent kingdom, might now have been one of the national languages of Europe. Well, faire la couvade is not Béarnese; couvade, indeed, from the phonetic laws of the language, could not possibly be a Béarnese word. Was it then French? Certainly couvade had (in a certain sense) once been French, literary or colloquial, for Cotgrave, in 1611, enters couvade, as a synonym of covée, "brood," "covey," and couverment, "hatching," "brooding," and adds the very phrase faire la couvade as used to mean "to sit cowering or skowking within doors, to lurk in the campe when Gallants are at battell"; it being an obvious expression of derision for such a coward or laggard to say that he fait la couvade, or, as we say in the North, "sits clocking" like a hen in her nest. As is well-known, the ending -ade of nouns of action is not originally French, but a Frenchified adaptation of Provençal words in -ada, or of Spanish words in -ada, or Italian words in -ada or -ata. The native French corresponding ending is -ée, derived through a proto-French -ade, as in French armée, which comes through armade, from Romanic armata (surviving in Provençal and Spanish), and originating in a Latin type armāta. (See the article -ADE in the Dictionary.) But although the ending -ade appeared originally only in adaptations of southern words, it soon became a living French suffix (just as it is also an English one in cannonade, blockade, &c.); and couvade, as known to Cotgrave, may either have been a Frenchified form of a southern covada, cubada, used in French dialects bordering on the Provençal domain, or it may have originated in French itself, as a colloquial synonym of covée. But neither the seventeenth century French couvade nor any of its cognates has, or ever had, the sense attributed to it in Béarn by Legrand d'Aussy's editor. The Béarnese cognate coude (three syllables) is simply and solely = French covée, as a covey or brood of chickens, &c., and the action of hatching. It is quite certain that neither in 1865 nor in 1829, nor at any date preceding, was couvade an existing name for the alleged practice in any European language, least of all in Béarnese or in Béarn.

Whence, then, did the late editor of Legrand d'Aussy get the expression? He could hardly have taken it directly from Cotgrave and himself have given to it this specific sense. The solution of the puzzle is that in 1790—1815 (thus after Legrand d'Aussy wrote) Citizen Saconbe, the physician-poet of Carcassonne, published his famous Lucinade, a poem, in ten cantos, upon the art of accouchements, in which, dealing with the custom in question, with a rhetorical conglomeration of place and time, he says:

"En Amérique, en Corse, et chez l'Ibérien,
 En France même encor chez le Vénarnien,
 Au pays navarrois, lorsqu' une femme accouche,
 L'épouse sort du lit et le mari se couche.
 On le met au régime, et notre faux malade,
 Soigné par l'accouchée, en son lit fait couvade."

Here the expression fait couvade has no specific application to the custom in question: it is casually used by Citizen Saconbe precisely as explained by Cotgrave, i.e., as an expression of derision for the man who thus "lies clocking" in bed, when well enough to be "in the campe" or "at the battell," or at his ordinary masculine work. The word which had become obsolete in literary French (if it ever existed there), or perhaps only the derisive phrase in which the word was alone preserved, had come down in colloquial use to 1790, and was then casually used by a provincial writer. The editor of the 1829 edition of Legrand d'Aussy, probably not knowing the obsolete word, mistook it for a technical or proper term, and, with that looseness which seems to have cleaved to the use of the word, stated that it was the existing appellation of the practice in Béarn. Many loose and picturesque writers, such for example as the late Francisque Michel, have caught up his statement without examination (though not without embellishment) and it has passed, as we have seen, into an anthropological use (or abuse) which would certainly have astonished Cotgrave or Citizen Sacombe.

In my investigation of the history of the word, I have had perforce to investigate also the statements made as to the alleged custom, with some curious results, which, however, I reserve for the next number of the ACADEMY.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

FUNERAL CUSTOM IN THE COUNTY OF WEXFORD.

Carrig Breac, Howth, Ireland: Oct. 15, 1892.

Can any of your correspondents learned in ancient customs inform me whether the following funeral ceremony, still practised in Wexford, exists elsewhere?

When the coffin is supplied, the pieces of wood which remain over are cut into small crosses measuring two feet eight inches in height by eleven inches wide across the arms. These crosses are painted in varied colours—green, blue, red, and yellow. They have pointed shafts; and one, which is meant to be planted in the soil at the head of the grave, is laid on the coffin, while the others are carried by the chief mourners behind. At the cross roads nearest to the cemetery there is always a hawthorn tree, at the foot of which the procession pauses, and the cross-bearers lift their crosses to its branches, where they fix them and leave them. In some places the tree has fallen beneath its weight of crosses, but its root remains, or at all events the memory of the place where it grew; and so the practice is continued, and the crosses are thrust in a heap lying one upon another, till a mound often eight or ten feet high may be seen.

It was an ancient custom in York to pray at crosses on the way to the cemetery (see Brand, Popular Antiquities, vol. ii., p. 173). However, it is in the South-west of England, and especially in Somersetshire, that I should expect to find traces of the special practice I allude to. The baronies of Bargy and of Forth are the parts of Wexford where it is found; and Forth is described by Colonel Solomon Richards in 1682 as possessed by a fresh settlement of English, "the old English being still numerous." It was "the Gate of the Kingdom of Ireland at which the English under the conduct of Robert Fitzstephen first entered in 1170." The hawthorn at once reminds us of the Glastonbury thorn, and of the Thorn of St. Patrick on the side of the hill above the banks of the Loire at Tours; but the customs and legends connected with these trees refer to the miraculous blossoming of trees at Christmas: a miraculous property they have in common with the Rose of Jericho.

This Wexford custom, on the other hand, seems to belong to the worship of the Instruments of the Passion, to be connected with the Passion, not the Birth of Christ. The hawthorn and whitethorn and blackthorn all claim to have been used for the sacred Crown of Thorns. Sir John Mandeville says, "They maden hym a crowne of the branches of the Albiespyne, that is Whitethorn," and Giles Fletcher says:

"It was but now they gathered blooming May,
And of his arms disrobed the branching tree,
To strow with boughs and blossoms all thy way;
And now the branchlesse trunk a crosse for thee,
And May, dismaid, thy coronet must be."

The form of procession, carrying in our hands ivy, sprigs of laurel, rosemary, or other evergreens, is said to be emblematic of the soul's immortality. So this bearing of the cross to the point where, at the meeting of four roads, that road is chosen which leads directly to the grave, is emblematic of the soul's submission; while the laying down the cross upon the thorny branch that made the Saviour's crown is an instance of Christian symbolism still lingering among our peasantry that ought not to pass unrecorded.

I should much like to learn whether this custom is peculiar to the people of Wexford.

MARGARET STOKES.

THE STORY OF NAMUKI.

London: Oct. 22, 1892.

In reading this pleasing scandal about Indra, and his excesses in Soma, and his "hair of the dog that bit him," surā (brandy), and all his troubles with Namuki and the bolt of foam, I seem to hear a hundred echoes from folk-lore and fairy tale. Where have I read most of this before, not in Indian literature? The deed which is not to be done by day or night, with wet or dry—it seems very familiar. It sounds like a practical application of a set of devinettes, such as we find all the world over. Will no energetic folk-lore hunter out the parallels to Namuki, "Hold Fast"—who faintly reminds one of the Tar Baby—and to the evasions of a promise, which correspond to "neither by night nor day, neither with wet or dry"? Mr. Jacobs, I am sure, has instances at his fingers' ends, and they would be interesting to compare; though, of course, they would not prove anything either way, for they, too, might be said to have "a physical background."

A. LANG.

A MISPRINT IN BURKE.

London: Oct. 22, 1892.

In Burke's (posthumously printed) "Third Letter on a Regicide Peace," there is a curious misprint, which has escaped the observation of all editors, although it makes nonsense of the passage in which it occurs. The words as printed (Clarendon Press Edition, p. 210) are: "In this country, land and offices only excepted, we raise no faculty tax. We preserve the faculty from the expence." It is clear, I think, that "preserve" is a blunder for presume. The meaning is, that in England the rule was not to tax a man's resources ("faculty") as such, but his expenditure, so that it was possible for a miser to evade his fair share of the burden.

HENRY BRADLEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 30, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Rudyard Kipling," with Illustrative Readings, by Mr. Willmott Dixon.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Plato's Republic and Modern Democracy," by Mrs. Bryant.

MONDAY, Oct. 31, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Neck," I., by Mr. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Goethe: "Goethe as a Minister of State," by Miss Hagemann.

TUESDAY, Nov. 1, 8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Book of the Dead," continued, by Mr. P. le Page Renouf; "The Two Captivities: The Habor and the Chebar," by Mr. W. F. Ainsworth.

7.30 p.m. Zoological: "Mammals from Nyassaland," by Mr. Oldfield Thomas; "Zeuglodon and other Cetacean Remains from the Tertiaries of the Caucasus," by Mr. R. Lydekker. "A remarkable new Species of Cidaris from Mauritius," by Prof. F. Jeffrey Bell.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 2, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "The Development of Gun Locks, from Examples in the Tower," by Viscount Dillon; "Indoor Games of Mediaeval School Boys," by Mr. J. T. Mickelthwaite; "Edward the Confessor's Gold Chain and Crucifix," by Mr. Walter Lovell.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Samuel Daniel," by Mr. E. K. Chambers.

THURSDAY, Nov. 3, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Neck," II., by Mr. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Linnean: "A Theoretical Origin of Endogens through an Aquatic Habit," by Prof. Henslow.

8 p.m. Viking Club: "The Objects of the Viking Club," by Mr. A. W. Johnston; "Some Aspects of Toleration in the Closing Years of the Nineteenth Century," by Mr. E. Blair.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Journey from the East Coast to Uganda and the Great Equatorial Lakes of Africa," by Capt. F. D. Lugard.

FRIDAY, Nov. 3, 8 p.m. Philological: "Fresh Ryme Tests for Chaucer," by Prof. Skeat.

8 p.m. Geologists' Association: Conversatione.

SCIENCE.

THE RACE AND LANGUAGE OF THE HITTITES.

De la Race et de la Langue des Hittites.
Par Léon de Lantsheere. (Brussels: Goemaere.)

THIS is one of the best books which have been written about the Hittites. Indeed, I do not know where else there is to be found so clear and comprehensive an account of what is known or conjectured up to the present moment concerning that interesting people of the ancient East. Moreover, M. de Lantsheere does not confine himself to a mere repetition of the assertions of others, or of the facts with which we are already acquainted; from time to time he criticises the theories which he passes under review, and suggests fresh points of view of his own. Perhaps, however, the chief merit of the book is its orderly arrangement of the material, and the scrupulous care with which references are given for the statements made in the text.

At the end of his preface the author says:

"I wish in this work thoroughly to examine the questions which relate to the race and language of the Hittites. My sole aim is to introduce method into the facts which we know, to get rid of adventurous hypotheses, and thus to indicate by a process of elimination the direction in which more fortunate inquirers may discover the solution of the problem."

In this aim he may be assured that he has succeeded.

In one point, however, Hittite studies have advanced since his volume was printed. The inscriptions discovered by Messrs. Ramsay and Hogarth in Asia Minor have been published in the Recueil de Travaux relatifs à la Philologie et à l'Archéologie égyptiennes et assyriennes, and my own memoir on the linguistic results to be obtained from them has also appeared in the same periodical. What I have said therein will disarm the criticism passed by Mr. de Lantsheere upon one side of my attempt to decipher the texts.

The arguments which show that the authors of the Hittite monuments were the Hittites of the Old Testament, and of the Egyptian, Assyrian, and Vannic inscriptions are set forth with great lucidity. One of the most striking of these arguments is the fact that the Egyptian artists have represented the Khata or Hittites with precisely the same remarkable features as those which are ascribed to them in their own sculptures. M. de Lantsheere further points out that the Hittite proper names met with in the Egyptian and Assyrian records agree with those prevalent among the populations of the Taurus in Kilikia and Kappadokia. It was this fact which originally led me, thirteen years ago, to reject the theory that the language of the Hittites was Semitic; and to the proper names which I then collected in support of my view M. de Lantsheere now adds several more.

He has also drawn attention to certain artistic details which point to the northern origin of the Hittite tribes, and at the same time indicate a comparatively early date for many of the monuments they have left behind them. Thus, the Hittite king Khata-sir is represented on the Egyptian monuments with precisely the same tiara as the personage represented in the Hittite sculpture of Gaur Kalassi in Western Asia Minor. Moreover, "the human heads so frequently found in the Hittite inscriptions occur as a decoration on a silver vase discovered at Mykenae by M. Tzountas," like four rams' heads on an intaglio disinterred from the tomb of Vaphio. These and other parallels between the art of the Hittite monuments and that of the Mykenae period in Greece are of considerable value in determining what we may call the "Hittite age," since the discoveries of Dr. Flinders Petrie have now removed all doubt from the minds of competent archaeologists as to the early date of the Mykenae antiquities.

A. H. SAYCE.

OBITUARY.

DR. C. SCHÜTZ.

THE death of Dr. C. Schütz at the age of eighty-seven, carries us back to the very early days of Sanskrit studies in Europe. At first, after Bopp, Schlegel, and Humboldt had made the existence of a Sanskrit literature known in Germany, to edit a single text like Nala, or a play like Sakuntala, was considered a very great achievement indeed. No one thought of attempting more; and to attack the difficult artificial poetry of Māgha or Bhāravi would have been considered, at the time, ultra vires by the best students of Sanskrit. Dr. Schütz was the first, or one of the first, who discovered the usefulness of Sanskrit commentaries, and was able with their aid to grapple successfully with the obscure style of the artificial poetry of India. In 1837 he published his translation of Five Songs of the Bhatti Kāvya, which was followed in 1843 by his translation of Māgha's Śisupālabadha, and in 1845 by that of Bhāravi's Kīrātārjunīya. In all these translations Dr. Schütz showed himself a painstaking and conscientious scholar; and though these poems themselves have almost ceased to interest European scholars, their study and that of their commentaries proved an excellent discipline to those who afterwards entered upon an independent examination of the treasures of Sanskrit literature, and who had perceived that a familiarity with the style of native commentators formed an indispensable condition of real progress. Unfortunately, Dr. Schütz was forced to fall out of the ranks of the advancing army of Sanskrit scholars by blindness, which attacked him in 1858. Since that time his name has been but little heard of among Orientalists. Some of his school-books for French and English literature seem to have enjoyed a wide and lasting popularity. He died at Bielefeld last month, deeply mourned by his numerous pupils and by his fellow-citizens. His name will always be mentioned with respect in the history of Sanskrit scholarship.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DATE OF THE FOURTH EGYPTIAN DYNASTY.

35, Bloomsbury-square: Oct. 18, 1892.

Mr. Petrie's statement in Medum as to the passage-angle of Senefru's pyramid completes a chain of astronomical evidence proving the commencement of the IVth Dynasty to have been very approximately 3700 B.C., an outline of which (pending fuller details) will, I think, be of interest to readers of the ACADEMY.

The entrance passage of the Medum pyramid has a polar distance (allowing for the azimuth error of the passage) of about 45°, and, if intended for observation of a circumpolar star, fixes the date of the structure within not very wide limits. Between 4900 and 2900 B.C. no naked eye star was within this distance of the pole, except the sixth magnitude star 126 Piazzi (xiii) which was so situate about 3820 to 3620 B.C., its minimum distance being about 36°. Allowing an uncertainty of a few minutes of arc, a date fifty years on either side of these extremes would satisfy the requirements of the case.

The passage-angle of the Great Pyramid is 3° 30' below the pole (3° 34' in the built portion, the latest). The Second Pyramid passage has also an angle of about 3° 31' polar distance (Smyth's measures—Perring and Vyse, whose angle measures are not accurate, give 4° 5'). Finally the northern "trial-passage" east of the Great Pyramid has the polar distance 3° 22' + or - 8'. Now at the date 3650 B.C. the star 217 Piazzi (somewhat brighter than that last named) was at a distance of 3° 29' from the pole, increasing to 3° 31' by 3630 B.C.

East of the Great Pyramid there are certain straight trenches (one at the N.E. corner) running respectively 13° 6', 24° 22', and 75° 58' east of North and west of South. At about the date named these trenches pointed very nearly to Canopus at setting and to Arcturus and Altair at rising, the average error of azimuth being less than a degree (always in the same direction). It is quite out of the question to regard this as accidental. There are not more than a dozen stars whose average magnitude is equal to that of the three named, and at any given date the odds are about 90 to 1 against three such stars rising or setting within a degree of three azimuths taken at random.

But even these differences of half a degree or so are accounted for. Refraction at the horizon amounts to about 35' of arc; if we assume that the Egyptian (?) astronomers took it roundly at 30', and that they intended to observe the stars on the true and not the apparent horizon, we find the azimuths would have been (3645 B.C.):—

Canopus	13° 3' (W. of S.),	Trench	13° 6'
Arcturus	24° 23' (E. of N.),	"	24° 22'
Altair	76° 0' ("),	"	75° 58'

These figures speak for themselves. The dates 3645 B.C. for the trenches and external works, and 3630 B.C. for the completion of the entrance passage, with an interval of fifteen years, accord with the probabilities of the case. It should be remembered that they are deduced quite independently.

It only remains to add in this place that the data employed are Mr. Petrie's measures, Mr. Stockwell's tables of the place of the pole from 8000 years prior to 1850 A.D., and the stellar proper motions of the last Greenwich Ten-Year Catalogue (for Canopus, the Melbourne Catalogue).

The net result is that the three reigns of Senefru, Khuffu, and Kuffa may be definitely assigned to the century 3700-3600 B.C. It is interesting to note that this follows close upon the period of Sargon and Naram-Sin in Babylonia (3800-3750 B.C.). These monarchs, therefore, preceded the great Fourth Dynasty kings, and their conquest of the Sinaitic Peninsula cannot be placed in the period of decline in the Sixth Dynasty. It was prior to that of Senefru's, but apparently lasted only about one generation after Naram-Sin before it gave way before the spreading power of Egypt.

The pyramids, following so soon after the revival of astronomical science under Sargon, taken in conjunction with the statement of Herodotus that they were ascribed by the Egyptians to a shepherd, Philition, and with the fact of a great artistic revival under the Fourth Dynasty, is significant. So too are the laboriously broken statues of Kuffa and like remains. Have we here an early example of Semitic influence and subsequent reaction, paralleled 2000 years later under Khuenaten?

G. F. HARDY.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first meeting of the Linnean Society for this session will be held at Burlington House on Thursday next, at 8 p.m., when the Rev. Prof. Henslow will read a paper on "A Theoretical Origin of Endogens through an Aquatic Habit."

THE following is the list of nominations for the council of the London Mathematical Society for the session 1892-3, which will be balloted for at the annual meeting on November 10: President, Mr. A. B. Kempe; vice-presidents, Messrs. Basset, Elliott, and Greenhill; treasurer, Dr. J. Larmor; hon. secs., Messrs. M. Jenkins and R. Tucker; other members, Mr. H. F. Baker, Drs. Forsyth, Glaisher, Hill, and Hobson, Messrs. J. Hammond, Love, and J. J. Walker, and Major Macmahon, R.A. After the election, the retiring president, Prof. Greenhill, will deliver an address.

THE committee appointed by the British Association—in conjunction with the Society of Antiquaries, the Anthropological Institute, and the Folklore Society—to organise an ethnographical survey of the United Kingdom, have issued a circular stating that, as a preliminary step, they propose to record for certain typical villages and the neighbouring districts—(1) physical types of the inhabitants, (2) current traditions and beliefs, (3) peculiarities of dialect, (4) monuments and other remains of ancient culture; and (5) historical evidence as to continuity of race. As a first step, the committee desire to form a list of such villages in the United Kingdom as appear especially to deserve ethnographic study, out of which a selection might afterwards be made. The villages suitable for entry on the list are such as contain not less than a hundred adults, the large majority of whose forefathers have lived there so far back as can be traced, and of whom the desired physical measurements, with photographs, might be obtained.

DR. ALFRED SCHOFIELD'S Elementary Physiology for Students will be published early next month by Messrs. Cassell & Co. with coloured plates and other illustrations.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE opening meeting of the forty-ninth session of the Philological Society will be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, at 8 p.m., when Prof. Skeat will read a paper on "Fresh Ryme Tests for Chaucer." Among the other papers promised for the session—besides two Dictionary evenings by Dr. J. A. H. Murray and Mr. Henry Bradley (the president of the Society)—are: "The Assimilation of Pretonic n in Celtic Suffixes," by Mr. Whitley Stokes; "The Extensions of the Alliterative Line in Old English Verse," by Prof. Frank Heath; "Celtic Etymologies," by Prof. J. Strachan; and "Greek Etymologies," by Mr. E. R. Wharton.

DR. R. N. CUST, speaking as "one of the oldest students of the languages of British India," has addressed a memorial to the Secretary of State, urging the desirability of encouraging oriental research by awarding honorary distinctions to those who have distinguished themselves in the advance of Indian literature, archaeology, and culture, whether Europeans or natives. Some passages of his memorial seem to us to ignore the amount of good work that is being done to-day by members of the Indian services; nor has their work been entirely unrecognised by the Government.

THE last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) contains a paper by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches upon some cuneiform inscriptions from Ašnunak, which have been discovered by the French Assyriologist, M. Pognon. The other papers are continuations. Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie traces Hindu influences upon early Chinese civilisation, in connexion with the beginnings of Taoism; M. Raoul de la Grasserie examines the rhythmic of Arabic poetry, with reference to the theory of the late Stanislas Guyard; and Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen prints translations of two more letters from the Tel el-Amarna Tablets in the British Museum.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, Oct. 18.)

DR. E. B. TYLOR, president, in the chair.—Major R. C. Temple read a paper on "Developments in Buddhist Architecture and Symbolism, as illustrated by the Author's Recent Exploration of Caves in Burma." He commenced by saying that the object of the paper was chiefly to draw attention to the extraordinarily rich, and for the present practically untouched, field for the ethnographer and antiquary existing in Burma. He exhibited some photographs of life-size figures in wood, carved by a well-known artist of Maulmain, of the "four sights" shown to Buddha as Prince Siddhartha on his first visits to the outer world—viz., the old man, the sick man, the dead man, and the priest; and also some admirable gilt wooden representations from Rangoon of Buddha in his standing and recumbent postures, with his begging bowl, and seated as King Jambupati, surrounded by priests and other worshippers. He next showed a remarkable set of gilt wooden images from the platform of the great Shwedagon pagoda at Rangoon, of nats, belus, hanuman myauks and other Spirits believed in by the Burmese, seated on the steps of a lofty tagon-dain, or post, on the top of which is always perched the figure of the henth (hantsi), or sacred goose, which apparently protects pagodas in some way. From these he passed on to four representations of large glazed bricks or tiles from Pegu. These curious, and (so far as English Museums are concerned) probably unique antiquities may be presumed to be at least 400 years old, and formed at one time the ornamentation of the three procession paths round a now completely ruined pagoda. They represent the march, battle, and flight of some foreign army, represented in true Indian fashion with elephant, monkey, and other animal faces. Some of the figures are clad in Siamese and Cambodian fashion. The glazing is remarkably good, and Indian influence is clear in their construction. They may probably represent a scene from the Ramayana, which in a mutilated form is well known to Burmese mythology. These were followed by a huge figure of Buddha from Pegu in his recumbent attitude, which may be referred to King Dhammacheti who flourished in the fifteenth century. This image is 181 ft. long and 46 ft. high at the shoulder. It is built of brick and is well proportioned throughout. Its history is lost, and so was the image itself until 1881. Pegu was utterly destroyed about 1760 by the Burmese, and the interest in its holy places lost for more than a generation. This image became jungle-grown and hidden from view, and was accidentally discovered by a railway contractor searching for ballast for the line in the neighbourhood. General and detailed views of the awgun Cave were shown, exhibiting the wonderful extent of its decoration with a vast number of terra-cotta tablets and images in wood, marble, alabaster, and other material, and the extraordinary variety and multitude of the objects connected with Buddhistic worship, both ancient and modern, to be found in it. The Kawgun Cave is the richest of those visited by Major Temple; but he explained that he had examined about half a dozen others in the district, and had since gathered positive information from native sources of the existence of about forty altogether. Many of these are hardly inferior to Kawgun in richness of Buddhistic remains, and several are said to contain in addition ancient MSS. which must now be of inestimable value. A few such MSS. have actually been found. It will thus be seen how great and valuable is the field, and how well worth systematic study by competent students.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

The Claims of Decorative Art. By Walter Crane. (Lawrence & Bullen.) Ah, that we could all love one another, and never covet wealth or honour or power of pictures or anything else that is not ours! Oh, for liberty, fraternity, equality, when there would be nothing to covet, for each would share alike, and all would belong to all! When there could be no class, no privilege, no rich, no poor, no distinction between art and craft. When each would bear his share of common toil, when the artist should do his turn at cleaning chimneys, and the statesman take his spell at carting manure. Ah, then indeed, and not till then, shall we have real living art, decorative or otherwise; Raphaels for the asking, Walter Cranes by the bushel. But should we? Mr. Walter Crane and Mr. Morris seem to think so, but they stop short of proof. Is it not at least open to argument that, under such Utopian conditions of existence, art would be a troublesome superfluity. Taking human nature as it is, if every man had his necessary wants assured him, would he be particular about the shape of his spoon or the pattern of his wall-paper; and if he were, would he in a communistic household be able to gratify his special taste? There are, we fear, a good many things to be thought out before launching such a revolution as would be necessary to make the experiment. In the meanwhile, we are glad to have Mr. Walter Crane to exercise his charming skill for our delight. On those who are blind to the beauty of such designs as he produces, we fear that no improvement in social conditions will have much effect. So far as the history of the world has gone, we are not aware of any great school of art that has developed under communistic auspices. Mr. Walter Crane, however, has the courage of his convictions, and pleads his case fairly and eloquently. No one can read his book without cordially admiring the spirit that animates it, and agreeing with him to a very great extent as to the deep and widespread evils for which he desires to find a remedy.

Where Art Begins. By Hume Nisbet. (Chatto & Windus.) As far as we can judge from this book, Art begins by the eating of vegetables; at all events, it ends with it, as Mr. Nisbet distinctly avers that a man cannot be a true artist in its highest sense unless he be a vegetarian. What makes the matter more difficult is that from the Preface it would appear that, wherever art may begin, it is certainly not at the beginning, for he tells us that he has already written two books, and adds: "In the first book I have attempted to give the Alpha of Art; in the second I have given the Omega, as far as I myself know about Art; and in the present I have sought to give something of what lies between."

"Where Art Begins" is therefore plainly somewhere in the middle—so far as Mr. Hume Nisbet knows about art. And he knows a great deal; and he writes very pleasantly and easily, and at times very strongly and poetically. Nor do certain eccentricities of opinion and quaint terms of expression lessen the pleasure of reading his book. He can tell a story well, he can paint a word-picture brilliantly, and criticise the art of others soundly and kindly; he has many interesting experiences to tell, many a good piece of advice to give. This volume is indeed in all respects the best which he has given us, and we hope that no one will be discouraged from dipping into its entertaining pages by the sight of its ugly cover.

The Principles of Ornament. By James Ward, Head Master of the Macclesfield School of Art. Edited by George Aitchison. (Chapman & Hall.) This is a revised edition of a book founded on lectures delivered by Mr. Ward to his pupils, and represents with tolerable clearness the elementary principles of the subject. It is well arranged and illustrated, and appears under the protection of Mr. Aitchison. In its present shape it may be found a useful little manual.

The Art of Sketching. By G. Fraipont. Translated by Clara Bell. (Cassells.) This is a nice little book, which amateurs and beginners may find useful. The illustrations are pretty, but somewhat too finished for examples of "sketching." They are on too small a scale also, and give the student no guide as to the expressiveness of touch. After all, this is something, notwithstanding what the author says.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MODELS OF THE MAHABODHI TEMPLE.

London: Oct. 23, 1892.

General Cunningham, in his work on the Mahabodhi Temple to which I adverted last week, states in his Preface (p. ix.) that Mr. Beglar, in carrying out the restorations, added four corner pavilions to the main temple, on the authority of a small stone model of the old temple as it stood in mediæval times, which he found among the ruins. General Cunningham tells us that this additional work has been much criticised, and that both he and Mr. Beglar have been roundly abused for it. The General further adds that he has discovered a second model of the Mahabodhi in the Indian Museum at Calcutta found at Mrohaung, the ancient capital of Arakan.

I have no particular desire to plunge into what is really a barren controversy; but I think it right to note the following facts, which go to show that Mr. Beglar was in fact right in his "restoration." Models of the Mahabodhi are common in Burma in many materials, and in all sizes from forty or fifty feet high downwards. It was, indeed, a practice to construct large working models of great buildings as a guide to the architect. A good example of this is to be seen at Mingun near Mandalay, in the case of the huge pagoda there projected by King Bodawphaya about 1781 A.D. and never finished. Both the unfinished remains of this pagoda, probably the largest brick building, even as it is, that exists, and its models are figured in Yule's Embassy to Ava. It was this pagoda that Symes and Cox saw in progress during their respective embassies in the last century.

As to the Mahabodhi models, I had a wooden one of the upper part of the tower for some time in my possession at Mandalay. It had evidently formed part of the late King's property, and was a portion, no doubt, of a complete model about six feet high.

There is one some twenty feet high on the platform of the great Shwezigon Pagoda at Pagan. This is still held in respect, and white-washed periodically. There is another, of modern structure probably, and much debased in form, near the ruined Mahāchēti Pagoda at Pegu. This is also kept whitewashed. There is a third very fine and complete one at Pagan, which is much larger, say forty feet high, and in very good preservation, though old. I may note here that the extreme dryness and almost complete desertion of the site of Pagan has served to maintain its ruins in an unusually complete form.

Now as to dates. The Shwezīgōn Pagoda was originally built by the great king Anawratāzaw in the eleventh century A.D., and restored with much grandeur by another great king, Sinbyūyin, about 1765 A.D. The Mahāchēti Pagoda was a frequented shrine in the days of the great king Dhammachēti, of Pegu, in the fifteenth century A.D. The model at Pagan I think dates back unquestionably to a time previous to the complete desertion, after desolation, of that city in 1280 A.D. In any case the construction of these models was long anterior to Mr. Beglar's operations, and had no reference whatever to the controversy that arose over them.

Now as to the Shwezīgōn model, I do not clearly recollect whether it has four small pavilions at the corners, and in my photographs of the pagoda unfortunately the base of the model is hidden by other structures. But as to the other two models there can be doubt. They have each pavilions at the corners. Indeed, any photograph of the large model at Pagan might almost have been taken from the restored Mahabodhi itself, so like are the two structures; even to the corner pavilions.

Here then we have a large scale model of the Mahabodhi, which is at least 600 years old, showing the corner pavilions. To my mind therefore Mr. Beglar was no doubt right in his action, and his opponents wrong in their criticism.

R. C. TEMPLE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE exhibitions to open next week include: (1) The Institute of Painters in Oil Colours; (2) The Royal Society of British Artists—who have elected as their new members Mr. W. Prescott Davies and Mr. R. Talbot Kelly; and (3) at the Goupil Gallery, a collection of landscapes by Hervier, who painted in the manner of the Barbizon school.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. will publish immediately an edition of Othello, in imperial quarto, illustrated by Mr. Ludovico Marchetti. The illustrations comprise twenty chromolithograph reproductions of water-colour drawings, besides numerous engravings in the text.

THE Brighton Herald is about to publish a series of articles upon the Willett collection of pottery in the Brighton Public Museum.

WE have received the thirteenth Annual Report of the Archaeological Institute of America, which contains the first detailed account of the excavations conducted by the American School in the Peloponnese last winter. The most important of these was on the site of the Heraeum at Argos, where the ground plans of two temples were laid bare. Between the two was found a deep stratum of black earth, full of fragments of pottery, bronzes, and innumerable small objects. All of these are archaic: none are as late as the fifth century B.C., while many point to the remotest antiquity, resembling objects from Mycenae and Tiryns. Sculptured fragments found in the later of the two temples (which is associated with the name of Polyclitus) show an analogy with the sculptures of the Parthenon; and in particular a fine marble head of life size, supposed to represent Hera. The excavations at Sparta were comparatively unfruitful, for it became evident that the old city had been repeatedly razed to the ground and rebuilt. The most interesting discovery was that of a large circular building, which may be identified with one mentioned by Pausanias as having been erected in the second half of the seventh century B.C.

SINCE we wrote so far, Dr. Charles Waldstein, the director of the American School, has issued a preliminary report on the excavation of the Heraeum, illustrated with eight photographic plates (London: Ascher). These illustrations enable us to form some judgment of the head of Hera (whose artistic merit Dr. Waldstein does not seem to have exaggerated), and also of the archaic character of the terracotta figurines, of which no less than twenty-seven are here reproduced. It is much to be hoped that the excavations will be continued during the coming winter: even at present they take rank only next after those of Schliemann and of the Germans at Olympia. It remains to be seen what the French will find at Delphi, where M. Homolle has just arrived to superintend operations.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Henzey drew attention to the similarity of subjects on a gold ring from Mycenae and on a bas-relief in the Louvre with Hittite characters. They both represent a stag-hunt, in which the stag is being hunted from a chariot; and in both cases the stag has peculiar palmated antlers, such as in the species called hamur by the Arabs. But in the Mycenaean ring the attitudes are infinitely more bold and lifelike. From its resemblance to Assyrian art, the Hittite sculpture may be assigned to the ninth century B.C.

THE STAGE.

"THE DUCHESS OF MALFI."

THE Independent Theatre has pleased a few, and, it is to be feared, displeased many, by its production of Mr. Poel's version of "The Duchess of Malfi." But it is the ill-advised whom on one account or another it has now vexed; it is the wisest whom it has at last done something to satisfy. I said "at last." That was ungrateful. For, once at least before, the Independent Theatre—eschewing mere eccentricity and the "experimental" drama (a pretty word, very, for the dull or the unseemly)—once before was it occupied with work of genius and high literary art, or with work at all events by a writer whose genius, here and there, is not to be gainsaid. Did it not—after a dose of that which was loathsome in Scandinavian endeavour, putrid in Scandinavian accomplishment—did it not give us, for change, the lucid realism of M. Zola? "Thérèse Raquin," as a performance, was not all that it was said to be; but, as a piece—well, there was some good reason for going to see it.

And now, after a régime more or less of the experimental and unnecessary, we have again a great man's work. The Independent Theatre has once more approached literature—has realised that to be merely revolutionary, or to be unseemly with dullness, is not, after all, to be sufficing. We have had a taste of Webster—Webster, it is true, with the lime-light turned on at the appropriate moment; Webster, with a skirt-dance; Webster, with a measure of scenic effect, dexterously shocking, or dexterously entertaining, as the case may be, to the modern taste. But still a classic—a giant in conception and writing—a strong tower in comparison with a puny earth-work. Excellently has Mr. Swinburne said of him, "There is no poet morally nobler than Webster." Fearlessly has Mr. Gosse asserted that "The Duchess of Malfi" is "a masterpiece excelled only by 'King Lear.'" And, if I take down my volumes of Lamb's Specimens, I find that, in a little footnote, Elia becomes most eloquent and most descriptive when he descants upon this play. "To move a horror skilfully, to touch a soul to the quick, to lay upon fear as much as it can bear . . . this only a Webster can do." And, again, contrasting inferior writers with this potent if imperfect master, "They know not how a soul is capable of being moved; their terrors want dignity; their affrightments are without decorum." But Webster, with all his qualities, had faults that were of his time, along indeed with faults, or deficiencies, that were his own. Among the latter I would note some absence of clearness in exposition. The relation of character to character, the how and wherefore of the minor events—these things are not invariably made plain: Webster himself, perhaps, could hardly have passed creditably through a searching examination into them. And among the faults, or accidents if you will, of his time were—one need hardly say it, but that it affects his acceptability upon the modern stage—the permitted coarseness, the absence of reticence on matters we are not accustomed to define, and, in mechanical arrangement, the frequent shifting from scene to scene within the compass of a single act—a point in which no English dramatist, as far as my remembrance carries me, went wholly right, until the trick had been learnt from the French masters of construction of our own time.

Mr. Poel, in a version reverent and tasteful by the absence of additions, has dealt with the deficiencies of Webster's epoch with great judgment and tenderness. As far as it is possible to be so, the piece is now what on the play-bill it is asserted to be—"re-arranged for the modern stage." And if the modern stage should turn out, after these initial performances of the new version, not quite willing to have it, that will be not so much on account of the irrepressible horrors—the modern stage has no deep-seated aversion to them—as on account of the limited measure of interest which that stage displays in the achievements of literature, in the noble dealing with almost baffling themes, in the vigour and affluence of literary imagination and style. The similes of Webster—pregnant, and less far-fetched than much of the imagery of his contemporaries—are rather lost upon a public and upon players who account inflation to be poetry and familiarity to be wit. "Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle; she died young" is one among a hundred lines, for instance, in which a writer of stately simplicity—born writer, rather than playwright—requires to be heard by those to whom the suggestive is sufficient:

requires, in a word, to be met half way along his road. Then, again, though there are hints of lightness, there is no touch whatever of actual comedy. And when the tortures so characteristic of the Italian temperament—a temperament never more inventive than when spurred on by the motive of cruelty—when these are tried upon the long suffering Duchess—when crazy folk yell in an adjoining chamber, and a hand that seems to her dead and cold is proffered to her where she expected a live one—an audience without imagination, without historical knowledge, versed only in the commonplace and the cockney, titters, it may be, or becomes indifferent. The reception was "mixed"; but on the whole—and especially on the part of art's real students—it was cordial and hearty. The last act, I would add, is distinctly too long drawn out.

Much of Mr. Poel's best work, however, went into the training of an intelligent company, not without novices, and not particularly accustomed to work together. His rehearsing not only ensured a certain smoothness and expressiveness of general movement, but did much—one must suppose—towards making comparatively inexperienced actors, like Mr. Sidney Barraclough and Mr. Rawson Buckley, not inadequate to the parts assigned to them. Mr. Bassett Roe bore himself with dignity and ease as the Cardinal, through whose influence—for such appears to be Mr. Poel's reading of the situation—the forces of the Church in its bad period, the terrors of the Inquisition, are brought to bear upon the ill-fated Duchess. Mr. Murray Carson, as Daniel de Bosola, filled a great part, upon the whole, satisfactorily. Time might induce in his performance—especially in his method of delivery—greater variety than he compassed on the occasion I saw him; but a fine physique and an alert intelligence and great earnestness go far towards making one excuse defects which are chiefly mechanical or technical. Miss Mary Rorke, with a dignified and graceful presence, and a voice completely at her service, and an unusual sense of the simplicity of pathos, was, as the Duchess, an interesting and satisfactory figure. And Miss Hall Caine, a young sister of the novelist, filled out to completeness, by her intelligence and her sunny and sympathetic style, the small part of Cariola, an attendant as devoted to the Duchess as was Charmian to Cleopatra. Some people thought the "Dance of Death," as Mr. Arthur Dillon had devised it, was too horrible: it had to me the fascination at once of the beautiful and the macabre. Horrors there were in the performance, and in the piece, of necessity; but the Independent Theatre—sometimes too little in touch with the main-stream of English life and thought—may well permit itself to give a piece in which literature is burdened with horrors. It has more than once indulged its supporters with a piece in which horrors are unburdened with literature.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT FRANZ.

It is close on half a century since Schumann reviewed Robert Franz's first set of songs in the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik. The composer-critic detected in the early works of some of his contemporaries signs of coming greatness. He prophesied well concerning Chopin, Berlioz, Brahms; and his prophecies have been fulfilled. And so, too, he foresaw the exceeding great merit of Robert Franz.

Born at Halle as far back as 1815, ten days after the Battle of Waterloo, this composer showed early love for music; but, as in so many cases, his father objected to music as a vocation. However, he overcame his parent's scruples, and devoted himself with enthusiasm to composition. He wrote more than 250 songs, and in them is to be found a happy combination of nature and art. The Volkslied element prevails, but in his pianoforte accompaniments science plays a part. The rich harmonies and the skilful writing, bearing the impress of Bach, one of the composer's idols, support and strengthen the melodies; and, following in the footsteps of Schubert and Schumann, he was always anxious to reveal the full meaning of the words. He finds the right mood; and every little bit of colour, and all the lights and shades, serve to intensify that mood. In a very few years Franz made a name by his songs; but the sudden loss of hearing and a malady of the nerves interfered with his creative work. It was then that he devoted himself to the scores of Bach and Handel.

This is scarcely the moment to discuss at length his reconstruction of the scores of Handel's "Messiah," Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" and "Magnificat," &c.; fiercely has the battle raged anent these works, and bitter have been the attacks on the man whose sole desire was to carry out, to the best of his ability, the intentions of the two great Saxon composers. In his Oeffener Brief an Eduard Hanslick, Robert Franz clearly explained that the scores, as left by those masters, were incomplete, and, in places, were little more than sketches. Certain purists cry out that a composer's text must not be tampered with; these must be left to enjoy the shadow instead of the substance. But other critics are more reasonable: they acknowledge the necessity of reconstruction of some sort, but find fault with the particular methods adopted by Franz. With such, a discussion is not only possible, but also profitable. Robert Franz has, however, achieved a great victory; he has forced musicians to look seriously into the matter. The old "flute and double-bass duet" style of interpreting the old masters is discarded by all serious men; the principle of "Bearbeitung" is recognised, and the actual merit of the Franz accompaniments can be settled at leisure. In religion, philosophy, and art, quarrels have often arisen through the wrong use of words. In the discussion concerning the accompaniments, whether of Mozart or of Franz, it were well to omit the misleading epithet "additional," which lashes into fury the minds of ultra-conservatives. They are certainly additions to the music as left by Bach and Handel, but merely substitutions for certain parts not in the scores, which existed in the minds of the composers.

Only last summer I spent a pleasant morning with Robert Franz. He took down his score of the "St. Matthew Passion," and pointing now to this passage, now to that, tried to show me how the accompaniments which he had provided were scarcely his own, but natural developments from germs supplied by the composer. He complained, too, bitterly of the opposition which he had met with in his own country, and from men whom one would have thought fully capable of understanding the nature of his aims, and willing to sympathise with the reverent spirit in which he worked.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

ON Tuesday evening there were no less than two novelties at the Olympic Theatre; the first was Mozart's "Schauspieldirector," and the second Mr. Granville Bantock's "Caedmar," and it would be scarcely possible to imagine a greater contrast than that offered by these two works. In the first, flowing melody, simple harmonies, and simple structure; in the second, interrupted melody, compound harmonies, and complicated rhythms: the one represented the eighteenth, the other the nineteenth century. The "Schauspieldirector," a pièce d'occasion in one act, was written by Mozart for some court festivities at Schönbrunn in 1786, and in it there were naturally allusions to passing events. The music is bright and clever. This, however, was not actually the piece produced at the Olympic. Some thirty years ago L. Schneider published a new version of the work—additional music, new text; and in this Mozart himself is the hero (?) of the opera, composing the "Zauberflöte" under Schikaneder's direction. Otto Jahn, in his Life of Mozart, disapproves of the version; and certainly, if weighed in very critical balances, it will be found wanting in respect to the master. But, after all, it was originally only a jeu d'esprit; and provided it be well played, and create a laugh, no serious injury is done to Mozart. In the performance, the two rival prime donne, Miss Marra and Miss Elena Leila, made a favourable impression. Mr. Temple, as the manager, was good; but Mr. Tate, as Wolfgang, was not in good voice—anyhow, not in good tune. Mr. Bantock's "Caedmar" is a work in which almost everything seems borrowed from Wagner—plot, method, and music. But the dress of the Bayreuth master does not exactly fit him, and the result is, therefore, unsatisfactory. Of course, Mr. Bantock, who is young, probably thought he could not do better than imitate so great a master of the dramatic art, but he probably forgot that mere imitation of the letter would not render his work successful. In the plot we have a real "apotheosis of adultery," the name unfairly given to "Tristan," but the personages are merely lay figures possessing no real interest, and commanding no real sympathy. As to the music, with few exceptions, it is out and out Wagner. Mr. Bantock displays, however, a certain skill in writing and experience in orchestration; and some day, when he has emerged, he may produce something of sterling value. Madame Duma, as the woman beloved by the knight Caedmar, showed taste and feeling.

At the Saturday Concerts on Saturday, part of the programme was devoted to Liszt, and the selection from his works was a good one. The programme included a very sound, clever, and promising Overture by Mr. Barclay Jones.

The Monday Popular Concerts commenced on Monday evening. Señor Arbos proved an able and conscientious leader. Mlle. Sumowska gave a pleasing, though somewhat fanciful reading of Beethoven's "Pastorale" Sonata. Miss L. Lehmann made her first appearance since her long illness, and was well received.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

JOHN C. NIMMO'S NEW BOOKS.

LONDON: 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, SEPTEMBER, 1892.

In large crown 8vo, gilt top, with the Etchings printed on Japanese paper. Price 6s. per volume.

Also a limited LARGE-PAPER EDITION in demy 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, which will be numbered, and for which orders will be taken for Sets only. Printed on Arnold's unbleached hand-made paper, with the Etchings printed as proofs before letters upon thin Japanese paper, and mounted on the same paper as Text.

THE BORDER EDITION OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.

With Introductory Essays and Notes by ANDREW LANG, in addition to those of the Author, Illustrated by more than Two Hundred and Sixty New and Original Etchings by Eminent Artists.

All the Etchings will be printed on Japanese paper by Mr. F. GOULDING, of London, and the Proofs before Letters in the Large-paper Edition will be mounted on hand-made paper, same as that used for the Text of the work.

The Novels will be issued at the rate of Two Volumes per month, beginning from November 1 next.

Among the Artists and Etchers whose work will appear in the first twelve Novels may be mentioned the following:—

ARTISTS.

Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., R.A.
John Pettie, R.A.
R. W. Macbeth, A.R.A.

J. Macwhirter, A.R.A., R.S.A.
Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A.
Sir Henry Raeburn, R.A., P.R.S.A.

Ad. Lalauze.
Keoley Halswelle, R.S.A., R.W.S.
Walter Pagot.

Gordon Browne.
M. L. Gow.
W. E. Lockhart, R.S.A.

ETCHERS.

R. W. Macbeth, A.R.A.
H. Macbeth-Raeburn.
F. Huth.

Henri Lefort.
D. Y. Cameron.
Ad. Lalauze.

H. C. Manosso.
B. Damman.
H. W. Batley.

F. S. Walker.
O. O. Murray.
P. Teyssandieres.

For further particulars see separate detailed Prospectus, which may be obtained from the Publisher, or from any Bookseller.

NEW WORK BY JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

In 2 vols, small 4to, with Fifty Illustrations, bound in cloth, gilt top, price 36s. net. Also a few Large-paper Copies in royal 8vo, cloth, uncut edges.

THE LIFE OF MICHELANGELO BUONARROTI.

BASED ON STUDIES IN THE ARCHIVES OF THE BUONARROTI FAMILY AT FLORENCE.

With Etched Portrait and Fifty Reproductions of the Works of the Master.

In 2 vols. small 4to, printed on Arnold's hand-made paper, with engraved Portrait of the Author printed on thin Japan paper, and bound in half-German calf, gilt top.

POEMS.

By VIOLET FANE, Author of "Memoirs of Marguerite de Valois, Queen of Navarre," &c.

NOTE.—Three hundred and sixty-five copies of this choice Edition of the Poems of Violet Fane, which of late years have been so much sought after, have been printed and the type distributed. Every copy numbered 1 to 365 inclusive.

In 1 vol. royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, with Ten Steel-plate Engravings, coloured by hand, and Thirty-three Wood Engravings in the Text, price 21s. net.

THE NOBLE SCIENCE:

A FEW GENERAL IDEAS ON FOX-HUNTING.

By F. P. DELMÉ RADCLIFFE.

A NEW EDITION, REVISED, CORRECTED, AND ENLARGED.

By WILLIAM C. A. BLEW, M.A. (Editor of Vyner's "Notitia Venatica").

NOTE.—To this new Edition of Radcliffe's well-known work the Editor has added a large quantity of interesting matter. It also contains, in addition to the thirty-three original engravings, ten steel-plate engravings after Sir Edwin Landseer, W. Barraud, G. Morley, C. Lorraine Smith, E. Corbet, J. Bateman, P. C. Turner, &c.

In 5 vols. large demy 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, price 42s. net.

PLUTARCH'S LIVES.

THE TRANSLATION CALLED DRYDEN'S.

Corrected from the Greek and Revised by A. H. CLOUGH, sometime Fellow and Tutor of Oriel College, Oxford, and late Professor of the English Language and Literature at University College, London.

In 3 vols. demy 8vo, Roxburghe binding, gilt top, price 25s. net.

BURTON'S ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY.

THE ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY: WHAT IT IS,

With all the Kinds, Causes, Symptoms, Prognostics, and Several Cures of it. In Three Partitions. With their several Sections, Members, and Subsections, Philosophically, Medicinally, Historically Opened and Cut up.

By DEMOCRITUS JUNIOR (ROBERT BURTON).

A NEW WORK BY A. B. FROST.

In demy 12mo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

THE BULL CALF, AND OTHER TALES.

By A. B. FROST.

A New Edition, in crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 5s.

RUDDER GRANGE, BY FRANK R. STOCKTON.

With One Hundred Illustrations by A. B. FROST.

London: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, King William Street, Strand.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

OUR EARTH: Night to Twilight. In Eight Cantos. By GEORGE FERGUSON. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 3s

"And as a star, new-born, came forth the dew-clad Earth!"—Canto I., p. 17.

SICILY: PHœNICIAN, GREEK, and ROMAN. By the late EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., &c. (A Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
TIMES.—"It is Prof. Freeman's own work throughout. It is, therefore, unnecessary to commend it."
SATURDAY REVIEW.—"The book is a model of what a short history ought to be."

THE TUSCAN REPUBLICS and GENOA. By BELLA DUFFY. (A Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Maps, Illustrations, and Index. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Just ready.]

ETRUSCAN ROMAN REMAINS in POPULAR TRADITION. By CHARLES GODFREY LELAND, Hon. F.R.L.S., President of the Gypsy-Lore Society, &c. With many Illustrations and copiously decorated with Head and Tail Pieces by the Author, illustrative of Etruscan Art. (Uniform with "Gypsy Sorcery," by the same Author.) Small 4to, cloth, 21s.—Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies, with an Original Drawing by Mr. Leland, numbered and signed, price £1 11s. 6d. [Next week.]

REVELATION and the BIBLE. By R. F. HORTON, M.A., Author of "Inspiration and the Bible," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE SCOTSMAN.—"The book is written with the author's heart, and is diffused with a glow of and pervaded by a sense of reality which make it interesting and attractive.....It is eminently a book for the times."

THE NATIONALISATION of HEALTH. By HAVELOCK ELLIS, Editor of "The Contemporary Science Series." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—The Treatment of Disease—The Present Position of the Hospital—The Hospital of the Future—The Poor Law Infirmary—The Report of the Hospitals Committee (1892)—Typhoid Fever—Blindness and Short-Sight—Maternity and its Perils—The Dentist's Place in Health Nationalisation—The Registration of Disease—The Inspection of Industries—Workers in Lead—The "Laisser Faire" System.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM COWPER. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Principal of Cowper School, Olney, Author of "The Town of Cowper," &c. With 21 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. Also an Edition de Luxe (the number of which is strictly limited), printed on Dutch hand-made paper, and bound in parchment, price 30s. net. [Next week.]

SIXTY YEARS of an AGITATOR'S LIFE: the Autobiography of George Jacob HOLYOAKE. In 2 vols., with Photogravure Frontispiece Portrait to each, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This Work includes many strange experiences and adventures in social and insurgent movements, with descriptions of agitators, the author enumerating sixty personal friends who have either been imprisoned, transported, banished, hanged, or beheaded. Mr. Holyoake supplies, too, new estimates of well-known men; the origins of movements of mark, the tragedies of peace, and deals with various other events too numerous to mention.

A PARTICULAR ACCOUNT of the EUROPEAN MILITARY ADVENTURERS of HINDUSTAN, from 1784 to 1803. Compiled by HERBERT COMPTON, Editor of "A Master Mariner," &c. Map and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. [Next week.]

THE GODS of OLYMPOS; or, Mythology of the Greeks and Romans. Translated and Edited from the Twentieth Edition of A. H. PETISCUS by KATHERINE A. RALEIGH. With Preface by JANE E. HARRISON. 8 Full-Page and numerous smaller Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"We have not often come across a work which can be so cordially recommended to students who, even in these times, take interest in the doings of Jove and Athene or the attributes of Venus or Apollo."

THE FISHGUARD INVASION by the FRENCH in 1797. Some Passages taken from the Diary of the Reverend DANIEL ROWLANDS, sometime Vicar of Llanfngelapenybont. Illustrated. Dedicated, by permission, to the Right Honourable the EARL OF CAWDORE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Next week.]

NAMES and their MEANINGS: a Book for the Curious. By LEOPOLD WAGNER. Second and Revised Edition. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FINN and his COMPANIONS. By STANDISH O'GRADY, Author of "Red Hugh's Captivity," &c. Illustrated by J. B. Yeats. (A Volume of "The Children's Library.") Post 8vo, pinacore cloth binding, floral edges, 2s. 6d.

THE SHIFTING of the FIRE. By FORD H. HUEFFER, Author of "The Brown Owl," "The Feather." (Vol. I. of "The Independent Novel Series.") Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"It is an excellent romance, treated with force and originality, and told in graphic and often fervent language."

A PHANTOM from the EAST. By PIERRE LOTI. Translated by J. E. GORDON. (Vol. II. of "The Independent Novel Series.") Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Next week.]

GENTLEMAN UPCOTT'S DAUGHTER. By TOM COBBLEIGH. (A Volume of "The Pseudonym Library.") 24mo, paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d.
SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.—"One of the loveliest idylls in the language."

THE SINNER'S COMEDY. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS, Author of "Some Emotions and a Moral." Second and Cheaper Edition. 8vo, paper covers, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1070.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS

THIS DAY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

STUDENT and SINGER: the Reminiscences of Charles SANTLEY. With Three Portraits. Demy 8vo, 16s.

ON TUESDAY NEXT, AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

The MEMORIES of DEAN HOLE. With Illustrations from Original Sketches by LEECH and THACKERAY. Demy 8vo, 16s.

READY IN NOVEMBER.

ECHOES of OLD COUNTY LIFE. By J. K. Fowler ("Rusticus"), formerly of the "White Hart" Hotel and Prebendal Farms, Aylesbury. Illustrated. Large imperial 16mo, 10s. 6d.

 Also a limited LARGE-PAPER EDITION of 200 copies only, with additional Illustrations, price 21s. net.

READY IN NOVEMBER.

ENGLAND in EGYPT. By Alfred Milner, late Under-Secretary for Finance in Egypt. With Map. Demy 8vo, 16s.

The BATTLES of FREDERICK the GREAT. Extracted from CARLYLE's Biography, and Edited by Professor CYRIL RANSOME. With numerous fine Illustrations and Maps. Square 8vo, 5s. [Now ready.]

OMARAH'S HISTORY of YAMAN. Edited by H. C. Kay, M.R.A.S. Demy 8vo, 17s. 6d. nett.

"Mr. Kay's book stands clearly in the front rank of Oriental historical scholarship."—Saturday Review.

The MORAL INSTRUCTION of CHILDREN. By Dr. Felix ADLER, President of the New York Ethical Society. A New Volume in the "International Education Series." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best treatment of its enormously important subject in contemporary print."—Echo.

The CHILDREN'S FAVOURITE SERIES. Handsome Books for PRIZES and PRESENTS, prettily bound, well printed, fully illustrated, and cheap. They provide thoroughly healthy and interesting reading for children. Price Two Shillings each volume.

DEEDS of GOLD. 2s.

MY BOOK of FABLES. 2s.

MY STORY-BOOK of ANIMALS. 2s.

RHYMES for YOU and ME. 2s.

"The compiler's choice is seldom at fault."—Spectator. "A treat for the youngsters."—Daily Telegraph.

THE FORUM, for NOVEMBER, price 2s. 6d., now ready. Annual Subscription, 30s.

MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA. By the Right Hon. J. CHAMBERLAIN, M.P.

ENGLISH VIEWS OF THE McKINLEY TARIFF. By Sir THOMAS H.

FARRER.

HAS ENGLAND PROFITED BY FREE TRADE? By LORD MASHAM.

ENDOWED THEATRES AND THE AMERICAN STAGE. By Madame MODJESKA.

WHAT WE REALLY KNOW ABOUT MARS. By Prof. HOLDEN, of the Lick Observatory.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Publisher to the India Office.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
TENNYSON'S NEW VOLUME, by LIONEL JOHNSON . . .	403
LOUIS AUGUSTUS LOFTUS'S REMINISCENCES, by ARTHUR ARNOLD . . .	405
DE BOURGADE'S PARAGUAY, by Prof. KEANE . . .	406
TWO EDUCATIONAL SYSTEMS, by FOSTER WATSON . . .	407
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY . . .	408
CURRENT LITERATURE . . .	409
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	410
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .	411
MAOZINES AND REVIEWS . . .	411
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE LAST EVENING," by L. BINYON . . .	411
MR. W. H. GIBBINGS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS . . .	411
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .	411
CORRESPONDENCE—
A Prayer-Book of Edward VI. for Household Use , by W. C. Bishop, Jun.; " Concords ," by Dr. E. B. Tylor; The Story of Namuki , by Prof. Max Müller and A. Macbain . . .	412
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	413
CRUISES ON HEBRONAS, by ROBINSON ELLIS . . .	413
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Numerical Forms in the Agram Etruscan Text , by R. Brown, Jun. . .	414
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .	415
SYMONDS'S LIFE OF MICHELANGELO, by MAURICE HEWLETT . . .	415
CORRESPONDENCE—
Cylinders in Egypt , by W. M. Flinders Petrie; The Osiris as a Unit of Value , by F. L. Griffith . . .	417
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	418

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, modern, translations. Miss ASH-WORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Office, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES.
—Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—Miss C. HYDE WARREN, 310, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, 3 OXFORD (16, King Edward Street).—MS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and general MS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bodleian. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SORO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE 235 just out.—SPANISH
BOOKS and BOOKS relative to SPAIN. 1,123 Nos. (Bibliography—Literature—History—Genealogy—Spanish Protestants—Fine Arts—Music—Discoveries and Possessions in America and the Philippine Islands, &c.).—MARTINUS NIHOFF, The Hague (Holland).

CATALOGUE (No. 242) of BOOKS, including Oriental, Theological, and General Literature, important Scientific Works, &c. Free on application.

A CATALOGUE of BOOKS Printed at, or relating to the University, Town, or County of Cambridge. Part B. 1791-1890. Pp. 195-251. Post free for 2s. 6d.
MACMILLAN & BOWES, Cambridge.

WILLIAM A. PROUD, Dealer in Source Books and Curios, 13, Suez Street, Warrington.
Angling, Sporting, Chess, &c. Works a speciality.
Catalogue free.

AUTOGRAPHS.

SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED AUTO-
GRAPH CATALOGUE or Collector's Guide to the present value of Autographs, 80 pages, crown 4to, on antique paper, containing over 2,000 letters, including the finest collection of Mendelssohn's Original Music Manuscripts and Letters ever offered for Sale—the earliest known Dickens Manuscript—Letters, &c., by Thackeray, George Eliot, Tennyson, Browning, Bach, Beethoven, Haydn, Cromwell, Queen Elizabeth, Charles I., James I., Nelson, &c., illustrated with a number of interesting Facsimiles.
Post-free, 1s. 2d.
NOEL CONWAY & Co., 50B, New-street, Birmingham.

A GENTLEMAN, 24, desires RE-
ENGAGEMENT for SECRETARIAL WORK. Highest References. Shorthand, and Typewriter with own Machine. Salary about £120.—Address, X.X., care of Everett & Son, 17, Royal Exchange, E.C.

Just issued, price 3s., post free.

LIFE of JESUS. A New Translation.
By RENAN.
London: WILLIAM GROVE, 6, Wine Office Court, Fleet Street.

Fourth Edition, pp. 309, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By LIONEL BEALL, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
ARRISON & SONS, 50, Pall Mall.

Messrs. GEORGE PHILIP & SON beg to announce that they will publish on November 7th an important Work of Travel and Adventure in "The Land of the Golden Plume," entitled BRITISH NEW GUINEA.

By J. P. THOMSON, Hon. Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia, with Contributions by Baron Sir FERDINAND von MUELLER, Sir WILLIAM MACGREGOR, K.C.M.G., and others. With over 50 Full-Page and other Illustrations, and a Coloured Map. In medium 8vo, cloth, 21s.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

An Account of the Government Mission to the "Black Nile" under Sir Claude Maxwell Macdonald, K.C.M.G., entitled

UP THE NIGER. By Captain A. F. Mockler-Ferryman, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S. With numerous Original Illustrations and a Map. In demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

The object of the Mission was to report to the British Government upon the condition and administration of the Niger region.

"A book full of curious and valuable information, and not wanting in gleams of fun. Highly favourable, on the whole, to the methods and regime of the Chartered Company."—National Observer.

"Worth reading just now."—Saturday Review.

"The latest addition to the splendid Series devoted to the World's Great Explorers."

SCOTSMAN.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. By Clements R. Markham, C.B.

With 25 Illustrations and numerous Coloured Maps. In crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

"Tells with enthusiasm, discrimination, and not too much elaboration, the fascinating story of the life, adventures, and discoveries of Columbus, as derived from the most trustworthy sources."—Scotsman.

"A Land of Women and Children."

PARAGUAY: the Land and the People, Natural Wealth, and Commercial Capabilities. By Dr. E. DE BOURGADE LA DARDY. Edited by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. With numerous Full-Page Illustrations and a large Coloured Map. In crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"A valuable and authentic monograph on a country of which no very recent account has been published in English."—Times.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, Fleet Street, London.

CITY OF YORK.

WANTED, for the Public Library, an ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN. Salary £70 per annum.—Applications, stating age of Candidates and previous experience of Library Work, and enclosing three recent testimonials, to be forwarded to the undersigned not later than MONDAY, the 7th day of November, 1892. Canvassing Members of the Corporation is prohibited.

GEORGE MCGURK, Town Clerk.

Guildhall, York, 24th October, 1892.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tingo, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

Twenty-ninth Edition. Post free.

BLUSHING: Its Cause, Self-Treatment, and a Rapid, Permanent, and Inexpensive Cure. Varnhagen's System Explained by a Specialist.
A. B. SMITH, 131, High Park Street, Liverpool.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT on TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22nd, a TURNER ANNUITANT. Applicants for the Turner Annuity, which is of the value of £50, must be Artists of repute, in need of aid through the unavoidable failure of professional employment or other causes. Forms of application can be obtained by letter, addressed to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Arts, Burlington House. They must be filled in and returned on or before Saturday, November 19.

By order,

FRED. A. EATON, Secretary.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

BURNETT LITERARY TRUST.

The Rev. WILLIAM L. DAVIDSON, LL.D., Minister of the Parish of Borthwick, Aberdeenshire, the Lecturer recently appointed by the Burnett Trustees, will deliver his FIRST COURSE, consisting of SIX LECTURES, in connection with the University of Aberdeen, and in the HALL of MARISCHAL COLLEGE there, on the afternoons of the 7th, 9th, 12th, 14th, 16th, and 19th days of NOVEMBER next.

SUBJECT OF THE LECTURES—

"THEISM, as GROUNDED IN HUMAN NATURE, HISTORICALLY and CRITICALLY HANDLED."

ALEX. WENSTER, Secretary of the Burnett Trustees.

Aberdeen, October, 1892.

MUDIE'S
SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LTD.

NEW BOOKS OF POETRY.

ESTHER, LOVE LYRICS, and NATALIA'S RESURRECTION. By WILFRID SCAWEN BLUNT. Elzevir 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE CLASSIC BIRTHDAY BOOK. By F. W. AVELING, M.A., B.Sc.
 "The most sumptuous birthday book we remember to have seen. It is also one of the best, owing to the variety of quotations from the ancient classics and modern languages to the number of four for each day in the year."—Literary World.
 "Choice and luxurious quotation is the work of the 'Classic Birthday Book.' The extracts show discrimination and taste."—Saturday Review.

TINTINNABULA. New Poems. By CHARLES NEWTON-ROBINSON. Elzevir 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Robinson's verse, in particular, is good enough to win him a very high place among our minor poets. Over and above the excellence of technique, which is now becoming almost too common, he possesses the much rarer gifts of simplicity and directness."—Guardian.
 "Some of the author's lyrics show considerable promise."—Graphic.

EARLY POEMS. By Sir REGINALD JOHN CUST. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GRANITE DUST: Fifty Poems. By RONALD CAMPBELL MACFIE. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Not without considerable lyrical promise."—Times.

"Inspired by actual passion, and shows a genuine vocation for the poetic art....The command of verse is remarkable."—Daily News.

CARMELA; or, the Plague of Naples. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE PROFESSOR and OTHER POEMS. By the AUTHOR of "MOODS," &c. Small crown 8vo, 5s.

"The poems show a large measure of insight and a genuine sympathy with many aspects of thought and feeling."—Literary World.

ESSAYS IN VERSE. By MAY SINCLAIR. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

AN ODE to the SUN, and OTHER POEMS. By R. WARWICK BOND, Author of "The Immortals," and other Poems. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FROM HEART TO HEART. By the AUTHOR of "FRATERNITY." Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SOMNIA MEDICI. Three Series. By JOHN A. GOODCHILD. Small crown 8vo, Second Edition, 3s. 6d. each.

TENNYSON.—"I judge these poems to be the work of one who is far more than a follower of my own."

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

NOVEMBER.

AN APOLOGETIC IRENICON. By Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S.
 OUR MOLTEN GLOBE. By ALFRED RUSSELL WALLACE.
 MR. MORLEY'S TASK IN IRELAND. By WILLIAM O'BRIEN, M.P.
 A FUTURE SCHOOL OF ENGLISH ART. By the DUKE of MARI-BOROUGH.

BURMESE TRAITS. By HENRY CHARLES MOORE.
 FRUIT-GROWING IN CALIFORNIA. By WILLIAM ROBERTS.
 THE WOMEN'S ART EXHIBITION IN PARIS. By A. FRENCH-WOMAN.

OUR OLDEST SCHOOL. By ARTHUR F. LEACH.
 THE INSURRECTION OF WOMEN. By J. B. BURY.
 THE LIFE OF RENAN. By Mrs. EMILY CRAWFORD.
 A CHAT about RENAN. By ALBERT D. VANDAM.
 TABLE TALK OF RENAN. By HUGUES LE ROUX.
 BRITISH OFFICIALS and FRENCH ACCUSATIONS. By Captain LUGARD.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

Now Ready.—NOVEMBER, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 42.

TENNYSON. I. By EDMUND GOSSE.
 II. By HERBERT PAUL, M.P.
 THE NEW DEPARTURE in IRELAND: SUCCESS or FAILURE?
 I. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.
 II. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.

THE PETRIE PAPYRI. By Professor MAHAFFY.
 SIR RICHARD BURTON: an Explanation and a Defence. By LADY BURTON.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION in the UNITED STATES. By ALBERT BUSENELL HART (Professor of History, Harvard University, U.S.A.).

THE STUDY OF DREAMS. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
 ALIEN IMMIGRATION. By Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P.
 ARE OUR OARSMEN DEGENERATE? By R. C. LEHMANN.

LITERATURE } By H. D. TRAILL.
 AND
 THE DRAMA. } By L. F. AUSTIN.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

CASEY'S EUCLID.

Now Ready, Sixth Edition, Revised, price 3s. 6d.

A SEQUEL to the FIRST SIX BOOKS of EUCLID. By JOHN CASEY, LL.D., F.R.S. Edited by PATRICK A. E. DOWLING, B.A., R.U.I.

Dublin: HODGES, FIGGINS & Co., Ltd.
 London: LONGMANS & Co.

Just issued, price 4d.; by post, 5d.

MISS NADEN'S "WORLD-SCHEME": an Essay. By G. M. McCRUE, Editor of
 "Further Reliques of Constance Naden."

London: WATTS & Co., 171, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

Just ready.

THOMAS NASH'S LIFE OF JACK WILTON.

With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash. By EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

Previously published.

JOURNAL of a VOYAGE to LISBON. By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards.
 With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition:
 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.]. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net,
 and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

Other volumes in preparation.

Ready November 1st.

SOME NOTES on BOOKS and PRINTING:
 a Guide for Authors and Others. By C. T. JACOBI, Manager of the Chiswick Press, and Examiner in Typography to the City and Guilds of London Institute. With many typographical specimens and samples of papers.
 Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

London: C. WHITTINGHAM & Co., 20, Took's Court, E.C.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER.

LABOUR and the HOURS of LABOUR. By WILLIAM MATHER, M.P.
 ERNEST RENAN. By GABRIEL MONOD.

IMPRESSIONS OF PROVENCE. By MARK DORRINGTON.

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE: a Dialogue. By VERNON LEE.

THE STORY of a COLONY for EPILEPTICS. By EDITH SELLERS.

DEMOCRACY and OUR OLD UNIVERSITIES. By JOSEPH KING.

LOOTING the ORCHARD. By PAUL ROBINSON.

GOETHE as a MINISTER of STATE. By HENRY W. NEVINSON.

THE PRESENT POSITION of the HIGH CHURCH PARTY. By GILBERT CHURCH.

THE SAVE QUIET DON of HOME RULE. By W. T. SIBALD.

London: CHISWICK PRESS, Limited, 15, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In handsome 8vo, price 6s.

COINS AND MEDALS.

Their Place in History and Art.

By the Authors of the "British Museum Official Catalogues."

Edited by STANLEY LANE-POOL.

SECOND EDITION, WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

In handsome crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"THE LONE-STAR OF LIBERIA."

Being the Outcome of Reflections on our Own People.

By FREDERICK ALEXANDER DURHAM.

An African of Lincoln's Inn (Student-at-Law).

With an Introduction by MADAME LA COMTESSE G. HUGO.

CHEAPER EDITION.

Tastefully printed in 8vo, and handsomely bound in cloth, price 12s. 6d.

THE ANCIENT
LAWS OF WALES.

Viewed especially in regard to the Light they throw upon the Origin of some English Institutions.

By the late HUBERT LLEWIS, B.A., of the Middle Temple, Author of "Principles of Conveyancing," &c. Edited, with a Preface, by J. E.
 LLOYD, Lecturer in History and Welsh at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth.

"The work before us displays everywhere the unmistakable marks of profound scholarship and of careful investigation. A good and copious index has been added, and altogether this volume may be pronounced to be a treasury of information on the subject of old Welsh institutions. It is, moreover, clearly written, and throughout invested with great interest, and many of the very curious family customs of ancient Wales are here set forth in a manner which is decidedly attractive."—Public Opinion.

A NEW VOLUME OF ENTERTAINING ESSAYS.

In One Volume, tastefully printed and bound, price 3s. 6d.

FROM PUNCH
TO PADAN ARAM.

Thoughts by a Rambling Philosopher.
 By ALFRED T. STORY.

"A very charming volume of Essays—quaint, fresh, and fanciful."—British Weekly.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d., post free.

BENEATH HELVELLYN'S
SHADE.

Notes and Sketches in the Valley of Wythburn.

By SAMUEL BARBER.

"Abounds in well-written description of scenery, and conveys a deal of information of the most varied kind."
Glasgow Herald.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

LAKE COUNTRY
ROMANCES.

By HERBERT V. MILLS.

With Eight Illustrations of Local and Historic Scenes by Cuthbert Rigby.

"These three stories are curiously vivid and natural; the style is delightful, and the illustrations are good."
Literary World.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jacks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE PRIVATE SECRETARY. Messrs. Penley, W. Wyse, Sam Sothorn, J. Nelson, C. Thornbury, Ernest Percy, W. Heriot, and Charles Hawtrey; Misses Ethel Matthews, V. Armbruster, G. Harrison, Ewell, A. Yorke, C. Elton, &c. At 8.15, THE HOME COMING.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Courtis, R. Nainby, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Elissen, Irene Rickards, and Caroline Hill. 8.30, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Little, Nainby, and Miss S. Grey.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, SECOND EDITION OF CINDERELLA UP TOO LATE. Mesdames Maggie Duggan, K. Seymour, A. Astor, and Letty Lind; Mr. C. Danby, Mr. F. Storey, and Mr. Fred Leslie. At 7.15, THE SNOWSTORM.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mrs. Langtry's Season.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, AGATHA TYLDEN, MERCHANT AND SHIPWRECKER. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, W. T. Lovell, F. A. Everill, Edmund Maurice, Rudge Harding, W. Cheesman; Miss Marie Linden and Mrs. Langtry.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, IN TOWN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Eric Lewis, H. Grattan, E. Bantock; Misses Phyllis Broughton, Sylvia Grey, and Florence St. John, supported by a powerful company. At 8, THE WHITE LADY.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15 p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, CIGARETTE. At 7.50, CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING. Messrs. Collette, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelle, Fair, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Geraldine Ullmar, Amadi, Marion Eric, May Lawrie, M. Collette, H. Vicary, C. Loschy, J. Bradford, and Albu.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, NIOBE (ALL SMILES). Messrs. Harry Paulton, Forbes Dawson, Herbert Ross, George Hawtrey, A. C. Mackenzie; Misses Beatrice Lamb, Helen Ferrers, G. Esmond, I. Goldsmith, C. Zerbini, Eleanor May, Venie Bennett. At 8, NO CREDIT. Misses Esmond, Goldsmith; Mr. Hawtrey, &c.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, A LUCKY DOG. Messrs. G. W. Anson, John Tressah, Nicol Rutland, Charles Fawcett, Douglas, Gaylie, and Fred Thorne; Mrs. Cannings, Miss Helen Forsyth, Miss E. Faulkner, and Miss Marie Dagmar. At 8, FORTHY LEAVES. Messrs. Curzon, Pentland, Fawcett; Mesdames Faulkner, Cronyn.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton. At 7.45, THE WOODEN SPOON. Mesdames Violet Robinson, Millie Vere; Messrs. W. Philp and Leonard Russell.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Terms of annual subscription, 13s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 1d.
Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

LEADING WOMEN of the RESTORATION.

By GRACE JOHNSTONE. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s. with Portraits. The National Observer says: "The book is written carefully and after much research. The memoirs contain many valuable anecdotes. The writing is very well."
Public Opinion says: "Essentially a book of historic value."
The Guardian says: "Written with considerable sympathy and feeling. The portraits are excellent."

WHERE HONOUR SITS. By W. B. Home-GALL. Cloth extra, 6s.

The Academy says: "The war passages in his novel are told with spirit, and as a whole 'Where Honour Sits' may certainly be pronounced readable."

THE NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN SIN OR FOLLY." SYRINGA. By Arthur Nestorien. Cloth extra, 6s. [Just out.]

TRUE TO THE PRINCE: a Tale of the Sixteenth Century. By GERTIE BELL. Cloth extra, 6s. The Saturday Review says: "She can relate well and clearly, and carries her readers along easily and pleasantly."

SECOND EDITION.

THE "JOLLY ROGER": a Tale of Sea Heroes and Pirates. By HUME NISBET, Author of "Bail Up," "A Colonial Trap," &c. In handsome pictorial binding, with Frontispiece and Vignette. Title-Page by the Author. 3s. 6d. The Saturday Review says: "Scurry and the sea are deftly combined. Since Captain Margat's impressive story of Vanderdecken and the far Anne these elements have never been handled as in Mr. Nisbet's brilliant romance of Elizabethan times. In this handling of the supernatural the author's power is most convincingly proclaimed."

JUST READY, SIXTH EDITION, NEW AND REVISED, WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

By PERCY RUSSELL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE, WHO HAS READ AND APPROVED THE VOLUME.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s.

The Spectator says: "The aspirant to literature may certainly read Mr. Russell's book with profit."
Miss M. E. Bradburn writes: "Your counsel, both to the journalist and imaginative writer, is full of wisdom."

AUTHORS having MSS. (Fiction, Travel, Poetry, &c.) suitable for Publication in Volume Form are INVITED to FORWARD them for consideration. MSS. read with promptitude, and, if approved, will be published in the coming season. New Catalogue of Books post free.

Address—DIGBY, LONG & CO., Publishers, 18, Boulevard Street, Fleet Street, London.

Thick 8vo, pp. 318, price 7s. 6d.

FROM THE CAVES AND JUNGLES OF HINDOSTAN.

By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

A translation of Mme. Blavatsky's famous letters from India to the Russian Messenger of Moscow, in 1879; full of strange secrets of Indian life, and gorgeous pictures of Oriental nature.

"It is not necessary to be a Theosophist to admire Madame Blavatsky's letters from India."—Times.

"Brilliant passages."—Glasgow Evening News.

"The book deserves high praise. It shows a glowing imagination and a sprightly fancy, as well as much sympathy with nature, and her descriptions of scenery are often very beautiful."—Manchester Guardian.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY,
7, DUKE STREET, ADELPHI, LONDON, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other SERMONS.
London: ALEXANDER & SWEETHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

JAMES CLARKE & CO.'S

LIST OF NEW AND FORTH-COMING BOOKS.

A MOST CHARMING GIFT-BOOK.

THE ROSEBUD ANNUAL, 1893.

Containing 300 charming Illustrations by Wain, Mason, Elwes, Stoddart, Shepherd, and other favourite Artists. Music by T. CRAMPTON and others. Handsomely bound in strong cloth ... 4 0

ROSEBUD SONGS. Illustrated. A

Collection of Songs with simple Music for Children's Voices. By T. CRAMPTON and others. 4to paper ... 1 0

ROSEBUD RHYMES. Illustrated.

A Selection of Nursery and other Rhymes for Children. Specially Illustrated by Rosebud Artists. 4to paper ... 1 0

IN THE PRESS.

A NEW NOVEL BY AMELIA E. BARR.

A ROSE of a HUNDRED LEAVES.

Beautifully Illustrated. By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. Cloth ... 6 0

GLORIA PATRI; or, Our Talks about the Trinity. By JAMES M. WHITON, Ph.D. of New York, Author of "New Points to Old Texts," "Beyond the Shadow," &c. Cloth ... 3 6

GLADYS' VOW. By Mrs. Isabel

KEANEY, Author of "Our Daughters," &c. Cloth ... 3 6

QUEER STORIES from RUSSIA.

By CAPEL CHERNILO. Cloth ... 3 6

THE BISHOP and the CATERPILLAR and other Pieces. By MARY E. MANNERS. Suitable for Recitation ... 1 0

IN the FAR COUNTRY. Illustrated.

A Tale for Boys. By ALBERT E. HOOPER. Illustrations by Arnold A. Mason. Cloth ... 3 6

LONDON:

JAMES CLARKE & Co., 13 & 14 FLEET-ST., E.C.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAFYAIR, W.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—

"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—to change the figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. This information costs me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

FICTION.

Messrs. Methuen beg to announce that they have to-day published Mr. NORRIS'S New Novel, "HIS GRACE," which can be obtained at all Libraries.

NORRIS.—HIS GRACE. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Mlle. de Mersac," "Marcia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PARKER.—PIERRE and his PEOPLE. By GILBERT PARKER. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

BLISS.—A MODERN ROMANCE. By LAURENCE BLISS. Crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

BARING-GOULD.—IN the ROAR of the SEA. By S. BARING-GOULD. Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CLARK RUSSELL.—MY DANISH SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With 6 Illustrations by W. H. Overend. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Nearly ready.]

MABEL ROBINSON.—HOVENDEN V.C. By F. MABEL ROBINSON. Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

RUDYARD KIPLING.—BARRACK-ROOM BALLADS; and other Verses. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Extra post 8vo, pp. 208, laid paper, rough edges, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

A special Presentation Edition, bound in parchment, with extra gilt ornament, 7s. 6d. The First Edition was sold on publication, and two further large Editions have been exhausted. The Fourth Edition is now ready.

COLLINGWOOD.—JOHN RUSKIN: His Life and Work. By W. G. COLLINGWOOD, M.A. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s. [December.]

Also 300 copies on hand-made paper, with the illustrations on India paper, £5 5s. net. Also 80 copies on Japanese paper, £5 5s. net.

All the Japanese copies are sold, and the greater part of the large-paper edition is also bespoke. Orders will be booked as they are received.

BARING-GOULD.—THE TRAGEDY of the CAESARS: The Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines. With numerous illustrations from Busts, Gems, Cameos, &c. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mebalah," &c. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 30s.

This book is the only one in English which deals with the personal history of the Caesars, a subject which, for picturesque detail and sombre interest, is not rivalled by any work of fiction. The volumes are copiously illustrated.

BARING-GOULD.—SURVIVALS and SUPERSTITIONS. With illustrations. By S. BARING-GOULD. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A book on such subjects as Foundations, Gables, Holes, Gallows, Raising the Hat, Old Ballads, &c.

PERRENS.—THE HISTORY of FLORENCE from the TIME of the MEDICIS to the FALL of the REPUBLIC. By F. T. PERRENS. Translated by HANNAH LYNCH. In 3 vols. Vol. I. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

This is a translation from the French of the best history of Florence in existence. This volume covers a period of profound interest—political and literary—and is written with great vivacity.

"Q."—GREEN BAYS: A Book of Verses. By "Q," Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c. Peap 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Dutch Paper. [December.]

WELLS.—OXFORD and OXFORD LIFE. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY. Edited by J. WELLS, M.A., Fellow of Wadham College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

An account of life at Oxford—intellectual, social, and religious—a careful estimate of necessary expenses, a review of recent changes, a statement of the present position of the University, and chapters on Women's Education, aids to study, and University Extension.

DRIVER.—SERMONS on SUBJECTS CONNECTED with the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. H. DRIVER, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

An important volume of sermons on Old Testament Criticism preached before the University by the Author of "An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament."

KAUFMANN.—CHARLES KINGSLEY. By M. KAUFMANN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s. A Life of Kingsley chiefly as Christian Socialist.

LOCK.—THE LIFE of JOHN KEBLE. By WALTER LOCK, M.A. With Portrait from a painting by Geo. Richmond, R.A. Crown 8vo, 5s.

C. JAMES.—CURIOSITIES of CHRISTIAN HISTORY prior to the REFORMATION. By CROAKE JAMES. Crown 8vo, pp. 522, 7s. 6d.

"The volume of 'Curiosities of Christian History' which Mr. Croake James has compiled contains a great deal of quaint and curious matter, collected, as the author says in his preface, 'from many histories, annals, chronicles, and biographies,' and affording some particulars of the interesting persons, episodes, and events from the Christian's point of view during the first fourteen centuries." The author has certainly done a good work in thus bringing together, for the benefit of the general reader, much matter of interest not readily accessible to him. Wherever we dip into his pages we find something worth dipping into, and though by no means a work of profound learning or of elaborate research, it certainly well serves its purpose as a popular résumé of much that is well worth gathering together."—John Bull.

BOWDEN.—THE IMITATION of BUDDHA: Being Quotations from Buddhist Literature for each Day in the Year. Compiled by E. M. BOWDEN. With Preface by Sir EDWIN ARNOLD. Second Edition. 16mo, 12s. 6d.

SELLS.—THE MECHANICS of DAILY LIFE. By V. P. SELLS, M.A. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

KIMMINS.—THE CHEMISTRY of LIFE and HEALTH. By C. W. KIMMINS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

The above are New Volumes of the "University Extension Series."

COX.—LAND NATIONALISATION. By HAROLD COX, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HADFIELD and GIBBINS.—A SHORTER WORKING DAY. By R. A. HADFIELD and H. DE B. GIBBINS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

The above are New Volumes of "Social Questions of To-day Series."

CHEAPER EDITION.

BARING-GOULD.—OLD COUNTRY LIFE. By S. BARING-GOULD. Fourth Edition. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

RECENT WORKS ON ART.

MORELLI'S ITALIAN PAINTERS.

Critical Studies of their Works.

Translated from the German by

CONSTANCE JOCELYN FFOULKES.

With an Introductory Notice by Sir HENRY LAYARD, G.C.B.

THE BORGHESI AND DORIA PAMFILI GALLERIES IN ROME.

With Illustrations. 8vo, 15s.

"It will be impossible in the limits of a single article to follow Signor Morelli in his minute survey of the Doria-Pamfili Galleries. His criticisms are so instructive that no intelligent amateur should visit these galleries without a copy of this volume under his arm."—Edinburgh Review.

HANDBOOK OF GREEK ARCHÆOLOGY.

Sculpture, Vases, Bronzes, Gems, Terra-Cottas, Architecture, Mural Paintings, &c.

By A. S. MURRAY,

Keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities, British Museum.

With 21 Engraved Plates and 130 Woodcuts.

Crown 8vo, 18s.

"Admirable in its method and fascinating in its materials, this Handbook is eminently worthy of its learned author and of the great institution to which he belongs."—Times.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

A HISTORY OF GREEK SCULPTURE.

Revised Edition.

With 140 Illustrations. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s.

"In grasp and mastery of the subject, and clearness and attractiveness of style, the book seems to us an excellent example of what such a book should be."—Guardian.

ARCHITECTURE: a Profession or an Art.

Thirteen Short Essays on the Qualifications and Training of Architects.

Edited by R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., and T. G. JACKSON, A.R.A.

8vo, 9s.

NEW CHAPTERS IN GREEK HISTORY.

Historical Results of Recent Excavations in Greece and Asia Minor.

By PERCY GARDNER, M.A.,

Professor of Archaeology in the University of Oxford.

With Illustrations. 8vo, 16s.

"No common book. It may be accepted as a supplement to English books on Greek Archaeology, and it will often serve as a corrective of many statements in them."—Archæologist.

FERGUSON'S MODERN STYLES OF ARCHITECTURE.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

With a Special Account of the Recent Progress of Architecture in America.

By ROBERT KERR,

Professor of Architecture in King's College, London.

With 330 Illustrations. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 31s. 6d.

BRUGSCH'S EGYPT UNDER THE PHARAOHS.

A History derived entirely from the Monuments.

A New Edition, Condensed and thoroughly Revised.

By MARY BRODRICK.

With Maps, Plans, and Illustrations. 8vo, 18s.

"It is undoubtedly the most important contribution yet made towards a scholarly and trustworthy history of Egypt."—Academy.

SIR HENRY LAYARD'S EDITION OF KUGLER'S HANDBOOK OF ITALIAN PAINTING.

With 200 Illustrations. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 30s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

NOTICE—

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For NOVEMBER, 1892,

Contains, among other articles of interest:—

God's Fool. By Maarten Maartens. Chaps. XLV.-XLVII.
—Washington Irving—Oliver Cromwell as a Soldier. By W. O'Connor Morris.—Pizzica, Pizzica—Creatures of Transition.
—"The Gates of the Reich." By C. J. K. F.—Among the Aleuts.
—Mrs. Bligh. By Rhoda Broughton. Chaps. IX.-XII., &c.

NEW WORKS JUST PUBLISHED.

By Madame VON KOBELL.

CONVERSATIONS OF DR. DOLLINGER.

Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELL, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE GOULD.

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

By Lieut. BADEN-POWELL.

IN SAVAGE ISLES AND SETTLED LANDS.

A Record of Personal Experiences in Europe, Egypt, Ceylon, India, Australia, New Zealand, Java, &c., in 1888-91.

By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and Illustrations, 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

By W. FRASER RAE.

EGYPT TO-DAY.

The First to the Third Khedive.

By W. FRASER RAE.

1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

"Mr. Fraser Rae's 'Egypt To-Day' is a profoundly interesting book, by a practised literary hand, about a country which is now, as it has been for long past, one of the most interesting in the world. It is much more than this, it is an admirable treatise on one of the most vital subjects in our foreign policy. It is a satisfaction that a book so sane, so clear and convincing, should appear on one of the burning questions of the day, by a writer who has studied the whole subject for himself, and who has come to hold very strong convictions with regard to it. Mr. Rae's book comes at a very timely moment, and it is to be hoped that it may influence widely the minds of Englishmen on the vital question of Egypt."—Observer.

By W. H. MALLOCK.

IN AN ENCHANTED ISLAND:

A Visit to Cyprus in 1889.

By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c.

A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY at the LIBRARIES

By Miss BROUGHTON.

MRS. BLIGH.

By RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy."

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

GOD'S FOOL.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS,

Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

By Miss CAREY.

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-DAUGHTERS.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,

Author of "Nellie's Memories."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the AUTHOR of "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA.

By Mrs. ALICK MACLEOD.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

Notice.—The Fourth Edition of AUNT ANNE, by Mrs. Clifford, may now be obtained, in 2 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S Announcements.

KING HENRY VIII.

With a Series of Magnificent Photogravures from Original Drawings by Sir JAMES LINTON, P.R.I. The Text luxuriously printed in red and black on hand-made paper. With Introduction by Prof. DOWDEN.

The Edition of King Henry VIII. will be strictly limited to 250 numbered copies. Price on application. [READY SHORTLY.]

PLAYTHINGS and PARODIES.

Stories and Sketches by BARRY PAIN, Author of "In a Canadian Canoe." Cloth, 5s.

[Now ready.]

FYFFE'S HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE.

Illustrated. Complete in Three Vols., 7s. 6d. each. [Ready shortly.]

DORÉ'S DANTE'S INFERNO.

Illustrated by GUSTAVE DORÉ, with Introduction by A. J. BUTLER, late Fellow Trinity College, Cambridge. Cloth, gilt top, or, buckram, gilt top, 7s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]

ENGLISH WRITERS.

An attempt towards a History of English Literature. By HENRY MORLEY, LL.D., late Professor of English Literature, University College, London. In Vols., 5s. each. Vol. IX., "Spenser and His Time."

[Ready shortly.]

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN.

By the Rev. A. SMYTHE-PALMER, D.D. Antique paper, cloth, 3s. 6d.

[Now ready.]

THE SUCCESSFUL LIFE.

A Book for Young Men commencing business. Containing Counsel, Instruction, Comfort By an Elder Brother. Antique paper, cloth, 3s. 6d.

[Ready shortly.]

EUROPEAN PICTURES of the YEAR.

Containing beautiful Reproductions of upwards of One Hundred of the best Continental Pictures of 1892.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

Second Edition just ready at all Libraries.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY IN THE MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892.

From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with two Sisters of Mercy, on Camels, from the Sudan.

By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A.,

Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan."

Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley.

1 vol., demy 8vo, 500 pp., cloth extra, 21s.

"A book of very unusual and manifold interest and value. In the first place it is an interesting book to read; in the second, it is an historical document of the first importance; and in the third, it has an extraordinary appositeness at the present moment."—Saturday Review.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN

FOREST by grown-up Children of Africa. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's officers, and Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a

Thousand Miles towards the Sun. NORMANDY, BRITANNY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Ralph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in

MADEIRA. By A. E. W. MARSH. With many Full-Page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MISTRESS BRANICAN. By

JULES VERNE, Author of "The Lottery Ticket," "Five Weeks in a Balloon," &c., &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Lady Silverdale's Sweetheart.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

PRICE HALF-A-CROWN.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY.

NOVEMBER NUMBER.

A High-Class Monthly Illustrated Magazine for Gentlewomen.

* The November Number commences the issue at 1s. instead of 2s. 6d. as heretofore, and contains as a Special Supplement, Portrait of H.R.H. Princess Maud of Wales.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

NOVEMBER NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

THE GRAND CANAL. Illustrated. The Seventh Article in the Series "Great Streets of the World." By HENRY JAMES.

CHICAGO'S PART in the WORLD'S FAIR. By FRANKLIN MACVEIGH.

CONVERSATIONS and OPINIONS of VICTOR HUGO. From Unpublished Papers Found at Guernsey. By OCTAVE UZANNE.

VILLON. By FRANCIS B. GUMMERE.

RACING in AUSTRALIA. Illustrated. By SIDNEY DICKINSON.

SALEM KITTEDGE, THEOLOGUE.—HIS SECULAR EXCURSION.—Part II. Conclusion. By BLISS PERRY.

FRENCH ART.—III. Realistic Painting. Illustrated. By W. C. BROWNELL.

STORIES of a WESTERN TOWN.—IV. Mother Emeritus. Illustrated. By OCTAVE THANET.

SPONGE and SPONGERS of the FLORIDA REEF. Illustrated. By KIRK MURDOX.

MISS DANGERLIE'S ROSES. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1892.

No. 1070, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Death of Oenone, Akbar's Dream, and other Poems. By Alfred Lord Tennyson, Poet Laureate. (Macmillans.)

"ELOQUENT, just, and mighty Death" has seldom spoken with a juster and a mightier eloquence than in the deaths of those three poets to whom English readers of modern poetry owe their most passionate pleasure, and give their most passionate praise. Browning died in a solemn Venetian palace, thronged with memories of ancient life in the land of his heart: the first stage on his way to Westminster lay over the waters of Venice, whose people and whose rulers followed him with reverent mourning. Arnold fell on sleep in the full joy and exhilaration of his simple, ardent nature, taken away with a kindly surprise and suddenness: he lies by the Thames, in a country churchyard, under the yews. Tennyson has died with every circumstance of beauty: a serene change and dissolution, calm and slow, from the beauty of his English home, and of his English Shakespeare, to the beauty and to the land "that are very off." His body rests at Westminster by the side of Browning; and the fame of either must "live with the eternity" of the other's fame. Felices opportunitate mortis, Browning, and Arnold, and Tennyson!

Like Browning's Asolando, Tennyson's posthumous volume is full of fine things, not unworthy of his prime: all varieties of Tennysonian thought and music are to be found in this little book of twenty-four poems. "The Death of Oenone," "St. Telemachus," and "Akbar's Dream" are narrative or meditative poems in blank verse: "The Bandit's Death" and "Charity" are rhymed dramatic idylls: "The Churchwarden and the Curate" is a dramatic study of Lincolnshire humours in the Lincolnshire dialect: "Kapiolani" is a piece of savage heroism chaunted in unrhymed rhythm: there are five occasional poems, three of them dedicatory, one patriotic, and one memorial: there are some eight poems of what may be termed cosmic emotion and spiritual speculation, mostly written in long and sonorous measures: three simple lyrics, and one sonnet.

It is very noticeable that Tennyson's later verse has renounced much of that rich intricacy of workmanship which used to distinguish it: the emblemata vermiculatum, in Lucilius's phrase, intricate mosaic work in words, which was at once the poet's glory and his peril, ceased to fascinate him. Like his own "laborious orient ivory, sphere in sphere," so his verse was a marvel of dexterous, cunning craft; but it is no new reproach or heresy to dare to say that the work was sometimes over delicate or gorgeous. His later verse was more direct in its beauty, more classical and severe; it became more Virgilian, less Statian; less opulent, more austere. It relied more and more upon the powers of rhythm, and less upon the charms of rhyme; and, while something of the old peculiar magic was lost, we were compensated by the greater simplicity and strength. No one doubts that the "Lotus Eaters," "Ulysses," and many more of the poems which we have known for years, including some score of lyrics, will be held his greatest work; but in my judgment the books of his old age contain poems finer than any but the very finest works of his middle age and youth. His "Tiresias," "Demeter," and "Oenone's Death" are worth far more than his "Dora," "Audley Court," "Aylmer's Field." He has rarely written anything more perfect than the verses to Virgil, the lines on Catullus' Sirmio, and "Early Spring." In a simple phrase, he continued till his life's end in a more and more victorious resolve to accept the justice and to remove the reproach of Coleridge's early criticism.

With that sympathetic love for scholars and for scholarship, which was always his, Tennyson dedicates his second "Oenone" to the Master of Balliol, as, in verse even more felicitous, he dedicated his "Demeter" to Mr. Jebb.

"Dear master, in our classic town,
You, loved by all the younger gown,
There at Balliol,
Lay your Plato for one minute down,

"And read a Grecian tale re-told,
Which, cast in later Grecian mould,
Quintus Calaber
Somewhat lazily handled of old;

"And on this white midwinter day—
For have the far-off hymns of May,
All her melodies,
All her harmonies echo'd away?—

"To-day, before you turn again
To thoughts that lift the soul of men,
Hear my cataract's
Downward thunder in hollow and glen,

"Till, led by dream and vague desire,
The woman, gliding toward the pyre,
Find her warrior
Stark and dark in his funeral fire."

"Oenone" is of singular beauty—that "excellent beauty" noted by Bacon, which has in it something "strange." It is very brief; but its very brevity, stern and strong, gives it a greater force than a passionate, romantic elaboration has given to Mr. William Morris's "Death of Paris," beautiful as that also is. Oenone sits, looking over the Troad, as in the old days of her early love, and dreaming herself back into them: sits there, in the desolate winter, dreaming of her radiant lover.

"Anon from out the long ravine below
She heard a wailing cry, that seem'd at first Thin as the batlike shrillings of the Dead
When driven to Hades, but, in coming near,
Across the downward thunder of the brook
Sounded 'Oenone'; and on a sudden he,
Paris, no longer beauteous as a god,
Struck by a poison'd arrow in the fight,
Lame, crooked, reeling, livid, thro' the mist Rose, like the wrath of his dead self, and moan'd."

He pleads in the name of their ancient love, beseeching her help.

"Thou knowest,
Taught by some God, whatever herb or balm
May clear the blood from poison, and thy fame
Is blown thro' all the Troad, and to thee
The shepherd brings his adder-bitten lamb,
The wounded warrior climbs from Troy to thee.
My life and death are in thy hand."

So he implores, and vainly:

"Oenone, by thy love which once was mine,
Help, heal me. I am poisoned to the heart."
'And I to mine,' she said, 'Adulterer,
Go back to thine adulteress and die!'"

Surely these four tragic lines are worth a world of beautiful descriptive lines in the first "Oenone." Paris turned, and went, and fell dead: the shepherds found him, and remembered but his early youth among them,

"and forgetful of the man
Whose crime had half unpeopled Ilion, these
All that day long labour'd, hewing the pines,
And built their shepherd-prince a funeral pile";

while Oenone still sat in her cave, amazed and frozen at the memory of his ghastly face.

"Then her head sank, she slept, and thro' her dream

A ghostly murmur floated, 'Come to me,
Oenone! I can wrong thee now no more,
Oenone, my Oenone,' and the dream
Wail'd in her, when she woke beneath the stars.
What star could burn so low? not Ilion yet.
What light was there? She rose and slowly down

By the long torrent's ever-deepen'd roar,
Paced, following, as in trance, the silent cry.
She waked a bird of prey that scream'd and past;

She roused a snake that hissing writhed away:
A panther sprang across her path, she heard
The shriek of some lost life among the pines,
But when she gain'd the broader vale, and saw
The ring of faces reddened by the flames
Enfolding that dark body which had lain
Of old in her embrace, paused—and then ask'd
Falteringly, 'Who lies on yonder pyre?'
But every man was mute for reverence.
Then moving quickly forward till the heat
Smote on her brow, she lifted up a voice
Of shrill command, 'Who burns upon the pyre?'

Whereon their oldest and their boldest said,
'He, whom thou would'st not heal!' and all at once

The morning light of happy marriage broke
Thro' all the clouded years of widowhood,
And muzzling up her comely head, and crying
'Husband!' she leapt upon the funeral pile,
And mixt herself with him and past in fire."

Since Dido fell upon her loveless, solitary pyre, and in ventos vita recessit, passed in fire to air, few statelier scenes of love and death have been portrayed in this Virgilian manner.

"St. Telemachus" and "Akbar's Dream" are so very considerably less fine, in spite of much that is fine in them, than "The Death of Oenone," that we need not dwell long upon them. The former tells of that Eastern ascetic who heard a divine call summoning him to Rome: he left his retreat, a cavern above the "disastrous glory" of a ruined temple of the Sun, and went

"Following a hundred sunsets, and the sphere
Of westward-wheeling stars; and every dawn
Struck from him his own shadow on to Rome."

Reaching Rome, "the Christian city," he had no eyes but for the winged angel of his vision.

"Anon there past a crowd
With shameless laughter, Pagan oath, and jest,
Hard Romans bawling of their monstrous games;
He, all but deaf thro' age and weariness,
And muttering to himself 'The call of God,'
And borne along by that full stream of men,
Like some old wreck on some indrawing sea,
Gain'd their huge Colosseum."

The rest is a familiar tale: how he leapt down into the arena and forbade the cruel sport in the name of Christ.

"For one moment afterward
A silence follow'd as of death, and then
A hiss as from a wilderness of snakes,
Then one deep roar as of a breaking sea,
And then a shower of stones that stoned him dead,
And then once more a silence as of death."

But his end was gained, for

"thro' all the nobler hearts
In that vast Oval ran a shudder of shame."

Honorius stopped the murderous games. It might be hard to give a clear reason for the resemblance which in some way this poem certainly bears to the splendid "Imporante Augusto Natus Est" of Browning's last book.

"Akbar's Dream" will enchant chiefly those who are in love with a merely emotional benevolence, an eclectic spirit of tolerance, a universal acceptance of all good intentions, and an amiable indifference to all particular manifestations of religious faith. Holding such a temper in an intellectual abhorrence, I am the less able to do justice to the excellences of this poem. It is a powerful presentation of the views held by the great maker and founder of the Mogul empire, whose reign, as Sir William Hunter has noted, coincided almost to a year with that of Queen Elizabeth, a monarch, as Tennyson suggests, less tolerant than Akbar, though the founder in chief of a Church no less composite and eclectic than was his. The poem abounds in fine images; for example—

"the wild horse, anger, plunged
To fling me, and fail'd."

The next lines give the spirit of the piece:

"I can but lift the torch
Of Reason in the dusky cave of Life,
And gaze on this great miracle, the World,
Adoring That who made, and makes, and is,
And is not, what I gaze on—all else Form,
Ritual, varying with the tribes of men."

It concludes with a hymn to the sun, of a moving magniloquence:

"Shadow-maker, shadow-slayer, arrowing light from clime to clime,
Hear thy myriad laureates hail thee monarch
in their woodland rhyme.
Warble bird, and open flower, and men, below
the dome of azure,
Kneel adoring Him the Timeless in the flame that measures Time!"

We may note in this, and in other pieces, Tennyson's fondness for an Alcaic disposition of rhythm in the four-line stanza. The dissyllabic termination of the third line giving an Horatian effect of sound, while in shorter measures there is often an Omaresque effect of thought.

"The Bandit's Death," not one of the best things in this volume, is prefaced by four lines to Sir Walter Scott, from whose journal the story was adapted.

"O great and gallant Scott,
True gentleman, heart, blood and bone,
I would it had been my lot
To have seen thee, and heard thee, and known."

It is pleasant to have so authoritative a praise of Scott in an age which affects to disregard him, and which pays no heed to the reiterated praises by Mr. Swinburne and by Mr. Lang. The dialect piece ranks with the author's happiest achievements in that manner: it portrays the narrow shrewdness, almost pathetic in its humour, of an old Lincolnshire farmer talking with a young curate. "Tha mun tackle the sins o' the Wo'ld, an' not the faults o' the Squire," is his advice to the young man, if he wish to prosper and be a bishop. But there is one exception in favour of plain speaking:

"Naiy, but tha mun speak hout to the Baptises here i' the town,
Fur moist on 'em talks agein tithe, an' I'd like tha to preach 'em down,
Fur they've bin a-preachin' me down, they heve,
an' I haates 'em now,
Fur they leaved their nasty sins i' my pond, an'
it poison'd the cow."

"Charity" is one of those simple tragic stories, poignant and direct, of which Tennyson has given so many, and hardly one too many, and of which "Rizpah" is incomparably the greatest. "Kapiolani" is a study of fierce savagery, violent scenes, heroic courage, written with that rush and ordered turbulence of rhythm so remarkable in "Boadicea" and the "Battle of Brunanburh." It tells the famous story of Kapiolani, the champion of Christianity, who threw into the volcano the sacred berries of the great goddess Peolè. Here is the conclusion:

"One from the Sunrise
Dawn'd on His people, and slowly before Him
Vanish'd shadow-like
Gods and Goddesses,
None but the terrible Peolè remaining as Kapiolani ascended her mountain,
Baffled her priesthood,
Broke the Taboo,
Dipt to the crater,
Call'd on the Power adored by the Christian, and crying, 'I dare her, let Peolè avenge herself!'
Into the flame-billow dash'd the berries, and drove the demon from Hawa-i-ee."

We have come to the "cosmic" poems, in which the poet is the seer, filled with such a sacred inspiration, as dictated the greater oracles of Lucretius and of Virgil: poems of the origin of things, the course and potency of nature, the spectacle of the world, and the soul of the universe. There is "The Dawn," with its motto, "You are but children," the speech of the Egyptian priest to Solon.

"Red of the Dawn!
Is it turning a fainter red? so be it, but when shall we lay
The Ghost of the Brute that is walking and haunting us yet, and be free?
In a hundred, a thousand winters? Ah, what will our children be,
The men of a hundred thousand, a million winters away?"

There is "The Dreamer," in which the Voice of the Earth is heard, telling all the load of misery which she bears, as "To the wail of my winds, and the moan of my waves,

I whirl, and I follow the sun."

But the answer is one of consolatory and courageous faith:

"For means will have grown sphere-music
Or ever your race be run!
And all's well that ends well,
Whirl, and follow the Sun!"

The "terrible Muse," Astronomy, has rarely inspired a grander conception than this; so unlike the fearful awe of Pascal contemplating the infinite spaces. In "Mecanophilus," a poem prompted by "the time of the first railways," is a stanza upon Thought, which would serve for an inscription upon the Novum Organon:

"O will she, moonlike, sway the main,
And bring or chase the storm,
Who was a shadow in the brain,
And is a living form?"

In some of these poems there is an Oriental cast of thought and phrase, which seems to have allured the poet in his latest years, as the best means of shadowing forth the unspeakable truths: the Light, the Shade, the Silence, the Voices, the Highest, the Deeps, and other like expressions, serve to image the absolute and the real. At times the effect is hardly more satisfying than that of Hugo's vast and majestic images; at times, both poets sing with the happiest audacity and magnificence. But here I prefer to quote the Laureate's last, and perhaps his best, sonnet, "Doubt and Prayer":

"Tho' Sin too oft, when smitten by Thy rod,
Rall at 'Blind Fate' with many a vain 'Alas!'
From sin thro' sorrow into Thee we pass
By that same path our true forefathers trod;
And let not Reason fail me, nor the sod
Draw from my death Thy living flower and grase,
Before I learn that Love, which is, and was,
My Father, and my Brother, and my God!
Steel me with patience! soften me with grief!
Let blow the trumpet strongly while I pray,
Till this embattled wall of unbelief,
My prison, not my fortress, fall away!
Then, if thou wilt, let my day be brief,
So Thou wilt strike Thy glory thro' the day."

I know few things more stately and more touching than at the least the sonnet of this sonnet.

There is much beauty and power in the book, upon which I have not space to dwell. Even so slight a thing as "The Tournay" contains the perfect line, "Ralph went down like a fire to the fight"; and "The Silent Voices" are still echoing in our ears; while "The Making of Man," "Faith," and "God and the Universe" are triumphs of rhythm and of prophetic fire, of Delphic majesty and vision. But it is of little avail to spend words upon these things just now. Under the shadow of death not even the criticism of a master would be of much value.

"Year will graze the heel of year,
But seldom comes the poet here,
And the Critic's rarer still."

Farquhar has described for us the burial at Westminster of the Laureate Dryden:

"I come now from Mr. Dryden's Funeral, where we had an Ode in Horace sung, instead of David's Psalms; whence you may find, that we don't think a Poet worth Christian Burial: The Pomp of the Ceremony was a kind of Rhapsody, and fitter, I think, for Hudibras than him, because the Cavalcade was mostly Burlesque; but he was an extraordinary Man, and buried after an Extraordinary Fashion; for I do believe there was never such another Burial seen. . . . And so much for Mr. Dryden, whose Burial was the same with his Life: Variety and not of a Piece. 'The Quality and Mob, Farce and Heroicks; the Sublime and Ridicule mixt in a Piece, great Cleopatra in a Hackney-Coach.'

Surely we may say that Tennyson's burial was of a piece with his life, which was full of dignity and of calm and of an unbroken steadfastness. Had any verse but his own been sung over him, it could but have been the unequalled Elysian lines of Virgil, telling how among the odorous laurels, and among "fields invested with purple gleams," chaunting together by the waters, and crowned with snowy wreaths, are warriors and priests, and all who deserve well of mankind:

"Quique pii vates, et Phœbo digna locuti."

LIONEL JOHNSON.

The Diplomatic Reminiscences of Lord Augustus Loftus, 1837-62. In 2 vols. (Cassells.)

LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS was born with a silver-spoon in his mouth, and by favour of the Crown it was in later years converted into one of gold plate. It is bare justice to say that he never forgot his natural advantages and his obligations as a courtier at home or in foreign courts. When contrasting himself with some of the most distinguished warriors of Europe, he now and then defines himself as "a man of the pen," a description which is confusing to any critical reader of these volumes until he reaches the final page, where Lord Augustus makes a handsome and modest apology. This should have formed a preface; and then, learning at the outset, that this is a "first attempt at authorship," everyone would be prepared with a due—and that is not a small—measure of the blindness and the kindness towards faults and labours which the author invokes in the very last words of these volumes.

There are no indiscretions: if only Lord Augustus would be a little indiscreet, it would be much better for the reader. A pliable man, faithful to his patrons, with relatives always close to the Sovereign, with common sense strong enough to foresee and accept, while detesting, the rise of democracy and the decline of dynastic influences, Lord Augustus has gossiped with many and been feared by none who wield the greatest power in European courts. He is just the man for reminiscences, and his volumes are decidedly interesting, though the historical thread on which his pearls of recollection are strung is often twisted with confusion of dates and tedious with the commonplace of European politics.

His mother was Lady of the Bedchamber to Queen Adelaide, and thereby at eighteen he obtained from William IV. a promise that under the royal eye he should enter the diplomatic service; and his sister-in-law, Lady Ely, held for the greater part of her present Majesty's reign the same position. In 1837 he was launched as an attaché at Berlin. The paid attaché, Lord Howard, we are told, taught Lord Augustus "the sinuosities of diplomacy," which Lord Augustus never practised on the highest plane.

"In these days no one was invited to Court who was not hofflich, and no Jews were admitted within its precincts. Once a year the King gave a déjeuner dansant to the Corps Diplomatique, which commenced at 10 a.m., and as it was generally in the dark days of January, it was necessary to shave by candle light."

In Berlin—now the tobacco-pipe of Europe—police regulations then prohibited smoking in the streets; and on returning from balls and parties smokers had to keep a sharp look-out for the sentinels on guard, or otherwise they were arrested, put into the sentry-box, and handed over to the relief guard. When Prince Motternich said to young Loftus—"You will see—I may not—that the German Diet will yet prove to be the saviour of Europe," he made less for his reputation than when he advised the author "never to say 'never.'" Frederick William IV. of Prussia was no soldier, nor was he a statesman. Lord Augustus credits him with one amiable desire, that of introducing the Liturgy of the Church of England into the Lutheran services. But of course his Majesty took no action that way. He was weak and wavering.

"Thus, it was said during the Crimean war that in the morning after his devotions he was an admirer of the English, but at night, after a cup of Russian tea, he went to bed in favour of Russia."

After seventeen years at Berlin, Lord Augustus became a paid attaché at Stuttgart, where a railway tunnel had been carried under the King's dining-room, not from necessity, but because "the Wurtembergers of that day thought it a proud thing, in imitation of other countries, to possess a railway tunnel." Readers of Punch of that time will remember that Lord Brougham was always represented with check trousers, which had never any touching acquaintance with his shoes. He went to Stuttgart, where the King was most proud to show his stables. Brougham, "with trousers scarcely reaching to his ankles," ran hastily through the stables, and observed to the Master of the Horse "that the money spent on the stables would be more advantageously spent in building a suitable university for the education of the nobility."

Lord Augustus is himself worth observation as one of a class fast fading into a reminiscence. The following is one of his profound observations:

"The frequency of the destruction of theatres by fire is somewhat remarkable; and were it not that no place is more exposed to that element than a theatre, it might be supposed that such events were specially decreed by Providence."

Admirable in personal manners, Lord Augustus has contrary capabilities with his pen. Referring to a pleasant visit to Lord and Lady Howard de Walden "whose chef de cuisine was renowned," he writes that "the result of his culinary art left a most favourable impression on me, but not greater than the distinguished qualities of our noble hostess." Yet he is often sagacious in politics; and his opinion that Constantinople will become a free port and the centre of trade to the East, and Turkey in Europe be transformed into a Christian state and placed like Belgium under a European guarantee of neutrality, is probably wiser than many of the prophecies of men of higher rank in statecraft. When that is done he thinks it will cease to be the "battledore" of rivalry—a misuse of terms showing some want of acquaintance with a frivolous pastime. When cholera was raging in Constantinople, he showed good sense in living there without fear, in avoiding raw fruits, and "especially being out at sunset and during the hour after it." His diplomatic career was passed east of Paris, which he perhaps does not regret, because we are told as to London and Paris, "the floodgates have been opened and oi polloi have rushed in—the consequence being that society is now so large that it has become an unlimited crowd." Lord Augustus has had much secondhand connexion with the policy of Napoleon III., who, when the Duke of Coburg suggested Prussia or Austria as mediator, preferred Prussia, for, said he, "it is better to stick to a woman that hates you than to one who has once deceived you, which is the case with Austria." With Bismarck his relations have been long and personal, but there was no affinity between the Iron Chancellor and the English courtier. Bismarck is described as of "ungovernable temper," "haughty and arrogant," "hostile to England." He introduced the practice of smoking in the German Diet, where, until Bismarck took a cigar from his pocket and coolly asked the president for a light, no member had hitherto enjoyed the privilege of smoking except the president. Bismarck often stated to our author that "he gloried in having no principles, for he observed that when you wished to gain a certain object your principles cross your path and defeat your aim."

Lord Augustus rendered great service, and was accused of greater, in the Crimean War. From private information he telegraphed to London that a sortie was to be made in the valley of the Tchernaya, which was sent on in time to warn the French and Sardinian commanders. With regard to Inkermann, he was accused of equal success. But this he repudiates with warmth. He declares Count Vitzthum's statement to be false, and that Inkermann was "not lost by the talkativeness of the Emperor Nicholas." When Prince Gortschokoff was asked whether Russia would take the initiative in the way of peace, he replied: "Russia is dumb, but she is not deaf."

We hope Lord Augustus will continue his reminiscences. What he has to tell should be even more interesting. He did not play a great part in the struggle which made the German Empire. But he was in touch, though not very confidentially, with those who did that great work. He resembles Baron Stockmar in many qualities. They are alike in devotion to Royalty, but the Baron was less sycophantic in expression. Lord Augustus is often tiresome in that way. He ventures on a few words of eulogy upon Prince Albert, and then is appalled by his "presumption in tracing the character of a Prince of such exalted rank." But he has more geniality and humour than the Baron; and if in his next issue he will understand that his loyalty is above suspicion, and will be somewhat less discreet, the result cannot fail to yield matter of much interest.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

Paraguay: The Land and People, Natural Wealth and Commercial Capabilities. By Dr. E. de Bourgade La Dardye. English Edition. Edited by E. G. Ravenstein. (George Philip & Son.)

THERE can be no doubt that a much-needed want is met by this translation of M. de Bourgade's comprehensive work on Paraguay, for there certainly exists "no work of recent date in the English language which supplies full and trustworthy information on that South American Republic" (publisher's preface). In fact, nothing of a special character has at all appeared since the disastrous war of the Triple Alliance (1865-70), unless an exception is to be made in favour of the Mulhalls' books, and of Ch. Washington's more valuable History of Paraguay (New York, 1871). Like most earnest writers absorbed in their subject, the author sinks his personality to such an extent that nothing can be gathered from the text as to the object of his visit to the country. It is stated, however, in the preface, that he resided there for about two years; and from one or two incidental references it may be inferred that the period was somewhere between 1886 and 1888, apparently partly under the presidency of Don Bernardino Caballero (1882-86), to whom the book is dedicated.

Anyhow, Dr. de Bourgade has made the most of his opportunities, and, without aiming at brilliant literary effects, has produced a readable and thoroughly trustworthy account of the "South American Mesopotamia," which looks like a well-digested and exhaustive Consular report, such as were those sterling essays of W. Gifford Palgrave on Dutch Guiana and Turkey in Asia. His critical spirit and scientific temperament are everywhere conspicuous, and nowhere more so than in the sections dealing with the financial outlook and commercial prospects of the republic. The evidences of steady revival under the liberal constitution introduced after the disastrous rule of Solano Lopez (1862-70) are certainly remarkable, especially when it is remembered that a six years' war, waged with almost unparalleled savagery against the contemning states of Brazil, Uruguay, and Argentina, had completely exhausted all the available resources of the land, and swept away nearly all its male population, including even mere striplings dragged to the front by the ferocious despot.

"There were no national industries, for the men had perished in battle; there were no rights in landed property, as every title-deed had disappeared; there was no commerce, because the merchants had forsaken the country in despair; and as to the poor produce that could be extracted from the soil, it was all laid under contribution, and monopolised by the army of occupation. So great and various were the difficulties in the way that it might be suspected that the cradle of the new constitution was haunted by an evil genius exercising the most malignant influences."

For a time Paraguay seemed to the outer world effaced from the political map of the Continent, and the French author's unbiassed tone is well shown in the reference made to her appeal to the European money markets at the period of her deepest depression.

"No European stock-market to the same degree as London has appreciated the vast resources and future development of the States of America. There may be some initial difficulty to overcome or some crisis to survive; but England has ever been regardless of a risk that is temporary, and preferred to await a recompense that may tarry, but appears to be sure. Almost all the smaller American States are in her debt; almost all at some time or other have failed to meet their obligations, but there is not one of them that has not paid large interest to its patient creditor. No other European market has so accurate an appreciation of the capabilities of America, and it is this which gives England so powerful a hold in the New World, where she disposes of large consignments of her products."

M. de Bourgade has a firm faith in the future of Paraguay, based on a calm consideration of the climatic conditions, the permanent resources of the soil, and the progress actually made during the short period of revival. On all these points he can speak with the authority derived from his scientific training and personal observation; and as the book is "essentially intended for practical men," its value to intending investors and even emigrants (though perhaps not British) cannot well be overestimated. Despite its subtropical position (22°—27° S.) and its low elevation of scarcely more than 250 feet above sea-level, with but slight incline and numerous somewhat sluggish streams, we are assured that Paraguay proper—that is, the whole region lying east of its great artery, is really salubrious and well suited for European settlement. The summer heats, though occasionally rising to 100°, or even 104° F., are never fierce and parching as in the Guianas, being mostly tempered by frequent refreshing showers; there are no epidemics except small-pox, now yielding to vaccination; no malaria except the chucko, an intermittent ague prevalent in some of the swampy eastern districts; scarcely any endemics, and these preventable by ordinary attention to diet, clothing, and sanitation.

A careful analysis is given of the soil, much of which consists either of a red loess or a black vegetable humus, both rich in fertile organic remains, and the former pre-eminently suited for tobacco culture. This red loess is compared with the analogous soil of the best tobacco-growing districts in Cuba; and most readers will learn with surprise that the Paraguayan plant rivals the finest Havana itself in that subtle aroma which is lost by transplanting to Kentucky,

* The total indebtedness is at present estimated at the prodigious sum of £405,000,000.

Virginia, or Maryland. No wonder that under the traditional exclusive administration of the Jesuits (1586-1767), revived by the dictators Francia and the elder Lopez (1814-62), the Guarani natives, finding no outlet for their tobacco, have taken to consuming it themselves, with such vigour that they have long enjoyed the reputation of being the greatest smokers in the world. The author calculates that "everyone in Paraguay smokes at the rate of seven cigars a day."

A chapter is naturally devoted to the yerba maté, the famous "Paraguayan tea," which, like tobacco and the indigenous orange (or citron?), cannot fail to become a main source of wealth to the country. That this valuable commodity has not yet found its way to the European market is but another result of the short-sighted policy which for three hundred years has practically cut off Paraguay from all intercourse with the rest of the civilised world. Our author has made a special study of the invigorating properties of maté, which he speaks of as immensely superior both to tea and coffee, stimulating "the physical and mental powers without any waste to the system." Its range, though not yet accurately determined, is very wide, extending beyond the Paraguayan frontiers into the neighbouring Brazilian and Argentine forests, and in the opposite direction at intervals as far west as the Andes. The yerbales or maté forests along the left bank of the Paraguay have disappeared, and it is noteworthy that the art of propagating this species of ilex for plantation culture has also disappeared with the Jesuits. Until the lost process is recovered, the South American populations, who consume it in large quantities and always in preference to tea or coffee, must depend for their supplies on the wild plant, which appears to thrive best in the eastern parts of Paraguay proper. Here is evidently its true home, for in the direction of the Atlantic it gradually deteriorates. The present total production of about 270,000 cwts. will be indefinitely increased whenever maté makes its appearance on the "free breakfast-table" of the British artisan; and then Paraguayan bonds, at present somewhat depressed, will certainly be quoted above par. That event cannot be very remote since the purchase of the Paraguayan railway (Ascension to Villa Rica) by an English company, with obligation to continue it at once to Villa Encarnacion on the Parana, where a junction will be effected with the Argentine system.

A word of thanks is due to Mr. Ravenstein for the great care which he has evidently bestowed on this English edition of M. de Bourgade's book. He supplies several judicious notes and an index, and reproduces the author's excellent large scale map of Paraguay, where however "Empério" do Brazil looks somewhat antiquated. There are also a few other points calling for revision in future editions of this standard work. Such are the "fragrant errors" at p. 103; 1866 instead of 1865 as the date of the beginning of the war of the Triple Alliance (p. 105)—in fact, Lopez' forces were already across the Brazilian frontier in October, 1864, though Uruguay held aloof till February of the next year; mille for a thousand (p. 108); "under Lopez it was very little that was done in this direction" (p. 79) is scarcely English. Lastly, the binding! Is it a lost art in England like maté culture in Paraguay? The leaves of the writer's copy flutter about, when opened, like those of cheap German publications prepared for the Leipzig market.

A. H. KEANE.

TWO EDUCATIONAL SYSTEMS.

Aristotle and Ancient Educational Ideals. By Thomas Davidson. (Heinemann.)

Loyola and the Educational System of the Jesuits. By the Rev. Thomas Hughes, S.J. (Heinemann.)

THESE are the first two of a series of sketches of educational systems. Dr. Davidson's book is too sketchy. He attempts over-much for the space to which he is limited. He makes excursions away from his subject. He starts interesting points, only to say he has no space to deal with them, though he hints that he could say a great deal. He wastes space at the heads of his chapters by giving long quotations from various authors, the meaning of which frequently baffles our ingenuity to discover. Moreover, Dr. Davidson's literary style is not attractive. Here is a specimen:

"It is pretty definitely settled among men competent to form a judgment that Aristotle was the best educated man that ever walked on the surface of this earth."

This would be suitable, perchance, for an answer to a prize competition in a weekly newspaper; but such writing will hardly commend itself to thoughtful educators, much less to the general literary reader who may be willing to "try an education book." Mr. W. W. Capes, Prof. A. S. Wilkins, and Prof. J. P. Mahaffy have written short treatises on old Greek education, admirable alike for scholarship and literary expression; all of which find no place in Dr. Davidson's otherwise useful bibliography. He also omits to mention the interesting and important Education Athénienne of M. Girard.

Loyola is one of the outstanding figures of biography, and the educational system of the Jesuits is undoubtedly the most remarkable of all studies in pedagogic organisation. The Pampeluna knight, struck down with wounds in either leg, courageously facing the renunciation of the soldier's life, must attract the sympathy of every reader. His life displays the ripe fruit of chivalry. He was a typical Spanish gentleman, full of the joyousness of life; by birth and position the cynosure of neighbouring eyes. That which was seen of others, however, was the least part of himself. Within his mind were aspirations and ambitions which would have satisfied themselves only by making for himself playgrounds of the kingdoms of the earth. Eager for the fray, he fights in the defence of Pampeluna. And then—he fights no more. The touching story is told that, seeing a bone protrude from his wounded limb, he asked to have it sawn off to save that amount of disfigurement. So he seemed:

"smothered up
And buried from all god-like exercise."

But his soldier's spirit could not be subdued. Loyola remained a soldier all his life. His experiences of pain changed the direction of his warfare. He accepted service for the kingdom of heaven.

The life of Loyola has escaped the modern compilations on self-made men and accounts of the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties. Protestants, however, as well as Catholics, should know the history of his struggle for knowledge. "At the age of thirty-three, he sits down on the school bench at Barcelona and begins his Latin declensions." After two years' study, Loyola's teacher declared himself satisfied with his knowledge of Latin grammar. At thirty-seven, however, we find him still at his Latin, like a schoolboy in the Lower Fourth.

Nowhere in the life of Loyola do we come across the spirit of discovery. He collects with indomitable energy the best results of time and works them into a system. He had an eye for artistic effect, a keen sense of proportion, a readiness to adopt. As to his purpose, he had the clearest of conceptions and the most immovable of convictions. The aim of Loyola can be expressed in a sentence. It was to establish a universal system of education. His system was to be independent of time and place. Human nature, he seems to argue, is essentially the same from age to age, therefore the essentials of education must remain the same. Similarly, the mind of man does not vary very much from place to place. That there are both temporal and local modifications necessary in education, the Society of Jesus has practically admitted by the emendations in the official document of studies called the Ratio Studiorum.

Yet it is claimed that the Ratio Studiorum, which organised all the grades of education from the primary to ultra-university work, so to say, never dies. The Ratio, it may be added, organised the training of the teachers as well as that of the pupils. It is not too much to say that no association, no college, no nation, ever bestowed as much care on the training of teachers as the Society of Jesus. It naturally follows that no body of teachers are so capable and so successful. The organisation of the schools locally, in the first instance, and the infusion of the idea of unity of aim and method, are due to Ignatius Loyola; but the development of school method and detail of discipline as formulated in the Ratio are chiefly the work of another man, likewise of extraordinary power of organisation, Claudius Aquaviva.

Given that the aim of the Jesuits is pedagogically right, it cannot be denied that the system, intricate as it seems at first sight, is logically consistent, and in the highest degree calculated to produce the results aimed at. Its method is of the highest interest.

But is the aim sound? In England we have tried a uniform system in our elementary education. Patterns, so to say, were kept at Whitehall so that all men might know what was being done every hour of the day in every primary school. Methods of measurement were devised for testing that the same article was being retailed throughout the country in the same way and in the same span of time. What is the experience of England in the matter? Surely that the manufacture of minds and souls cannot be conducted on these machine-like systems. "Freedom to teach," as Mr. Thring used to say, "is necessary." If this is so in elementary education, freedom is still more important in higher teaching. The Jesuits, however, have extended their principle of absolute obedience and uniformity to all grades of education, to all climes, and to all times. They do not see that their system has continued to live by virtue of what it has given up.

The truth is that the idea of a universal empire is as obsolete an aim in education as in politics. The days of universal empires—of Rome, of the Roman church, of scholastic philosophy—are all passed. These ideals were unspeakably noble. The eagerness and vividness with which they were held in mediæval times has paved the way for a still nobler bond of humanism, founded on individuality and freedom of mind, body, and estate. The idea of universality—of empire and of the church and of scholasticism—all practically perished at the Reformation. The student of education becomes familiar with the fact that any intellectual wave lashes against the shores of education—last of all, Loyola made a marvellous attempt to put back the finger of time. He saw that education was the last fortress for universality of empire. He had stepped into the breach at Pampeluna. He was still a soldier.

I spoke at length on the life of Loyola. "For the life is more than meat." The greatness of Loyola is not to be measured by the futility of his aim. The mediæval times are gone, with all their ideals. We have the benefit of the experience of the past. It is for us to incorporate as much of that experience as will help us. Loyola's soldier's spirit will help us, but as educationists we have to fight neither to protect Pampeluna nor to promote the Propaganda. I cannot enter fully into an account of the Ratio Studiorum, the great book of method of the Jesuits. I regret this the less because it gives me the opportunity of saying that the account given by Father Hughes is excellent. It should certainly be read by students of pedagogy, who wish to see the conditions which have made the Jesuits such efficient teachers. The enthusiasm for scholarly work which has been aroused by the Society is simply astounding. No one can glance at the 7000 columns of Augustin de Backer's monumental bibliography of works written by members of the Society of Jesus, without feeling that an educational system which produced such an array of writers dealing with subjects in every province of thought must be regarded with high interest. Its methods must be admirable. Father Hughes does not withhold his enthusiasm, yet he is to be congratulated on his candour. If he wishes to state his appreciation of the Society to which he belongs, he usually quotes a Protestant writer. Of course, Bacon's well-known reference to the Jesuits is given: they "partly in themselves and partly by the emulation and provocation of their example have much quickened and strengthened the state of learning." On the whole, the book will be very useful. Father Hughes writes, as a rule, clearly, and most clearly perhaps on difficult matters. One point of smaller criticism I must add. Speaking of false charges which have too often been made against priests, he says: "There is a good English proverb which expresses the very same idea—about the happy cohesiveness of a clayey compound when cleverly thrown." The English of the proverb is good. Mr. Hughes' English is not good: he would not accept such a badly pretentious sentence from a pupil. It clearly ought not to occur in an educational book.

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Cuckoo in the Nest. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

The Peyton Romance. By Mrs. Leith Adams. In 3 vols. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.)

The Silent Sea. By Mrs. Alick Macleod. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Miss Eyon of Eyon Court. By K. S. Macquoid. (Ward & Downey.)

The Mate of the Vancouver. By Morley Roberts. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

O'Driscoll's Weird and other Stories. By A. Werner. (Cassells.)

The New Ohio. By E. E. Hale. (Cassells.)

Russian Stories. Vol. II., "The Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

THE critic sometimes grumbles at Mrs. Oliphant; but Mrs. Oliphant, if she is not an unjust woman, knows what the critic means. He is really grumbling, as the learned Mr. Porson swore, at "the course of events." The course of events has decreed that Mrs. Oliphant shall write several scores of novels which are too frequently novel-journalism. The critic knows that Mrs. Oliphant might have written ten or a dozen which would have been novel-literature. Therefore he curses, and perhaps Mrs. Oliphant thinks that it is cursing, if not also cursed, spite; but it is not. Even as it is, the faculty which is in her not infrequently grapples with the course of events and very nearly throws it; which is the case in The Cuckoo in the Nest. It is a quite remarkably good novel of the ordinary kind; it wants but "—that!" to quote the old story, of being a remarkably good novel of the extraordinary kind. Even as it is, it is quite out of the common in its own way; and if it were so to happen that having read it in three volumes we were to meet with it in one, we really believe we should read it again. It is only when we come to reflect in the nasty critical fashion on the minor points, on the way in which they might have been worked up and were not, and on some slips in the majors, that we feel inclined to play the part of Momus. The "cuckoo in the nest" is a girl, herself the heiress, if the word may be used, of a good yeoman family, who, in the change of things and fortunes, has come to be practically barmaid at her father's now not very flourishing inn. She is pretty and intensely ambitious, and the heir of the manor house—a kind of not quite idiotic imbecile—is hopelessly in love with her. His father is not many degrees wiser than himself; his mother is an invalid shrew; and the only good angel about the house is a widowed cousin, Margaret Osborne, who, with her orphan boy, has been taken in out of charity, and made to know the bitterness of begged bread. (By the way, it is well to be correct in citations from the highest, and though we know "maestro di color che sanno," we do not know it without the "color" and with "chi" for "che.") This Margaret is the person upon whom a little more pains spent would have made the greatest difference; but she is good as it is. The actual heroine, Patience or Patty Hewitt, is quite admirable, though we own to a slight doubt whether in real life even her sweet-blooded plebeian lover, after her husband's death, would have induced her to give up the heritage of the family to the rightful heirs. Mrs. Oliphant, with a vast deal of skill, has made her thoroughly natural and almost excusable in the Philistine brutality which she displays towards her natural enemies, the family and its friends. And there are touches in the book of the vein of genuine and unforced epigram, which raised such high hopes in the Chronicles of Carlingford: "Ladies are very nice, but they never understand the rules of a game," is the profoundest of truths; and formulated by a lady, though put in the mouth of a man, it is doubly Pythian.

Mrs. Leith Adams, whose book has in some respects not inconsiderable merits, has handicapped herself in others rather wantonly. There is nothing more dangerous than a very ambitious style defaced by small negligences; and talk about "brotherhoods of firs," "the gay bird's clarion cry," and so forth, suits ill with slips such as "an insurmountable chevaux de frise," and unadjusted metaphors such as that which describes a child in the old high-buttoned trousers as "looking like a little caddis worm set on end." The largest caddis worm might look like an infinitely little child, but the smallest child could only look like a very gigantic caddis worm. These things are but trifles, however. It is a more serious blemish that Mrs. Adams has deliberately broken her story in two at the very middle. The two halves, separated by an interval of twenty years, are to all intents and purposes two different stories with mainly different personages and an entirely different interest, though it is true that the first half ends with a puzzle and the second clears it up. Now we are never quite certain of the wisdom of this "interval of twenty years," even when it occurs after a mere prelude; but we are quite certain that it is bad art when it divides a long book into two pretty equal halves, with scarcely any community of interest between them. However, even this is the kind of fault which probably strikes a critic more than it does the average reader; and not merely for that average reader, but for all but very ferocious critics, The Peyton Romance is by no means unprovided with attractions. Mrs. Adams can tell a story pleasantly, and with lively dialogue; her interspersed garrison reminiscences sometimes help the main interest along, and sometimes supply cheerful reliefs and episodes; though her style is, as has been said, a little flowery, it is never offensive; and she has considerable pathos.

The worst thing that we know about Mrs. Macleod's The Silent Sea is that it is rather hard to read: and this is not an excellent thing in a novel. It is odd that it should be so, for the central interest is decidedly strong. Everybody except prigs and fools (which is indeed tautology), loves buried treasure and the discovery thereof. Even half-a-crown in the pocket of a long unworn waistcoat, though you may have honestly gained it by the sweat of your brow or inherited it from your ancestors, is, when suddenly found, more charming than half-a-sovereign consciously in purse. How much more when the treasure is not, strictly speaking, yours, and runs into large sums! Also, the treasure of The Silent Sea is an unusual treasure. A "cave room" in a mine where a succession of dishonest managers have hidden stolen gold is very pleasing to the imagination. It is bold, too, to make a young lady fall in love with a boy ten years younger than herself, and yet not, as Mrs. Macleod does it, much too bold. There are also other good things in the book. And yet it certainly does, in parts at least, read heavily: the reason being, to the best of our belief, that Mrs. Macleod has laboured unimportant passages of it too much, and has stuffed it with unnecessary padding. For it does sometimes happen, though we confess not often, that the picture would have been better, if the painter had taken less pains.

We can imagine different people forming different estimates of Miss Eyon of Eyon Court. Its plot, though not exactly new (how many plots are?), is sufficient. A rich old maid, who has tripped in her youth, wishes her niece, ward, and heiress to marry a person connected with her in a way which the reader may be left to find out. She bullies her that she may fall in love with the man; and when this is not quite sufficient, connives at the man coercing and bullying the girl to make all sure. The good, as the Greek dramatist says, of course conquers; but Marjorie Eyon's lot is sufficiently hard, and her rescuer is perhaps a little old for her. Being not unduly disposed to insist on the necessity of youth in lovemaking mankind, we still think that twenty-one years between husband and wife is rather too much. This, however, should break no squares between us and Mrs. Macquoid, if we did not resent the idea of a girl like Marjorie taking as much as she does to such an awful "cocktail" as "Mr. Brown." Like the aged servant who plays a part in the story, "we would not hev thought of Miss Marjorie settin' store by such coompany."

Mr. Morley Roberts's Mate of the Vancouver is good. The elaborate apologies with which the sailor man who tells it introduces the tale, whether they be borrowed from Mr. Clark Russell or from older examples of the Dickens fellowship, rather bore us. But when Mr. Thomas Ticehurst gets into the thick of his narrative (which turns on his sister-in-law's love for him, his love for somebody else, and a great deal of fighting) it is good. There are in particular three or, by'r lady, four rough-and-tumble fights in the book (gouging allowed and knives and revolvers at discretion) which have much merit, and for many years to come will be more than allowable in fiction. The book is not long, and all of it is worth reading.

Whether Mr. Werner is the same man who wrote a capital book on the Congo Free State, with the best and truest picture of Mr. Stanley's unhappy rear-guard that ever was given, we know not; but from more than one story in this book we should think so. If it be so he can do more than drive and mend boilers—he can tell very good tales. They are not of the absolutely first class, for they bear, to the person who gives his daily dreadful line to such things, the mark rather of the man who, having seen plenty of men and the cities and manners thereof, says, "Go to! Why should I not fill columns like the rest?" than of the man who tells tales because the Lord sent him into the world to tell them. But they are very good tales for all that, and of a fine variety, in the nine of them, though all tend somewhat to the adventurous and incidental.

Mr. Edward Everett Hale's The New Ohio is a story of the United States just before and after they became United States, to the wonder and envy of the universe, as Mr. Chauncey Depew avoucheth (but the universe has not yet replied to Mr. Chauncey Depew). The story begins with a sleigh ride, in which a certain Sarah Parris and a certain Harry Curwen play those parts of extremely honourable, but extremely unsurveyed, man and maid, the existence of which in an English and puritan community is so puzzling to students of the English ages from which New England sprang. It is a pity, by the way, that some scholarly American does not tackle this problem. It was no part of Mr. Hale's duty to tackle it, and what was his duty he has tackled with alacrity and success. The story is not long enough to be tedious, and has too much incident to be neo-American. It rolls itself out swiftly, and rolls itself up neatly enough to satisfy any reasonable person.

The new volume of Russian Stories in the Pseudonym Library is quite up to its predecessor, if, indeed, it is not superior to it. The first and longest tale, "The Saghalien Convict," is the best; and the story of escape from that dismal island of the extremest East or West (for you may call it either) deserves to be included with the other famous escape stories true, adapted, and invented, which form not the least attractive part of the world's fictitious literature. Nor are the minor stories weak. But they all leave the impression that it would be well to suppress Russia, and especially Siberia, as at present constituted. It is not well to have a solid part of the earth in a state of nightmare.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Sea-Boat: How to Build, Rig, and Sail Her. By R. C. Leslie. (Chapman & Hall.) Taking Mr. Ruskin's eloquent words on a sea-boat as his text, the enthusiastic author of this little book teaches how to construct such a boat, from the hour when her keel is laid on the stocks to that joyful day when she bounds free before wind and sea in the channel. Every plank is described and often figured, every needful tool suggested, every mode of rigging and sailing her treated with a patient perseverance which cannot be too highly commended. The result is a handbook to boat-building in the truest sense of the word. The amateur sailor who resolves to be his own shipwright will simply find this book indispensable. Had Mr. Leslie lived in the years after the taking of Troy, instead of the directions and tools which "divine Calypso" was obliged to give the hero before he could build his raft to quit Ogygia, she would simply have presented him with a copy of The Sea-Boat: How to Build Her. When the author condescends to insert small drawings of his boats in their native element, these are full of life and spirit; but for the most part the illustrations are confined to technical matters. There are some sensible cautions at the end of the book on beaching a boat and sailing in rough weather or in tidal rivers. A capital index of nautical terms is appended, by which fresh-water sailors may learn that "wim-wams," "humpkins," and "washstrakes" are not garrulous creatures like "bandersnatches" and "borogroves." In short, Mr. Leslie has produced so attractive a treatise that it may be hoped the drowning of many amateur sailors in boats of their own construction next summer will not have to be laid to his charge.

The Still Life of the Middle Temple. By W. G. Thorpe. (Bentley.) The title of this book is misleading. We anticipated something to remind us at least of Lamb's inimitable essay on the Benchers of the Inner Temple. After 257 pages of miscellaneous reminiscences, Mr. Thorpe devotes his last hundred pages to "The Middle Temple, with its Table Talk." Unfortunately, the contents of this last chapter are the most disappointing in the book. Sergeant Ballantine seems to be Mr. Thorpe's hero. No worse selection could have been made by one who set himself to record the still life of the Middle Temple. Many and good are the stories our author has heard "in a long and active life," but we cannot say they are all new to us. The taint of Joe Millerism hangs about many of them. For instance, the tale of "'Tis I, sir, rolling rapidly" is an old friend. Having said this, we hasten to add that no story loses in Mr. Thorpe's telling. He knows how to make the best of his material, whether new or old, and, like the French cook, can do almost equally well with good meat or with good leather. Mr. Thorpe was a Johnian, and his stories about his old Cambridge college are among his best. Here is one of them:

"John's Chapel was the old one, and had at its south-east corner Bishop Fisher's chantry, fitted with benches, and occupied during service. Being round a kind of corner, and out of view of all but two or three dons, most of them purblind, it was resorted to for reading books and other diversion, and hence it was called the Iniquity. Great was the astonishment of a senior dean when, in the hush while the reader was looking up the first lesson, there came from within the Iniquity—'What's trumps?'"

It is both tempting and easy to pick the plums out of a collection of anecdotes; but we leave this to the reader. A pleasant task he will find it; as there is hardly a dull page in this book, which is admirably suited to form the idle reading of an idle day.

Stray Records. By Clifford Harrison. (Bentley.) This is a book which one would rather praise than read. It contains the personal and professional reminiscences of the well-known reciter, Mr. Clifford Harrison, who tells us in a lengthy preface that they are taken from thirty of his notebooks, which he kept at the suggestion of a lady friend. The reviewer who wades through these two volumes of 280 and 304 pages has certainly no reason to bless the friend. All that the world would care to know, Mr. Clifford Harrison could have very well told in fifty pages. "Lucas Malet" is the literary pseudonym of Mrs. William Harrison, the youngest daughter of Charles Kingsley. Her letters to Mr. Clifford Harrison form the most interesting pages in his book. Admirers of Tom Jones (and who does not admire Fielding's masterpiece) will be interested in a criticism from the pen of the author of The Wages of Sin are Death:—

"Tom Jones is quite in another style. I suppose I ought to be shocked at it. But realism is the topmost apple on the topmost bough of modern culture; and if we are to admire it in a contemporary Frenchman, why not in a Georgian Englishman? . . . I have been a little troubled lest my own book should become a trifle hysterical, lest we should sit shrieking at agony point after the manner of ——. Tom Jones is an excellent correction to any such tendency, keeps one's sense of humour lively, and makes one 'wear one's rue with a difference,' such a difference that at times it ceases to look like rue at all, and becomes really, I think, a very fragrant and pretty little posy."

The following is also in Lucas Malet's happiest style:—

"She belongs to an older and more dignified generation—a generation which knew not Darwin, and regarded us not as human animals, but as very wonderful creatures indeed, for whom the whole universe was made, this material world to supply us with a temporary, and heaven with an eternal resting-place. God himself—if I may say so reverently—was regarded as a sort of adjunct to man."

Mr. Harrison still has time to play the part of a Boswell to his sister-in-law. If he must write books, in a biography of Lucas Malet lies his path of safety. Excluding her letters, the author has himself supplied an appropriate motto for his Records, in Hamlet's exclamation—"Words, words, words!"

Education. A Manual of Practical Law. By James Williams. (A. & C. Black.) Mr. Williams has brought together all kinds of educational subjects which have a legal aspect. He deals with higher, elementary, technical, professional education; criminal law, educational trusts, education of women; the master in his relation to the public, religion, governing bodies, other masters, the parent, and the pupils; the married woman and the infant as teachers. The cases cited are given fully, and make interesting reading. The authorities given as the basis of the book are an excellent list for the educational student. Walcott's English Ministers, however, should read "Minsters." The sketches of different kinds of education, especially those of the universities and higher education, are of more than legal interest—they are of general value. Altogether, Mr. Williams has succeeded in writing a book offering clear legal light to teachers. It is at the same time distinctly readable, abounding in well-selected illustrations of antiquarian, historical, academical, and personal interest.

Fugitive Slaves (1619-1865), by Marion Gleason McDougall (Boston, U.S.: Ginn & Co.), is No. 3 of the "Fay House Monographs," a series of publications of the Society for the Collegiate Instruction of Women. It is a valuable contribution to the history of American slavery, giving, as it does, in a small compass, the principal legislation on the subject, and the leading cases of fugitive slaves. It is worth while to note how saturated American society has always been with the slavery doctrine, and how slow was its awakening to anything like a full recognition of the equal rights of all men and women before the law. The "father of his country" was, as is well known, a slaveholder, not so much from principle as from a desire that he and his family should keep what they had. From the present work it appears that a demand he made, in 1796, for the return of one of his slave, who had escaped to Portsmouth, N.H., was the occasion of the "first recorded refusal, on moral grounds, to return a slave." It is an interesting and not unprofitable matter for reflection, how widely different subsequent American history might have been from the tragic and bloody struggle which abolished negro slavery, if Washington had been noble enough to emancipate his own slaves, and to refuse to have any part or lot in slavery. At that time there was a decided public feeling against the institution—sufficient, at least, to prevent the return of Washington's fugitive slave on the occasion just referred to. It was afterwards that the slave-power rose to its full strength; and its ultimate fall was due more to its own insufferable arrogance than to the high-mindedness of any American statesmen, from Washington onward. The leaders of the emancipation movement were, with the fewest exceptions, persons whom the American electors did not entrust with their political affairs. Miss McDougall's monograph is as impartial as a purely historical work should be, and it is the force of her well-considered facts which teaches once more the old lesson against human tyranny.

In Hops and Hopping, by J. B. Marsh (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.), an excellent account is given of the great Kentish industry. The scenery of the county is charmingly depicted in the admirable illustrations of Messrs. E. T. D. Stevens and J. Rochefort. But not Kent alone is here treated, the whole subject is handled with conscientious care.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A MEMOIR of the late Dr. William Reeves, Bishop of Down and Connor, is in preparation. Any of his correspondents who have letters from him possessing personal or literary interest are requested to send them to Major Reeves, Armagh, for use in the compilation of the memoir.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press, nearly ready for publication, a posthumous poem by Owen Meredith (the late Earl of Lytton), entitled King Poppy: a Fantasia.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL & Co. announce for immediate publication, as the first volume of a series of six "Books about Books," The Great Book Collectors, by Mr. Charles Elton.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish this month a new Life of Cervantes, by Mr. James Fitzmaurice Kelly. It is described as a biographical, literary, and historical study, with a tentative bibliography from 1585 to 1892 and an annotated appendix on the "Canto de Caliope."

THE same publishers announce a new book by Mr. W. H. Hudson, "the naturalist in La Plata," to be entitled Idle Days in Patagonia.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & Co. will publish immediately a volume by Lord Norton, entitled High and Low Church.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE have in the press, for publication on large and small paper before the end of the month, a new, short, imaginative work by Mr. Frederick Wedmore—the first book of this nature written by Mr. Wedmore since Pastorals of France. Like that earlier volume, the new one—to be called Renunciations—will consist of three stories, in which the author aims at a "realism" somewhat more significant than that which consists in "the faithful transcript of the obvious."

AN important work on British New Guinea, by Mr. J. P. Thomson, hon. secretary to the Brisbane branch of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia, is almost ready for publication. A valuable feature will be the Appendix, containing contributions to the geology, fauna, flora, &c., of the country, by Sir William Macgregor, Baron Ferdinand von Mueller, Prof. Liversidge, and others. The proof sheets have been revised by Dr. H. Robert Mill and Dr. Bowdler Sharpe.

MR. F. MARION CRAWFORD's novel, "Don Orsino," the last of the Saracinesca trilogy, which has been appearing in Macmillan's Magazine, will be published in three-volume form next week.

AN unabridged edition of Cotton's translations of Montaigne's Essays, revised by Mr. W. C. Hazlitt, will be published immediately in a cheap edition by Messrs. Bell. The work will be in three handy volumes, bound in white buckram, with gilt backs and tops. The quotations throughout have been collated and the references verified.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a work by Mr. F. E. Spencer, entitled Did Moses write the Pentateuch?

MESSRS. BELL will issue immediately a work on Dancing as an Art and Pastime, by Mr. Edward Scott, who treats his subject in its artistic as well as in its social aspect. Photographs of nearly one hundred figures from life, given on forty plates, serve to illustrate the steps and movements of the ordinary dances of the ballroom, and the varieties of fancy and skirt dancing, which are also fully described. Rules for gracefulness are given, which are supplemented by "grace-giving exercises, with specially adapted music."

IN the December number of Folk-lore Mr. Whitley Stokes will edit and translate the Bodleian fragment of the Dindsenchus. Brief notes will define the relation of the version to that in the book of Leinster and other early Irish MSS. This will be the first time that any considerable portion of this important text has been made public either in the original or in English. As is well known, the Dindsenchus is a collection of stories, brought together not later than the middle of the twelfth century, accounting for the names of the chief natural sites and objects, forts and dwelling-places of mediæval Ireland. The personages of these stories are largely those that figure in the mythological heroic cycles of ancient Irish literature, and the whole is one of the most valuable monuments extant of Irish tradition. In publishing this important Irish text in Folk-lore, the Folk-lore Society is giving another proof of the interest it has continually felt in the preservation and elucidation of Celtic myth and romance.

ON November 14 Mr. Gilbert Dalziel will publish "Judy's Annual" for 1893, entitled Sweethearts. The book will contain thirty-five love stories, relating to thirty-five ladies whose portraits appear, one opposite each story. The illustrations are by Messrs. W. Parkinson and J. Bernard Partridge.

MR. FREDERICK LEAL's novel, Wynter's Masterpiece, has just been issued in a cheap edition, with a frontispiece by M. Jean de Paleologue.

A SERVICE in commemoration of the founders and benefactors of Westminster School will be held in the Abbey, on Thursday, November 17, at 8.30 p.m. The service will be in Latin, with the special psalms and the Te Deum set to Gregorian music. After the service, the head master and the masters will hold a reception in the great schoolroom.

THE first meeting of the fourteenth session of the Aristotelian Society will be held at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday next, November 7, at 8 p.m., when the president, Mr. Shadworth H. Hodgson, will deliver his annual address on "Mind." Among the subjects for discussion during the session are the following: "Does Law in Nature exclude the Possibility of Miracle?"; "Has the Perception of Time a Genesis in Thought?"; and, "Is Human Law the Basis of Morality, or Morality of Human Law?"

BOOK SALES for the season begin next week, when Messrs. Sotheby will disperse the collections of the late Baron Heath, well known as consul-general for Italy, and of the late Mr. E. G. Grigley. The former is a representative gentleman's library—books bought for reading, and with the owner's arms on the binding. We may mention a set of the Roxburghe Society's publications; Byron's Letters and Journals, extended to twenty volumes; and a collection of Eton Latin prose exercises, 1748-58. Mr. Grigley seems to have been more of a collector, affecting illustrated works, first editions, and large-paper copies. He possessed some of Gould's ornithological folios; Sowerby's English Botany and Curtis's Botanical Magazine (with the continuations); Blake's Jerusalem; and some volumes of Ruskin. To those who are curious about the works of Mr. Thomas Hardy, we may commend a book here entitled "Returns of the Nation."

PROF. JOHN NICHOL lectured on Tennyson to large and appreciative audiences last week, at Arundel and Horsham. At Horsham he made a strong appeal to the townsfolk to support the scheme for doing honour to the memory of "England's greatest lyrical poet, Percy Bysshe Shelley."

COUNT ANGELO DE GUBERNATIS, together with Cavaliere C. Vallardi of Milan, conceived the idea of celebrating the fourth centenary of the discovery of America by a collection of autographs from all parts of the world in honour of Columbus. The original documents have been presented to the city of Milan; but facsimiles of the entire collection are published, as a supplement to Natura ed Arte, in an Album with a beautifully designed cover. The total number of autographs is 708, thus arranged:—(1) Ministers at the Italian Court; (2) Oriental scholars in Italy, who write for the most part in the language they profess; (3) distinguished Italian authors; (4) other European; and (5) non-European countries. England is not very strongly represented, though Tennyson did copy out some lines from his poem on Columbus; and the United States are still worse off. Provençal, Polish, and Hungarian are conspicuous by their number; while the connexion of Count de Gubernatis himself with the East has brought many curiosities from India, China, Syria, and Armenia. Quite apart from the contents of the letters, and the eminence of some of the writers, the Album affords an interesting study in modern orthography. We do not know any other name than that of Columbus which could have furnished the occasion for such universal interest.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. GLADSTONE has prepared a revised and annotated version of his Rede Lecture at Oxford, under the title of An Academic Sketch, which is being printed at the Clarendon Press, and will be published on Monday next by Mr. Henry Frowde.

MR. C. DRURY E. FORTNUM, the re-founder of the Ashmolean Museum, has been elected to an honorary fellowship at Queen's College, Oxford, which has always delighted to confer this distinction upon archaeologists. Dr. S. Birch and Dr. Schliemann were of the number; and the present list includes M. Maspero and Prof. Mahaffy.

MR. J. RENDEL HARRIS, the newly appointed reader in palaeography at Cambridge, has been re-elected to a fellowship at Clare College.

PREBENDARY GIBSON, principal of the Wells Theological College, has been appointed lecturer in pastoral theology at Cambridge for the current year.

PROF. WESTLAKE is lecturing at Cambridge this term on "Naval War and Neutrality." Next term, he proposes to lecture on the questions of international law arising out of the relations of the principal civilised states during the period 1815-1856.

ON Friday of this week Mr. W. R. Morfill, reader in Slavonic at Oxford, was to deliver a public lecture on "The Drama in Russia."

MR. W. G. MARKHEIM will give a lecture at the Taylor Institution at Oxford, on Thursday next, November 10, upon "Molière and the Doctors of his Age."

THE memorial to the Council of the Senate at Cambridge, advocating a change in the time of the year for the Tripos examinations (of which mention was previously made in the ACADEMY), has received 108 signatures.

DR. ARTHUR A. RAMBAUT, assistant at the Dunsink Observatory, has been elected Royal Astronomer of Ireland, on the foundation of Dr. Francis Andrews, in succession to Sir R. S. Ball. The chair of astronomy in the University of Dublin is annexed to this office; and the appointment is made by the Board of Trinity College.

Mrs. M. C. POTTER has been appointed to the chair of botany at the College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

PROF. ALTHAUS proposes to give a course of five lectures on "Modern German Literature," at University College, Gower-street, on Thursdays, at 8.30 p.m., beginning on November 10. The last of the course will be devoted to Count Moltke as an author. These lectures will be delivered in German, and are free to the public.

PROF. KARL PRARSON delivered this week a course of four lectures at Gresham College upon "The Laws of Chance in their relation to Thought and Conduct."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for November opens with Prof. G. A. Smith's admirable paper on Esdras, and its historical scenes. Prof. Ramsay's article on St. Paul's first journey in Asia Minor will also reward careful study. Prof. Beet continues his papers on the Atonement, and Dean Chadwick gives another of his graceful Gospel studies. Mr. Carleton's essay on "The Idiom of Exaggerated Contrast," Dr. Stalker's interesting sketch of Köstlin, Dr. Driver's notice of Davidson's Ezekiel, and Dr. M. Dods's note on Poyton's Memorabilia of Jesus complete the contents of the number.

THE Jewish Quarterly Review for October is less generally interesting than some of the previous numbers, but supplies a large amount of valuable material to scholars. Dr. C. Taylor concludes his learned examination of the "Dirge of Cohelkth," with much ridicule of what he calls the "anatomical theory." Dr. Leopold Cohn describes the latest researches on Philo; naturally enough he has much to say of Wendland's book published last year. One regrets, however, not to see the name of Conybeare. Dr. Schechter gives a valuable and interesting sketch of Nachmanides, and continues his notes on the Cambridge Hebrew MSS. Mr. Jacobs gives further notes on the Jews of Angevin England; Mr. M. D. Davis also contributes historic notes on the Jews in England. S. Krauss studies the references to the Jews in the Church Fathers. W. Bacher and M. Adler supply minor notes; and G. A. Kohut sends one of the last letters of the late Dr. Graetz, showing the width of his interests.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for November contains an article on the Essenes by Tideman (well known by his study on Enoch in the same periodical), and another of Boekenooogen's very original Christological essays. Pfeiderer's Development of Protestant Theology finds a discriminating reviewer in W. C. van Manen, who regrets the numerous lacunae in this well-written sketch, and the predominance of a subjective element. Among the other books reviewed is Jean Réville's Etudes sur les Origines de l'Épiscopat, which, according to van Manen, defends the genuineness of the Epistles of Ignatius on some rather weak grounds. Memorial notices are also given to Opzoomer, the Utrecht philosopher, and Lipsius, the liberal theologian.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE LAST EVENING.

OVER sea the sun, in a mystery of light,
Burns across the waters, on the blown spray
glaucous;
Luminously crested, wave behind wave advancing
Pours its rushing foam with low, continual roar.
The wide sands around us, flashing wet and bright,
Mirror cliffs suffused with clearest warmth serene,
Rory earth, gray rocks, and grass of greenest
green;
We two pace together the solitary shore.
A sadness and a joy are mingled in the air,
From the dying day a voice, "I go and come back never!"
From the waves an answering shout, "We rush, we break forever!"
Wake in my heart echoes, that conflicting swell.
Now on the last evening, now we are aware
Of something in our souls that will not say, 'tis ended.
In our parting looks are thoughts eternal blended
See, our hands are joined: we cannot say farewell!

LAURENCE BINYON.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. W. W. GIBBINGS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Story of Nell Gwyn," by Peter Cunningham, a new edition, with the author's latest corrections and additions, edited with notes, introduction, and memoir of the author, by H. B. Wheatley, with all the original woodblocks, and nine portraits on copper; "The World of Music," with the great composers, with the great singers, with the great virtuosi, by Anna Countess de Brémont, in 3 vols.; "Miscellaneous Works of Sir Philip Sidney," edited with Life and Notes, by W. Gray; "Diary of Madame D'Arblay, in 3 vols., with portraits; "Life of Napoleon Buonaparte," by W. Hazlitt, in 3 vols.; "Handy Book of Literary Curiosities," by W. S. Welsh; "Representative French Fiction," a series of complete and accurate translations, each in one volume; "Mademoiselle de Maupin," "Salammbô," "Madame Bovary," "Renée Pluperin," "Germinie Lacerteux," &c., &c.; "Poetical Works of Lord Byron," in 3 vols.; "Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott," in 3 vols.; "An Angel's Visit," by Agnes Marchbank.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERNARD-LAVERGNE. L'Évolution sociale. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr.
BRUNS, H. Griechische Götterideale, in ihren Formen erläutert. München: Verlagsanstalt für Kunst u. Wissenschaft. 7 M. 50 Pf.
FAYAT, Jules. Plaidoyers et discours du baronnat. Paris: Chevalier-Maresq. 15 fr.
HASSERT, K. Reise durch Montenegro. Wien: Hartleben. 5 M.
HEINE, C. Der Roman in Deutschland von 1771 bis 1778. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M.
LÖSCH, F. Balder u. der weisse Hirsch. Ein Beitrag zur deutschen Mythologie. Stuttgart: Frommann. 3 M. 75 Pf.
SEELMANN, W. Die Totentänze d. Mittelalters. Norden: Soltan. 2 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BAURMANN, J. Dodekapropheten Aethiopum. 1. Hft. Der Prophet Obadiah. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
JENNER V. LANGOOG, F. A. Krypto-Monothéismus in den Religionen der alten Chinesen u. anderer Völker. Leipzig: Engelmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BLIEDTKE, K. Geschichte u. Geist der europäischen Kriege unter Friedrich d. Grossen u. Napoleon III. Leipzig: Friedrich. 4 M.
COULANGES, Fustel de. Questions historiques, revues et complètes par Camille Julian. Paris: Hachette. 10 fr.
DOPCH, A. Das Treffen bei Lobositz (1. Octbr. 1756), sein Ausgang u. seine Folgen. Graz. 4 M. 50 Pf.
GAEDLER, H. Erythra. Untersuchungen üb. die Geschichte u. die Verfassg. der Stadt im Zeitalter d. Hellenismus. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.
GRUETZMACHER, Die Bedeutung Benedikts v. Nursia u. seiner Regel in der Geschichte d. Mönchtums. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
HRIEHL, K. Th. Essays aus neuerer Geschichte. Bamberg: Buchner. 8 M.
JÖRS, P. Untersuchungen zur Gerichtsverfassung der römischen Kaiserzeit. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 2 M. 40 Pf.
KEIL, B. Die solonische Verfassung in Aristoteles' Verfassungsgeschichte Athens. Berlin: Gaertner. 6 M.
KRETSCHMAR, O. Erbrechtliche Compensationen. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 2 M. 40 Pf.
LUTYER, J. Moderne Oesichtsforscher. I. Die gegenwärt. Geschichtsbestrebgn. in Aachen. Eine krit. Studie. Aachen: Müller. 1 M. 80 Pf.
MONTESQUIEU, Mélanges inédits de, p.p. le Baron de Montesquieu. T. I. Paris: Roman. 10 fr.
MÜLLNER, H. F. v. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Einigungen der alten Eidgenossenschaft m. dem Ausland u. d. Verhaltens der Eidgenossenschaft bei dem endgültigen Uebergang der Franche-Comté an Frankreich. Bern: Schmid. 1 M. 60 Pf.
NICOLAY, N. de. Générale description du Bourbonnais, p.p. A. Vassière. Paris: Durand. 10 fr.
NOIRET, Hippolyte. Documents inédits pour servir à l'histoire de la domination vénitienne en Crète de 1380 à 1485. Paris: Thorin. 15 fr.
RUBENSOHN, O. Die Mysterienheiligtümer in Eleusis u. Samothrake. Berlin: Gaertner. 7 M.
SICARD, l'abbé. L'ancien clergé de France: les évêques avant la Révolution. Paris: Lecoffre. 6 fr.
TRIEBEL, H. Das Interregnum. Eine staatsrechtl. Untersuchung. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 3 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRUGMANN, J. Geschichte der Philosophie. 2. Bd. 1. Abth. Von Kant bis Fichte. Berlin: Mittler. 1 M.
BURKHARDT, R. Das Centralnervensystem v. Protopterus annexens. Berlin: Friedländer. 10 M.
GILBERTI COLCESTRINI, G. De magnete, magnetisque corporibus (London 1600). Fesm.-Druck. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 21 M.
JOEL, K. Der echte u. der Xenophontische Sokrates. Berlin: Gaertner. 14 M.
IKYER, E. Geologische u. geographische Experimente. 1. Hft. Deformation u. Gebirgsbildg. Leipzig: Engelmann. 1 M. 80 Pf.
RICKERT, H. Der Gegenstand der Erkenntnis. Freiburg-i.B. Mohr. 2 M. 20 Pf.
TASCHENBERG, O. Historische Entwicklung der Lehre v. der Parthenogenesis. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- NAUCK, A. Tragicæ dictioris index speculans ad tragicorum graecorum fragmenta. Leipzig: Voss. 12 M. 25 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRAYER-BOOK OF EDWARD VI. FOR HOUSEHOLD USE.

Blechingley Rectory: Oct. 16, 1892.

I have noticed a copy of the first Prayer-book of King Edward VI. in the old library now kept in the vestry of the parish church, Reigate, of an edition which I have never before seen, and which may possess some interest for your readers. It is not an ordinary edition of the Prayer-book at all, but a special form of it adapted for private and household use, designed for binding up with a Bible, and containing little more than those parts actually needed for the private recitation of Mattins, Evensong, and Litany.

The volume containing it is a quarto, printed in two columns, which now begins with "A Table of the Principal matters conteyned in the Byble, in which the Readers maye fynde and practise many commune places" (two sheets, last leaf blank). Then follows the Prayer-book (three sheets, A. B. C. fols. 1-12). There appears never to have been any title page, table of Psalms, or Calendar; but folio 1 begins with "The Order of Commen Prayer, for Mattins and Evensonge thorowe oute the whole yere." ¶ Here after foloweth a general rule for the service of the whole yere, wherein everye man may knowe as wel the proper service appoynted for the princypall feastes of the yere, as also all Sondayes and other dayes of the yere; as it is appoynted by the Table and Kalender ordayne for the same. An order for Matyns daylye through the yere, to begynne with the Lordes prayer called the Pater noster, as foloweth.

Then follows the Mattins (beginning with the Lord's Prayer), as in the ordinary editions, but the rubric is altered, as will be described presently. Mattins is followed by Evensong and Athanasian Creed. Then comes the Proper of the Season and of the Saints, without heading, except "¶ The fyrste Sonday in Aducente," but having the Epistles and Gospels omitted and also the Introits, although the titles of the Introits are given, e.g., "Beatus vir Psalm i." At the end of this part, without any space left in the printing, follows this rubric (from the Communion Service), "Then shall folowe the collecte of the daye, with one of these ii. collectes folowyng for the kynge"; and then the two collects are given in full. Then follows "A generall confession to be made before we receyve the holy Communion. Almyghtye God, father of, &c. A prayer to be sayde before the receyving of the holye communion. We do not presume, &c. A thankesgeyving unto God after the receyvinge of the holye Communion. Almyghtye and everlyvyng God, &c. ¶ The Letany and Suffrages. O God the Father, &c. ¶ Imprinted at London by Nycholas Hyll for Abraham Veale, dwelling in Pauls churche yerde at the sygne of the Lambe." Then follows the Bible, with a fresh registration (no title). There is a title before the Psalms—"The thyrd part of the Byble contaynyng these bookes: the Psalter, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Cantica Canticorum, the Prophets, Essay, &c."; and at the end "A Table to fynde the Epistle and Gospel usually read in the Church."

That this edition of the Prayer-book was intended for private and household use is shown not only by the omission of the Communion Service and occasional offices, but by the rubrics, which are systematically altered throughout to suit the circumstances of lay people who wished to say the daily services at home. All mention of the priest or clerks is omitted, as may be seen in the opening rubric which I give above; for example, instead of "Priest" and "Aunsware," this edition uniformly reads "Versicle" and "Aunsware." The directions that the minister shall read the lessons with a loud voice, that he shall turn himself so as he may best be heard, and that the lessons shall be sung in a plain tune—all these are omitted.

The Psalter was, of course, to be found in the Bible; but it is curious that there should be no Table of Psalms nor Calendar with the lessons, especially as some such "general rule" is alluded to at the beginning of the book.

In conclusion, I must ask pardon for any mistakes which may be found in this description, as I had but a short time at my disposal in which to examine the book and to make notes, and am anything but a practised bibliographer.

W. C. BISHOP, JUN.

"COUVADE"—THE GENESIS OF AN ANTHRO-POLOGICAL TERM.

Oxford: Nov. 2, 1892.

Had Dr. Murray communicated with me before sending to last week's ACADEMY his letter on "couvade," part of that letter would probably have been suppressed. In it he censures me for introducing, on what he considers insufficient grounds, the word "couvade" into the English language. In 1865, in my Early History of Mankind (chap. x.), I was discussing the group of customs of which the principal one is that, on the birth of a child, the father goes to bed as if he were the mother. Wanting a general term for such customs, and finding statements in books that this male lying-in lasted on till modern times in the south of France, and was there called couvade, that is, brooding or hatching (couver), I adopted this word for the set of customs, and it has since become established in English. Dr. Murray, however, likes it so little as to remark on its "anthropological use (or abuse)," which sounds a somewhat strong expression, even between philologists. By an elaborate argument, which it will not be necessary to reproduce here, and which, indeed, I cannot altogether follow, he demonstrates that "It is quite certain that neither in 1865 nor in 1829, nor at any date preceding, was couvade an existing name for the alleged practice in any European language." To explain its being used in modern times by "loose and picturesque writers," as he calls them, he propounds a theory of its having been accidentally brought up through a line in a serio-comic poem on midwifery, the Lucinade of Sacombe, not far from the beginning of the present century.

If, now, Dr. Murray will do what he might have done before criticising me, that is, examine the foot-note in Early History of Mankind referring to the French word couvade, he will find there an indication leading him to the following passage from Rochefort's Histoire des Îles Antilles (2nd ed. 1665, p. 550, corresponding to 1st ed. 1658, p. 494). In describing the Caribs, it is here written:

"C'est qu'au même tems que la femme est delivree le mary se met au lit, pour s'y plaindre et y faire l'accouchée: coutume, qui bien que sauvage et ridicule, se trouve neantmoins, à ce que l'on dit, parmy les peuples d'une certaine Province de France. Et ils appellent cela faire la couvade."

Being occupied with the development not of the word but of the custom, I was content to refer to this passage without quoting it. There is a similar one in Lafitau, Mœurs des Sauvages Américains (1724, vol. I., p. 50). Even the verses of the accoucheur-poet really show by their details that he was well informed as to the custom, and was calling it by its accepted name of couvade, which, indeed, being a native of Carcassonne, he was likely to know. How much older than 1658 the word may be, does not appear. Dr. Murray's remark that the note on "couvade" in Béarn quoted by me from Legrand d'Aussy's Fabliaux, should have been ascribed to A. A. Renouard, the editor of the third edition, is quite true; but it does not materially alter the case, both author and editor being respectable authorities.

There are, I suppose, other early passages scattered about in literature; and Dr. Murray must not be surprised at their not having found their way into dictionaries, when he remembers how far the older dictionary writers were from attempting the exhaustive completeness which is so great a merit in his own. Even Littré has only taken the word "couvade," old as it is, from a translation of an essay by Prof. Max Müller, in fact, a review of my Early History of Mankind, which, as I have not forgotten, went far to bring about its success.

We all trust that Dr. Murray will live to see the completion of the New English Dictionary, at once so great a credit and so great a responsibility to the University of Oxford. May I express a hope that, with his hands already too full, he will not often go out of his way to become, as in this case, a supervisor of new words? He is not the editor of the English language, but of an English dictionary. People who want words will make them in their own way; and if a word gains currency, there is little good in calling its introduction an "abuse," seeing that the lexicographer, whether he likes the word or not, has to take it.

EDWARD B. TYLOR.

THE STORY OF NAMUKI.

Oxford Oct. 30, 1892.

My learned colleague, Mr. Andrew Lang, is quite right in supposing that the myth, or rather the Märchen, of Namuki is one of a very large class, and naturally calls out many echoes in our memory. From a psychological point of view, this class of Märchen begins with a mere post hoc statement; as that, for instance, the bright sister (day) follows after the black sister (night). Very soon, however, the post hoc story is changed into a propter hoc story; as, for instance, when the dark sister is represented as afraid, and as running away from the bright or the bright sister from the dark. In my earliest essays on Comparative Mythology, I collected a number of these post hoc propter hoc stories, chiefly connected with the Dawn or the break of day. First, we hear of the Sun simply following the Dawn, then of following her as a follower or lover, then of the Dawn fleeing before the Sun; and lastly, of the Dawn disappearing or dying in the embraces of the Sun. Then follows another stage which I call the conditional, largely represented by what are called in Sanskrit Samaya stories. Samaya means "an agreement," "a condition," and many more things. The agreement between Namuki and Indra not to kill each other is a samaya. The agreement between Pururavas and Urvasi, that she should never see him naked, is another. These agreements arose simply from looking on the effect, the post hoc, as conditioned. Thus, the story of the Dawn vanishing when touched by the rays of the Sun, was changed into the story of the Dawn promising to remain, if the Sun would not touch her, or, under a different form, that she would disappear if ever she saw the Sun in all his naked beauty. These conditions or samayas became extremely popular, and meet us likewise in the form of old riddles or puzzles. Some of them are easy to read, as, for instance, that of Namuki; others will always remain puzzles. A very favourite form is that of imposing conditions which seem almost impossible to fulfil, but which have to be fulfilled if some desired object is to be obtained, a princess to be gained, or a treasure to be discovered.

Thus Kraka is asked to appear before the king neither clothed nor unclothed, neither hungry nor satisfied, neither lonely nor in company, neither on horseback nor on foot. Nearly the same story is told by Grimm, as Die Ktze Bauerntochter; and the same, or very similar, conditions occur again and again in other stories which Grimm has collected in his Notes. Some of these conditions became in time so popular that they were attached again and again to the achievements of any popular hero, and they occur not only on Aryan soil, but—as Mr. Lang is well aware—in every part of the world. The invulnerability of certain heroes is closely connected with this class of mythological stories. Invulnerability seems to be an impossible condition, and it is generally brought about by some kind of samaya or agreement, as is the case with Balder. It is doubtful whether in the Siegfried story it is not an afterthought, for it does not occur in the oldest Eddic fragments.

The natural background, however, is by no means always so clear as in the Namuki or the Urvasi stories. Why Indra should be reduced to almost a shadow in fighting Namuki is explained to us by the Brāhmanas themselves, and by the story of Krisānu. But there is another story of Soma dying of consumption, which is often told in the epic and Paurāṇik literature. Soma, we are told, had twenty-seven wives, all the daughters of Daksha. These are, of course, the twenty-seven Lunar Mansions. But Soma is said to have neglected all his wives except Rohini, and therefore Soma's father-in-law caused him to die of consumption. Thus Soma became smaller and smaller every day. On earth herbs ceased to grow, plants lost their taste, animals fainted, and men were on the point of death. Then the gods proceeded to Daksha and asked him to remove the curse; but he declared that he could only remove half of it, so that now, when Soma lives again with every one of his wives, he wastes away during half the month only, and recovers himself after bathing in the Sarasvatī (Amāvāsya). The physical background in this story is clearer even than in that of Namuki. Still, there is yet a puzzle to solve, which astronomers are better able to grapple with than scholars. Why should Soma have dwelt with Rohini only, Rohini being the star Aldebaran? F. MAX MÜLLER.

Inverness: Oct. 31, 1892.

When I read Prof. Max Müller's account of Indra and Namuki in the ACADEMY of October 22, I recognised the similarity of the story to the Gaelic tales which turn on the breaking or fulfilment of geasa or "prohibitions"; and I at once recollected the special likeness of Namuki's "prohibitions" to those in the tale of Diarmad and Grainne. In drawing attention to this Gaelic parallel of an Indian tale, I am not, like Mr. Lang, so much afraid of the "physical background" of clouds and moonshine, characteristic of solar mythology, as of the worthy people who will have it that all our stories originally came from India; for I do not want them to "bag" also this beautiful story of "Diarmad and Grainne" as Eastern game.

The Irish versions do not have the incident in the same way as the Highland ones; and in the case of the latter, the "prohibitions" are given fully only in Kennedy's version in Lenbhar-na-Feinne (p. 153), a version which is at least one hundred years old. Kennedy begins with the marriage feast of Fionn and the young Grainne, and he thus proceeds in his quaint Gaelicised English way:—

"When they were at meat, Grainne saw the loving spot that was in Diarmad's forehead, that instant she fell in love with him, and with the leave of the company she took Diarmad to the door, then she said unto him with enchantment, 'Thou must be my husband, and go along with me'; he refused to be her husband, saying, 'I will not go with you in the day nor in the night, afoot nor on horseback, without or within a house, in light or in darkness, in company or alone.' When Diarmad said thus, he returned into the company. Grainne was contriving in her mind how she would break Diarmad's enchantment. She left her bed about break of day, and found an ass. She brought the ass to the door of the house and walked [waked] Diarmad, and said, 'Thou must now go with, for it is not day nor night, light nor darkness, I am not on horseback nor on foot, I am not in company nor alone, neither am I within or without a house, therefore your enchantment is loosed, and you must be my husband and go with me.'"

A German parallel may be found in Grimm's Tales, No. 91, "The Peasant's Wise Daughter." ALEXANDER MACRAIN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 6, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Mutual Aid among Animals," by Prince Krapotkin.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Duties of a Citizen," by Mr. Graham Wallas.
MONDAY, Nov. 7, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Head and Trunk," III., by Mr. W. Anderson.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Mead," by Mr. Shadworth H. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Carlyle Society: "The Rural Exodus," by Mr. P. Anderson Graham.
TUESDAY, Nov. 8, 8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Present Condition and Prospects of Western Australia," by Sir Malcolm Fraser.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Address by the President, and Presentation of Telford Medals, &c.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Anthropological Uses of the Camera," by Mr. E. F. Im Thurn; "Convade," by Mr. H. Ling Roth; "The Morong," by Mr. S. E. Peal.
WEDNESDAY, Nov. 9, 8 p.m. Geological: "A Sketch of the Geology of the Iron, Gold, and Copper Districts of Michigan," by Prof. M. E. Wadsworth; "The Gold-Quartz Deposits of Pahang (Malay Peninsula)," by Mr. H. M. Becher; "The Pambula Gold Deposits," by Mr. F. D. Power.
THURSDAY, Nov. 10, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Extremity," I., by Mr. W. Anderson.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers.
FRIDAY, Nov. 11, 5 p.m. Physical: Discussion, "Dimensions of Physical Quantities" and "Molecular Forces," by Messrs. Williams and Sutherland.
7.30 p.m. Ruskin: "Poetic Imagery," by Mr. H. Rose.
8 p.m. Mathematical: Annual Meeting; Election of Officers; Address by the Retiring President, Prof. Greenhill; "Some Properties of Homogeneous Isobaric Functions," by Mr. E. B. Elliott; "Certain General Limitations affecting Hyperbolic Squares," by Mr. S. Roberts; "A Group of Triangles of a given Triangle," by Mr. R. Tucker; "Secondary Tucker Circles," by Mr. J. Griffiths.
SATURDAY, Nov. 12, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

CRUSIUS ON HERONDAS.

Untersuchungen zu den Mimiamben des Herondas. Von Otto Crusius. (Teubner.)

Herondae Mimiambi. Accedunt Phoenicis Coronistae Mattii Mimiamborum Fragmenta. Ed. Otto Crusius. (Teubner.)

THE former of these two works is a minute and conscientious study of the newly-discovered Mimiambi of Herondas. The latter is the latest edition of the Mimiambi themselves, and is uniform with the other volumes of the Bibliotheca Teubneriana.

Since the appearance of Dr. Rutherford's and Mr. Kenyon's simultaneous editions in the autumn of 1891, a great deal has been written on Herondas, both in England and on the continent. The names of the various contributors will be found on pp. 14–17 of Crusius' cheap and convenient little volume; but much has yet to be done before anything like a final text can be looked for. Yet as each of the consecutive editions is, in some sense, an advance upon its predecessor, Herwerden's and Bücheler's upon Rutherford and Kenyon, Crusius' on Bücheler and Herwerden—yet so that a student of the poems cannot dispense with any one of them—we may confidently hope that the next few years will clear up at least some part of the difficulties which seem still to baffle inquiry. It is impossible, however, not to feel a regret that the greatest Greek scholar of the latter half of our century, Cobet, should have been denied the opportunity of exercising his skill on a writer so completely to his taste as Herondas. It is probable that Cobet would have settled the question of the period at which the Mimiambi lived with more of instinctive intuition than any living scholar can claim. A really elaborate commentary, like Crusius' Untersuchungen, and that the first serious attempt at being such—for Rutherford's edition did not aim at more than an outline commentary, and Bücheler's Latin translation, even with the help of the notes, is often perplexingly obscure, while Herwerden's commentary, spite of much learning and ingenuity, is confessedly a hasty and somewhat imperfect piece of work—can hardly fail to be received with unusual interest. The special studies to which Crusius has long devoted his attention, notably his monograph on The Age of Babrius, and his profound acquaintance with the Parvemiographi Graeci and all the literature of proverbs and proverbial sayings, could not have found a more suitable field to illustrate than these finished pictures of common Greek life, genre paintings filled with homely details and common associations. Many parallels have been drawn from this source—some, it may be, over-fanciful—nor is it likely that any succeeding commentator will equal Crusius in this particular line. The comic poets, Aristophanes and the large body of writers whose remains are now accessible to everyone in Kock's Fragmenta Comicorum Graecorum; Plautus and Terence; Theocritus, whose Adoniazusae is a near approximation, though in a more perfect shape, to the dialoguo form of Herondas, and who is considered by Crusius to be his contemporary; Sophron, whose Fragments, edited by Botzou in 1867, should now receive new attention, few and disappointingly scanty as they are; the Greek Anthology; Lucian, Lucilius and the Roman satirists, especially Persius; Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius, the minor poems of the Appendix Vergiliana, Martial; lastly, but almost more signally than any other Roman writer, Petronius; these are the illustrative sources mainly drawn upon. But the learning of the editor is, as all readers of *Philologus know, multifarious and many-sided: so that, in spite of the modest tone of the Preface, we rise from this volume of Untersuchungen, if not always convinced that he has "hit the right nail," at least satisfied by his learning and with much new knowledge gained on the way.

Rutherford and Bücheler are the editors most appealed to; and it is obvious that all their views have been carefully considered, although it is undeniable that either produced his edition somewhat in haste. On the other hand Herwerden, a scholar never lightly to be put aside, seems scarcely to have received his due share of consideration: as indeed the fact of his text and notes being printed in Mnemosyne has probably caused it to be less widely known.

* Now under the editorship of Crusius.

The plan of Crusius is to go through each poem in succession, giving the passages which are doubtful or difficult, and then explaining them with more or less copious illustrations, generally, when the words are sufficiently doubtful, adding a translation in German. The style of the commentary is vivid and interesting, though not over easy to anybody possessing an imperfect command of German: at times I have wished it had been in Latin. Yet the various points of interest which a new, and in his way exquisite, poet like Herondas presents—chronological, palaeographical, archaeological, religious, moral, linguistic, syntactical—are so adroitly blended and worked into each other by Crusius, with such full command of resources, that no page of his volume is dull. It must form the basis of every commentary which the future may produce.

There is perhaps no point on which Herondas opens so new a field of discussion as the ethical. It cannot be denied that the subjects of many—nay, most—of the poems, are of a kind from which a susceptible morality turns away. For instance, there is a grossness in the way in which the jealous Bitinna speaks of her connexion with her slave Gastron, which is, I believe, uncommon in extant Greek literature. The language of the old procuress, Gyllis, to the wife whose husband is beyond seas, Metriche, is an anticipation or a duplicate, but in far plainer terms, of Anna's solicitations to Dido. The second poem introduces us to a brothel, and to a pander of a very unblushing kind, one Battarus. On the other hand, the collection includes some pieces quite unexceptionable in tone. The Cottalus (iii.) is a really exquisite study of a thoroughly naughty boy: the Ἀσκληπείῳ ἀνατιθείσθαι (iv.) describes a temple of Asclepius in life-like and very realistic colours, as interesting, if not so amusing, as the scene in the Plutus: the Dream (viii.), which, like vi. and vii., is unfortunately too imperfect to allow us to judge it adequately, opens with an oburgatory summons to get up, addressed to a female slave Psylla, extremely like the beginning of Persius' well-known satire, Nempe hoc assidue. If we possessed this poem entire we should no doubt have a specimen of ἐνύπνια as superior to those which Crusius quotes from Plautus (Untersuch. pp. 154, 155) as is the finished Greek mimiamnist to the Roman comedian. Perhaps our editor has hardly dwelt enough on this point, which grows on the reader of Herondas with each new perusal. Both the diction and the metre are of a very refined type; so much so that occasional irregularities—like the trochee Γαλλί with which the papyrus makes I. 67 begin (cf. αἱ ἀστραγάλοι iii. 7: Palmer αἱ στρογγύλαι), or the apparent shortening of the first syllable of ἔρραψε (VI. 48)—seem to call for more of special discussion than in a poet whose rules are less exact. Did Herondas admit a trochee in the first foot, as the late T. H. Key believed was the case in Plautus? It is most unfortunate that we possess no complete poems of Callimachus in scanzons: yet a comparison of his scanzotic fragments with Herondas would be very acceptable. It is clear that neither of these poets bound themselves by the paroxyton law of the final spondee which seems to dominate Babrius. Unfortunately Schneider's Callimachea—a work produced in the decline of his powers—is as disappointing on this head as on most points of Callimachus' metre. It is to be hoped that Mr. Headlam's forthcoming edition of Herondas will dwell more fully on this primary topic.

In another line of recent investigation, epigraphy, Crusius has largely availed himself of an English work, The Inscriptions of Cos, by W. R. Paton and E. L. Hicks. The not unfrequent correspondence of names in these and in the poems is remarkable; yet it may be accidental.

Of no poet, perhaps, is it more true than of Herondas that his obscurities remain obscure after the most diligent handling and most ingenious conjecture. There are, I must confess, not a few passages in which the learning and many-sided ability of Crusius, aided as it has been by many other scholars who have corresponded with him on the subject, leave me unconvinced, or perhaps I should say unsatisfied as to whether the way to the right solution has been probed. Such a passage is the conclusion of IV., where Crusius gives καὶ ἐπὶ μὴ λάθῃ φέρειν, αὐτὴν τῆς ὑγίης νῶ πρόσδος· ἢ γὰρ ἱροῖσιν

95. μέλων ἄμ'· ἀρτίης ἢ ὑγίης· στί τῆς μοίρης.

The papyrus in 94 gives ἄμωι, which seems strongly against the first letter being N, even if the form νῶ can be certified. The rest of the explanation must, I think, be wrong: “und damit er (der νεωκόρος) es nicht vergisst, gib uns selbst von dem Heilthum; er hat ja zugleich (ἄμα) mit den Opfern zu schaffen” (vgl. Pind. Fr. 155 B. Εὐθυμῆ τε μέλων εἶν, AP. x. 10 μέλων . . . κύριος d. h. er ist stark in Anspruch genommen und könnte uns darüber vernachlässigen. ‘Das Heilthum gehört zu der richtigen Portion,’ zu dem Opferantheil, wie er sein soll (ἀρτίης zu ἀρτίος).” How can μὴ λάθῃ mean “lest he should forget”? And is it likely that ἀρτίης should be a disyllable? If, however, it is, I should prefer to follow Kenyon in reading μέζων ἄμ' ἀρτίης, and explaining with him “the benefit is greater when the portion is ready immediately.” And may not δὴ be retained as first person? “Am I to give any offering myself?” VI. 34, τῇ μὴ δοκέω would be more easily explained as τῇ μῇ, δοκέω, ironical “my friend, forsooth,” than in the way proposed, which seems to me quite impossible. VI. 63. κατ' οἰκέρν = κατ' οἰκέην = κατ' ἴδιαν ought to be supported by parallels; to me it is no improvement on Rutherford's κατ' οἰκέρν. VI. 67. I doubt Blass's conjecture δύο μὲν, followed as it is immediately by δύο γάρ. VI. 69, few readers, perhaps, will share the editor's confident feeling as to the meaning of τὰ βαλλία. If it is what Bücheler and Crusius think, the women, generally careful enough to avoid anything gross in expression, here deviate from their ordinary practice into a licence worthy of the Old Comedy. The end of this poem, 96-101, marks a great advance over the earlier editions. VII. 15, I suspect, is more nearly restored by Diels and Mekler than as printed. The Latin passage cited by Crusius might support their view; at any rate, why should a gratuitous hiatus like τὴν ἄνω εἶπον be admitted? I am touching here on what I conceive is the weak point of the edition—I mean too great a fondness for supplementa. Nowhere is this more conspicuous than in the Σκυτεὺς, in which some readers would probably prefer to be left to their own sweet imaginings. VII. 105, for εἰ δὲ σοὶ ἐστὶ χρεὶν it would be better metre to write εἰ δὲ τῶνδ' εἰ σοὶ χρεὶν; in II. 4, better Greek to substitute ἐγὼ δ' ἔχω οὐδ' ἄρτους for ἐγὼ δὲ κοῦδ' ἄρτους: VII. 126, perhaps τὴν μοι δοκίμ' ὥδε πέμποιτε or πέμποιτ' ἄν. In I. 74, both μετρηταῖσι and μετρηταῖσι are unsatisfactory, if indeed they are possible. Crusius' former conjecture γ' ἐταίρησι appears to me far more probable.

To the interest which so remarkable a discovery as the poems of Herondas naturally arouses, Crusius has made a contribution of great and lasting importance. Yet it will be a long time before the last word is said or written about them.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AGRAM ETRUSCAN TEXT—NUMERAL FORMS.

Barton-on-Humber: Oct. 17, 1892.

Referring to my letter on the new Etruscan text (ACADEMY, February 6, 1892), the admittedly numeral forms in it, so far as I can note them, are the following: ci, ciem cealxus, ciem cealxuz, ciś, ciz, eslem cealxus, eslem cialxus, eslem zabrumis, zabrumis, huśis zabrumis, zal, hu, hun, hunem cialxus, huns, and xis. These sixteen forms contain eleven new ones, viz.: cealxus, cealxuz, cialxus, ciz, zabrum, zabrumis, huśis, hun, hunem, huns, and xis.

1. The ci-group. xis = ciś, “2nd,” and appears seven times in the phrase avilō xis, “of the 2nd year.” My friend, Prof. Sayce, suggests (ACADEMY, October 15, 1892, p. 339) that ci had the value “4”; but, “as Canon Isaac Taylor has long since convincingly proved, the Ins. Fab. No. 2055, shows that ci means ‘2,’ because it is there applied to a certain number of children, and two names and two ages are given, both in figures” (R. B. Jun., The Etruscan Numerals, 15). Another argument that ci = 2 is drawn from the Cippus Perusinus.

“This at present untranslatable inscription speaks of naper xis, ‘12 grave-niches,’ and also of naper zis, hut naper, and naper ci. Hence, not perhaps unnaturally, it has often been supposed that the three numerals zal, hut, and ci must together = 12. Nothing, however, can really be more inconclusive. Arguing on similar lines, I might equally well suppose that the tomb-founder made a grave-niche for himself and eleven others for members of his family, and thus arrive at the meanings for these three numerals which I believe them to have possessed, namely, zal, ‘3,’ hut, ‘6,’ and ci, ‘2.’ But this would be equally inconclusive, although very possible” (ibid., 16).

Prof. Sayce further bases his view on the fact that “in the newly found book (col. x., l. 21) we have the sequence ki, hu, zal.” But this sequence need not be one of ascending numerical value, and the deduction in any case depends on the argument drawn from the Cippus Perusinus. The passage in col. x. 20, 21 reads: "20. zubeu. zal 21. esic. ci. halza. ou. esic. zal, &c.," from which surely nothing respecting numerical value can be drawn. It will be observed that in these remarks I take Prof. Sayce's standpoint, viz., that Etruscan is sui generis, and therefore do not touch on the argument from comparison.

Ciz = cizi (Fab. No. 2339), "twice."

Cealzus probably = cealzus, and = cialzus. So in the 30-form the variants muculx and meulx are used. Cealzus, "20th," an ordinal form; = CEALexa-USce, and thus gives -usce as a second ordinal termination with -isce.

2. The sa-group. Zabrum = 4×10 , = 40; zabrumis (known from Gam. No. 658 [z]abrumis) = zabrum-isce, "40th."

3. The huf-group. Hufis = hufs (Fab. Sup. ii., No. 116), "6th."

4. The ou-group. Oun. I suggested the existence of this form (The Etruscan Numerals, 12), which = "5." Ouns = "5th"; cf. ouuz (Fab. Sup. i., No. 387), "5 times." The forms oun and ouns complete this series.

Ounem. We find, however, an additional form ounem, which at once ranges itself with the m-forms; the principle of these is subtraction, viz., se-m (= 1 from 10), "9"; cie-m (= 2 from 10), "8"; and este-m (= 3 from 10), "7"; but oun-e-m (= 5 from 10?) seems to be merely an ordinal form. Xiem (= ciem) appears in the Cippus Perusinus, and so assists in throwing doubt on how the "12 grave-niches" were made up.

The Agram text also contains some other words which may be numerals, e.g.:

Sul, probably = zul, "3."

Xim, which I have given as a form of ciem, xiem (The Etruscan Numerals, 12), "8."

Ximθ, which also appears in the Cippus Perusinus, and which, I have suggested, = ximθrum*, = cin-θrum, = 2×10 = 20.

In col. vii. 7 the text reads arθ, but the alternative reading nrθ, = nrθ, "10," is to be preferred. So nrθzi (Fab. No. 2339), "10 times."

Ounxalem. I have given reasons (vide The Etruscan Numerals, 33) for supposing that the Etruscan 50-word was ounxulexa (= 5×10), and ounxul-em is a corresponding formation with oun-em.

Without further reference to the many other very interesting points and questions suggested by the Agram text, I will now only join with Prof. Sayce in expressing the hope that we shall in future hear no more of the Indo-European theory of Etruscan.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Oct. 1.)

W. O. H. CROSS, Esq., in the chair.—The hon. sec. read the annual report, and gave some information concerning the books which had been added to the library during the twelve months. Dr. Arthur B. Prowse was elected president for this (the eighteenth) session, when the following plays are to be considered: "Titus Andronicus," "Campaspe," "1 Henry VI.," "2 Henry VI.," "Faustus," "3 Henry VI.," "The Comedy of Errors," and "Friar Bacon." The hon. sec. (9, Gordon-road, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the society's library, which now consists of 574 volumes.

(Saturday, Oct. 22.)

Dr. ARTHUR B. PROWSE, president, in the chair.—Miss Florence Herapath, in a paper entitled "Did Shakspeare write 'Titus Andronicus?'" discussed the question in reference to the story, the style, and the characterisation. Bloodshed and horror were not repugnant to the theatre-goers of the time; and it is quite conceivable that, as one of his earliest efforts, Shakspeare worked popular incidents into a drama presenting effective points for stage representation. The style is in accordance with the times in which the action is laid; and yet we cannot fail in places to recognise the high moral lessons conveyed as to the deadliness of vice, the beauty of endurance, and the strength of paternal love. The language is swollen and turgid, and passion succeeds passion with a tempestuous force which deadens our feelings by the very multitude of impressions received. Yet, as amid the thunder-clouds, we get transient gleams of fitful sunshine, so, every now and then, a word, a phrase, a picture in this play calls before us a vision of the coming glory of the later plays, many passages in which have a distinct resemblance to many fine passages in "Titus Andronicus." In characterisation, the play holds its own. There are over twenty characters, and no two are alike, each standing out a distinct creation, impressing the mind with its peculiar personality.—Mr. S. L. Gwynn read "A Review of the Banks Edition of 'Titus Andronicus,'" a volume which consists of an excellent parallel reprint of the 1600 Quarto, and the 1623 Folio, with an introduction by Mr. Appleton Morgan, who supplies much curious and interesting information. Details of the habits and tastes of Elizabethan audiences are given, to account for the horrors of "Titus Andronicus." But Mr. Morgan's main thesis is the Shaksperian authorship of the play. He is convinced that it is Shakspeare's earliest drama, and he gives very good reasons for his belief. Most people will agree with him that on the whole the play is such as Shakspeare in his youth, emulating and imitating Marlowe, would have written. Mr. Morgan unwisely discards verse-tests, and would like to determine the order of the plays purely by the advance displayed in technical knowledge of stage effect. But Mr. Morgan fails to remember that this test has considerable limitations. Stage-effectiveness is not Shakspeare's strong quality as a dramatist. The marvel, of course, is that a play like "Hamlet" in subject should hold the stage, which proves consummate skill in surmounting difficulties. Yet the Roman plays are impossible on the modern stage, and "Cymbeline," one of the latest of all, is perfectly indefensible as regards its structure. Are we to conclude that "Cymbeline" is earlier than "As You Like It," or "The Taming of the Shrew"? Shakspeare had too many other things in his head to excel in stage technique, and at any moment in his career he may be found lapsing. It is safer to reason upon the character of verse-tests than upon skill in stage craft, for we have yet to find the critic who can decide authoritatively upon the question. An editor may, at least, be expected to know the text of the play he edits. Yet (at p. 44) Mr. Morgan criticises Shakspeare twice unjustly; firstly, in reference to Aaron's hanging, and secondly, as to the cutting of the throats of Tamara's sons. And when we have to deal with an editor who writes "oviform" for "oval," "this data," "chronolizing," "heteropheny," "mayhems," we begin to feel that, after all, the creeping mechanical methods of English criticism, with its verse-tests and its slavish study of the text, are more in sympathy with human requirements than the utterances of such a word-wielder as this, although he is undoubtedly right in rejecting the theory that Shakspeare in his youth was allowed to patch Marlowe's work, or, indeed, that he could have done so with success.—Dr. Prowse read a paper which dealt in detail with the "Nature Notes in 'Titus Andronicus.'" Shakspeare was a close observer of Nature in all her aspects, and the character of these references will afford a means not to be despised of helping to decide the question of authorship in those cases where it is uncertain. In "Titus Andronicus" there are at least twenty-three such allusions; and the character of these, when compared with that of the allusions in the undoubted plays, will lead to the conclusion that there is another hand than Shakspeare's in the play, though there are passages which may possibly have been his work. In "Titus Andronicus" the number of Nature-allusions is intermediate between what is found in different Shaksperian plays. As to their character, there are a few which seem appropriate and even truthfully suggestive, but many are far-fetched, and jar upon, rather than please, the feelings of a lover of Nature.

FINE ART.

The Life of Michelangelo Buonarroti. By John Addington Symonds. In 2 vols. (Nimmo.)

THE great Florentine has received a splendid tribute. "Sacrificions une boucle de cheveux au mânes de l'illustre et infortuné Spinoza," said Schleiermacher, if M. Bourget has verified his quotations. Mr. Symonds has sacrificed more generously to an equally illustrious and not much more fortunate shade. Let me enumerate some of the mere accidents of this book of his. It is in two volumes, quarto; it is clothed in a subdued and goodly green, and blazoned with the Buonarroti Simoni arms; its illustrations—there are fifty of them—are really superb reproductions of sculpture; there are plans and pedigrees, appendices of documents, a facsimile of handwriting (without which no self-respecting biography is now complete), footnotes, a list of authorities admirably catholic and brought down to this present year; and there is a fine index. It is a kingly book on this reckoning. As a labour of love, as the tribute of a lover of beautiful things to a maker of them, it merits all praise; as a dictionary, a solid contribution to history, it has the unique advantage of being based upon hitherto unexplored sources of evidence; as a work of art, that is, as an embodiment in another medium of the whole Michelangelo, the spirit of him and the milieu of him, it stands out (we may be sure) as the best and sincerest work its author can give us. And it is in this light, first of all, that readers of the ACADEMY will care to estimate it.

For of the dictionary order of biography there are more than enough. The work is drudgery; it means diligence and care and a neat method. With the gift of tongues, some energy and physical vigour, the thing is done every day—best in Italy, of course, rarely in France, acceptably in this country. It is quarryman's work after all. Now the mettle of Mr. Symonds is not the mettle of the quarryman. He is finer fibre. No mere digging was his Introduction to the Study of Dante (surely a true book!); the stones there cried out under his building. Dante lived; he walked in Hell again; he sped with Beatrice into high Heaven. And we saw the fabric of the Commedia grow; a marble in Provence from Pierre Vidal; a pillar in Italy from Guido Guinicelli. The book was real criticism. But Mr. Symonds had finer work yet in him. I know not when it was written—whether before or after the Introduction—but in his Sketches and Studies in Italy there were things of even higher beauty and power. He has never surpassed his "Lucretius" in that collection. So incisive was it and so weighty, with so much of the breadth, the universality of the great Epicurean himself, that we felt when we had read it as if we had got to the heart of that mystery. Here again, face to face with a strong soul, Mr. Symonds was in congenial company. A strenuous and tolerant philosophy, a poesy inclined to the epic, a tinge of "the higher Pantheism," paganism not quite out of sight (is it ever quite out of sight?), and Love and Beauty given all their weight in the cosmic scheme of things—here Mr. Symonds can be strong with the strong. This is why he lingers with Lucretius and Dante and Michelangelo for choice. But it does not at all exhaust the catalogue of his sympathies. Humanism, like that of Leo Battista Alberti's, neo-paganism like Politian's, or fine careless raptures like the best passages of Lorenzo's art-life, touch him nearly; he can love the décadence of Praxiteles or Sodoma, the golden animalism of Titian, as well as the colder force of Luca Signorelli or the massiveness of Mantegna; he knows equally well Luini and Gaudenzio Ferrari. Lombardy and Rome, perhaps, rather than Florence, are his happiest hunting grounds; and there is no doubt that his art lies in criticism rather than in history. Well, then he projected his Renaissance in Italy. The four volumes swelled to five, to seven. Splendid in parts, it is a failure as a whole. The artist struggled wearily in the heavy armour of the archaeologist. The seven volumes with notes and an index stifled him. An artist like Gibbon, or even Michelet, could find his best inspiration in history; Mr. Symonds could never be a historian. He belongs to the ranks of Sainte-Beuve and Pater; criticism is his métier. So it is not altogether his fault that his Renaissance is inadequate to the seeker after facts and unsatisfying to the lover of ideas, that it has lacked success in Italy and failed to stimulate in England. We are entitled to ask of Mr. Symonds (he has taught us to ask) ideas; what delights us in his best work is his fine sense of facts, not the facts themselves. Or translation. For of good translation—that translation which is to literature as engraving is to painting—he is a master, the equal of Baudelaire, the equal of Rossetti, the equal (odd conjunction!) of Doctor Jowett. His verse renderings of the Canti Carnascialeschi, or of Politian's madrigals, or Michelangelo's sonnets; his prose rendering of Benvenuto Cellini's memoirs or of snatches of the Italian literature he knows so exhaustively—passages from the Fioretti, the Decamerone, the Cortigiano—these are of the value almost of the original. Nothing is so hard of attainment or so precious when secured as a translation which aims at spirit and form as well as matter. Yet Mr. Symonds has aimed thus high, and has arrived. This is his real vocation—aesthetic criticism not history, literature not compilation, art not dictionary-making.

Consider this handsome book for instance! It aims at being biography, at presenting the whole man in his habit as he lived, surrounded by the friends he loved and the enemies ("Raffaello gang," "Sansovino gang," and the others) who plotted against him; it aims at looking on the Sixtine and the Medici tombs with his eyes, at following the beats of his heart as he laboured over his sonnets; it would set us at his side as he sweated at road-making in the Pietra Santa territory; or lay on his back on a scaffold painting for days together. And with all this it would be sound, sure-grounded, warily built upon facts scrupulously weighed. Has it achieved all this? That Mr. Symonds has lost his cunning we cannot say: whole passages, whole chapters are against it; the saner conclusion seems to be that his wealth of material has hampered him. The book drags; the pictures are not sharp; the facts do not pull up to their weight. Each long chapter is divided into sections; each section deals with an episode; we lose the thread sometimes, as we naturally must on this plan. This is especially the case in the second volume, where the biography proper cannot fill out the bulk. Here he has three main strings to pull—the "Julius tragedy," the Colonna episode, the building of Saint Peter's. But of the first we have something given us in the first volume; the second serves as an opportunity for considering all Michelangelo's friendships, and naturally covers a long period; and the last is carried out with wearisome particularity. The division alone gives a curiously formal air to the chapter. It is like a schema only just sketched in. Its effect on the narrative is unfortunate. We feel as if we were assisting at a summing up; and the evidence remains as bewildering as ever in Condivi and Francesco D'Olanda and Gaye, in the Letters and Rime, and, above all, in the marbles and frescoes.

As a work of art, therefore, that is, as a piece of constructive criticism, where the subject is seen whole and every paragraph tells like a tone in painting or an architectural line, this book must give place to smaller essays. To Mr. Pater's essay, for example, it must give place. That subtle little masterpiece, while professedly dealing with one aspect of the colossus, really admits one to the sanctuary within, the great heart of Michelangelo. We know the mau—sculptor, painter, builder of churches, inditer of sonnets; he is there.

I feel (if I may so express it) something of a parricide in thus "laying hands upon my father Parmenides"—for all students and lovers of literature are deeply in his debt—but really it is Mr. Symonds's fault. As I have said, he has taught us what to expect. This book is amorphous; and, with him, form has always counted for so much! It is incisive here with all the old brilliancy; it is diffuse and troublous there with its pile of detail so dense that we sink beneath it. The Casa Buonarroti and its hoards are the innocent cause of Mr. Symonds's neglect of his values. Let me cite. He has laboured points that matter very little, such as the master's work in the marble quarries, his worry with the heirs of Pope Julius II., his connection with Saint Peter's church; and he has dwelt upon others, which matter very much, with an emphasis out of all proportion to their magnitude. The delicate question of Michelangelo's love affairs (if love affairs they can be called) has weighed upon Mr. Symonds. It has a whole chapter as it deserves, but it has mysterious references here and there which tend to exaggerate its importance; and it has a special appendix which might easily have been dispersed in the text. Mr. Symonds says it was "totally impossible to avoid the problem in question." Why should he avoid it? By such elaborate justifications he is injuring the cause he desires to serve. It is true he has had the ill-luck to be forestalled by Von Scheffler, whose exceedingly clever monograph was supported by a curious and ingenious theory. But Mr. Symonds is not slaying the slain. People in England (and in France, too, for that matter—testo M. Emile Ollivier) do not yet understand the Hellenism of the Renaissance, even though they have had it at their own doors in the England of Elizabeth. Lucid statement of the undoubted fact that platonic friendship was better vindicated then than ever in Athens was needed. Mr. Symonds proves it to demonstration. As he says (ii. 160):—

"It was not to this or that young man, to this or that woman, that Michelangelo paid homage, but to the eternal beauty revealed in the mortal image before his eyes. The attitude of mind, the quality of the passion, implied in these poems [he is speaking of the Cavalieri sonnets], and conveyed more clumsily through the prose of the letters, may be difficult to comprehend. But until we have arrived at seizing them we shall fail to understand the psychology of natures like Michelangelo's. No language of admiration is too strong, no self-humiliation too complete, for a soul which has recognised deity made manifest in one of its main attributes, beauty."

That paragraph, I venture to say, comes from the heart; and, as there was occasion to observe in the ACADEMY a few weeks ago, it is sound criticism. The Hellenism of Buonarroti is the clue to his art as well as to his soul. In the case of the Marchioness of Pescara, Mr. Symonds has an easier battle to fight. It may be questioned whether there are any sane people who now honestly believe in that sickly-sentimental legend of senile passion. Why, even M. Ollivier laughed! And, as Mr. Symonds says, it is irrelevant. "There is something essentially disagreeable in the thought of an aged couple entertaining an amorous correspondence." Yes, and such a couple—two of the proudest figures in modern history. But surely he has forgotten sonnet xx. when he says (ii. 117) that "the singular thing about Michelangelo is that, with the exception of Vittoria Colonna, no woman is known to have influenced his heart or his head in any way." There is a sounder ring about this than any of the others, unless we except the very latest of the series, when he was preparing for death. Some boyish love must have touched him there—in Florence probably, in Lorenzo's days, or at Bologna, where he lay in hiding. Sonnet xxi. is just as obviously sincere, but there seems no doubt that it was written in or after 1532. Mr. Symonds thinks it was not addressed to a woman; I cannot persuade myself that his reasoning is conclusive. The total sense seems to insist upon that reading.

Mr. Symonds is at his best, as we should have expected, in the more simply critical part of his work. On the Sonnets he is particularly just; but he was that before when he published his translation of them, and, again, in the third volume of his Renaissance, and I do not find that he has much that is new to say. He is able to relate them to the artist's other expressionary media—his sculpture, his painting, and his building, and very admirably he does it. As thus:

"The thoughts and images out of which Michelangelo's poetry is woven are characteristically abstract and arid. He borrows no illustrations from external nature. The beauty of the world and all that lives in it might have been non-existent so far as he was concerned.

His stock-in-trade consists of a few Platonic notions and a few Petrarchan antitheses" (ii. 169).

He goes on to show how, late in life, when the great man's visions began to fade, he "preferred to use what still survived in him of vigour and creative genius for things requiring calculation or the exercise of meditative fancy.

He had exhausted the human form as a symbol of artistic utterance. But the extraordinary richness of his vein enabled him still to deal with abstract mathematical proportions in the art of building, and with rhythms in the art of writing. His best work, both as architect and poet, belongs to the period when he had lost power as sculptor and painter.

Up to the age of seventy he had been working in the plastic and the concrete. The language he had learned, and used with overwhelming mastery, was man: physical mankind, converted into spiritual vehicle by art. His grasp upon that region failed him now. Perhaps there was not the same sympathy with lovely shapes. Perhaps he knew that he had played on every gamut of that lyre. Emerging from the sphere of the sensuous, where ideas take plastic embodiment, he grappled in this final stage of his career with harmonical ratios and direct verbal expression, where ideas are disengaged from figurative forces. The men and women loved by him so long, so wonderfully wrought into imperishable shapes, 'nurslings of immortality,' recede. In their room arise . . . the cupola of St. Peter's and a few imperishable poems."

This is the Mr. Symonds we know—ardent, vivid, ornate, trenching on the rhetorical; but convincing, but penetrative. And there is more. Here and there we can pick up the threads of valuable aesthetic criticism; the pity is that you must "seek all day ere you find them." But unlike Gratiano's reasons, when you have then they are worth the search. His exposition of the evolution of Michelangelo's style is well worth pursuing through the long chapters. He begins it with the "Cupid" now at Kensington, a production of the master's early years when the influence of Donatello was strong upon him. He tells us that "the device of a momentary attitude is eminently characteristic of Michelangelo's style" (i. 63), and we know that it was characteristic of Donatello and his contemporaries. Like these men, his forerunners, and "unlike the Greeks, he invariably preferred the particular to the universal, the critical moment of an action to suggestions of the possibilities of action" (ibid., 64). Donatello, Ghiberti, Della Quercia, had the same preference. Benvenuto Cellini, of another generation, avoided it in the "Perseus" and "Nymph of Fontainebleau." Appropos, Mr. Symonds accurately points out (i. 100) that the pose of the "David" is equally momentary, and that those critics who, like Mr. Heath Wilson, regard it as symbolic or typical, "entirely falsify the sculptor's motive" and method. In this work, again, he remarks the inspiration of Donatello; indeed, as he says, Michelangelo never shook it off quite; we meet it again in the "Giuliano de' Medici," in the Madonnas of Saint Peter's and of Bruges; and again, though Mr.

Symonds does not say so, in one of his latest works, the very unpleasant "Victory" of the Bargello, where the victorious youth has the unmistakable head of Donatello's "St. George."

Very ably does Mr. Symonds treat of these interesting matters when his detail gives him a little breathing space. In speaking of the "Battle of Pisa" cartoon he picks up another point—Buonarroti's exclusive occupation with the nude and the final accomplishment of his style. He left Donatello, he left Nature; he defined in this drawing "his firm resolve to treat linear design from the point of view of sculpture rather than of painting proper" (i. 276). This may sound a little obvious perchance; but, as the critic says elsewhere, the artist's "contempt for the many-formed and many-coloured stage on which we live and move—his steady determination to treat men and women as nudités posed in the void . . . is a point which must be over and over again insisted on" (ibid., 176).

And so we come to the Sixtine, where the fateful "disegno di Michelagnolo" reached perfection (ibid., 277). Here, after pointing out the typical beauties of the Adam, of the Athletes, of the Delphic Sibyl (certainly the master's most exquisite creation of sheer imaginative beauty), Mr. Symonds fails us. He refers to his Renaissance in Italy—volume, chapter, and verse—and leaves us gazing blankly. "We need not stop to enquire what he intended by that host of plastic shapes evoked from his imagination"; "it serves no purpose to enquire what they symbolise." I am inclined to agree with this rebuke (as I suppose it) to Von Scheffler's eleventh chapter. But then, in the third volume of the Renaissance, if I am right, Mr. Symonds suggested that Michelangelo shut himself up with the Bible, Dante, and Savonarola's sermons, and evolved a vast oracular scheme. That seems to me almost as sweeping as Von Scheffler. I admit I think Mr. Symonds is far more likely to be right now, when he says (i. 245):—

"In this region, the region of pure plastic play, when art drops the wand of the interpreter and allows physical beauty to be a law unto itself, Michelangelo demonstrated that no decorative element in the hand of a really supreme master is equal to the nude. . . . After we have grasped the intellectual content of the whole . . . we discover that, in the sphere of artistic accomplishment . . . one rhythm of purely figurative beauty has been carried throughout—from God creating Adam to the boy who waves his torch above the censor of the Erythrean Sibyl."

I have only one objection to make. Mr. Symonds gives us no chance of grasping that "intellectual content," which is precisely what Von Scheffler has done. Whether he was right or wrong, I think his theory was sufficiently striking to have been noticed; assuming always, of course, the actuality of a tangible "intellectual content."

Selecting thus, one might fill many columns with Mr. Symonds in his happiest moods. I must content myself with calling attention to one or two other fruitful veins. On pages 217 et seq. of the first volume there is a careful discussion of Buonarroti's indebtedness to Luca Signorelli, and further on (ibid., 258) a spirited corrective to Mr. Ruskin's very characteristic lecture on "Michelangelo and Titoret." The sections on Michelangelo's pen and chalk drawings are perhaps the very best in the book, so far as pure criticism goes; and the whole chapter on the "Last Judgment" is temperate and just. Mr. Symonds's prose style does not improve. He is often inflated, tempted sometimes to mere schœurmerci; and sometimes curiously infelicitous. To call Leonardo da Vinci "a god-born amateur" is to be banal; and there is a passage on page 4 of the first volume which I should think his sense of humour would forbid in a new edition.

But his conclusion of the whole matter (ii. 371 to end) makes amends. It is a picture, in sustained eloquence, of the whole man—the "Hero as artist" as he puts it: of the sculptor who painted and was a poet, who thought like a Plato and lived like an anchorite, who above all, as Mr. Pater has said, was in the main so sweet, because at the root he was so strong to endure.

MAURICE HEWLETT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CYLINDERS IN EGYPT.

Bromley, Kent: Oct. 29, 1892.

Permit me to inquire for any further information concerning the little-known archaic cylinders found in Egypt. These are of rude work, unglazed, and usually carved in black steatite. Some bear the names of kings, always of the IVth or Vth Dynasties; but mostly they seem to be substitutes for the usual funereal steles of offerings. They are found as far apart as Elephantine and the plain of Sharon; but any information as to localities would be very valuable. I have many drawings of these cylinders already, and shall be most grateful to any one possessing such objects who will send me squeezes by tinfoil or wet paper. A toothbrush will make good impressions.

It is remarkable that the funereal use of a cylinder-amulet is common to early Egypt and Babylonia; the earliest mode of burial in Egypt (crouched) is also Babylonian; and the oldest brick architecture of the two lands is identical in its decoration. If there be a connexion, it would rather be between the Mesopotamian and the pre-dynastic Egyptian; the dynastic Egyptian using extended burial, and being probably a Punite.

As to the Aegean pottery, so long discussed in the ACADEMY, there is much fresh material to be considered; but I have preferred not to bring it forward in the present circumstances, as the flat contradiction of facts, and the weight which has been thrown on the darkest hearsay evidence, do not seem to favour the consideration of scientific conclusions.

W. M. FLINDERS PETERIE.

THE OX AS A UNIT OF VALUE.

London: Oct. 29, 1892.

In the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for June (just issued) there is a long paper by the undersigned on "Weights and Measures in Ancient Egypt." The section on weights contains several paragraphs (pp. 436-439) to illustrate their use in value-standards, and among other things it is noted that in a certain document an ox is valued at one khetem "piece" (of gold, or perhaps of silver). At the time of writing it I knew of Prof. Ridgeway's interesting theories only from a notice in a daily paper, and as the details of the subject presented considerable difficulties, all discussion of the fact was deferred; yet, considered as fresh evidence in favour of Prof. Ridgeway's contention that the ox was the primitive unit of value in most communities, it deserves to be pointed out at once to a wider circle of readers in the ACADEMY. The metal value or weight of the "piece" is uncertain; but there will be more to say on the subject in a new series of the notes, and the natural inference that the khetem was an ox-standard (traceable, in fact, from 2500 to 1400 B.C.) will then I hope be fully established.

F. L. GRIFFITH.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WHETHER London will be able to support for any long period an additional picture gallery of importance remains to be seen. Perhaps one of the existing ones may go down under stress of competition. But, however this may be, the first exhibition of the New Grafton Gallery, in Grafton-street—which will take place before the turn of the year—is likely to have at least one new feature which should be of real interest. We understand that certain prominent French painters—"up to date" men who, though they may be seen at the Salons, rarely command the suffrages of the English picture dealer—are likely to find interesting representation within the walls of the Grafton Gallery.

It is stated that Mr. Yeames, the Hon. John Collier, and Mr. Fred. Brown, are among the most prominent candidates for the vacant Slado chair of fine art at University College—a post confined, it is true, to practising artists, but which is likely to be much sought for among them, as it provides a certain moderate income, together with the opportunity of being habitually in London. It is impossible, while we touch upon this matter, to avoid reference to the length of service rendered by M. Legros, who is just now resigning; and it would, indeed, be undesirable did we withhold our tribute of praise from one who has done so much to uphold the standard of dignity and thoroughness in English workmanship.

In future, under the title of "Archaeological Reports," an annual account of work done by the Egypt Exploration Fund will be issued to the subscribers in the spring or summer, at the end of each working season. The number for the coming year will contain reports by M. Naville and Mr. Newberry on the results of their respective expeditions; and in order to keep the members of the Society informed of the progress of discovery, summaries of archaeological intelligence and of publications relating to Egyptology will be added, as well as more extended notices of selected works. Books for review, on any subject connected with Egypt, can be sent to the editor, Mr. F. L. Griffith, F.S.A., at No. 37, Great Russell-street, London, W.C.

AMONG the exhibitions to open next week are: (1) a collection of French pictures, including M. de Groux' much-discussed "Le Christ aux outrages," at the Hanover Gallery, New Bond-street; and (2) a series of twelve hundred drawings, originally made for Marcus Ward & Co.'s publications, at Messrs. Foster's Gallery, Pall Mall.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s édition de luxe of "King Henry VIII.," with photogravures after original drawings by Sir James Linton, will be ready for publication in a few days. The edition is limited to 250 numbered copies.

THE Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow will have in The American Antiquarian for November (Chicago) an article entitled "The Queen of Egyptology," which reviews the labour of the late Miss Amelia B. Edwards as an archaeologist. The frontispiece will be a portrait of that eminent lady.

THE School of Art Wood-Carving, South Kensington, has been re-opened after the usual summer vacation. One or two free studentships in both the day and the evening classes, maintained by means of funds granted by the City and Guilds Institute, are now vacant.

As usual, the Christmas number of the Art Journal appears in good time, and is devoted to the life and works of a celebrated artist. A good selection has been made in Prof. Herkomer, one of the most popular artists of the day. The choice is very plainly justified by the illustrations, which comprise the well-known Greenwich Pensioners (still his best picture of that class), the two famous portraits of Miss Grant, and the anonymous American lady, who charms us under the title of "Entranced," and several other well-known works. The versatility and energy of Prof. Herkomer, and his life so unusually full of picturesque incident, combine to make his life one of more than common interest; and Mr. W. L. Courtney has written it with skill and good taste.

AMONG other interesting papers in the Art Journal for November are "Mr. Logsdail and Lincoln," "Raphael's Crucifixion," in which Mr. Claude Phillips gives a clear history and sound criticism of the "Dudley" picture now belonging to Mr. Mont, and one by Mr. M. Q. Holyoake, on Laguerre's mural paintings at Marlborough House, recently restored. The Birmingham School of Art fully deserves the special article devoted to it by Mr. Aylmer Vallance; and Miss Marion Dixon commences a series of papers on "Recent Fashion in French Art," which promise to be interesting.

MR. SWINBURNE'S WORKS.

SELECTIONS from the POETICAL WORKS of A. C. SWINBURNE. Fcap. 8vo, 8s.

